Dear Dr. Griffith,

There is a considerable awakening of interest in curare in anaesthesia over here. Most people have been using Intocortin supplied by Messrs. Squibb, and I understand that various anaesthetists have small series of successful cases, not yet sufficient for publication. We have been offered two papers, both on small numbers, and have agreed to publish one of these as a Preliminary Communication. It would be far more satisfactory if in the same issue, or before, could appear a summary of your own extensive experience. We can extract the main points from your J.A.P.A. article in an editorial; but better still would be a Signed article (or letter if you prefer) by yourself — it would be hung up to date, and would certainly include the important points. Do you feel inclined to send us something on that line?

Yours sincerely,

Dr. H. A. Griffith.
