Dearest Love,

Aug 20th 1897

I am still in Toronto and have spent most of the day at the University where the meetings are being held and where we had some rather interesting papers. I also went over the Chemical buildings trying to see whether I could pick up any ideas. Prof. Pike is away having been delayed by fog while coming from Newfoundland, but I believe he is to be here tomorrow.

I lunched at the Ramsay Wrights to-day and one of the first Questions that Mrs. R. W. asked was whether I could tell her anything about Miss Wilson.

Having just received your letter I was able to say that she had arrived at Detroit.

I am sorry that you are disappointed about Clare not having come with me, but really I think it would have been too much for her and I fear I should not have been able to look after her very well.
Certainly I should like to give her a little travel, but other works there. Probably I shall return in the evening but I may possibly remain over Sunday.

I succeeded in getting a room in this hotel last evening, a very poor one, but still better than none. It is a commercial traveller's room with long tables on which to expose samples.

The weather continues to be fine and cool and I hope we shall have <sup>equally</sup> good weather to-morrow.

There is such a rush here that one really cannot get a chance to write letters, & now George is waiting for me to go to dinner so I must close.
Love to all from Your fond B.
