

At the conclusion of the oration the president presented to Mr. Jonathan Hutchinson, F.R.C.S., the Moxon medal, awarded to him by the council for long and valuable services to clinical medicine. In making the presentation he expressed the pleasure which it afforded him to hand the medal to one who had in many ways contributed to and widened the scope of their knowledge of clinical medicine. In conferring the medal upon so distinguished a member of their sister college the council recognized that affinity of interest in science and that friendly fellowship which so happily existed between the two Royal Colleges of Medicine and Surgery.
