My dear Sir William

Thank you for the pleasure of reading your very delightful paper on

"Educated women: ^{must} admini-I hardly know which part, the early one urging a foundation of physical strength, or the later one laying stress on the need for cultured wives or mothers, apart from women professionally clear. To my mind, these are the strongest questions of the day. The rush for professional work among women has done far to abolish womanhood if some reaction had not taken place.

Your scheme for Education is best, would be almost appalling but in the competing struggle of a narrow necked bottle with its continuous slender stream. I may also be allowed to accept, in its fullest sense, your thoughts on the need for a race of devotional religious women. though we might define "religion" perhaps a little differently.

Altogether the paper in itself is a great help & pleasure. as coming from a friend whom I prize, it is additionally welcome.
My husband joins all good wishes for the future of yourself & just now, especially your child - I whom he shall give a hearty welcome -

With kindest regards

Believe me dear Sir William

Sincerely yours and dear son
