Dear Anna,

This is a postscript to my note enclosed in mamma's yesterday. As to Hankins I have been Re-jung Clark and Roddeck posted as far as R. give me any information. Sir Donald so far as I know is yet in London. George writes to us that R. has returned to Paris and expects to be in London about this time. I have therefore written to R., advising him to see Lord Mountstephen and Sir Donald and to send a letter to Clark, who is the acting man. He should also come out and attend to his own interests before the opening in Spring, and I have every reason to suppose that such an appointment as he refers to can be obtained. Hope my letter will reach him about the time he arrives in London.

Note what you say as to Mr. Donald. It is quite a mistake to suppose that I have in any way disre-

Continued improvement in the Faculty of arts. I have however opposed measures which tend to diminish our students and our income and at the same time to take away from us the support of the Protestant clergy, which we have gained by so many efforts and sacrifices; and I have also endeavored to prevent unjust expenses on hard-working men who have borne the burden and heat of the day, with little reward. If I am to have any part in the Councils of the Coll I can do no other than this, whatever money it may cost.
 I have however our assured hope that the false views which have been cultivated so much will in course of time die away of themselves. I wish we could get some men of real power and culture on the Board of Governors, that is where the improvement should begin, but you must not say this to any one.

Poor Allan's death is very sad. I hope it will be a lesson to some of the other fast young men.

Ever yours
 M. Dawson
