The household of Dr. S. J. Ervici who was perhaps the leading figure of his time in American Surgery was noted for its hospitality. There did any way visitors the clinics in Philadelphia find to be taken to J. Ervici's abundant table. In this instance the sea had been brought up and it was what his daughter in law had come to appreciate in the customary hospitality among doctors.

on a Saturday, J. Ervici, almost the first evening that Oster arrived in Philadelphia Dr. and Mrs. S. W. J. Ervici called on him and came to at his former room on 15th Street - and found a very homesick person pestered by mosquitoes to the head of a Philadelphia summer evening and assured him to dine the next day. Another newly appointed Prof. Professor J. Ervici was there too but he did not stick for some weeks ~~to dine~~ ^{hours} but lost all of his possessions in a train wreck & subsequent fire & concerns with osteopathy left after a couple of months.

This was the beginning of a great friendship and nearly every Sunday found Oster was at the home for dinner ^{where he} ^{was him} and often brought a friend or two ^{among them take on} who might be visiting Philadelphia. Oster Howard Ross & Sanford, another of his old friends. One of his complaints about his new environment Philadelphia was the absence of afternoon tea and this could be assured found at one ^{on every Sunday at dinner time} and nearly every Saturday afternoon found the three over J. Ervici and Mrs. J. Ervici at tea with Mrs. J. Ervici after their Medical News meeting which was held in J. Ervici's office ^{every} Sunday afternoon at three.
