Just a line
I wish you a happy Birthday & many returns each one better than the last. I think we sh^d have it so, one aspects less & gets more I think as life goes on. The real hopes & real blessings, are more clear & one ceases to wish for so many things, that make up the "great need & the great griev of humanity". The one enemy that is ever more hateful, is sin in all its forms.

Had such a nice letter from Sybil hoping you wd stay with her. I hope you will manage it & a glimpse of Scotland, I sh^d think grand every wd' appear greatly to B.S. & I wish Ireland & Scotland are fine. You do not seem to have made any plans beyond Britain, nor do you say how long you think of staying there, but we will fear it - all as it unfolds - We were interested in the Taylor's house & daisies, also Rakka & poor little Margaret. We heard of you through the Coffins & Brenda Ingham, who will be here next week, I fancy. I am sorry W.S. was not here, show such big interests. I hope you painted out garden's tomb in St. Paul's. No sermon could be more great than its inscription:

I am wondering if the Nat. Hist Museum does not delight him, & New gardens, & the tower, where Traitor's gate & the gruesome place of execution make one want to hold one's head well on -

Do get W.S. to have his head often shampooed, for he won't be able to do it himself, & I am very troubled about his hair. His size & handsome features would only make him look more ridiculous if he came much more often has not passed but takes & different reports being given to J. & Mr. Wolcott & they
