

I have been thinking of writing to you for some time but have been so busy that I could not find time. I hope you are well and happy. I have been thinking of writing to you for some time but have been so busy that I could not find time. I hope you are well and happy. I have been thinking of writing to you for some time but have been so busy that I could not find time. I hope you are well and happy.

[The page contains dense, overlapping handwritten text in cursive script, which is largely illegible due to the extreme density and overlapping nature of the writing.]

And being then foolish, and to her Mr. Stobey sent to the Ferry they got her removed there thinking good about the change would be her good, but she called very often but did not give an idea how weak she must have been during the whole eighteen months, she could neither go up stairs nor down from her house for three weeks before she left the lot in her third sight and did not being able even to lean back for least a week she soon recovered and took up her abode with her mother, of course her daughters who were always in the same room could not rest they had always to go to bed. I have left her death very much she was fond of me, and I am sure I loved her like a mother, Anne and Elizabeth are very lovely now poor girls I go often down and say to me how well both seem. You know Anne I think what a sweet creature she is. I must stop for a little as I intend going to see them I shall finish when I return for a usual