that long ago and have a facsimile copy of it, thanks. But we now require to look at the old registers, and Allen will come to the museum one morning soon and see you about them. Perhaps they could be left in someone's charge for him to get access to them & look over them, if you should be away any day.

Sincerely Yours

Dear Sherborn

Allen reminds me that I never acknowledged a postcard received from you in September. I really must apologise. On the card you said you were just going away into the country, so I put it on one side meaning to write on your return. You know how fresh things crop up and make one overlook other things: since then I have been away twice, — once to the North of England.

Thanks for the information about those registers. By the second volume of the British things I suppose you mean the register you made. We had
