Sir William Dawson Bart
Middelton
Sir

The perusal of the 'Witness' Report of your sincere appeal to 'Workers', impelled the undersigned to write the accompanying Essay, a plea for 'Prophetic Study' with a view to publication in the 'Witness' and in the desire to reach the 150,000 Readers, and thus, again, appeal for the 'Truth' we mutually treasure, and desire to see become the common property, and guide, of all our Race.

This consideration, I most sincerely hope may obtain your generous pardon to an otherwise stranger, breaking through the conventional barrier of custom, unwritten or introduced.

Upon second thought it occurred to the writer, that the Editor would, after all the pains he had taken, ^{not} exceed his request, and spare space for one, two, or three issues of two columns, even for so important an object as he had - in common with yourself and many others - at heart.

The 'In His Steps' Review, however, has made me think good and great ~~unfit~~ things, and venture to hope, that with your influence added, we might ask so large a favour, from a busy man; who has, we think a good heart toward the good: if, ~~not~~ as we suspect, a whole one, for the honour and cause of Him, we wish to serve.

The Essay in question is intended to take its place, as an Introductory chapter of a Series of Essays, - on a kindred subject, - entitled The Doomed Turk and End of the Eastern Question of which I

which are quite ready for the type setter, as soon as the copy is made. Franklin's before the author,

I have also two, considerably larger series, ready for the press, which cover some three hundred and fifty Franklin's folios,

All these volumes of love, have been begun, continued, and ended with, resting, travels; you may better understand my reasons some strict than upon the words; and give the return
- minus the gone subscribers five - to the still further, spread the just 'the way' 'the style'.

Will you then, please, forgive me for this unceremonious interruption, and do what you can with the enclosed; allowing me only the reprint of Republican's with the remaining chapters.

Mentioned above, Bellevue, as I do, that you will receive the thanks of the author for whom I sent and in these clear name for you myself your most in the best and most secret to Millington
