I hear from Mackenzie that you are likely to be in England in October, I shall, of course, expect you to visit me here in Oxford. The Harveian Oration and the Harveian dinner of the Royal College of Physicians take place October the 18th. Why could you not come over in time for that? Unfortunately, I have to give the oration this year, so that it would not be worth while to come for that, but at the dinner you would meet a distinguished company.

Dr. Campbell Howard, one of my assistants at the Johns Hopkins Hospital, and the son of my old teacher in Montreal, goes to Holland for a week early in October. I have asked him to call upon you. Shall you be at home during the first week of October?
