Oxford,
February 22, 1912.

Dear Adami,

I am delighted that you have decided to stay. I can readily understand the temptation of the Chicago position. You have done a great work for them at Montreal, and it has always been a mystery to me why some of our friends have not properly appreciated it. After all, yours was the first properly scientific department established in connection with the Medical School, and as far as scientific reputation outside the country goes, your department carries it all.

I hope you are coming over this summer. Are you going to Rome to the Congress? I hope to get off early in April. I am delighted to hear of Archie Malloch in whom I am greatly interested. He is a fine type of man. Harry Wright is a good chap, though not quite so able. Do let us see you if you come over this year.

Sincerely yours,
