Oxford and rain. To see Gurdleston do a nerve suture at the Wingfield Orthopaedic Hospital of the 3rd Southern General District, one of the three Oxford hospitals; the Examination Schools represent the Base as arranged between Keogh and W.O. long before the war and going back to 1908 when the Territorials were organized.

Then Ryman's to see a supposed portrait of Vesalius like the one at Christ Church and the Louvre, and a very good picture, whether or not a copy. R. wants £80 for it.

London - also rain, raw, and the world in a queue waiting for taxis. Kerr and I drop Sir William who is meeting with Sir Rob't Borden and others to discuss poor Peterson's successor as Chancellor of McGill. They had offered the place to Auckland Geddes but he has passed far beyond this into the Cabinet - from a professorship in Anatomy to the Cabinet during the war! This sort of thing has happened not uncommonly.
