Friday 9 o'clock

Dear Margret

I saw your father as said this evening; he is still of opinion that there should be as little delay as possible, and that your mother should not be troubled in any way with preparations or arrangements. I hope to see you on Saturday aft<sup>r</sup> noon to speak of these Things.

I will go to Dulhett at 10 tomorrow and will return either of the 12 or 2 o'clock omnibus as a short call will perhaps be as much as is desired.

I saw Dr Wielobychki (that is I think the right spelling) this afternoon, and he promised to make out a list of remedies for me.
He asked me to call on Sunday for it, remarking that he was always at home on that day. I told him I would prefer Monday morning.

I told him I had Laurie's book, and he said it was the very one he would have recommended.

I have been walking about almost constantly since I left you at 2 and have made a number of calls, and finished several little pieces of business

Sincerely yours

William

I hope your fears of a more thorough new groundless, and that I will find you well tomorrow, and that your morrow will continue in a good and kind spirit. When I think of her mind experiencing any more favorable change, I cannot help feeling that I candearest be too thankful for what has been already accomplished. Without forgetting the kind service of friends we should thank God for it.
