My dear Sharpe,

I found that the bird's skins had been sent to Inverness by mistake, so I brought them here, wrote out the labels in ink, and am now sending them to Tenterden Street addressed to myself, so you can get them as soon as you like.

There are only half a dozen large shells I could not get in the box, these you can see another time, I trust the collection may prove of some interest.

I find I must leave writing the paper until my return to town as I shall soon begin to move again, but I think there is material for a fairly good one if I can only work it up.

Believe me,
yours very truly,
J. E. Buckley.

My dear Sharpe.

I just let me enquire how your wife is, since that awful explosion? I trust better, it is lucky you were no nearer the Canal than you are.

As to the book. I should like the 8vo 1873 with plates, & perhaps it will be best to get both, then I shall be sure to be right. Will you send me, too, at the same time, ~~that~~ your Cat. of Brit. Brit. Mus. as I have not yet got a copy, and let me know to what the whole will be and I will send you a P.O.O. for the amount, & what office shall I make it payable?

I hope to be in town sometime in November, so if you see Sol. just tell him, I shall hope to see him too.

Is there anything particular going on just now, I heard from Elmes a day or two ago, and he says Sol has turned his bricks & another room in Tavistock St. where ours was it.

Believe me,

Yours very truly,

T. E. Brightly.

My dear Sharpe,

You are a brick to have done so much for me; my paper will be a much more scientific and useful one under your supervision than it would otherwise have been, and as soon as ever I have seen the duplicates and know what they are, you shall have first turn at them
