I have been reading in the Times the accounts of the Behring Sea award.
You, with the others, are I am sure to be most cordially congratulated on the result. Very satisfactory I should say on the whole, & certainly much more favourable than I anticipated. Regulations seem unnecessarily stringent, but this was inevitable, since only one side felt themselves free to lie, and the decision of any tribunal in such matters is, I suppose necessarily, a compromise. Most notable thing I see about the decision is the phrase, referring to the B.C. seaboard, "the Indians residing on the Coast of Great Britain"

- Rather a novel and interesting way of putting things, and so far as I know quite a new departure in a formal document of the kind - it is to be hoped that it was more than a mere inadvertence. I left Rock Ferry rather suddenly, having been asked to travel with a patient for a few weeks - This trip has been a very pleasant and interesting one. Crossing from Hull to Gotterburg, we came across Sweden to this place, where we have now been for nearly a week. Fine town, this, with handsome buildings & good streets, & an innumerable charming trips up & down the somewhat intricate harbour & amongst

few necessary garments of sorts. Six months ago I should have returned your kind gift with best thanks, but poverty I find finds to deaden all one's better feeling, and leaves one what scraps of pride years of penuriosness, and one bad luck may have left. Rather rough being poor to the verge of beggary, and utterly unsteady as well. Possibly if one lives for another quarter of a century or so, one's luck may change, as you suggested, but I really don't much care now whether it does or not, since the time is past when a little money would have enabled one to make something of one's life - insurmountable islands on which the inhabitants have constructed charming little wooden houses, some of which are situated on Murray Bay, for no summer residence in the country as a whole, what I have seen of it reminds me not a little of eastern Canada. Any quantity of streams and picturesque little lakes, with rocky hills and pine forests everywhere.

every turn, indeed in many cases are identically the same as those seen on St. Lawrence. I fancy
very similar. We have
well as money is not
has required little hitherto except to be kept interested & amused. Movements
present uncertain, but shall try to arrange to run some of them.

across to St. Petersburg for a few days. Capital built
day or two, & make the trip across the Baltic in two days.

Shall you go out to B. Co this autumn? If you can work load in into any plan of route you may make, I shall I need hardly say be awfully pleased to have any expression of opinion as to prospects or best method of development there.

Hope the Indian cigars
