Sir William Dawson,

Dear Sir,

Professor Bailey has given me an account of the reading of a paper of mine at the Royal Society last month and tells me that you made some comments and criticisms upon it. I am extremely anxious to have it as accurate as possible and to make it as valuable as possible.

Would you have time to write me any criticisms or suggestions that occur to you? I would be very thankful for any such.

I am aware that the paper is very faulty, particularly the latter part which had to be hastily prepared. At present it represents, I have no doubt only my individual knowledge of the subject, not the present state of knowledge generally. If you can write me on the subject, I am sure your suggestions and opinions will cause me to modify some of the views expressed, - some of which I fear will not stand much criticism.

Very sincerely yours
W. J. Ganong.

James

I am sorry that the paper is not better, particularly
badly prepared. At present
well, but which has been
subject, I am sure you
be most valuable to me. I will be glad to hear from you at any time.

W. J. Conway
