My dear Sir William

Could I have two or three additional copies of your lecture on Educated Women? Nothing has so taken hold of me as the question of the Education of Women. I believe it to be the question of the day. I am sorry that I cannot see that Co-education, or separate classes in the same institution is a solution of the problem. A new University established on new lines seems to me the only adequate solution of the problem. However I have read your address with absorbing interest and would like a few more copies if you have them for my friends. With kindest regards I am ever truly yours Robert Laing.
