Dear Sir.

A patient of mine
died very suddenly last week after only 2 hours illness, was in fact dead before I reached the house.

His symptoms were those of poisoning by the Quinine Crocata he usually will remark
the grass very plentifully in these parts.

A boy who was at work with him in the field told me he had eaten a part of a root he found while pursuing a portion of

wh. I found in his pocket & I enclose to you, I could not obtain any other part of the plant & was not allowed to have a possession.

Will you kindly tell me whether you think this specimen is a piece of wild porcupine?

Apologizing for intruding on your valuable time I remain

Yours truly
J. Haville
