

O'Brien ~~was~~ interested in old people which has been mentioned was more than appreciated by his devotion to children ~~with whom~~ <sup>with whom</sup> he had the rare gift of putting himself immediately on terms of intimate familiarity.

He invariably carried over names for them at the outset as in the case of the two younger Francis children one with curly hair and one two or three years who remained always as "Redsfrings" and "Owl's eyes".

His ~~habit~~ appreciation of a child's delight in repetitions and rattling the dining room table at North College Street was always demanded of him and his friends with children some of which became proverbia which from time to time he referred to.

Perhaps the most recent manuscript all the subject is that of Kennedy.

Further the words are comment of Jernett.

The temporal lobe a strikingly elevated area and for this reason among others it is selected as the favorite seat of decompression.

The symptoms which occur are those referable to the uncus - postobtus and olfactory perceptors creamy slabs - so called uncinata fits.

To these may be added on the left anterior aphasia (anomia) of the transverse temporal gyrus is affected. Perhaps too some anterior disturbance with tremors - even transferred to central lobal side.

To these we would add as most important factor, the

It was a new thing, to have a histological pathologist in their midst, really

enthusiast himself by giving ~~more~~ ~~more~~ ~~consideration~~, he infected all others with whom he came in contact with something of the same spirit and as he wanted few words to take alone and ~~more~~ ~~more~~ ~~more~~ for giving others credit than for what he might gain, his reputation spread widely and soon went beyond his own community.

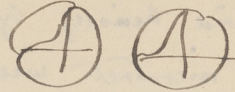

Another trait which had much to do with his development was his utter lack of Chauvinism, and though at this time there was much less interchange between men of different schools in different localities he took an early opportunity - to run down to Boston and familiarize himself with its medical traditions. He not only looked up all his old Vienna friends but invaded the Boston medical library then in its original humble quarters ~~where~~ <sup>where</sup> he found a faithful working librarian <sup>Dr. Brigham</sup> Little accustomed to have this kind of sunshine invade his sanctum. The ~~real~~ <sup>real</sup> charm of the work was never forgotten nor did <sup>in his part</sup> order, <sup>fact</sup>, or will be seen, to remember in subsequent years the librarian. He ~~must~~ <sup>must</sup> must have paid a <sup>visit</sup> <sup>also</sup> at this time to Henry J. Bowditch the leader of the Boston profession whom well used he fully admired. There ~~is~~ <sup>is</sup> <sup>remains</sup> a pamphlet in Oler's library, Bowditch's "Consumption in New England" in which ~~there~~ <sup>has</sup> been written:

"Henry J. Bowditch was one of the finest characters I have ever met in the profession, with the true fire, I valued his friendship highly. I met him in 1875 and he introduced me to his nephew ~~Dr.~~ H.P.B. who became one of my dearest friends. W.O.
