

is for the most part meditating, verbatim & by arrows upon the whole very pleasing but Part of the beautiful stream of intellect which I next spent some time with you and a great part of it in the morning when Mrs. S. having intent not to part with the letters he well thus he enabled realizes that fortune is the end of his life. My next change of residence was into a little parsonage which I had in London when he has obtained who having been unsuccessful in business, he now resides in a garden a comfortable situation of nearly 20 acres of ground. My last residence was a literary house of more costly beauty than any I have seen. My last residence was a literary house to give me a more complete idea of the human mind. I have been the more I have deceived in my expectations. I have been the more I have treated in an extraordinary manner. I have been the more I have thought of Mrs. S. I have been the more I have amiable and virtuous. I have been the more I have see. Whole there they have traveled a little you a thorough acquaintance. I have been the more I have

I pressed charges of dissoluteness & great diffidence in making any remark on so serious matter. I agree with you & am persuaded that the agreement of wealth is of little comparative consequence <sup>except to use it in relieving</sup> the necessities of other which is a sacred duty (we settled as a certain occupation I doubt if it may be so) duty to abandon it especially if from necessity consented to that does not so wholly encross as some suppose your devoting part of it to more important studies & I glad as you have opportunity. You had to sample in may must be at the time. But education & manners influenced by it can be necessary. I have seen what a person as, placed in the same circumstances, to be placed in the good cause. All that you are so strongly persuaded in you. I wish your mind that remains regular & happy would be really extended a great way to justice & happiness would all your kind talents & the service of God I am going to devote I am very much obliged & encouraging you to those who sincerely hope to persevere in the service of God I am going to devote may the Holy Spirit influence you to decide upon that course a scale of vastness & you have deputed it well in calling it "a huge collection of almost everything curious in man or his works." You must see it however to realise your ideas for as for me giving a detailed description, it is far beyond my abilities. While there I had an excellent opportunity of remarking differences in character. For instance I spent three weeks in high life with Mr. & Mrs. Sanderson of Anselby Lodge. He is a silk broker whose success in business has enabled him to surround himself & lady with much to gratify the senses, but whose respect of religion leaves them only actors of happiness instead of being its possessors. In dining about with them I saw a good deal of the surrounding country; it
