Nov. 7. 95—

My dear Mother,

Yours of the 4th reached me the other day & I am glad to know that both you & Father here as yet taken no harm from the Boston voyage. I trust that you will continue to exist very quietly there & make as much of a holiday of it as you can. When are you due to return? The weather has been mild now for some days, but damp today & yesterday & I hope we may have some length of it before winter sets in.

 I suppose you find some things to interest you in Boston & can manage to pass some time there, but it seems from here to me as if you would have a great deal of idle time on your hands. Everything here much as usual, but I am pleased to be able to report that my cold appears to be nearly better - never very bad but a bother & annoyance.

Anna writes among other things about Clara, who grows so fat & does not seem strong. I suggest to her that she might be sent off with some travelling party somewhere for the winter. If she (Anna) could find a good chance I should be glad to give the necessary money for such a trip. Will you think of it.

Yours
George
