Shepherd of Salifbury Plain.

PART II.

AM willing to hope that my readers will not be forry to hear fome farther particulars of their old acquaintance the Shepherd of Salibury Plain. They will call to mind that at the end of the first part, he was returning home full of gratitude for the favours he had received from Mr. Johnson, whom we left pursuing his journey, after having promised to make a visit to the Shepherd's Cottage.

Mr. Johnson, after having passed some time with his friend, fat out on his return to Salibury, and on the Saturday evening reachea a very small inn, a mile or two distant from the Shepherd's Village; for he never travelled on a Sunday. He went the next morning to the Church nearest the house where he had passed the night; and after taking fuch refreshment as he could get at that house, he walked on to find out the Shepherd's cottage. His reason for visiting him on a Sunday was chiefly, becaufe he fuppofed it to be the only day which the Shepherd's employment allowed him to pais at home with his family, and as Mr. Johnfon had been Aruck with his talk, he thought it would would be neither unpleafant nor unprofitable to obferve how a Man who carried fuch an appearance of piety, fpent his Sunday; for though he was fo low in the world, this Gentleman was not above entering very clofely into his character, of which he thought he fhould be able to form a better judgment, by feeing whether his practice at home kept pace with his professions abroad. For it is not fo much by observing how people talk, as how they live, that we ought to judge of their characters.

After a pleafant walk Mr. Johnson got within fight of the cottage, to which he was directed by the clump of hawthorns and the broken chimney. He wished to take the family by furprife; and walking gently up to the house, he stood awhile to listen. The door being half open, he faw the Shepherd, (who looked to refpectable in his Sunday Coat that he fhould hardly have known him) his Wife, and their numerous young family, drawing round their little table, which was covered with a clean though very coarfe cloth. There flood on it a large difh of potatoes, a brown pitcher, and a piece of a coarse loaf. The wife and children flood in filent attention, while the Snepherd with uplifted hands and eyes, devoutly begged the bleffing of heaven on their homely fare. Mr. Johnson could not help sighing to reflect that he had fometimes feen better dinners eaten with lefs appearance of thankfulnels.

The

The Shepherd and his wife then fat down with great feeming cheerfulnefs, but the children flood; and while the mother was help. ing them, little fresh coloured Molly who had picked the wool from the bulhes with fo much delight, cried out, "Father, I wish I was big enough to fay grace, I am fure I should fay it very heartily to day, for I was thinking what must poor people do who have no falt to their potatoes, and do but look, our dish is quite for "-" That is the true way of thinking, Molly," faid the Father; " in whatever concerns bodily wants and bodily comforts, it is our duty to compare our own lot with the lot of those who are worse off, and this will keep us thankful; On the other hand, whenever we are tempted to fet up our own wildom or goodnels, we must compare ourfelves with those who are wifer and better, and that will keep us humble." Molly was now to hungry, and found the potatoes fo good, that the had no time to make any more remarks; but was devouring her dinner very heartily, when the barking of the great dog drew her attention from her tren. cher to the door, and spying the stranger, she cried out, " look father, fee here, if yonder is not the good Gentleman." Mr. Johnfon finding himself discovered, immediately walked in, and was heartily welcomed by the honest Shepherd, who told his wife that this was the Gentleman to whom they were for much obliged.

The good Woman began, as some very neat people are rather too apt to do, with making many apologies that her house was not cleaner, and that things were not in fitter order to receive fuch a gentleman. Mr. Johnson however, on looking round, could discover nothing but the most perfect neatness. The trenchers on which they were eating were almost as white as their linen; and not with fanding the number and smallness of the children, there was not the least appearance of dirt or litter. The furniture was very fimple and poor, hardly indeed amounting to bare necessaries. It consisted of four brown wooden, chairs, which, by conflant rubbing were become as bright as a looking glass; an iron pot and kettle; a poor old grate which scarcely held a handful of coals, and out of which the little fire that had been in it appeared to have been taken, as foon as it had answered the end for which it had been lighted, that of boiling their potatoes. Over the chimney ftood an ald fashioned broad bright candleflick, and a flill brighter spit; it was pretty clear that this last was kept, rather for ornament than use. An old carved elbow chair, and a cheft of the fame date which flood in the corner, were confidered the most valuable part of the Shepherd's goods, having been in the family for three generations. But all these were lightly esteemed by him in comparison of another possession, which added to the above made up the whole of what he

he had inherited from his father; and which last he would not have parted with, if no other could have been had, for a king's ranfom: this was a large old Bible, which lay on the window feat, neatly covered with brown cloth. variously patched. This facred book was most reverendly preferved from dog's ears, dirt, and every other injury, but fuch as time and much use had made it suffer in spite of care. On the clean white walls was passed, a hymn on the Crucifixion of our Saviour, a print of the Prodigal Son, the Shepherd's Hymn, and a New History of a true Book.

(7)

After the first falutations were over, Mr. Johnson said, that if they would go on quietly with their dinner he would fit down. Though a good deal ashamed, they thought it more respectful to obey the Gentleman, who having cast his eyes on their slender provisions, gently rebuked the Shepherd for not having indulged himself, as it was Sunday, with a morfel of Bacon to relifh his Potatoes. The Shepherd faid nothing, but poor Mary coloured and hung down her head, faying, " indeed, fir, it is not my fault, I did beg my husband to allow himself a bit of meat to day out of your honour's bounty; but he was too good to do it, and it is all for my fake." The Shepherd feemed unwilling to come to an explanation, but Mr Johnion defired Mary to go on. So the continued, " you must know Sir; that both of us next to a fin, dread a debt, and indeed in fome cates a debt 15 is a fin; but with all our care and pains we have never been able quite to pay off the Doctor's bill, for that bad fit of the Rheumatifm which I had laft winter. Now when you were pleased to give my husband that kind prefent the other day, I heartily defired him to buy a bit of meat for Sunday, as I faid before, that he might have a little refreshment for himself out of your kindnets. But answered he, Mary, it is never out of my mind long together that we still owe a few shillings to the Doctor, (and thank God it is all we did owe in the world.) Now if I carry him this money directly it will not only shew him our honesty and our good will; but it will be an encouragement to him to come to you another time in cafe you should be taken once more in fuch a bad fit; for I must own, added my poor husband, that the thought of your being fo terribly ill without any help, is the only misfortune that I want courage to face."

Here the grateful woman's tears ran down fo faft that the could not go on. She wiped them with the corner of her apron, and humbly begged pardon for making fo free. "Indeed Sir, " faid the Shepherd, " though my wife is full as unwilling to be in debt as myfelf, yet I could hardly prevail on her to confent to my paying this money juft then, becaufe the faid it was hard I thould not have a take of the Gentleman's bounty myfelf. But for once, Sir, I would have my own way. For For you must know, as 1 pass best part of my time alone, tending my sheep, 'tis a great point with me, Sir, to get comfortable matter for my own thoughts; fo that 'tis rather felf interest in me to allow myself in no pleafures and no practices that won't bear thinking on over and over. For when one is a good deal alone you know, Sir, all one's bad deeds do rush in upon one, as I may fay, and fo torment one, that there is no true comfort to be had but in keeping clear of wrong doings, and false pleasures; and that I suppose may be one reason why so many folks hate to stay a bit by themfelves .- But as I was fayingwhen I came to think the matter over on the hill yonder, said I to myself, a good dinner is a good thing I grant, and yet it will be but cold comfort to me a week after, to be able to fay-to be fure I had a nice shoulder of mution last Sunday for dinner, thanks to the good Gentleman, but then I am in debt .- I bad a rare dinner, that's certain, but the pleafure of that has long been over, and the debt Aill remains. I have spent the crown, and now if my poor wife should be taken in one. of those fits again, die she must, unless God work a miracle 10 present it, for I can get no help for her. This thought fettled all; and I fet off directly and paid the crown to the Doctor with as much chearfulnefs as I fhould have felt on fitting down to the fattest shoulder of mutton that ever was roaffed. And if I was contented at the time, think how much AS much more happy I have been at the remembrance! O Sir, there are no pleafures worth the name but fuch as bring no plague or penitence after them."

Mr. Johnfon was fatisfied with the Shepherd's reasons; and agreed that though a good dinner was not to be defpifed, yet it was not worthy to be compared with a contented Mind which (as the Bible truly fays) is a continual feast. " But come, faid the good Gentleman, what have you got in this brown mug?" " As good water, faid the Shepherd, as any in the king's dominions. I have heard of countries beyond sea in which there is no wholesome water; nay, I have been myfelf in a great town not far off where they are obliged to buy all the water they get, while a good Providence sends to my very door a fpring as fine and clear as Jacob's well. When I am tempted to repine that I have often no other drink, I call to mind, that it was nothing better than a cup of cold water which the woman of Samaria drew for the greatest guest that ever visited this world."

"Very well, replied Mr. Johnfon; but as your honefty has made you prefer a poor mea' to being in debt, I will at leaft fend and get fomething for you to drink. I faw a little public house just by the church, as I came along: Let that little tofy faced fellow fetch a mug of beer" So faying, he looked tull at the Boy who did not offer to fir, but caft an eye at his father to know what he was to do.

" Sir, faid the Shepherd, I hope we shall not appear ungrateful, if we feem to refuse your favour; my little boy would, I am sure, fly to ferve you on any other occasion. But, good Sir, it is Sunday, and should any of my family be feen at a Public house on a Sabbath day, it would be a much greater grief to me than to drink water all my life. I am often talking against these doings to others, and if I should fay one thing and do another, you can't think what an advantage it would give many of my neighbours over me, who would be glad enough to report that they caught the Shepherd's Son at the Ale-house, without explaining how it happened. Christians you know, Sir, must be doubly watchful, or they will not only bring difgrace on themselves, but what is much worfe, on that holy name by which they are called."

"Are you not a little too cautious, my honeft friend," faid Mr. Johnfon. "I humbly afk your pardon, Sir, replied the Shepherd, if I think that is impossible. In my poor notion I no more understand how a mancan be too cautious, than how he can be too ftrong or too healthy."

"You are right indeed, faid Mr. Johnfon, as a general principle, but this flruck me as a very fmall thing." Sit, faid the Shepherd, I am afraid you will think me very bold, but you encourage me to fpeak out."-" 'Tis what I with, faid the Gentleman." " Then, Sir, refumed the Shepherd, I doubt, if where there there is a temptation to do wrong, any thing can be called finall; that is, in thort, if there is any fuch thing as a small wilful fin. A poor man like me is feldom called out to do great things, fo that tis not by a few great deeds his character can be judged by his neighbours, but by the little round of daily cuftoms he allows himfelf in.-While they were thus talking, the children who had flood very quietly behind, and had not firred a foot, now began to fcamper about all at once, and in a moment ran to the window-feat to pick up their little old hats. Mr. Johnson looked furprifed at this difturbance; the Shepherd afked his pardon, telling him it was the found of the Church Bell which had been the cause of their rudeness; for their Mother had brought them up with fuch a fear of being too late for Church, that it was but who could catch the first stroke of the bell, and be first ready. He had always taught them to think that nothing was more indecent than to get into Church after it was begun; for as the fervice opened with an exhortation to repentance, and a confession of fin, it looked very presumptuous not to be ready to join in it; it looked as if people did not feel themfelves to be finners. And though fuch as lived at a great diftance might plead difference of clocks as an excufe, yet those who lived within the found of the bell, could neither pretend ignorance nor mistake."

Mary and her children fet forward. Mr. Johnson and the Shepherd followed, taking care care to talk the whole way on fuch fubjects as might fit them for the folemn duties of the place to which they were going. "I have often been forry to observe, saidMr. Johnson, that many who are reckoned decent, good kind of people, and who would on no account neglect going to church, yet feem to care but little in what frame or temper of mind they go thither. They will talk of their worldlyconcerns till they get within the door, and then take them up again the very minute the fermon is over, which makes me ready to fear they lay too much stress on the mere form of going to a place of worship. Now for my part, I always find that it requires a little time to bring my mind into a flate fit to do any common bufiness well, much more this great and most necessary business of all." "Yes Sir, faid the Shepherd, and then I think too how bufy I should be in preparing my mind, if I was going into the prefence of a great gentleman, or a lord, or the King; and shall the king of kings be treated with lefs respect? Besides one likes to see people feel as if going to Church was a thing of choice and pleasure, as well as a duty, and that they were as defirous not to be the laft there, as they would be if they were going to a feast or a fair."

After fervice, Mr. Jenkins the Clergyman, who was well acquainted with the character of Mr Johnfon, and had a great refpect for him, accofted him with much civility; expreffing preffing his concern that he could not enjoy just now fo much of his conversation as he wished, as he was obliged to visit a sick perfon at a distance, but hoped to have a little talk with him before he left the village. As they walked along together, Mr. Johnson made such enquiries about the Shepherd as ferved to confirm him in the high opinion he entertained of his piety, good fense, industry and felf-denial. They parted, the Clergyman promising to call in at the Cottage in his way home.

The Shepherd, which took it for granted that Mr. Johnson was gone to the Parsonage, walked home with his wife, and children, and was beginning in his usual way to catechize and instruct his family, when Mr. Johnson came in, and infifted that the Shepherd should go on with his inftructions, just as if he were not there. This Gentleman who was very defirous of being useful to his own Servants and work-men in the way of religious inftruction, was fometimes forry to find that though he took a good deal of pains, they did not now and then quite understand him, for though his meaning was very good, his language was not always very plain; and though the things he taid were not hard to be underftood, yet the words were, especially to fuch as were very ignorant. And he now began to find out that if people were ever fo wife and good, yet if they had not a fimple, agreeable and familiar way of expressing rhemthemfelves, fome of their plain hearers woul not be much the better for them. For this reafon he was not above liftening to the plain, humble way in which this honeft man taught his family, for though he knew that he himfelf had many advantages over the Shepherd, had more learning and could teach him many things, yet he was not too proud to learn even of fo poor a man, in any point where he thought the Shepherd might have the advantage of him.

This Gentleman was much pleafed with the knowledge and piety he difcovered in the answers of the children; and defired the Shepherd to tell him how he contrived to keep up a fense of divine things in his own mind and in that of his family with fo little leifure and fo little reading. "O as to that, Sir, faid the Shepherd, we do not read much except in one book to be fure; but by hearty prayer for God's bleffing on the use of that book, what little knowledge is needful feems to come of courfe, as it were. And my chief fludy has been to bring the fruits of the Sunday reading into the week's bufinefs, and to keep up the fame sense of Gop in the heart, when the Bible is in the cupboard as when it is in the hand. In fhort, to apply what I read in the booky to what I meet with in the Field."

"I don't quite understand you, faid Mr. Johnson." "Sir, replied the Shepherd, I have but a poor gift at conveying these things to others, though I have much comfort from them in my own mind; but I am fure that the most ignorant and hard working people, who are in earnest about their falvation, may help to keep up devout thoughts and good affections during the week, though they have hardly any time to look at a book. - And it will help them to keep out bad thoughts too which is no fmall matter. But then they must know the Bible; they must have read the word of God; that is a kind of flock in trade for a Christian to set up with; and it is this which makes me fo diligent in teaching it to my children; and even in fo ftoring their memories with Pfalms and Chapters This is a great help to a poor hard working Man, who will hardly meet with any thing but what he may turn to fome good account. If one lives in the fear and love of GoD, almost every thing one fees abroad will teach one to adore his power and goodnefs, and bring to mind some texts of Scripture, which shall fill the heart with thankfulnefs, and the mouth with praise. When I look upwards the Heavens declare the glory of God; and shall I be filent and ungrateful? if I look round and fee the Vallies flanding thick with Corn, how can I he'p bleffing that power who giveth me all things richly to enjoy? I may learn gratitude from the beafts of the Field, for the Ox knoweth his Owner, and the Als his Master's Crib, and shall a Christian not know, shall a Christian not confider what great things GOD God has done for him? I, who am a Shep: herd, endeavour to fill my foul with a conftant remembrance of that good Shepherd, who feedeth me in green pastures, and maketh me to lie down beside the still waters, and whose rod and staff comfort me.

You are happy, faid Mr. Johnfon, in this retired life by which you escape the corruptions of the world." "Sir, faid the Shepherd, 1 do not escape the corruptions of my own evil nature. Even there on that wild folitary hill, I can find out that my heart is prone to evil thoughts. I fuppose, Sir, that different flates have different temptations. You great folks that live in the world, perhaps are exposed to fome, of which fuch a poor man as I am, know nothing. But to one who leads a lonely life like me, evil thoughts are a chief beseting Sin; and I can no more withstand these without the grace of God, than a rich Gentleman can withfland the Inares of evil company, without the fame grace. And I feel that I stand in need of God's help continually, and if he should give me up to my own heart I should be lost.

Mr. Johnson approved of the Shepherd's fincerity, for he had always observed that where there was no humility, and no watchfulness against Sin, there was no religion, and he faid that the Man who did not feel himself to be a finner, in his opinion, could not be a christian.

Juft

Juft as they were in this part of their difcourfe, Mr. Jenkins, the Clergyman, came in. After the ufual falutations, he faid, "Well Shepherd, I wifh you joy; I know you will be forry to gain any advantages by the neath of a neighbour; but old Wilfon my Clerk, was fo infirm, and I truft fo well prepared, that there is no reafon to be forry for his death. I have been to pray by him, but he died while I ftaid. I have always intended you fhould fucceed to his place; 'tis no great matter, but every little is fomething."

"No great matter, Sir cried the Shepherd, indeed it is a great thing to Me; it will more than pay my rent. Bleffed be GoD for all his goodnefs." Mary faid nothing, but lifted up her eyes full of tears in filent gratitude.

" I am glad of this little circumftance, faid Mr. Jenkins, not only for your fake, but for the office itfelf. I fo heartily reverence every religious inflitution, that I would never have even the Amen added to the excellent prayers of our Church, by vain or profane lip; and if it depended on me, there fhould be no fuch thing in the land as an idle, drunken, or irreligious Parifh-Clerk. Sorry I am to fay that this matter is not always fufficiently attended to, and that I know fome of a very indifferent character.

Mr. Johnson now inquired of the clergyman whether there were many children in the Parish. "More than you would expect, replied he, from the seeming smallness of it, but there are are fome little Hamlets which you do not fee." "I think, returned Mr. Johnfon, I recollect that in the converfation I had with the Shepherd on the hill yonder, he told me you had no Sunday School." "I am forry to fay we have none, faid the Minister; I do what I can to remedy this misfortune by public catechifing; but having two or three Churches to ferve, I cannot give fo much time as I wish, to private inftruction; and having a large family of my own, and no affistance from others, I have never been able to establish a School."

" There is an excellent inflitution in London, faid Mr. Johnfon, called the Sunday-School Society, which kindly gives books and other helps, on the application of fuch pious Ministers as fland in need of their aid, and which I am fure would have affisted you; but I think we fhall be able to do fomething ourfelves .- Shepherd continued he, if I was a King, and had it in my power to make you a rich and a great Man, with a word speaking, I would not do it. Those who are raised by fome fudden firoke, much above the flation in which divine. providence had placed them, feldom turn out very good, or very happy. I have never had any great things in my power, but as far as I have been able, I have been always glad to affift the worthy. I have however never attempted or defired to fet any poor Man much above his natural condition, but it is a pleafure to me to lend him fuch affistance, affiftence, as may make that condition more eafy to himfelf, and to put him in a way which shall call him to the performance of more duties than perhaps he could have performed without my help, and of performing them in a better manner. What Rent do you pay for this Cottage ?

" Fifty Shillings a Year, Sir."

It is in a fad tattered condition, is there not a better to be had in the Village."

"That in which the poor Clerk lived, faid the Clergyman, is not only more tight and whole, but has two decent chambers, and a very large light kitchen."—"That will be very convenient, replied Mr. Johnfon, pray what is the rent?" I think, faid the Shepherd, poor neighbour Wilfon gave fomewhat about four pounds a year, or it might be guineas."—" Very well, faid Mr. Johnfon, and what will the Clerk's place be worth, think you?" "About three pounds," was the anfwer.

"Now, continued Mr. Johnfon, my plan is, that the Shepherd fhould take that houfe immediately; for as the poor man is dead, there will be no need of waiting till quarter day, if I make up the difference." "True Sir, faid Mr. Jenkins, and I am fure my Wife's Father, whom I expect to-morrow, will willingly affift a little towards buying fome of the Clerk's old goods. And the foorer they remove the better, for poor Mary caught that bad rheumatifm by fleeping under a leaky a leaky thatch." The Shepherd was too much moved to speak, and Mary could hardly sob out, "oh Sir, you are too good, indeed this house will do very well." " It may do very well for you and your children Mary, faid Mr. Johnson, gravely, but it will not do for a School; the kitchen is neither large nor light enough. Shepherd, continued he, with your good Minister's leave, and kind affistance, I propose to set up in this parish a Sunday School, and to make you the Master. It will not at all interfere with your weekly calling, and its the only lawful way in which you could turn the Sabbath into a day of tome little profit to your family, by doirg, is I hope, a great-deal of good to the Souls of others. The rest of the week you will work as usual. The difference of rent between this house and the Clerk's I shall pay myself, for to put you into a better house at your own expence would be no great act of kindnefs .----As for honest Mary, who is not fit for hard labour, or any out of door work, I propose to endow a small weekly school, of which the shall be the Mistress, and employ her notable turn to good account, by teaching ten or a dozen girls to knit, few, spin, card, or any other useful way of getting their bread; for all this I shall only pay her the usual price, for I am not going to make you rich, but uleful."

"Not rich, Sir?" cried the Shepherd. How can I ever be thankful enough for fuch bleffings? bleffings? And will my poor Mary have a dry thatch over her head? and thall I be able to fend for a doctor when I am like to loofe her? Indeed my cup runs over with bleffings, I hope God will give me humility." Here he and Mary looked at each other and burst into tears. The Gentlemen faw their diffress and kindly walked out upon the little green before the door, that these honest people might give vent to their feelings. As foon as they were alone they crept into one corner of the room, where they could not be feen and tell on their knees, devoutly praifing God for his mercies. Never were heartier prayers prefented, than this grateful couple offered up to their benefactors. The warmth of their gratitude could only be equalled by the earnefinels with which they befought the bleffing of God on the work in which they were going to engage.

The two Gentlemen now left this happy family, and walked to the parfonage, where the eventing was fpent in a manner very edifying to Mr. Johnfon, who the next day took all proper meafures for putting the Shepherd in immediate poffeffion of his now comfortable habitation. Mr. Jenkins's father-in-law, the worthy Gentleman who gave the Shepherd's Wife the blankets, in the firft part of this hiftory, arrived at the Parfonage before Mr. Johnfon left it, and affifted in fitting up the Clerk's Cottage.

Mr. Johnfon

Mr. Johnfon took his leave, promifing to call on the worthy Minifler and his new Clerk once a year, in his Summer's journey over the Plain, as long as it fhould pleafe God to fpare his life.—We hope he will never fail to give us an account of these visits which we shall be glad to lay before our readers if they should contain instruction or amusement.
