BLACKER

I do not know w^t had D remarks upon it further than that the great size of the head, and the ligamentous attachment of the teeth remind us of Lophius piscatorius.

The spine agrees with the figure of a fossil Cyclus - in Histoire Veronese.

R. O.

Richard Owen -

Dear Sir

In the year 1820 when Colonel Birch sold a fine collection of Lyme Fossils, at Bullock's in Piccadilly there were two or three specimens exceedingly analogous to what are here considered as the Jaws, and from all the comparisons we could then make they were considered as dorsal spines of the fins of some kind of Silurus, but still some doubts remained. If we could see the specimen itself it might be easier to determine whether all the parts of the figure in this drawing were really parts of the same individual; or whether it be composite

W^m Clift

April 30. 1833.

W^m Lonsdale Esq^r

Mr. Clift and
Mr. Brown's remarks
on the Pseudoraia
dolichognathes.