

Faculty of Applied Science,

Nov. 26th 1894

Dearst Love,

I am sorry indeed to hear that your cold is still troublesome and that you cannot ~~not~~ indulge in the luxury of reading aloud. I say luxury, possibly because I have not had so much of it as you and fancy it a luxury because my throat has not allowed me to do it. On Sunday evening I generally manage to read a little to the children and find less discomfort in it now than when I first returned to town.

I have never felt that you were wrong in remaining with from the tone of his letter to Adams in which he said that it would only be a little while until E. would be quite unable to take care of himself.

Of course some allowance must be made for the fact that I indeed wished to justify myself in Adams's eyes for not having admitted E. to the Sanitarium.

Meantime I think you are quite right in what you say about being on the watch for an attendant for E. in case of one being required. If Hewitt is the man I suppose (slightly deformed) I should scarcely think him a suitable person. He was a great chum of Wheeler - one of the hardest cases in collyer.

I sent baby's photo yesterday.
It is a poor photo, but still

E. at Saranac. I know full well how bitter a trial it is for you to be so long absent from home and far every hour I miss your companionship and thoughtfulness.
The poor bairns too sadly miss their mother and need her guidance.
And yet I cannot help feeling that if we had both been here our anxiety would have been greater if possible than it has been. But then we shall have to decide before very long how long you are to remain at Saranac and whether Eric could remain without you. This will no doubt depend upon what Indian says when he returns. I do not, however, think that he is at all likely to recommend going south. This I conclude since his happy little face ⁵ well.

Walford had great difficulty in "catching" him at all. He tries to try again, but I think it is hardly worth-while at present. To-morrow I shall try to send some ducks.

I have promised Boney to go and dine with him so must hurry home to change my clothes.

with love for yourself and Eric
Ever your fond friend

