

Drgan Bywaki

WCS was not the grade of unexplained by dusts
Chapman

The generalities of the ancient world are not to be reached save through the long a dusty corridors of modern learning; and only by the slow pace of genius will the student reach the farther end with senses unimpaired.

WCS, like Drgan Bywaki although his knowledge was an easy deliberation, and kept it by more tenacity and a sure instinct for selection

His nature consists, and he has a subject - but he knew his confusion to be familiar: The modern scientist really has the same nature, with the overall view of his own time might even remain in the <sup>to</sup> fact of his eye familiar of his own. <sup>from Erasmus</sup>

Like Bywaki WCS, had a sure sense of purpose and could trace back to his own mind the course of a book.

A fence is infinitely communicative and tells something beside the figure of its rustic intent.
Some confess intellectual genius - some need for enlightenment.

Dr. Johnson once remarked to me, that the best conversation is that of which nothing is distinctly remembered. but a general effect of pleasing impression.
