

Rattle over to the Sargeants.

247 Church Street.

New Haven, Conn.

Tuesday A. M.

Dearest Mother,

I arrived here
safely & ahead of time.
We passed through the most beautiful country on the way, but unfortunately for the greater part of it - the fog was so dense that I could barely see anything. To my great- disgust- I find this morning that my blue eyed skirt- has been forgotten. I thought that Clare had folded it- & packed it- I pressed it- myself Saturday night & don't- think I could have left- it- in the Kitchen.

Last- night- I donned, my evening dress in a great- hurry & jingles & I went- to the Gale Glee & Banjo club concert which is one of the great - functions here. As to the musical part of it - I am not much of a judge because we could not hear much there was such a noise. The top gallery was entirely filled with students who kept showering down confetti & letting down pads & pencils with little bells - down which the girls answered & were then drawn up again. Then they showed down little cards one of which I enclose. The whole centre of the theatre was one coloured c.b. web. The students had hundreds & hundreds of rolls of narrow coloured paper rolled up like a roll of ribbon. They would hold the end & then throw it - at someone down below. I don't think I ever saw so many pretty girls together before. People come from all that she kissed her hands to someone at the other side of the theatre - absolutely unconscious of everyone else. The whole thing was most entertaining.

The Sergeants are all
dear & make you feel so at home at once. So you know the Sergeant & girls have breakfast at 6.15. Imagine!
I sent the telegram to be collected as I thought possibly there might be difficulty about the paying of it here but please let me know what it cost & I will refund. Marie arrives tonight & stays till Thursday morning. I think she is going to Montreal after all.

lots of love to you all from
Ruth.

H. B. Very many thanks to you all for the great assistance in getting me ready.

25 Church Street
New Haven Conn.