DEATH OF SIR W. LOGAN.

A cable dispatch to the Globe announces the death of Sir William Logan, which from information received in this city as to his illness, must have occurred at the family residence near Cardigan, in Wales. Sir William was born in Montreal in April, 1798, and was therefore in his seventy-eighth year. He was educated at the High School in Edinburgh, and graduated at the University of that city in 1818, when he entered the establishment of his uncle, Mr. Hart Logan, then carrying on business as a merchant in London. He became a partner in the house, and after a short visit to Canada, returned to England, and took up his residence in Swansea, where he became manager of copper smelting and coal mining operations, in which his uncle was interested. During the eight years that he remained connected with these works he studied accurately the coal fields of that region, and the maps and sections which he made were adopted by the Ordnance geological survey, and published by the Government. In 1841 he visited the coal fields of Pennsylvania and Nova Scotia, and communicated several valuable papers to the Geological Society of London. About the same time he began an examination of the older palæozoic rocks of Canada, and the geological survey of the Province having been commenced, he was appointed as its head, a position which he occupied with great advantage to Canada until 1871, when he retired, recommending Professor Selwyn as his successor, a recommendation which was acted upon, and the wisdom of which has been fully established since.

In 1851, says Morgan's book, from which we derive our information, Sir William represented Canada at the Great Exhibition in London, taking charge of the splendid geological collection which he had himself made. It was so displayed as to exhibit to the best advantage the mineral resources of Canada. Medals in profusion were allotted to Canada, and the Royal Society of London elected Mr Logan a Fellow, the highest attainable British scientific distinction. He was also a Commissioner from Canada at the Paris Exhibition in 1855, when he received from the Imperial Commission the grand gold medal of honour, and was created a Knight of the Legion of Honour. In 1856, he received the honour of knighthood from the Queen, and the same year was awarded by the Geological Society, of which he was a member, the Wollaston Paladium medal for his eminent services in geology. Few men have rendered more substantial service to their country than has Sir William Logan to his native country, Canada. To his eminent abilities we owe much of the information we possess of the hidden riches of the Dominion. To wonderful energy and untiring zeal in the pursuit of his work, he added a conscientious love of truth, and a character high-toned and honorable to a degree. His statements in relation to the geology of the country came to be accepted with the most unbounded confidence, and have all been verified by further exploration and research. In the times of wildest speculation in relation to mining operations, he never permitted himself to be carried away. Many whose chief appreciation of the value of mines consisted in their ability to bond them at a small price and sell them at a large, thought him unnecessarily cautious. But with him truth stood before all other considerations, and his name never could be used to build up mere speculative ventures. He was an enthusiast in science, not for its own sake only, but for the sake of his country and its prosperity. His purse, as well as his genius, was ever at the service of Canada, and one of his latest acts was that of contracting with parties in England for a boring operation in the Eastern townships to test the accuracy of his theory of the geological formation of that part of the country. Although he had ceased to be officially connected with the survey, his death will be regarded as a national calamity, while his name will continue to be revered as that of one of Canada's best and truest friends.
