

A game of Sixes on Poundburg Ring. Players: Tom Lovell, ~~Ed~~ Rowe, Dave Hayes, E.Y.D., T. MaC. and a wall-eyed sheep dog.

On the north side of the celebrated Poundburg Ring, on the turf walk of the rampart at 3 p.m. July 26th lay three boys, two men and a venerable dog. The positions were as in annexed diagram. Tom bossed the party and had the cards - a small dirty, dog-eared but complete pack. The game he said was sixes, which I did not know, so I put up 3d in middle to be played for by the boys, and that we could catch the trick of the game. Tom dealt one first then two; then three, not always in order and it was evident that so long as each boy got six it did not matter how the cards came. ~~Ed~~ led off with the ten of hearts, which he called spades, in ignorance I thought as he was young and looked a green hand; Dave covered it, trumped it he said, with a four or six of spades, and Tom took the trick proudly with a face-card - the knave of hearts."

John first a low headed card of 16, he said, looking 14

It was. It was an episode ~~from~~ which order might have used to adorn a tale and from a moral but what was in E.Y.D.'s mind does not appear ^{but it shows} except an interest in children and a special for amusement. There is another note of August 12th which ~~the~~ describe the house of Benj. Jesty the pre-Jennerian vaccination from Mr. Cas subsequently wrote an interesting account for the Happers Historical Club.
