

Cambridge Dec. 28th '98.

My dear Dr. Harrington,

The rush of work
before the recess induced me to take advantage of your kind permission to refrain from answering your second invitation, but I must write to thank you for it, and to tell you how much pleasure I take in the thought that you are so comfortably and adequately established.

I wish I could have come to the opening exercises, but it was impossible, as I have a large number of research men this year, whom I could not leave even for two days; and my elementary class of 300 seem like lost sheep even with all the time I can give to them, so I did not dare to take away any of it.

With best regards and congratulations

Very truly yours
C. L. Jackson—
