The misfortune is that the only persons who do not feel anxious to have their papers accepted and who frankly agree to make room if the space be limited, are those whose papers are certain to be retained. There are some papers which will not be accepted, but their authors have not come forward with an offer to give their space to some one else.

I suppose that the papers will be in shape for the editor to take them in charge for printing within three weeks: all depends on the return of the reports of discussions. I have just received the stenographer's reports and they will go out before the end of the week. I am now about to dun authors for their papers, only about one-third having been handed in.
