Yours truly
The little thoughts of their visit I had little letters. I had a nice letter too from Lillie & she tells me Conrad has left & has big back teeth which is a bit
horrible

so much for your little letter, which if I had no news, had, what was much more endearing & comforting, as affection always must be -

Miles I am really beginning to be home-sick. I must get down as soon next week as I can, we went over to Mr Carpman's yesterday to a quiet cup of tea to see Julia's children such nice little people? I agree the little girl will be 7 on the 7th of next month, our Edlett's birthday - odd! is it not?

Mr B wanted me to go to a dinner party he is giving next Tuesday - but I declined for I think I will go home
then & to back out-go-dinner does not do -
besides it is a long way & I don't like the ladies paying dollars for calls for me to dine out, & they won't let me pay by a/c Monday Mrs Greaves is to have a reception at the cathedral school room &

I feel sure we very much to go to unless anything prevents, I think I had better stay for that, & then home, I hope - I feel that I can no less months now, to last as he with the children, before I may be occupied with another ^{my} work. must surrender most of my time for a year while - I would like to do all I can with some for their now - & get the time I readers weekly arrangements for all their arrival abroad - They are are to go to S^{pt} - tea at Mrs R. - but they do is better now do very, but they can see almost - was since we can see last - was their ill health of children - I feel but I see inclined to generalize about the product of the abolition - whether my mind is generalizing to the occasion or the manner of other people seem so much more than my own that it seems unkind to complain - today it is not the children, I think you feel soon for any number of children in my heart, words and the seeming impossibility of doing all one ought for so many, with others one - I also the feeling that it can reach the children to the well of good, but not such sales
