

(Typewritten)

(Dr. H.V. Ogden)

The Johns Hopkins Hospital,
North Broadway.

Baltimore, Oct. 12th, 1891.
CUS417/87.28

Dear Ogden: -

Are you not going to pay us an autumnal visit this year? I looked for you at Washington. We had really a delightful gathering. Rogers was on from Denver and he came over to the Hospital for a few days. I wish you could have come on to our Virchow Celebration. Let me have a line from you soon. It seems an age since I heard how you are getting on.

Sincerely yours,
Wm Osler.

To coincide with the great festival being held in Berlin

The following day the local Virchow celebration was the following day and fragments of Osler's address:

"Randolph Virchow: the Man and the Student" Boston Medicine and Surgery June Oct. 22 1891 which was partly reminiscent of his former association with Virchow, have already been given. Few more notable tributes have ever been paid a member of the medical profession such as John Virchow ~~the world over~~ at this time for "as the shadows lengthen, and ere the twilight deepens, it has seemed right to his many pupils and friends, the world over, to show their love by a gathering in his honor at his seven-hundred birthday." These were joyful words for Osler was the next, thirty years later to have a comparable <sup>universally beloved</sup> world wide tribute paid to him as a septogenarian, even more ~~than~~ than Virchow. None is more likely to be another. He concludes his address with the paragraph.

Finally the tributes -