My dear Sir

It is decided, after due consultation, that it would not be expedient to publish the Geological Papers as a separate Volume. You are therefore at full liberty to do so, after giving a reasonable time for the volume of the Leisure Hour having its sale.

For the use of the articles in the Leicem Hour £100 has been already paid and I now enclose a additional sum of £20 making in all £120. Be good enough to send the receipt to Mr Tarn our Cashier. In case of your republishing, I advise you to write direct to S Davis, the Secretary, should you wish the use of casts of the Murtorations. He sends his kindest remembrance, and says the articles have given much satisfaction to the better class of our readers.

Mr. Patton agrees with me that the "Primitive Man" question needs a plain clear "redding up" and exposition.
Do this at your earliest leisure, as it is promised for you in our programme.
In the paper to Aug. Miller's

OO Red Sandstone, a Footstep" (I forgot that) There is a splendid essay in denunciation of Lamarck's hypothesis. If you do not incorporate this, I wish to give it in bulk, with a brief preface showing how the argument equally applies to the theories of later date.

Yours truly
James MacCaulay
