

I have just succeeded in procuring from my old field in Dexter a magnificent new kind of fine paper, I would hope to make
And use of some kind.
I have

well undone, a paper, into other hands. I hope my son, after all I have done for his training, is not to have the same experience; but it seems like it, if things continue as they are here, & if he remains in Canada.
However I shall hope for the best, for him at least. My chances have paled away.

With all kind regards

sources, but in every public employment in the profession for which I had received a long and costly training in this country and in Scotland, I have seen other men
 preferred before me,
 and have been obliged all along to take refuge in educational work for a little compensation, and to see the work which I think I could have done
