P.S. (which contains, as P.S.'s should, the important part of the letter).

I have rambled about, and signed my name without saying what I had in mind to say first. My admiration for the way you have acquitted yourself of your task - labor & love, as it was. The acquisition of the material from so many of Osler's correspondents must itself have been a serious labor, but what impresses me most is the skill with which, out of such material, you have made not only the record of a rich life but the living man.
