My Dear Sir William

Your extremely kind note with the weekly Gazette arrived when I was out of the city. It is impossible for me to write the sense of gratitude I feel towards you who have always shown me so much kindness and consideration. For had it not been for your kindly advice and substantial aid, I never could have entered the profession which I have now chosen, and that you are not making the progress we had all wished for but I hope that August will put you in good condition to continue your good work next winter. But you must be contented to do very little for the present and let tired nature be restored. The more indifferently you can remain now from work, the better able you will be next winter to accomplish some of your many desires -

Again thanking you for your kindness, & hoping you may rapidly improve, with kind regards to Lady Dawson I remain
Yours affectionately, W. Deane

Any success attained has been through the inspiration of your own self-denying and generous nature. Your untiring zeal and high ideals, and the un-anticipated expressions of your kindness again I can assure you are not unappreciated.

I am enclosing you a letter from Mr MacBride, the newly appointed professor. I have answered him in detail and have further assured him that it would give me great pleasure to aid him in every way possible to further his work.

I am extremely pained to hear
