Dear Sir,

I confess to have misunderstood the object of your letter of yesterday. Had I observed the last few words that you desired an immediate reply I very naturally would have concluded that you did not intend the communication for publication. It was purely by accident that it did not appear this morning, because when we are pressed correspondence is matter which we hold over until we have convenient space. As to giving the name of the author of the correspondence to which you refer I think on reflection you will admit that there is time enough to disclose the name. The columns of the Herald

Montreal, 17th June 1871
Dear Sir

I confess to have been somewhat at a loss to understand the object of your letter of yesterday. As I understand the fact, you wish that I should send you some of my original works. I have no objection that you see the value of some of them for publication.
It was found by accident that it did not appear in my because when we are conspicuous is rather it that you wish to have some of my original works of the value of the three which you wish to in reflection you will see that there is no objection to them. The situation of the

Let me add that I do not think the letter referred to was so severe as to create the impression that malice was the prompter.

The Herald has some interest in promoting Education, and I trust you will have no reasonable excuse for supposing that we are the enemies of McGill or any other institution of learning.

I am, Sir
Sincerely yours

I cannot comply with your request.

Let me say that I do not think the letter referred to was so
