Annas marriage -
& Wedding in the house?

Dearest,

Will you please either measure what remains of the crimson clauask or bring it up with you when you come - Mamma thinks that we ought to make the curtains now, & Miss Leun has been looking for something of the sort & told mamma that she wd be very glad to have some of it, if we sh^d really have more than we wanted. So we must find out how much there is & decide how much we want; for to have yards put away, is to tempt that people say such things, do come, be careful of yourself - as I said before I wd rather you did not come to see me so often, than that you shd do so, when you have not time enough - I that is saying a great deal of I talked a great deal of nonsense last night, console yourself by hoping that there is so much less for you to hear in the future I dear, remember, that always I am yours ever true love

Anna

Mrs MacKay has just been here to ask me your address, but she wants you to go to a official party at her house, we have accepted the invitation, I trust have lovely pictures, so please say you will go.

miserly which comes from motto's degrading -

I went to see Mrs Armstrong today, she feels better, but does not expect to get off till next week. She was very sweet, & gracious, but evidently considers a marriage in the house, somewhat ir-religious, but is willing to overlook the impropriety on the ground of our being "Scotch".

Maryanne is still comparing the relative advantage of the 1st & 7th ^{June} I decline to give a decided opinion.
I feel my mind going to such an extent that I can scarcely even combat (refractory) dressmakers.

Mrs A - says you are looking worn out. I hate to hear
