

CR, A

YOUNG LADY'S

ENTRANCE

INTO THE ## WORLD.

IN A SERIES OF LETTERS.

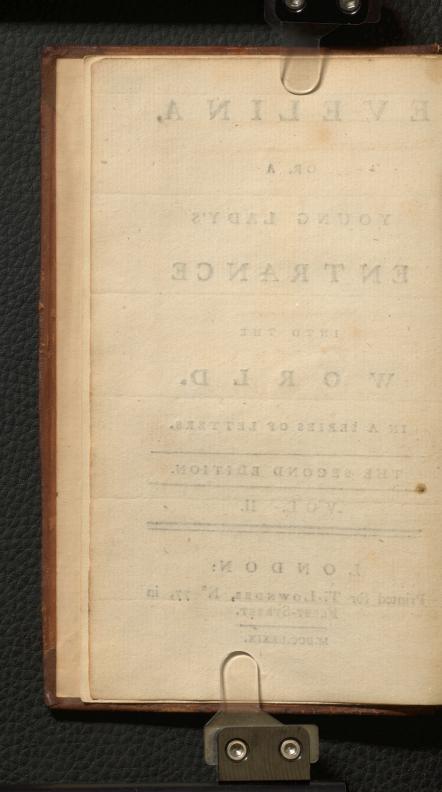

THE SECOND EDITION.

VOL. II.

LONDON:

Printed for T. Lowndes, N° 77, in FLEET-STREET.

M.DCC.LXXIX.

arroing haftily back, but

IN A SERIES OF LETTERS.

els. "do 1 lee Mills Anville !--- and

LETTER I.

Evelina to the Rev. Mr. Villars.

Howard Grove, Kent, May 105-

OUR house has been enlivened today, by the arrival of a London vifitor; and the neceffity I have been under of concealing the uneafines of my mind, has made me exert myself fo effectually, that I even think it is really diminished; or, at least, my thoughts are not fo totally, fo very anxiously occupied by one only subject, as they lately were.

I was ftrolling this morning with Mifs Mirvan, down a lane about a mile from the grove, when we heard the trampling of A 2 horfes:

horfes; and, fearing the narrownefs of the paffage, we were turning haftily back, but itopped upon hearing a voice call out "Pray, Ladies, don't be frightened, for I will walk my horfe." We turned again, and then faw Sir Clement Willoughby. He difmounted, and approaching us, with the reins in his hand, prefently recollected us. "Good Heaven," cried he, with his ufual quicknefs, "do I fee Mifs Anville ?—and you, too, Mifs Mirvan ?"

He immediately ordered his fervant to take charge of his horfe, and then, advancing to us, took a hand of each, which he prefied to his lips, and faid a thoufand fine things concerning his good fortune, our improved looks, and the charms of the country, when inhabited by fuch rural dei-"The town, Ladies, has languished ties. fince your absence,-or, at least, I have fo much languished myfelf, as to be abfolutely infenfible to all it had to offer. One refreshing breeze, fuch as I now enjoy, awakens me to new vigour, life, and spirit. But I never before had the good luck to fee the country in fuch perfection."

"Has not almost every body left town, Sir ?" faid Miss Mirvan.

"I am afhamed to anfwer you, Madambut indeed it is as full as ever, and will continue continue fo, till after the birth-day. However, you Ladies were fo little feen, that there are but few who know what it has loft. For my own part, I felt it too fenfibly, to be able to endure the place any longer."

5

" Is there any body remaining there, that we were acquainted with !" cried I.

"O yes, Ma'am." And then he named two or three perfons we had feen when with him; but he did not mention Lord Orville, and I would not afk him, left he fhould think me curious. Perhaps, if he ftays here fome time, he may fpeak of him by accident.

He was proceeding in this complimentary ftyle, when we were met by the Captain; who no fooner perceived Sir Clement, than he hastened up to him, gave him a hearty shake of the hand, a cordial slap on the back, and fome other equally gentle tokens of fatisfaction, affuring him of his great joy at his vifit, and declaring he was as glad to fee him as if he had been a meffenger who brought news that a French ship was funk. Sir Clement, on the other fide, expressed himself with equal warmth, and protefted he had been fo eager to pay his refpects to Captain Mirvan, that he had left London in its full luftre, and a A 3 thousand thoufand engagements unanfwered, merely to give himfelf that pleafure.

6

"We fhall have rare fport," faid the Captain, "for do you know the old Frenchwoman is among us? 'Fore George, I have fcarce made any use of her yet, by reason I have had nobody with me that could enjoy a joke: howfomever, it shall go hard but we'll have fome diversion now."

Sir Clement very much approved of the propofal; and we then went into the houfe, where he had a very grave reception from Mrs. Mirvan, who is by no means pleafed with his vifit, and a look of much difcontent from Madame Duval, who faid to me, in a low voice, "I'd as foon have feen Old Nick as that man, for he's the moft impertinenteft perfon in the world, and is n't never of my fide."

The Captain is now actually occupied in contriving fome fcheme which, he fays, is to play the old Dowager off; and fo eager and delighted is he at the idea, that he can fcarcely conftrain his raptures fufficiently to conceal his defign, even from herfelf. I wifh, however, fince I do not dare put Madame Duval upon her guard, that he had the delicacy not to acquaint me with his intention.

LETTER

LETTER II.

Evelina in continuation.

May 13th.

to hear birth protei

THE Captain's operations are begun, —and, I hope, ended; for indeed, poor Madame Duval has already but too much reafon to regret Sir Clement's vifit to Howard Grove.

Yefterday morning, during breakfaft, as the Captain was reading the news-paper, Sir Clement fuddenly begged to look at it, faying he wanted to know if there was any account of a transaction, at which he had been prefent the evening before his journey hither, concerning a poor Frenchman, who had got into a fcrape which might coft him his life.

The Captain demanded particulars; and then Sir Clement told a long flory, of being with a party of country friends, at the Tower, and hearing a man call out for mercy in French; and that, when he enquired into the occasion of his diftres, he was informed, that he had been taken up upon fuspicion of treasonable practices against the government. "The poor fellow," continued he, "no fooner found that I spoke French, than he besought me  $A_{4}$  to to hear him, protefting that he had no evil defigns; that he had been but a fhort time in England, and only waited the return of a Lady from the country, to quit it for ever."

Madame Duval changed colour, and liftened with the utmost attention.

"Now, though I by no means approve of fo many foreigners continually flocking into our country," added he, addreffing himfelf to the Captain, "yet I could not help pitying the poor wretch, becaufe he did not know enough of English to make his defence: however, I found it impossible to affist him, for the mob would not fuffer me to interfere. In truth, I am afraid he was but roughly handled."

"Why, did they duck him?" faid the Captain.

"Something of that fort," anfwered he.

"So much the better ! fo much the better !" cried the Captain, "an impudent French puppy !— I'll bet you what you will he was a rafcal. I only wifh all his countrymen were ferved the fame."

"I wifh you had been in his place, with all my foul !" cried Madame Duval, warmly;—" but pray, Sir, did n't nobody know who this poor gentleman was ?"

" Why

"Why, I did hear his name," anfwered Sir Clement, "but I cannot recollect it."

"It was n't,—it was n't—Du Bois ?" ftammered out Madame Duval.

"The very name !" anfwered he, "yes, Du Bois, I remember it now."

Madame Duval's cup fell from her hand, as fhe repeated "Du Bois! Monfieur Du Bois, did you fay ?"

"Du Bois! why that's my friend." cried the Captain, "that's Monseer Slippery, i'n't it?—Why he's plaguy fond of fouling work; howfomever, I'll be fworn they gave him his fill of it."

"And I'll be fworn," cried Madame Duval, "that you're a—but I don't believe nothing about it, fo you need n't be fo overjoyed, for I dare fay it was no more Monfieur Du Bois than I am."

"I thought at the time," faid Sir Clement, very gravely, "that I had feen the gentleman before, and now I recollect, I think it was in company with you, Madam."

"With me, Sir !" cried Madame Duval.

"Say you fo !" faid the Captain, "why then, it must be he, as fure as you're alive !—Well but, my good friend, what will they do with poor Monfeer?"

A 5

" It

10

" It is difficult to fay," anfwered Sir Clement, very thoughtfully, "but, I fhould fuppofe, that if he has not good friends to appear for him, he will be in a very unpleafant fituation; for thefe are ferious fort of affairs."

"Why do you think they'll hang him?" demanded the Captain.

Sir Clement fhook his head, but made no anfwer.

Madame Duval could no longer contain her agitation; fhe flarted from her chair, repeating, with a voice half choaked, "Hang him!—they can't,—they fha'n't, let them at their peril!—however, it's all falle, and I won't believe a word of it; but I'll go to town this very moment, and fee M. Du Bois myfelf;—I won't wait for nothing."

Mrs. Mirvan begged her not to be alarmed; but fhe flew out of the room, and up ftairs into her own apartment. Lady Howard blamed both the gentlemen for having been fo abrupt, and followed her. I would have accompanied her, but the Captain ftopped me; and, having firft laughed very heartily, faid he was going to read his commiffion to his fhip's company.

"Now, do you fee," faid he, " as to Lady Howard, I fha'n't pretend for to enlift her into my fervice, and fo I shall e'en leave leave her to make it out as well as fhe can; but as to all you. I expect obedience and fubmiffion to orders; I am now upon a hazardous expedition, having undertaken to convoy a crazy veffel to the fhore of Mortification; fo, d'ye fee, if any of you have any thing to propofe, that will forward the enterprize,—why fpeak and welcome; but if any of you, that are of my chofen crew, capitulate, or enter into any treaty with the enemy,—I fhall look upon you as mutinying, and turn you adrift."

TI

Having finished this harangue, which was interlarded with many expressions, and sea-phrases, that I cannot recollect, he gave Sir Clement a wink of intelligence, and left us to ourfelves.

Indeed, notwithftanding the attempts I fo frequently make of writing fome of the Captain's conversation, I can only give you a faint idea of his language; for almost every other word he utters, is accompanied by an oath, which, I am fure, would be as unpleasant for you to read, as for me to write. And, besides, he makes use of a thousand fea-terms, which are to me quite unintelligible.

Poor Madame Duval fent to enquire at all probable places, whether fhe could be conveyed to town in any ftage-coach; but the Captain's fervant brought her for an-A 6 fwer, iwer, that no London ftage would pafs near Howard Grove till to-day. She then fent to order a chaife; but was foon affured, that no horfes could be procured. She was fo much inflamed by thefe difappointments, that fhe threatened to fet out for town on foot, and it was with difficulty that Lady Howard diffuaded her from this mad fcheme.

The whole morning was filled up with thefe enquiries. But, when we were all affembled to dinner, fhe endeavoured to appear perfectly unconcerned, and repeatedly protefted that fhe gave not any credit to the report, as far as it regarded M. Du Bois, being very certain that he was not the perfon in queftion.

The Captain ufed the most provoking efforts to convince her that she deceived herfelf; while Sir Clement, with more art, though not less malice, affected to be of her opinion; but, at the fame time that he pretended to relieve her uneasine's, by faying that he doubted not having mistaken the name, he took care to enlarge upon the danger to which the unknown gentleman was exposed, and expressed great concern at his perilous situation.

Dinner was hardly removed, when a letter was delivered to Madame Duval. The moment she had read it, she hastily demanded.

manded from whom it came ? "A country boy brought it," anfwered the fervant, " but he would not wait."

"Run after him this inftant !" cried fhe, " and be fure you bring him back. Mon Dieu ! quel avanture ! que ferai-je ?"

"What's the matter? what's the matter?" faid the Captain.

"Why nothing,-nothing's the matter. O mon Dieu !"

And fhe rofe, and walked about the room.

"Why, what—has Monseer fent to you?" continued the Captain : " is that there letter from him?

" No,-it i'n't ;-befides, if it is, it's nothing to you."

"O then, I'm fure it is! Pray now, Madame, don't be fo clofe; come, tell us all about it,—what does he fay? how did he relifh the horfe-pond?—which did he find beft, foufing fingle or double?—'Fore George, 'twas plaguy unlucky you was not with him!"

"It's no fuch a thing, Sir," cried fhe, very angrily, " and if you're fo very fond of a horfe-pond, I wifh you'd put yourfelf into one, and not be always a thinking about other people's being ferved fo."

The man then came in, to acquaint her they could not overtake the boy. She fcolded fcolded violently, and was in fuch perturbation, that Lady Howard interfered, and begged to know the caufe of her uneafinets, and whether the could affift her?

14

Madame Duval caft her eyes upon the Captain and Sir Clement, and faid fhe fhould be glad to fpeak to her Ladyfhip, without fo many witneffes.

"Well, then, Mifs Anville," faid the Captain, turning to me, "do you and Molly go into another room, and flay there till Mrs. Duval has opened her mind to us."

"So you may think, Sir," cried fhe, "but who's fool then? no, no, you need n't trouble yourfelf to make a ninny of me, neither, for I'm not fo eafily taken in, I'll affure you."

Lady Howard then invited her into the dreffing-room, and I was defired to attend her.

As foon as we had flut the door, "O my Lady," exclaimed Madame Duval, "here's the most cruelleft thing in the world has happened !—But that Captain is fuch a beast, I can't fay nothing before him,—but it's all true ! poor M. Du Bois is tooked up !"

Lady Howard begged her to be comforted, faying that, as M. Du Bois was certainly tainly innocent, there could be no doubt of his ability to clear himfelf.

15

"To be fure, my Lady," anfwered fhe, I know he is innocent; and to be fure they'll never be fo wicked as to hang him for nothing ?"

"Certainly not;" replied Lady Howard, "you have no reafon to be uneafy. This is not a country where punifhment is inflicted without proof."

"Very true, my Lady; but the worft thing is this; I cannot bear that that fellow, the Captain, fhould know about it; for if he does, I fha'n't never hear the laft of it; no more won't poor M. Du Bois."

"Well, well," faid Lady Howard, fhew me the letter, and I will endeavour to advife you."

The letter was then produced. It was figned by the clerk of a country juffice; who acquainted her, that a prifoner, then upon trial for fufpicion of treafonable practices against the government, was just upon the point of being committed to jail, but having declared that he was known to her, this clerk had been prevailed upon to write, in order to enquire if the really could fpeak to the character and family of a Frenchman who called himfelf Pierre Du Bois.

When

When I heard the letter, I was quite amazed at its fuccefs. So improbable did it feem, that a foreigner fhould be taken before a country juffice of peace, for a crime of fo dangerous a nature, that I cannot imagine how Madame Duval could be alarmed, even for a moment. But, with all her violence of temper, I fee that fhe is eafily frightened, and, in fact, more cowardly than many who have not half her fpirit; and fo little does fhe reflect upon circumftances, or probability, that fhe is continually the dupe of her own—I ought not to fay ignorance, but yet, I can think of no other word.

I believe that Lady Howard, from the beginning of the transaction, fuspected some contrivance of the Captain, and this letter, I am fure, must confirm her fuspicion: however, though fhe is not at all pleafed with his frolick, yet fhe would not hazard the confequence of difcovering his defigns : her looks, her manner, and her character, made me draw this conclusion from her apparent perplexity; for not a word did fhe fay, that implied any doubt of the authenticity of the letter. Indeed there feems to be a fort of tacit agreement between her and the Captain, that fhe should not appear to be acquainted with his fchemes; by by which means fhe at once avoids quarrels, and fupports her dignity.

17

While the was confidering what to propofe, Madame Duval begged to have the use of her Ladyship's chariot, that she might go immediately to the affiftance of her friend. Lady Howard politely affured her, that it would be extremely at her fervice; and then Madame Duval befought her not to own to the Captain what had happened, protefting that fhe could not endure he should know poor M. Du Bois had met with fo unfortunate an accident. Lady Howard could not help fmiling, though the readily promifed not to inform the Captain of the affair. As to me, she defired my attendance; which I was by no means rejoiced at, as I was certain she was going upon a fruitles errand.

I was then commissioned to order the chariot.

At the foot of the ftairs I met the Captain, who was most impatiently waiting the refult of the conference. In an inftant we were joined by Sir Clement. A thousand enquiries were then made concerning Madame Duval's opinion of the letter, and her intentions upon it: and when I would have left them, Sir Clement, pretending equal eagerness with the Captain, caught my hand, and repeatedly detained me, to ask fome fome frivolous queftion, to the answer of which he must be totally indifferent. At length, however, I broke from them; they retired into the parlour, and I executed my commission.

The carriage was foon ready, and Madame Duval having begged Lady Howard to fay fhe was not well, ftole foftly down ftairs, defiring me to follow her. The chariot was ordered at the garden-door; and when we were feated, fhe told the man, according to the clerk's directions, to drive to Mr. Juftice Tyrell's, afking, at the fame time, how many miles off he lived ?

I expected he would have answered that he knew of no fuch perfon; but, to my great furprife, he faid, "Why 'Squire Tyrell lives about nine miles beyond the park."

"" Drive fast, then," cried fhe, " and you sha'n't be no worfe for it."

During our ride, which was extremely tedious, the tormented herfelf with a thoufand fears for M. Du Bois' fafety; and piqued herfelf very much upon having efcaped unfeen by the Captain, not only that the avoided his triumph, but becaufe the knew him to be fo much M. Du Bois' enemy, that the was fure he would prejudice the Juftice againft him, and endeavour to take away his life. For my part, I was

I was quite afhamed of being engaged in fo ridiculous an affair, and could only think of the abfurd appearance we fhould make upon our arrival at Mr. Tyrell's.

When we had been out near two hours, and expected every moment to ftop at the place of our defination, I obferved that Lady Howard's fervant, who attended us on horfeback, rode on forward till he was out of fight, and foon after returning, came up to the chariot-window, and delivering a note to Madame Duval, faid he had met a boy, who was juit coming with it to Howard Grove, from the Clerk of Mr. Tyrell.

While fhe was reading it, he rode round to the other window, and, making a fign for fecrecy, put into my land a flip of paper, on which was writter, "Whatever happens, be not alarmed,—for you are fafe, —though you endanger all mankind !"

I readily imagined that Sir Clement muft be the author of this note, which prepared me to expect fome difagreeable adventure: but I had no time to ponder upon it, for Madame Duval had no focner read her own letter, than, in an angry tone of voice, fhe exclaimed, "Why now what a thing is this! here we're come all this way for nothing!"

She

She then gave me the note, which informed her, that the need not trouble herfelf to go to Mr. Tyrell's, as the prifoner had had the address to escape. I congratulated her upon this fortunate incident; but fhe was fo much concerned at having rode fo far in vain, that fhe feemed lefs pleafed than provoked. However, fhe ordered the man to make what hafte he could home, as she hoped, at least, to return before the Captain should suspect what had paffed.

The cirriage turned about, and we journeved foquietly for near an hour, that I began to flatter myself we should be suffered to proceed to Howard Grove without further moleftation, when, fuddenly, the footman called out, "John, are we going right?" "Why, I a'n't fure," faid the coachman,

" but I'm afraid we turned wrong."

"What do you mean by that, Sirrah?" faid Malame Duval, " why if you lofe your way, we shall be all in the dark."

" I think we should turn to the left," faid the footman.

" To the left !" answered the other, "No, no, I'm partly fure we fhould turn to the right."

" You had better make fome enquiry," faid I.

se Ma

21

" Ma foi," cried Madame Duval, " we're in a fine hole, here !—they neither of them know no more than the poft. However, I'll tell my Lady, as fure as you're born, fo you'd better find the way."

" Let's try this lane," faid the footman.

"No," faid the coachman, "that's the road to Canterbury; we had beft go ftraight on."

"Why that's the direct London road," returned the footman, " and will lead us twenty miles about."

"Pardi," cried Madame Duval, "why they won't go one way nor t'other! and, now we're come all this jaunt for nothing, I fuppofe we fha'n't get home to-night!"

"Let's go back to the public-houfe," faid the footman, " and afk for a guide."

"No, no," faid the other, "if we ftay here a few minutes, fomebody or other will pafs by : and the horfes are almost knocked up already."

"Well, I proteft," cried Madame Duval, "I'd give a guinea to fee them fots both horfe-whipped! As fure as I'm alive, they're drunk! Ten to one but they'll overturn us next!"

After much debating, they, at length, agreed to go on, till we came to fome inn, or met with a paffenger who could direct us. We foon arrived at a fmall farm-houfe, and

22

and the footman alighted, and went into it.

In a few minutes he returned, and told us we might proceed, for that he had procured a direction; "But," added he, "it feems there are fome thieves hereabouts; and fo the beft way will be for you to leave your watches and purfes with the farmer, who I know very well, and who is an honeft man, and a tenant of my Lady's."

"Thieves !" cried Madame Duval, looking aghaft, " the Lord help us !—I've no doubt but we fhall be all murdered !"

The farmer came up to us, and we gave him all we were worth, and the fervants followed our example. We then proceeded, and Madame Duval's anger fo entirely fubfided, that, in the mildest manner imaginable, fhe intreated them to make hafte, and promifed to tell their Lady how diligent and obliging they had been. She perpetually ftopped them, to ask if they apprehended any danger; and was, at length, fo much overpowered by her fears, that fhe made the footman fasten his horse to the back of the carriage, and then come and feat himfelf within it. My endeavours to encourage her were fruitless; the fat in the middle, held the man by the arm, and protested that if he did but fave her life, fhe would make make his fortune. Her uneafinefs gave me much concern, and it was with the utmoft difficulty I forbore to acquaint her that fhe was imposed upon; but the mutual fear of the Captain's refentment to me, and of her own to him, neither of which would have any moderation, deterred me. As to the footman, he was evidently in torture from reftraining his laughter, and I observed that he was frequently obliged to make most horrid grimaces, from pretended fear, in order to conceal his rifibility.

Very foon after, " The robbers are coming !" cried the coachman.

The footman opened the door, and jumped out of the chariot.

Madame Duval gave a loud fcream.

I could no longer preferve my filence. "For Heaven's fake, my dear Madam," faid I, "don't be alarmed, you are in no danger-you are quite fafe, there is nothing but-"

Here the chariot was ftopped, by two men in mafks, who, at each fide, put in their hands, as if for our purfes. Madame Duval funk to the bottom of the chariot, and implored their mercy. I fhrieked involuntarily, although prepared for the attack : one of them held me faft, while the other other tore poor Madame Duval out of the carriage, in fpite of her cries, threats, and refiftance.

24

I was really frightened, and trembled exceedingly. "My angel !" cried the man who held me, "you cannot furely be alarmed,—do you not know me?—I fhall hold myfelf in eternal abhorrence, if I have really terrified you."

"Indeed, Sir Clement, you have," cried I,—" but, for Heaven's fake, where is Madame Duval ? — why is fhe forced away?"

"She is perfectly fafe; the Captain has her in charge: but fuffer me now, my adored Mifs Anville, to take the only opportunity that is allowed me, to fpeak upon another, a much dearer, much fweeter fubject."

And then he haftily came into the chariot, and feated himfelf next to me. I would fain have difengaged myfelf from him, but he would not let me; "Deny me not, most charming of women," cried he, "deny me not this only moment that is lent me, to pour forth my foul into your gentle ears,—to tell you how much I fuffer from your absence,—how much I dread your displeasure,—and how cruelly I am affected by your coldness!"

" O Sir,

25

<sup>cr</sup> O Sir, this is no time for fuch language,—pray leave me, pray go to the relief of Madame Duval, — I cannot bear that fhe fhould be treated with fuch indignity.

"And will you, — can you command my abfence ?— When may I fpeak to you, if not now ?—does the Captain fuffer me to breathe a moment out of his fight ?—and are not a thousand impertinent people for ever at your elbow ?"

"Indeed, Sir Clement, you must change your ftyle, or I will not hear you. The impertinent people you mean, are among my best friends, and you would not, if you really wished me well, speak of them so difrespectfully."

"Wifh you well ! — O Mifs Anville, point but out to me how, in what manner I may convince you of the fervour of my paffion,—tell me but what fervices you will accept from me,—and you fhall find my life, my fortune, my whole foul at your devotion."

"I want nothing, Sir, that you can offer; — I beg you not to talk to me fo—fo ftrangely. Pray leave me, and pray affure yourlelf, you cannot take any method fo fuccefsleis to fhew any regard for me, as entering into fchemes fo frightful to Ma-Vol. II. B dame dame Duval, and fo difagreeable to my-felf."

"The fcheme was the Captain's; I even oppcfed it: though, I own, I could not refué myfelf the fo-long-wifhed-for happine's, of fpeaking to you once more, without fo many of—your friends to watch me. And I had flattered myfelf, that the note I charged the footman to give you would have prevented the alarm you have received."

"Well, Sir, you have now, I hope, faid enough; and, if you will not go yourfelf to fee for Madame Duval, at leaft fuffer me to erquire what is become of her."

"And when may I fpeak to you again?"

"No matter when,-I don't know,perhaps-"

"Perhaps what, my angel?"

"Perhaps never, Sir,—if you torment me thus."

"Never! O Mifs Anville, how cruel, how piercing to my foul is that icy word! —Indeed, I cannot endure fuch difpleafure."

"Then, Sir, you must not provoke it. Prav leave me directly."

"I will, Madam: but let me, at leaft, make a merit of my obedience,—allow me to hope that you will, in future, be lefs averfe averle to trulting yourfelf for a few moments alone with me."

I was furprifed at the freedom of this requeft; but, while I hefitated how to anfwer it, the other mafk came up to the chariot-door, and, in a voice almost stiffed with laughter, faid, "I've done for her! —the old buck is fafe; —but we must scheer off directly, or we shall be all aground."

Sir Clement inftantly left me, mounted his horfe, and rode off. The Captain, having given fome directions to the fervants, followed him.

I was both uneafy and impatient to know the fate of Madame Duval, and immediately got out of the chariot to feek her. I defired the footman to fnew me which way the was gone; he pointed with his finger, by way of answer, and I faw that he dared not truft his voice to make any other. I walked on, a very quick pace, and foon, to my great confternation, perceived the poor lady, feated upright in a ditch. I flew to her, with unfeigned concern at her fituation. She was fobbing, nay, almost roaring, and in the utmost agony of rage and terror. As foon as fhe faw me, fhe redoubled her cries, but her voice was fo broken, I could not underftand a word fhe faid. I was fo much B 2 shocked, fhocked, that it was with difficulty I forbore exclaiming against the cruelty of the Captain, for thus wantonly ill-treating her; and I could not forgive myself for having passively suffered the deception. I used my utmost endeavours to comfort her, assuring her of our present fastety, and begging her to rife, and return to the chariot.

28

Almost bursting with passion, she pointed to her feet, and with frightful violence, she actually beat the ground with her hands.

I then faw, that her feet were tied together with a ftrong rope, which was fastened to the upper branch of a tree, even with an hedge which ran along the ditch where she fat. I endeavoured to untie the knot, but foon found it was infinitely beyond my ftrength. I was, therefore, obliged to apply to the footman; but being very unwilling to add to his mirth, by the fight of Madame Duval's fituation, I defired him to lend me a knife; I returned with it, and cut the rope. Her feet were foon difentangled, and then, though with great difficulty I affifted her to rife. But what was my aftonifhment, when, the moment fhe was up, fhe hit me a violent flap on the face ! I retreated from her with precipitation and dread, and fhe then loaded me with reproaches, which, though almost unintelligible, convinced me that fhe imagined I had

I had voluntarily deferted her; but fhe feemed not to have the flighteft fufpicion that fhe had not been attacked by real robbers.

I was fo much furprifed and confounded at the blow, that, for fome time, I fuffered her to rave without making any anfwer; but her extreme agitation, and real fuffering, foon difpelled my anger, which all turned into compaffion. I then told her, that I had been forcibly detained from following her, and affured her of my real forrow at her ill ufage.

She began to be fomewhat appeafed; and I again entreated her to return to the carriage, or give me leave to order that it fhould draw up to the place where we ftood. She made no anfwer, till I told her, that the longer we remained ftill, the greater would be the danger of our ride home. Struck with this hint, fhe fuddenly, and with hafty fteps, moved forward.

Her drefs was in fuch diforder, that I was quite forry to have her figure exposed to the fervants, who all of them, in imitation of their master, hold her in derifion : however, the difgrace was unavoidable.

The ditch, happily, was almost quite dry, or she must have suffered still more feriously; yet, so forlorn, so miserable a B 3 figure.

30

figure, I never before fav. Her headdrefs had fallen off; her lnen was torn; her negligee had not a pinleft in it; her petticoats fhe was obliged to hold on; and her fhoes were perpetually flipping off. She was covered with dirt, weeds, and filth, and her face was really horrible, for the pomatum and powder from her head, and the duft from the road, were quite pafted on her fkin by her tears, which, with her roage, made fo frightful a mixture, that fhe hardly looked human.

The fervants were ready to die with laughter, the moment they faw her; but not all my remonstrances could prevail upon her to get into the carriage, till fhe had most vehemently reproached them both, for not refcuing her. The footman. fixing his eyes on the ground, as if fearful of again trufting himfelf to look at her, protefted that the robbers had vowed they would fhoot him, if he moved an inch. and that one of them had fayed to watch the chariot, while the other carried her off; adding, that the reason of their behaving to barbaroufly, was to reverge our having fecured our purfes. Notwithstanding her anger, the gave immediate credit to what he faid, and really imagined that her want of money had irritated the pretended robbers to treat her with fuch cruelty. I determined.

termined, therefore, to be carefully upon my guard, not to betray the imposition, which could now answer no other purpose, than occafioning an irreparable breach between her and the Captain.

Juft as we were feated in the chariot, fhe difcovered the lofs which her head had fuftained, and called out, "MyGod ! what is becomed of my hair ?---why the villain has ftole all my curls !"

She then ordered the man to run and fee if he could find any of them in the ditch. He went, and prefently returning, produced a great quantity of hair, in fuch a nafty condition, that I was amazed fhe would take it; and the man, as he delivered it to her, found it impoffible to keep his countenance; which fhe no fooner obferved, than all her ftormy paffions were again raifed. She flung the battered curls in his face, faying, "Sirrah, what do you grin for? I wilh you'd been ferved fo yourfelf, and you would n't have found it no fuch joke : you are the impudentest fellow ever I fee, and if I find you dare grin at me any more, I shall make no ceremony of boxing your ears."

Satisfied with the threat, the man haftily retired, and we drove on.

Her anger now fubfiding into grief, fhe began most forrowfully to lament her cafe. B 4

" I be-

"I believe," fhe cried, " never nobody was fo unlucky as I am! and fo here, becaufe I ha'n't had misfortunes enough already, that puppy has made me lofe my curls!—Why, I can't fee nobody without them :—only look at me,—I was never fo bad off in my life before. Pardi, if I'd know'd as much, I'd have brought two or three fets with me: but I'd never a thought of fuch a thing as this."

Finding her now fomewhat pacified, I ventured to afk an account of her adventure, which I will endeavour to write in her own words.

"Why, child, all this misfortune comes of that puppy's making us leave our money behind us; for as foon as the robber fee I did not put nothing in his hands, he lugged me out of the chariot by main force, and I verily thought he'd have murdered me. He was as itrong as a lion; I was no more in his hands than a child. But I believe never nobody was fo abused before, for he dragged me down the road, pulling and hawling me all the way, as if I'd no more feeling than a horfe. I'm fure I wish I could fee that man cut up and quartered alive! however, he'll come to the gallows, that's one good thing. So, as foon as we'd got out of fight of the chariot,-though he need n't have been afraid, for for if he'd beat me to a mummy, those cowardly fellows would n't have faid nothing to it .- So, when I was got there, what does he do, but, all of a fudden, he takes me by both the shoulders, and he gives me fuch a shake !- Mon Dieu! 1 shall never forget it, if I live to be an hundred. I'm fure I dare fay I'm out of joint all over. And, though I made as much noise as ever I could, he took no more notice of it than nothing at all, but there he flood, fhaking me in that manner, as if he was doing it for a wager. I'm determined, if it cofts me all my fortune, I'll fee that villain hanged. He shall be found out, if there's e'er a justice in England. So when he had shooked me till he was tired, and I felt all over like a jelly, without faying never a word, he takes and pops ne into the ditch! I'm fure I thought he'd have murdered me, as much as I ever thought any thing in my life, for he kept bumping me about, as if he thought nothing too bad for me. However, I'm refolved I'll never leave my purfe behind me again, the longest day I have to live. So when he could n't ftand over me no longer, he holds out his hands again for my money; but he was as cunning as could be, for he would n't fpeak a word, because I should n't swear to his voice: however, B 5 that that fha'n't fave him, for I'll fwear to him any day in the year, if I can but catch him. So, when I told him I had no money, he fell to jerking me again, just as if he had but that moment begun ! And, after that, he got me close by a tree, and out of his pocket he pulls a great cord !--It's a wonder I did not fwoon away, for as fure as you're alive, he was going to hang me to that tree. I fcreamed like any thing mad, and told him if he would but fpare my life, I'd never profecute him, nor tell nobody what he'd done to me : fo he ftood fome time, quite in a brown ftudy, a thinking what he should do. And so, after that, he forced me to fit down in the ditch, and he tied my feet together, just as you fee them, and then, as if he had not done enough, he twitched off my cap, and, without faying nothing, got on his horfe, and left me in that condition, thinking, I fuppofe, that I might lie there and perifh."

34

Though this narrative almost compelled me to laugh, yet I was really irritated with the Captain, for carrying his love of tormenting,—fport, he calls it,—to fuch barbarous and unjustifiable extremes. I confoled and foothed her as well as I was able, and told her that, fince M, Du Bois had efcaped.

escaped, I hoped, when she recovered from her fright, all would end well.

" Fright, child !" repeated fhe, " why, that's not half ;- I promife you, I with it was; but here I'm bruifed from top to toe, and it's well if ever I have the right use of my limbs again. However, I'm glad the villain got nothing but his trouble for his pains. But here the worft is to come, for I can't go out, because I've got no curls, and fo he'll be efcaped, before I can get to the Juffice to ftop him. I'm refolved I'll tell Lady Howard how her man ferved me, for if he had n't made me fling 'em away, I dare fay I could have pinned them up well enough for the country."

" Perhaps Lady Howard may be able to lend you a cap that will wear without them."

" Lady Howard, indeed ! why, do you think I'd wear one of her dowdies? No, I'll promise you, I sha'n't put on no fuch difguisement. It's the unluckiest thing in the world that I did not make the man pick up the curls again; but he put me in fuch a paffion, I could not think of nothing. I know I can't get none at Howard Grove for love nor money, for of all the ftupid places ever I fee, that Howard Grove is the worft ! there's never no getting nothing one wants." B 6 This

36

This fort of conversation lasted till we arrived at our journey's end; and then, a new diftress occurred ; Madame Duval was eager to fpeak to Lady Howard and Mrs. Mirvan, and to relate her misfortunes, but fhe could not endure that Sir Clement or the Captain should see her in such disorder, for the faid they were fo ill-natured, that inftead of pitying her, they would only make a jeft of her difafters. She therefore fent me first into the house, to wait for an opportunity of their being out of the way, that fhe might fteal up ftairs unobserved. In this I fucceeded, as the gentlemen thought it most prudent not to feem watching for her; though they both contrived to divert themfelves with peeping at her as she passed.

She went immediately to bed, where fhe had her fupper. Lady Howard and Mrs. Mirvan both of them very kindly fat with her, and liftened to her tale with compaffionate attention; while Mifs Mirvan and I retired to our own room, where I was very glad to end the troubles of the day in a comfortable converfation.

The Captain's raptures, during fupper, at the fuccess of his plan, were boundless. I spoke, afterwards, to Mrs. Mirvan, with the openness which her kindness encourages, and begged her to remonstrate with 6 him him upon the cruelty of tormenting Madame Duval fo caufelefsly. She promifed to take the first opportunity of starting the fubject, but faid he was, at prefent, fo much elated that he would not listen to her with any patience. However, should he make any new efforts to moless there, I can by no means confent to be passive. Had I imagined he would have been so violent, I would have risked his anger in her defence much fooner.

She has kept her bed all day, and declares fhe is almost bruifed to death.

Adieu, dear Sir. What a long letter have I written ! I could almost fancy I fent it you from London !

LETTER III.

Evelina in continuation.

Howard Grove, May 15th.

THIS infatiable Captain, if left to himfelf, would not, I believe, reft, till he had tormented Madame Duval into a fever. He feems to have no delight but in terrifying or provoking her, and all his thoughts apparently turn upon inventing fuch fuch methods as may do it most effectually.

38

She had her breakfaft again in bed yefterday morning; but during ours, the Captain, with a very fignificant look at Sir Clement, gave us to underftand, that he thought fhe had now refed long enough to bear the hardfhips of a trefh campaign.

His meaning was obvious, and, therefore, I refolved to endeavour immediately to put a ftop to his intended exploits. When breakfaft was over, I followed Mrs. Mirvan out of the parloar, and begged her to lofe no time in pleading the caufe of Madame Duval with the Captain. "My love;" anfwered fhe, "have already expoftulated with him; but all I can fay is fruitlefs, while his favourite Sir Clement contrives to urge him on"

"Then I will go and fpeak to Sir Clement," faid I, "for I know he will defift, if I requeft him."

"Have a care, my dear !" faid fhe, fmiling, "it is fometimes dangerous to make requefts to men, who are too defirous of receiving them."

"Well then, my dear Madam, will you give me leave to speak nyself to the Captain?"

"Willingly; nay, I will accompany you to him."

I thanked

I thanked her, and we went to feek him. He was walking in the garden with Sir Clement. Mrs. Mirvan most obligingly made an opening for my purpose, by faying, "Mr. Mirvan, I have brought a petitioner with me."

"Why what's the matter now ?" cried he.

I was fearful of making him angry, and ftammered very much, when I told him, I hoped he had no new plan for alarming Madame Duval.

"New plan !" cried he, "why, you don't fuppose the eld one would do again, do you? Not but what it was a very good one, only I doubt she would n't bite."

"Indeed, Sir," faid I, " fhe has already fuffered too much, and I hope you will pardon me, if I take the liberty of telling you, that I think it my duty to do all in my power to prevent her being again fo much terrified."

A fullen gloominefs inftantly clouded his face, and, turning fhort from me, he faid, I might do as I pleafed, but that I fhould much fooner repent than repair my officioufnefs.

I was too much difconcerted at this rebuff, to attempt making any anfwer, and, finding that Sir Clement warmly efpoufed my caufe, I walked away, and left them to difcufs the point together.

Mrs. Mirvan, who never speaks to the Captain

Captain when he is out of humour, was glad to follow me, and, with her ufual fweetnefs, made a thoufand apologies for her hufband's ill-manners.

When I left her, I went to Madame Duval, who was just rifen, and employed in examining the cloaths she had on the day of her ill usage.

"Here's a fight!" cried fhe. "Come here, child,—only look—Pardi, fo long as I've lived, I never fee fo much before! Why, all my things are fpoilt, and, what's worfe, my facque was as good as new. Here's the fecond negligee I've had ufed in this manner !—I am fure I was a fool to put it on, in fuch a lonefome place as this; however, if I ftay here thefe ten years, I'll never put on another good gown, that I'm refolved."

"Will you let the maid try if she can iron it out, or clean it, Ma'am?

"No, fhe'll only make bad worfe.— But look here, now, here's a cloak ! Mon Dieu ! why, it looks like a difh-clout ! Of all the unluckineffes that ever I met, this is the worft ! for, do you know, I bought it but the day before I left Paris ?—Befides, into the bargain, my cap's quite gone; where the villain twitched it, I don't know, but I never fee no more of it, from that time to this. Now you must know this was the becomingeft cap I had in the world, world, for I've never another with pink ribbon in it; and, to tell you the truth, if I had n't thought to have feen M. Du Bois, I'd no more have put it on than I'd have flown; for as to what one wears in fuch a ftupid place as this, it fignifies no more than nothing at all."

She then told me, that fhe had been thinking all night of a contrivance to hinder the Captain from finding out her lofs of curls, which was, having a large gauze handkerchief pinned on her head as a hood, and faying fhe had the tooth-ach.

"To tell you the truth," added fhe, "I believe that Captain is one of the worft men in the world; he's always making a joke of me; and as to his being a gentleman, he has no more manners than a bear, for he's always upon the grin when one's in diftrefs; and, I declare, I'd rather be done any thing to than laugh'd at, for, to my mind, it's one or other the difagreeableft thing in the world."

Mrs. Mirvan, I found, had been endeavouring to diffuade her from the defign fhe had formed, of having recourfe to the law, in order to find out the fuppofed robbers; for fhe dreads a difcovery of the Captain, during Madame Duval's flay at Howard Grove, as it could not fail being productive of infinite commotion.

42

tion. She has, therefore, taken great pains to fhew the inutility of applying to juffice, unlefs fhe were more able to defcribe the offenders against whom fhe would appear, and has affured her, that as fhe neither heard their voices, nor faw their faces, fhe cannot poffibly fwear to their perfons, or obtain any redrefs.

Madame Duval, in telling me this, extremely lamented her hard fate, that the was thus prevented from revenging her injuries; which, however, fhe vowed fhe would not be perfuaded to pocket tamely, " becaufe," added the, " if fuch villains as these are let to have their own way, and nobody takes no notice of their impudence, they'll make no more ado than nothing at all of tying people in ditches, and fuch things as that: however, I shall confult with M. Du Bois, as foon as I can ferret out where he's hid himfelf. I'm fure I've a right to his advice, for it's all along of his gaping about at the Tower that I've met with these misfortunes."

"M. Du Bois, faid I, will, I am fure, be very forry when he hears what has happened."

"And what good will that do now? that won't unfpoil all my cloaths; I can tell him, I a'n't much obliged to him, though it's no fault of his;—yet it i'n't the the lefs provokinger for that. I'm fure, if he had been there, to have feen me ferved in that manner, and put neck and heels into a ditch, he'd no more have thought it was me, than the Pope of Rome. I'll promife you, whatever you may think of it, I fha'n't have no reft, night nor day, till I find out that rogue."

" "I have no doubt, Madam, but you will foon difcover him."

" Pardi, if I do, I'll hang him, as fure as fate !---but what's the oddeft, is that he fhould take fuch a 'fpecial fpite againft me, above all the reft ! it was as much for nothing, as could be, for I don't know what I had done, fo particular bad, to be ufed in that manner : I'm fure, I had n't given him no offence, as I know of, for I never fee his face all the time; and as to fcreaming a little, I think it's very hard if one I must n't do fuch a thing as that, when one's put in fear of one's life. During this converfation, fhe endeavour-

During this conversation, fae endeavoured to adjust her head drefs, but could not at all please herself. Indeed, had I not been prefent, I should have thought it impossible for a woman at her time of life to be so very difficult in regard to drefs. What she may have in view, I cannot imagine, but the labour of the toilette feems the chief business of her life.

U. DELTA

When

44

When I left her, in my way down ftairs, I met Sir Clement, who, with great earneftnefs, faid he muft not be denied the honour of a moment's conversation with me; and then, without waiting for an answer, he led me to the garden, at the door of which, however, I absolutely infifted upon ftopping.

He feemed very ferious, and faid, in a grave tone of voice, "At length, Mifs Anville, I flatter myfelf I have hit upon an expedient that will oblige you, and therefore, though it is death to myfelf, I will put it in practice."

of

he

30

I begged him to explain himfelf.

"I faw your defire of faving Madame Duval, and fcarce could I refrain giving the brutal Captain my real opinion of his favage conduct; but I am unwilling to quarrel with him, left I fhould be denied entrance into a houfe which you inhabit: I have been endeavouring to prevail with him to give up his abfurd new fcheme, but I find him impenetrable;—I have therefore determined to make a pretence for fuddenly heaving this place, dear as it is to me, and containing all I most admire and adore; and I will ftay in town till the violence of this boobyifh humour is abated."

He Ropped; but I was filent, for I knew not what I ought to fay. He took my hand, hand, which he preffed to his lips, faying, "And must I, then, Miss Anville, must I quit you—facrifice voluntarily my greatest felicity, — and yet not be honoured with one word, one look of approbation?"

M

1 tt

yi

elf

di

NO LEI

rđ

I withdrew my hand, and faid, with a half laugh, "You know fo well, Sir Clement, the value of the favours you confer, that it would be fuperfluous for me to point it out."

"Charming, charming girl! how does your wit, your underftanding rife upon me daily! and muft I, can I part with you? will no other method—"

"O Sir, do you fo foon repent the good office you had planned for Madame Duval?"

"For Madame Duval!—cruel creature, and will you not even fuffer me to place to your account the facrifice I am about to make?"

"You must place it, Sir, to what account you please; but I am too much in haste now to stay here any longer."

And then I would have left him, but he held me, and, rather impatiently, faid, "If, then, I cannot be fo happy as to oblige you, Mifs Anville, you muft not be furprifed, fhould I feek to oblige myfelf. If my fcheme is not honoured with your approbation, for which alone it was formed, ed, why fhould I, to my own infinite diffatisfaction, purfue it?"

46

1 114

2

61

m

he

pa

rar

at me

the

whi

afte

It W

Mr

At

We were then, for a few minutes, both filent; I was really unwilling he should give up a plan which would fo effectually break into the Captain's defigns, and, at the fame time, fave me the pain of difobliging him; and I should instantly and thankfully have accepted his offered civility, had not Mrs. Miryan's caution made me fearful. However, when he pressed me to speak, I faid, in an ironical voice, " I had thought, Sir, that the very ftrong fense you have yourfelf of the favour you propofe to me, would fufficiently have repaid you, but, as I was mistaken, I must thank you myfelf. And now, making a low court'fy, "I hope, Sir, you are fatisfied."

"Lovelieft of thy fex—" he began, but I forced myfelf from him, and ran up ftairs.

Soon after, Mifs Mirvan told me that Sir Clement had juft received a letter, which obliged him inftantly to leave the Grove, and that he had actually ordered a chaife. I then acquainted her with the real ftate of the affair. Indeed, I conceal nothing from her, fhe is fo gentle and fweettempered, that it gives me great pleafure to place an entire confidence in her.

At dinner, I must own, we all miffed ten him; for though the flightiness of his behaviour to me, when we are by ourfelves, , br is very diffreffing, yet, in large companies, and general conversation, he is extremely entertaining and agreeable. As to the Captain, he has been fo much chagrined at his departure, that he has fcarce fpoken a word fince he went : but Madame Duval, who made her first public appearance fince her accident, was quite in raptures that fhe escaped feeing him.

Au

y :

1

rei

.

The money which we left at the farmhouse, has been returned to us. What pains the Captain must have taken to arrange and manage the adventures which he chose we should meet with! Yet he must certainly be discovered, for Madame Duval is already very much perplexed, at having received a letter this morning from M. Du Bois, in which he makes no mention of his imprisonment. However, the has fo little fuspicion, that the imputes his filence upon the fubject, to his fears that the letter might be intercepted.

Not one opportunity could I meet with, while Sir Clement was here, to enquire after his friend Lord Orville : but I think it was strange he should never mention him unafked. Indeed, I rather wonder that Mrs. Mirvan herfelf did not introduce the fubject, fubject, for she always seemed particularly attentive to him.

And now, once more, all my thoughts involuntarily turn upon the letter I fo foon expect from Paris. This vifit of Sir Clement has, however, fomewhat diverted my fears, and therefore I am very glad he made it at this time. Adieu, my dear Sir.

LETTER IV.

Sir John Belmont to Lady Howard.

Paris, May 11.

W

1

pret

Madam,

48

Have this moment the honour of your Ladyship's letter, and I will not wait another, before I return an answer.

It feldom happens that a man, though extolled as a faint, is really without blemifh; or that another, though reviled as a devil, is really without humanity. Perhaps the time is not very diftant, when I may have the honour to convince your Ladyfhip of this truth, in regard to Mr. Villars and myfelf.

As to the young lady, whom Mr. Villars fo obligingly proposes prefenting to me, l wish her all the happiness to which, by your Ladyship's

49

Ladyfhip's account, fhe feems entitled; and, if fhe has a third part of the merit of ber to whom you compare her, I doubt not but Mr. Villars will be more fuccefsful in every other application he may make for her advantage, than he can ever be in any with which he may be pleafed to favour me.

I have the honour to be, Madam, your Ladyfhip's moft humble and moft obedient fervant John Belmont.

LETTER V.

Evelina to the Rev. Mr. Villars.

Howard Grove, May 18.

W ELL, my dear Sir, all is now over! the letter fo anxioufly expected, is at length arrived, and my doom is fixed. The various feelings which opprefs me, I have not language to defcribe; nor need I,—you know my heart, you have yourfelf formed it,—and its fenfations upon this occafion, you may but too readily imagine.

VOL. II.

y1

Outcast

50

Outcaft as I am, and rejected for ever by him to whom I of right belong,—fhall I now implore your continued protection ? no, no,—I will not offend your generous heart, which, open to diftrefs, has no wifh but to relieve it, with an application that would feem to imply a doubt. I am more fecure than ever of your kindnefs, fince you now know upon that is my fole dependance.

f

Y

Ta

th

le

Di

ani

bee

of

to her

an

be

be

tett

he

I endeavour to bear this ftroke with compofure, and in fuch a manner as if I had already received your counfel and confolation. Yet, at times, my emotions are almost too much for me. O Sir, what a letter for a parent to write! must I not myself be deaf to the voice of Nature, if I could endure to be thus abfolutely abandoned, without regret? I dare not even to you, nor would I, could I help it, to myfelf, acknowledge all that I think; for, indeed, I have, fometimes, fentiments upon this rejection, which my ftrongest fense of duty can fcarcely correct. Yet, fuffer me to alk, -might not this answer have been foftened ?- was it not enough to difclaim me for ever, without treating me with contempt, and wounding me with derifion ?

But, while I am thus thinking of myfelf, I forget how much more he is the object of forrow, than I am ! Alas, what amends can he make himfelf, for the anguish he is hoarding up for time to come ! My heart bleeds for him, whenever this reflection occurs to me.

11-

100

wil

故 mor

: di

ha

foli

mi

What is faid of you, my protector, my friend, my benefactor !-- I dare not truft myfelf to comment upon. Gracious Heaven! what a return for goodness fo unparalleled!

I would fain endeavour to divert my thoughts from this fubject, but even that is not in my power; for, afflicting as this letter is to me, I find that it will not be allowed to conclude the affair, though it does all my expectations: for Madame Duval has determined not to let it reft here. She heard the letter in great wrath, and protefted fhe would not be fo eafily an-<sup>1</sup> fwered; fhe regretted her facility in having been prevailed upon to yield the direction of this affair to those who knew not how to manage it, and vowed fhe would herfelf undertake and conduct it in future.

It is in vain that I have pleaded against 2 her refolution, and befought her to forbear an attack, where the has nothing to expect. but refentment; especially as there seems to be a hint, that Lady Howard will one day be more openly dealt with : fhe will not hear me; fhe is furioufly bent upon a proe ject which is terrible to think of,-for fhe C 2 means means to go herfelf to Paris, take me with her, and there, face to face, demand juffice!

52

How to appeale or to perfuade her, I know not; but for the universe would I not be dragged, in fuch a manner, to an interview fo awful, with a parent I have never yet beheld!

Lady Howard and Mrs. Mirvan are both of them infinitely fhocked at the prefent fituation of affairs, and they feem to be even more kind to me than ever; and my dear Maria, who is the friend of my heart, ufes her utmost efforts to confole me, and, when the fails in her defign, with ftill greater kindness, the fympathiles in my forrow.

I very much rejoice, however, that Sir Clement Willoughby had left us before this letter arrived. I am fure the general confusion of the house would, otherwise, have betrayed to him the whole of a tale which I now, more than ever, wish to have buried in oblivion.

Lady Howard thinks I ought not to difoblige Madame Duval, yet fhe acknowledges the impropriety of my accompanying her abroad upon fuch an enterprize. Indeed I would rather die, than force myfelf into his prefence. But fo vehement is Madame Duval, that fhe would inftantly have compelled me to attend her to town, in her way to Paris, had not Lady Howard fo far

m

her, H I m

inte

Der

e bu

to

hez

OW.

[[]]

57

exerted herfelf, as to declare fhe could by no means confent to my quitting her houfe, till fhe gave me up to you, by whofe permifion I had entered it.

She was extremely angry at this denial; and the Captain, by his fneers and raillery, fo much encreafed her rage, that fhe has politively declared, fhould your next letter difpute her authority to guide me by her own pleafure, fhe will, without hefitation, make a journey to Berry Hill, and teach you to know who she is.

Should fhe put this threat in execution, nothing could give me greater uneafinefs, for her violence and volubility would almost distract you.

Unable as I am to act for myfelf, or to judge what conduct I ought to purfue, how grateful do I feel myfelf, that I have fuch a guide and director to counfel and inftruct me as yourfelf!

Adieu, my deareft Sir! Heaven, I truft, will never let me live to be repulfed and derided by you, to whom I may now fign myfelf

C 3

Wholly your EVELINA.

LETTER

54

LETTER VI.

Mr. Villers to Evelina.

Berry Hill, May 21.

ET not my Evelina be depreffed by a ftroke of fortune for which fhe is not refponfible. No breach of duty on your part, has incurred the unkindnefs which has been fhewn you; nor have you, by any act of impridence, provoked either cenfure or reproach. Let me entreat you, therefore, my dearet child, to fupport yourfelf with that courage which your innocency ought to infpire; and let all the affliction you allow yourfelf, be for him only, who, not having thit fupport, muft one day be but too feverely fenfible how much he wants it.

The hint thrown out concerning myfelf, is wholly unintelligible to me: my heart, I dare own, fully acquits me of vice, but without blemiss, I have never ventured to pronounce myfelf. However, it feems his intention to be hereafter more explicit, and then,—fhould any thing appear, that has on my part, contributed to those misfortunes we lament, let me, at least, fay, that the most partial of my friends cannot be fo much much aftonished as I shall myfelf be, at fuch a discovery.

55

The mention, alfo, of any future applications I may make, is equally beyond my comprehension. But I will not dwell upon a subject which almost compels from me reflections that cannot but be wounding to a heart so formed for fil al tenderness as my Evelina's. There is an air of mystery throughout the letter, the explanation of which I will await in filence.

y 21

the

ity i ndiz

e ya

eith

tm

YOS

ins he a

nea

hei

, b ed

ne

The scheme of Madame Duval is such as might be reasonably expected from a woman fo little inured to difappointment, and fo totally incapable of confidering the delicacy of your fituation. Your averfenefs to her plan gives me pleafure, for it exactly corresponds with my own. Why will fhe not make the journey fhe projects by herfelf? She would not have even the with of an opposition to encounter. And then, once more, might my child and myfelf be left to the quiet enjoyment of that peaceful happinefs, which fhe alone has interrupted. As to her coming hither, I could, indeed, difpense with fuch a visit; but, if she will not be fatisfied with my refusal by letter, I must submit to the task of giving it her in perfon.

My impatience for your return is encreafed by your account of Sir Clement C 4 Wil-

56

Willoughby's vifit to Howard Grove. I am but little furprised at the perfeverance of his affiduities to interest you in his favour; but I am very much hurt that you fhould be exposed to addreffes, which, by their privacy, have an air that fhocks me. You cannot, my love, be too circumspect; the flighteft carelefsnefs on your part, will be taken advantage of, by a man of his disposition. It is not fufficient for you to be referved; his conduct even calls for your refentment : and should he again, as will doubtless be his endeavour, contrive to folicit your favour in private, let your difdain and difpleafure be fo marked, as to constrain a change in his behaviour. Though, indeed, should his visit be repeated while you remain at the Grove, Lady Howard must pardon me if I shorten your's.

Adieu, my child. You will always make my refpects to the hofpitable family to which we are fo much obliged.

LETTER

LETTER VII.

Mr. Villars to Lady Howard.

Berry Hill, May 27.

Dear Madam,

. Jul

, W.

ou a you

m

005

Whit

W

74

Believe your Ladyship will not be furprifed at hearing I have had a visit from Madame Duval, as I doubt not her having made known her intention before she left Howard Grove. I would gladly have excused myself this meeting, could I have avoided it decently; but, after so long a journey, it was not possible to refuse her admittance.

She told me, that fhe came to Berry Hill, in confequence of a letter I had fent to her grand-daughter, in which I had forbid her going to Paris. Very roughly, fhe then called me to account for the authority which I affumed; and, had I been difpofed to have argued with her, fhe would very angrily have difputed the right by which I ufed it. But I declined all debating. I therefore liftened very quietly, till fhe had fo much fatigued herfelf with talking, that fhe was glad, in her turn, to be filent. And then, I begged to know the purport of her vifit.

C 5

She

:58

She anfwered, that fhe came to make me felinquifh the power I had ufurped over her grand-daughter, and affured me fhe would not quit the place till fhe fucceeded.

Bu: I will not trouble your Ladyfhip with the particulars of this difagreeable converfation; nor fhould I, but on account of the refult, have chofen fo unpleafant a fubject for your perufal: However, I will be asconcile as I poffibly can, that the better occupations of your Ladyfhip's time may be the lefs impeded.

When the found me inexorable in refuting Evelina's attending her to Paris, the peremptorily infifted, that the fhould, at leaft, live with her in London, till Sir John Belmont's return. I remonstrated against this foheme with all the energy in my power; but the conteft was vain; the lost her patience, and I my time. She declared that if I was refolute in opposing her, the would inftantly make a will, in which the would leave ill her fortune to ftrangers, though, otherwife, the intended her grand-daughter for her fole heirefs.

To me, I own, this threat feemed of little confequence; I have long accuftomed myfelf to think, that, with a competency, of which fhe is fure, my child might be as happy as in the poffeffion of millions: but the intertitude of her future fate, deters me from

akem

d ove

me 🌡

adyli

reeable

ICCOM

, I wi

at lead

in Be

ISWOC

WOU

would

ughte

tome

tena

bea

: bil

rs III

from following implicitly the dictates of my prefent judgment. The connections fhe may hereafter form, the ftyle of life for which fhe may be defined, and the future family to which fhe may belong, are confiderations which give but too much weight to the menaces of Madame Duval. In fhort, Madam, after a difeourfe infinitely tedious, I was obliged, though very reluctantly, to compromife with this ungovernable woman, by confenting that Evelina fhould pafs one month with her.

I never made a concefion with fo bad a grace, or fo much regret. The violence and vulgarity of this woman, her total ignorance of propriety, the family to which fhe is related, and the company fhe is likely to keep, are objections fo forcible to her having the charge of this dear child, that nothing lefs than my diffidence of the right I have of depriving her of fo large a fortune, would have induced me to liften to her propofal. Indeed we parted, at laft, equally difcontented, fhe, at what I had refufed, I, at what I had granted.

It now only remains for me to return your Ladyship my humble acknowledgements for the kindness which you have so liberally shewn to my ward; and to beg you would have the goodness to part with her, when Madame Duval thinks proper C.6 to to claim the promife which fhe has extorted from me. I am,

Dear Madam, &c. ARTHUR VILLARS.

LETTER VIII.

Mr. Villars to Evelina.

Berry Hill, May 28.

WITH a reluctance which occafions me inexpreffible uneafinefs, I have been almost compelled to confent that my Evelina fhould quit the protection of the hospitable and respectable Lady Howard, and accompany Madame Duval to a city which I had hoped she would never again have entered. But alas, my dear child, we are the flaves of custom, the dupes of prejudice, and dare not shem the torrent of an opposing world, even though our judgments condemn our compliance ! however, fince the die is caft, we must endeavour to make the best of it.

You will have occafion, in the courfe of the month you are to pafs with Madame Duval, for all the circumfpection and prudence you can call to your aid : fhe will not,

May 26

I hav

of

OWati

r agai

ild, w preju of a jude

wever,

rfea dant pril

m EIOL,

not, I know, propose any thing to you which fhe thinks wrong herfelf; but you must learn not only to judge but to att for yourfelf : if any schemes are started, any engagements made, which your understanding reprefents to you as improper, exert yourfelf refolutely in avoiding them, and do not, by a too paffive facility, rifk the cenfure of the world, or your own future regret.

You cannot too affiduoufly attend to Madame Duval herfelf; but I would with you to mix as little as poffible with her affociates, who are not likely to be among those whose acquaintance would reflect credit upon you. Remember, my dear Evelina, nothing is fo delicate as the reputation of a woman : it is, at once, the most beautiful and most brittle of all human things.

Adieu, my beloved child; I shall be but ill at ease till this month is elapsed.

A. V.

LETTER

62

LETTER X.

Evelina to the Rev. Mr. Villars,

London, June 6.

I an-

ONCE more, my dearef Sir, I write to you from this great city. Yefterday morning, with the truet concern, I quitted the dear inhabitants of Howard Grove, and most impatiently shall I count the days till I fee them again. Lady Howard and Mrs. Mirvan took leave of me with the most flattering kindness; but indeed I knew not how to part with Maria, whose own apparent forrow redubled mine. She made me promise to fend her a letter every post. And I shall write to her with the fame freedom, and almost the fame confidence, you allow me to make use of to yourfelf.

The Captain was very civil to me, but he wrangled with poor Madane Duval to the laft moment; and, taking ne afide, juft before we got into the chafe, he faid, "Hark'ee, Mifs Anville, I've a favour for to afk of you, which is this; that you will write us word how the dd gentlewoman finds herfelf, when fhe fees it was all a trick : and what the French lubber fays to it, and all about it."

62

I anfwered that I would obey him, though I was very little pleafed with the commiffion, which, to me, was highly improper : but he will either treat me as an informer, or make me a party in his frolic.

s,

June 6.

I write

. Ye

Howa

I cour

La

eofm

d min

a lett

ier wil

e fam

ufea

ie, bu

uval t

de, jui

e faid

ourfu

at you

tleno

was a

er fan

In

As foon as we drove away, Madame Duval, with much fatisfaction, exclaimed "Dieu Merci, we've got off at laft! I'm fure I never defire to fee that place again. It's a wonder I've got away alive; for I believe I've had the worft luck ever was known, from the time I fet my foot upon the threfhold. I know I wifh I'd never a gone. Beides, into the bargain, it's the moft dulleft place in all Chriftendom: there's never no diverfions, nor nothing at all."

Then fhe bewailed M. Du Bois, concerning whole adventures fhe continued to make various conjectures during the reft of our journey.

When I alked her what part of London fhe fhould refide in, fhe told me that Mr. Branghton was to meet us at an inn, and would conduct us to a lodging. Accordingly, we proceeded to a house in Bishopfgate-ftreet, and were led by a waiter into a room were we found Mr. Branghton.

He received us very civilly, but feemed rather furprized at feeing me, faying "Why I did

64 E V E L I N A.

I did n't think of your bringing Miss; however she's very welcome."

"I'll tell you how it was," faid Madame Duval; "you muft know I've a mind to take the girl to Paris, that fhe may fee fomething of the world, and improve herfelf a little; befides, I've another reafon, that you and I will talk more about; but do you know, that meddling old parfon as I told you of, would not let her go: however, I'm refolved I'll be even with him, for I fhall take her on with me, without faying never a word more to nobody."

I started at this intimation, which very much fuprifed me. But I am very glad fhe has difcovered her intention, as I shall be carefully upon my guard not to venture from town with her.

Mr. Branghton then hoped we had paffed our time agreeably in the country..

"O Lord, Coufin," cried fhe, "I've been the miferableft creature in the world! I'm fure all the horfes in London fha'n't drag me into the country again of one while: why how do you think I've been ferved ?—only guefs."

"Indeed Coufin, I can't pretend to do that."

"Why then I'll tell you. Do you know, I've been robbed !---that is, the villain villain would have robbed me if he could, only I'd fecured all my money."

Mil

adam

ind u

ay la

ve he realon

t; bu

: how

h hin

vithou

.**

h ven

y gla I fha

rentum

paffei

66 Pr

world Iha'a'i of on e been to di

0 100

, 位

"Why then, Coufin, I think your lofs can't have been very great."

"O Lord, you don't know what you're a faying; you're talking in the unthinkingeft manner in the world: why it was all along of not having no money, that I met with that misfortune."

"How's that, Coufin ? I don't fee what great misfortune you can have met with, if you'd fecured all your money."

"That's becaufe you don't know nothing of the matter; for there the villain came to the chaife, and becaufe we had n't got nothing to give him, though he'd no more right to our money than the man in the moon, yet, do you know, he fell into the greateft paffion ever you fee, and abufed me in fuch a manner, and put me in a ditch, and got a rope, o' purpofe to hang me,—and I'm fure, if that was n't misfortune enough, why I don't know what is."

"This is a hard cafe indeed, Coufin. But why don't you go to Juffice Fielding?"

"O, as to that, I'm a going to him directly; but only I want first to see poor M. Du Bois, for the oddest thing of all is, that he has wrote to me, and never faid nothing of where he is, nor what's become of him, nor nothing elfe."

M. Du

" M. Du Bois! why's he's at my houfe at this very time."

"M. Du Bois at your house! well, I declare this is the furprisingest part of all! however, I assure you, I think he might have comed for me, as well as you, confidering what I have gone through on his account; for, to tell you the truth, it was all along of him that I met with that accident; fo I don't take it very kind of him, I promise you."

"Well but, Coufin, tell me fome of the particulars of this affair."

"As to the particulars, I'm fure they'd make your hair ftand an end to hear them; however, the beginning of it all was through the fault of M. Du Bois : but I'll affure you, he may take care of himfelf in future, fince he don't fo much as come to fee if I'm dead or alive ;- but there I went for him to a justice of peace, and rode all out of the way, and did every thing in the world, and was used worfer than a dog, and all for the fake of ferving of him, and now, you see, he don't fo much-well, I was a fool for my pains, -however, he may get fomebody elfe to be treated fo another time, for if he's taken up every day in the week, I'll never go after him no more."

This occafioned an explanation, in the course of which, Madame Duval, to her utter utter amazement, heard that Mr. Du Bois had never left London during her abfence! nor did Mr. Branghton believe that he had ever been to the Tower, or met with any kind of accident.

Almost instantly, the whole truth of the transaction seemed to rush upon ber mind, and her wrath was inconceivably violent. She asked me a thousand questions in a breath, but, fortunately, was too vehement to attend to my embarrassiment, which must, otherwise, have betrayed my knowledge of the deceit. Revenge was her first wish, and she vowed she would go the next morning to Justice Fielding, and enquire what punishment she might lawfully inflict upon the Captain for his associate.

e

I believe we were an hour in Bifhopfgateftreet, before poor Madame Duval could allow any thing to be mentioned but her own ftory; at length, however, Mr. Branghton told her, that M. Du Bois, and all his own family, were waiting for her at his houfe. A hackney-coach was then called, and we proceeded to Snowhill.

Mr. Branghton's houfe is finall and inconvenient, though his fhop, which takes in all the ground floor, is large and commodious. I believe I told you before that he is a filver-fmith.

We

We were conducted up two pair of ftairs; for the dining-room, Mr. Branghton told us, was let. His two daughters, their brother, M. Du Bois, and a young man, were at tea. They had waited fome time for Madame Duval, but I found they had not any expectation that I fhould accompany her; and the young ladies, I believe, were rather more furprifed than pleafed when I made my appearance; for they feemed hurt that I fhould fee their apartment. Indeed I would willingly have faved them that pain, had it been in my power.

The first perfon who faw me was M. Du Bois: " Ab, mon Dieu !" exclaimed he, " voilà Mademoiselle !"

"Goodnefs," cried young Branghton, "if there is n't Mifs!"

"Lord, fo there is," faid Mifs Polly; "well, I'm fure I fhould never have dreamed of Mifs's coming."

"Nor I neither, I'm fure," cried Mifs Branghton, " or elfe I would not have been in this room to fee her; I'm quite afhamed about it,—only not thinking of feeing any body but my aunt—however, Tom, it's all your fault, for you know very well I wanted to borrow Mr. Smith's room, only you were fo grumpy you would not let me."

" Lord,

Fr.

6g.

"Lord, what fignifie:?" faid the brother, "I dare be fworn Mifs has been up two pair of ftairs before now ;—Ha'n't you, Mifs ?"

I begged that I might not give them the leaft diffurbance, and afured them that I had not any choice in regard to what room we fat in.

"Well," faid Mifs Polly, "when you come next, Mifs, we'll have Mr. Smith's room; and it's a very pretty one, and only up one pair of ftairs, and nicely furnished, and every thing."

"To fay the truth," iaid Mifs Branghton, "I thought that my coufin would not, upon any account, have come to town in the fummer-time; for it's not at all the fashion,—fo, to be fure, thinks I, fhe'll ftay till September, when the play-houses open."

This was my receptior, which I believe you will not call a very ordial one. Madame Duval, who, after having feverely reprimanded M. Du Bcis for his negligence, was just entering upon the ftory of her misfortunes, now wholly engaged the company.

M. Du Bois liftened to her with a look of the utmost horror, repeatedly lifting up his eyes and hands, and exclaiming, "O ciel! quel barbare !" The young ladies gave her her the most earnest attention; but their brother, and the young man, kept a broad grin upon their faces during the whole recital. She was, however, too much engaged to observe them : but, when she mentioned having been tied in a ditch, young Branghton, no longer able to conftrain himfelf, burft into a loud laugh, declaring that he had never heard any thing fo funny in his life! His laugh was heartily re-echoed by his friend; the Mifs Branghtons could not refift the example; and poor Madame Duval, to her extreme amazement, was abfolutely overpowered and ftopped by the violence of their mirth.

70

For fome minutes the room feemed quite in an uproar; the rage of Madame Duval, the aftonishment of M. Du Bois, and the angry interrogatories of Mr. Branghton, on one fide; the convulfive tittering of the fifters, and the loud laughs of the young men, on the other, occafioned fuch noife, paffion, and confusion, that had any one stopped an instant on the ftairs, he must have concluded himself in Bedlam. At length, however, the father brought them to order; and, half laughing, half frightened, they made Madame Duval fome very awkward apologies. But fhe would not be prevailed upon to continue tinue her narrative, till they had protefted they were laughing at the Captain, and not at her. Appeafed by this, fhe refumed her ftory; which, by the help of ftuffing handkerchiefs into their mouths, the young people heard with tolerable decency.

71

Every body agreed, that the ill ufage the Captain had given her was attionable, and Mr. Branghton faid he was fure fhe might recover what damages fhe pleafed, fince fhe had been put in fear of her life.

She then, with great delight, declared, that fhe would lofe no time in fatisfying her revenge, and vowed fhe would not be contented with lefs than half his fortune : "For though," faid fhe, "I don't put no value upon the money, becaufe, Dieu merci, I ha'n't no want of it, yet I don't wifh for nothing fo much as to punifh that fellow; for, I'm fure, whatever's the caufe of it, he owes me a great grudge, and I know no more what it's for than you do, but he's always been doing me one fpite or other, ever fince I knew him."

Soon after tea, Mifs Branghton took an opportunity to tell me, in a whifper, that the young man I faw was a lover of her fifter's, that his name was Brown, and that he was a haberdafher, with many other particulars of his circumftances and family; and then fhe declared her utter averfion to the

72

the thoughts of fuch a match; but added, that her fifter had no manner of fpirit or ambition, though, for her part, fhe would ten times rather die an old maid, than marry any perfon but a gentleman. And, for that matter," added fhe, "I believe Polly herfelf don't care much for him, only fhe's in fuch a hurry, becaufe, I fuppofe, fhe's a mind to be married before me; however, fhe's very welcome, for, I'm fure, I don't care a pin's point whether I ever marry at all ;—it's all one to me."

Some time after this, Mifs Polly contrived to tell ber ftory. She affured me, with much tittering, that her fifter was in a great fright, left fhe fhould be married firft, "So I make her believe that I will," continued fhe, "for I love dearly to plague her a little; though, I declare, I don't intend to have Mr. Brown in reality; I'm fure I don't like him half well enough,—do you, Mifs?"

"It is not possible for me to judge of his merits," faid I, "as I am entirely a ftranger to him."

"But, what do you think of him, Miss?"

"Why, really, I-I don't know-"

"But do you think him handfome? Some people reckon him to have a good pretty perion,—but, I'm fure, for my part, I think

73

I think he's monftrous ugly :-- don't you, Mifs ?"

"I am no judge,—but I think his perfon is very—very well."

"Very well !- Why, pray, Mifs," in a tone of vexation, "what fault can you find with it ?"

"O, none at all !"

56 I'm fure you must be very ill-natured if you could. Now there's Biddy fays fhe thinks nothing of him,-but I know its all out of fpite. You must know, Mifs, it makes her as mad as can be, that I should have a lover before her, but fhe's fo proud, that nobody will court her, and I often tell her she'll die an old maid. But, the thing is, she has taken it into her head, to have a liking for Mr. Smith, as lodges on the first floor; but, Lord, he'll never have her, for he's quite a fine gentleman; and befides, Mr. Brown heard him fay, one day, that he'd never marry as long as he lived, for he'd no opinion of matrimony."

" And did you tell your fifter this ?"

"O, to be fure, I told her directly; but fhe did not mind me; however, if fhe will be a fool, fhe muft."

This extreme want of affection, and good-nature, increafed the diftafte I already telt for these unamiable fifters; and a confidence to entirely unfolicited and unnecef-Vol. II. D fary fary, manifested equally their folly and their want of decency.

74

I was very glad when the time for our departing arrived. Mr. Branghton faid our lodgings were in Holborn, that we might be near his houfe, and neighbourly. He accompanied us to them himfelf.

Our rooms are large, and not inconvenient; our landlord is an hofier. I am fure I have a thousand reasons to rejoice that I am fo little known; for my present fituation is, in every respect, very unenviable; and I would not, for the world, be seen by any acquaintance of Mrs. Mirvan.

This morning Madame Duval, attended by all the Branghtons, actually went to a Juffice in the neighbourhood, to report the Captain's ill usuage of her. I had great difficulty in excufing myfelf from being of the party, which would have given me very ferious concern. Indeed, I was extremely anxious, though at home, till I heard the refult of the application; for I dread to think of the uneafinefs which fuch an affair would occasion the amiable Mrs. Mirvan. But, fortunately, Madame Duval has received very little encouragement to proceed in her defign, for the has been informed that, as the neither heard the voice, nor faw the face of the perfon ful--pected, fhe will find it difficult to calt him him upon conjecture, and will have but little probability of gaining her caufe, unlefs fhe can procure witneffes of the tranfaction. Mr. Branghton, therefore, who has confidered all the circumftances of the affair, is of opinion, that the law-fuit will not only be expensive, but tedious and hazardous, and has advifed against it. Madame Duval, though very unwillingly, has acquiefced in his decifion; but vows that if ever she is fo affronted again, she will be revenged, even if she ruins herfelf. I am extremely glad that this ridiculous adventure feems now likely to end without more ferious confequences.

EVELINA;

Adieu, my dearest Sir. My direction is at Mr. Dawkins's, a hosier in High Holborn.

LETTER X.

Evelina to Mifs Mirvan.

June 7th.

-75

HAVE no words, my fweet friend, to express the thankfulness I feel for the undbounded kindness which you, your dear mother, and the much-honoured Lady D 2 Howard, 76

Howard, have fhewn me; and ftill lefs can I find language to tell you with what reluctance I parted from fuch dear and generous friends, whofe goodnefs reflects, at once, fo much honour on their own hearts, and on her to whom it has been fo liberally beftowed. But I will not repeat what I have already written to the kind Mrs. Mirvan; I will remember your admonitions, and confine to my own breaft that gratitude with which you have filled it, and teach my pen to dwell upon fubjects lefs painful to my generous correfpondent.

O Maria, London now feems no longer the fame place where I lately enjoyed fo much happinefs; 'every thing is new and ftrange to me; even the town itfelf has not the fame afpect: —my fituation fo altered! my home fo different! —my companions fo changed !—But you well know my averfenefs to this journey.

Indeed, to me, London now feems a defart; that gay and bufy appearance it fo lately wore, is now fucceeded by a look of gloom, fatigue, and lasitude; the air feems ftagnant, the heat is intenfe, the dust intolerable, and the inhabitants illiterate and under-bred. At least, fuch is the face of things in the part of the town where I at prefent refide.

Tell me, my dear Maria, do you never re-trace re-trace in your memory the time we paft here when together ? to mine, it recurs for ever! And yet, I think I rather recollect a dream, or fome vilionary fancy, than a reality .- That I should ever have been known to Lord Orville,-that I should have fpoken to-have danced with him,--feems now a romantic illusion : and that elegant politenefs, that flattering attention, that high-bred delicacy, which fo much diftinguished him above all other men, and which ftruck us with fuch admiration, I now re-trace the remembrance of, rather as belonging to an object of ideal perfection, formed by my own imagination, than to a being of the fame race and nature as those with whom I at prefent converse.

77

I have no news for you, my dear Mifs Mirvan; for all that I could venture to fay of Madame Duval, I have already written to your fweet mother; and as to adventures, I have none to record. Situated as I now am, I heartily hope I fhall not meet with any; my wifh is to remain quiet and unnoticed.

Adieu! excuse the gravity of this letter, and believe me,

D 3

Your most fincerely affectionate and obliged EVELINA ANVILLE.

LETTER

. EVELINA.

78

LETTER XI.

Evelina to the Rev. Mr. Villars.

Holborn, June 9.

Y ESTERDAY morning, we received an invitation to dine and fpend the day at Mr. Branghton's; and M. Du Bois, who was also invited, called to conduct us to Snow-hill.

Young Branghton received us at the door, and the first words he spoke were, "Do you know, Sisters a'n't dressed yet?"

Then, hurrying us into the houfe, he faid to me, "Come, Mifs, you fhall go up ftairs and catch 'em,—I dare fay they're at the glafs."

He would have taken my hand, but I declined this civility, and begged to follow Madame Duval. Mr. Branghton then appeared, and led the way himfelf. We went, as before, up two pair of flairs; but the moment the father opened the door, the daughters both gave a loud foream. We all ftopped, and then Mifs Branghton called out, "Lord, Papa, what do you bring the company up here for ? why, Polly and I a'n't half dreffed."

"More fhame for you," anfwered he, "here's

" here's your aunt, and coufin, and M. Du Bois, all waiting, and ne'er a room to take them to."

"Who'd have thought of their coming fo foon?" cried fhe: "I'm fure for my part I thought Mifs was ufed to nothing but quality hours."

"Why, I fhan't be ready this halfhour yet," faid Mifs Polly; " can't they ftay in the fhop, till we're dreffed ?"

Mr. Branghton was very angry, and foolded them violently; however, we were obliged to defcend, and ftools were procured for us in the fhop, where we found the brother, who was highly delighted, he faid, that his fifters had been catched; and he thought proper to entertain me with a long account of their tedioufnefs, and the many quarrels they all had together.

When, at length, these ladies were equipped to their fatisfaction, they made their appearance; but before any converfation was fuffered to pass between them and us, they had a long and most difagreeable dialogue with their father, to whose reprimands, though so justy incurred, they replied with the utmost pertness and rudeness, while their brother, all the time, laughed aloud.

The moment they perceived this, they were fo much provoked, that, inftead of D 4 making making any apologies to Madame Duval, they next began a quarrel with him. "Tom, what do you laugh for? I wonder what bufinefs you have to be always a laughing when Papa foolds us."

79

80

"Then what bufines have you to be fuch a while getting on your cloaths? You're never ready, you know well enough."

"Lord, Sir, I wonder what that's to you! I wish you'd mind your own affairs, and not trouble yourfelf about ours. How should a boy like you know any thing?"

"A boy, indeed ! not fuch a boy, neither; I'll warrant you'll be glad to be as young, when you come to be old maids."

This fort of dialogue we were amufed with till dinner was ready, when we again mounted up two pair of ftairs.

In our way, Mifs Polly told me that her fifter had afked Mr. Smith for his room to dine in, but he had refufed to lend it; " becaufe," fhe faid, " one day it happened to be a little greafed : however, we fhall have it to drink tea in, and then, perhaps, you may fee him, and I affure you he's quite like one of the quality, and dreffes as fine, and goes to balls and dances, and every thing quite in tafte;—and befides, Mifs, he keeps a foot-boy of his own, too."

The dinner was ill-ferved, ill-cooked, and

81

and ill-managed. The maid who waited had fo often to go down ftairs for fomething that was forgotten, that the Branghtons were perpetually obliged to rife from table themfelves, to get plates, knives and forks, bread or beer. Had they been without pretensions, all this would have feemed of no confequence; but they aimed at appearing to advantage, and even fancied they fucceeded. However, the most difagreeable part of our fare was, that the whole family continually difputed whofe turn it was to rife, and whofe to be allowed to fit ftill.

When this meal was over, Madame Duval, ever eager to difcourse upon ber travels, entered into an argument with Mr. Branghton, and in broken English, M. Du Bois, concerning the French nation : and Mifs Polly, then addreffing herfelf to me, faid, " Don't you think, Miss, it's very dull fitting up stairs here? we'd better go down to flop, and then we shall fee the people go by."

" Lord, Poll," faid the Brother, " you're always wanting to be staring and gaping; and I'm fure you need n't be fo fond of fhewing yourfelf, for you're ugly enough 'to frighten a horfe."

" Ugly, indeed ! I wonder which is beft, you or me. But, I tell you what, Tom, you've no need to give yourfelf fuch all'S.,

ő.

D 5

82

"Who cares if you do? you may tell what you will; I don't mind-"

" Indeed," cried I, "I do not defire to hear any fecrets."

"O, but I'm refolved I'll tell you, becaufe Tom's fo very fpiteful. You muft know, Mifs, t'other night-"

"Poll," cried the brother, " if you tell of that, Mifs fhall know all about your meeting young Brown,—you know when !—So I'll be quits with you, one way or another."

Mifs Polly coloured, and again propofed our going down ftairs till Mr. Smith's room was ready for our reception.

"Aye, fo we will," faid Mifs Branghton; "I'll affure you, Coufin, we have fome very genteel people pafs by our fhop fometimes. Polly and I always go and fit there, when we've cleaned ourfelves."

"Yes, Mifs," cried the brother, " they do nothing elfe all day long, when father don't foold them. But the beft fun is, when they've got all their dirty things on, and all their hair about their ears, fometimes I fend young Brown up ftairs to them; and then, there's fuch a fufs! there they hide themfelves, and run away, and fqueel and fquall like any thing mad: and fo then I puts the two cats into the room, room, and I gives 'em a good whipping, and fo that fets them a fqualling too; fo there's fuch a noife, and fuch an uproar ! -Lord, you can't think, Mifs, what fun it is !"

This occasioned a fresh quarrel with the fifters; at the end of which, it was, at length, decided that we fhould go to the fhop.

In our way down ftairs, Miss Branghton faid aloud, " I wonder when Mr. Smith's room will be ready."

" So do I," answered Polly ; " I'm fure we should not do any harm to it now."

This hint had not the defired effect; for we were fuffered to proceed very quietly.

As we entered the shop, I observed a young man, in deep mourning, leaning against the wall, with his arms folded, and his eyes fixed on the ground, apparently in profound and melancholy meditation : but the moment he perceived us, he ftarted, and, making a paffing bow, very abruptly retired. As I found he was permitted to go quite unnoticed, I could not forbear enquiring who he was.

Lord !" answered Miss Branghton, 66 " he's nothing but a poor Scotch poet."

"For my part," faid Miss Polly, " believe he's just starved, for I don't find he has any thing to live upon."

 $D_6$

" Live

83

84

"Live upon !" cried the brother, "why he's a poet, you know, fo he may live upon learning."

"Aye, and good enough for him too," faid Mifs Branghton, "for he's as proud as he's poor."

"Like enough," replied the brother, but, for all that, you won't find he will live without meat and drink : no, no, catch a Scotchman at that if you can! why, they only come here for what they can get."

"I'm fure," faid Mifs Branghton, "I wonder Papa 'll be fuch a fool as to let him ftay in the houfe, for I dare fay he'll never pay for his lodging."

"Why, no more he would if he could get another Lodger: you know the bill's been put up this fortnight. Mifs, if you thould hear of a perfon that wants a room, I affure you it is a very good one, for all it's up three pair of ftairs."

I anfwered that as I had no acquaintance in London, I had not any chance of affifting them: but both my compafion and my curiofity were excited for this poor young man; and I afked them fome further particulars concerning him.

They then acquainted me, that they had only known him three months. When he first lodged with them, he agreed to board alfo;

alfo; but had lately told them, he would eat by himfelf, though they all believed he had hardly ever tafted a morfel of meat fince he left their table. They faid, that he had always appeared very low-fpirited, but, for the last month, he had been duller than ever, and, all of a fudden, had put himfelf into mourning, though they knew not for whom, nor for what, but they fupposed it was only for convenience, as no perfon had ever been to fee or enquire for him fince his refidence amongst them: and they were fure he was very poor, as he had not paid for his lodgings the laft three weeks: and finally, they concluded he was a poet, or elfe half-crazy, becaufe they had, at different times, found fcraps of poetry in his room.

They then produced fome unfinished verses, written on small pieces of paper, unconnected, and of a most melancholy cast. Among them was the fragment of an ode, which, at my request, they lent me to copy; and, as you may perhaps like to fee it, I will write it now.

O LIFE! thou lingering dream of grief, of pain. And every ill that Nature can fuffain, Strange, mutable, and wild!

NOW

85

EVELINA:

Now flattering with Hope most fair, Deprefiing now with fell Despair, The nurse of Guilt, the flave of Pride, That, like a wayward child, Who, to himself a foe, Sees joy alone in what's denied,

In what is granted, woe!

86

O thou poor, feeble, fleeting pow'r, By Vice feduc'd, by Folly woo'd, By Mis'ry, Shame, Remorfe, purfu'd ! And as thy toilfome fleps proceed, Seeming to Youth the faireft flow'r, Proving to Age the rankeft weed, A gilded, but a bitter pill, Of varied, great, and complicated ill!

Thefe lines are harfh, but they indicate an internal wretchednefs which, I own, affects me. Surely this young man muft be involved in misfortunes of no common nature: but I cannot imagine what can induce him to remain with this unfeeling family, where he is, most unworthily, defpifed for being poor, and, most illiberally, detefted for being a Scotchman. He may, indeed, have motives which he cannot furmount, for fubmitting to fuch a fituation. Whatever they are, I most heartily pity him, and cannot but wish it were in my power to afford him fome relief.

During this conversation, Mr. Smith's foot-boy came to Miss Branghton, and informed informed her, that his mafter faid fhe might have the room now when fhe liked it, for that he was prefently going out.

87

This very genteel meffage, though it perfectly fatisfied the Mifs Branghtons, by no means added to my defire of being introduced to this gentleman: and upon their rifing, with intention to accept his offer, I begged they would excufe my attending them, and faid I would fit with Madame Duval till the tea was ready.

I therefore once more went up two pair of ftairs, with young Branghton, who infifted upon accompanying me; and there we remained, till Mr. Smith's foot-boy furmoned us to tea, when I followed Madame Duval into the dining-room.

The Mifs Branghtons were feated at one window, and Mr. Smith was lolling indolently out of the other. They all approached us at our entrance, and Mr. Smith, probably to fhew he was mafter of the apartment, most officioufly handed me to a great chair, at the upper end of the room, without taking any notice of Madame Duval, till I role, and offered her my own feat.

Leaving the reft of the company to entertain themfelves, he, very abruptly, began to addrefs himfelf to me, in a ftyle of gallantry equally new and difagreeable to me.

88

me. It is true, no man can poffibly pay me greater compliments, or make more fine speeches, than Sir Clement Willoughby, yet his language, though too flowery, is always that of a gentleman, and his addrefs and manners are fo very fuperior to those of the inhabitants of this house, that to make any comparison between him and Mr. Smith would be extremely unjuft. This latter feems very defirous of appearing a man of gaiety and fpirit; but his vivacity is fo low-bred, and his whole behaviour fo forward and difagreeable, that I should prefer the company of dullness itfelf, even as that goddefs is defcribed by Pope, to that of this sprightly young man.

He made many apologies that he had not lent his room for our dinner, which, he faid, he fhould certainly have done, had he feen me first; and he affored me, that when I came again, he should be very glad to oblige me.

I told him, and with fincerity, that every part of the houfe was equally indifferent to me.

"Why, Ma'am, the truth is, Mifs Biddy and Polly take no care of any thing, elfe, I'm fure, they fhould be always welcome to my room; for I'm never fo happy as in obliging the ladies,—that's my character, Ma'am; but, really, the laft time they

EVELINA, 89

they had it, every thing was made fo greafy and fo nafty, that, upon my word, to a man who wifhes to have things a little genteel, it was quite cruel. Now, as to you, Ma'am, it's quite another thing; for I fhould not mind if every thing I had was fpoilt, for the fake of having the pleafure to oblige you; and, I affure you, Ma'am, it makes me quite happy, that I have a room good enough to receive you."

This elegant fpeech was followed by many others, fo much in the fame ftyle, that to write them would be fuperfluous; and, as he did not allow me a moment to fpeak to any other perfon, the reft of the evening was confumed in a painful attention to this irkfome young man, who feemed to intend appearing before me to the utmoft advantage.

Adieu, my dear Sir. I fear you will be fick of reading about this family; yet I muft write of them, or not of any, fince I mix with no other. Happy fhall I be, when I quit them all, and again return to Berry Hill!

LETTER

90

LETTER XII.

Evelina in continuation.

June 10th.

THIS morning, Mr. Smith called, on purpofe, he faid, to offer me a ticket for the next Hampftead affembly. I thanked him, but defired to be excufed accepting it; he would not, however, be denied, nor anfwered, and, in a manner both vehement and free, preffed and urged his offer till I was wearied to death: but, when he found me refolute, he feemed thunderftruck with amazement, and thought proper to defire I would tell him my reafons.

Obvious as they muft, furely, have been to any other perfon, they were fuch as I knew not how to repeat to him; and, when he found I hefitated, he faid, "Indeed, Ma'am, you are too modeft; I affure you the ticket is quite at your fervice, and I fhall be very happy to dance with you; fo pray don't be f6 coy."

"Indeed, Sir," returned I, " you are miftaken; I never fuppofed you would offer a ticket, without wifhing it fhould be accepted; but it would anfwer no purpofe to mention the reafons which make me decline cline it, fince they cannot poffibly be removed."

This fpeech feemed very much to mortify him, which I could not be concerned at, as I did not chufe to be treated by him with fo much freedom. When he was, at laft, convinced that his application to me was ineffectual, he addreffed himfelf to Madame Duval, and begged fhe would interfere in his favour, offering, at the fame time, to procure another ticket for herfelf.

"Ma foi, Sir," anfwered fhe, angrily, "you might as well have had the complaifance to afk me before, for, I affure you, I don't approve of no fuch rudenefs : however, you may keep your tickets to yourfelf, for we don't want none of 'em."

This rebuke almost overfet him; he made many apologies, and faid that he should certainly have first applied to her, but that he had no notion the young lady would have refused him, and, on the contrary, had concluded that she would have affisted him to perfuade Madame Duval herself.

This excufe appealed her; and he pleaded his caufe fo fuccelsfully, that, to my great chagrin, he gained it: and Madame Duval promifed that fhe would go herfelf, and take me to the Hampstead affembly whenever he pleafed.

Mr.

91

92

Mr. Smith then, approaching me with an air of triumph, faid, "Well, Ma'am, now, I think, you can't possibly keep to your denial."

I made no anfwer, and he foon took leave, though not till he had fo wonderfully gained the favour of Madame Duval, that fhe declared, when he was gone, he was the prettieft young man fhe had feen fince fhe came to England.

As foon as I could find an opportunity, I ventured, in the moft humble manner, to entreat Madame Duval would not infift upon my attending her to this ball; and reprefented to her, as well as I was able, the impropriety of my accepting any prefent from a young man fo entirely unknown to me: but fhe laughed at my fcruples, called me a foolifh, ignorant country girl, and faid fhe fhould make it her bufinefs to teach me fomething of the world.

This ball is to be next week. I am fure it is not more improper for, than unpleafant to me, and I will ufe every poffible endeavour to avoid it. Perhaps I may apply to Mifs Branghton for advice, as I believe fhe will be willing to affift me, from difliking, equally with myfelf, that I fhould dance with Mr. Smith.

O my

July 11th.

93

O, my dear Sir! I have been fhocked to death,—and yet, at the fame time, delighted beyond expression, in the hope that I have happily been the instrument of faving a human creature from destruction!

This morning, Madame Duval faid fhe would invite the Branghton family to return our vifit to-morrow; and, not chuling to rife herfelf,—for fhe generally fpends the morning in bed,—fhe defired me to wait upon them with her meffage. M. Du Bois, who juft then called, infifted upon attending me.

Mr. Branghton was in the fkop, and told us that his fon and daughters were out; but defired me to ftep up ftairs, as he very foon expected them home. This I did, leaving M. Du Bois below. I went into the room where we had dined the day before, and, by a wonderful chance, I happened fo to feat myfelf, that I had a view of the ftairs, and yet could not be feen from them.

In about ten minutes time, I faw, paffing by the door, with a look perturbed and affrighted, the fame young man I mentioned in my laft letter. Not heeding, as I fuppofe, how he went, in turning the corner ner of the ftairs, which are narrow and winding, his foot flipped, and he fell, but, almost inftantly rifing, I plainly perceived the end of a pistol, which ftarted from his pocket, by hitting against the ftairs.

I was inexpreffibly flocked. All that I had heard of his mifery occurring to my memory, made me conclude, that he was, at that very moment, meditating fuicide! Struck with the dreadful idea, all my ftrength feemed to fail me. He moved on flowly, yet I foon loft fight of him; I fat motionlefs with terror; all power of action forfook me; and I grew almoft ftiff with horror: till, recollecting that it was yet poffible to prevent the fatal deed, all my faculties feemed to return, with the hope of faving him.

My first thought was to fly to Mr. Branghton, but I feared that an instant of time lost, might for ever be rued; and therefore, guided by the impulse of my apprehensions, as well as I was able, I followed him up stairs, stepping very softly, and obliged to support myself by the banisters.

When I came within a few ftairs of the landing-place, I ftopped, for I could then fee into his room, as he had not yet fhut the door.

I

94

He

EVELINA!

95

He had put the piftol upon a table, and had his hand in his pocket, whence, in a few moments, he took out another: He then emptied fomething on the table from a finall leather bag; after which, taking up both the piftols, one in each hand, he dropt haftily upon his knees, and called out "O God!—forgive me!"

In a moment, ftrength and courage feemed lent me as by infpiration : I ftarted, and rufhing precipitately into the room, juft caught his arm, and then, overcome by my own fears, I fell down at his fide, breathlefs and fenfelefs. My recovery, however, was, I believe, almost inftantaneous; and then the fight of this unhappy man, regarding me with a look of unutterable aftonishment, mixed with concern, prefently reftored to me my recollection. I arose, though with difficulty; he did the fame; the pistols, as I foon faw, were both on the floor.

Unwilling to leave them, and, indeed, too weak to move, I leant one hand on the table, and then ftood perfectly ftill : while he, his eyes caft wildly towards me, feemed too infinitely amazed to be capable of either fpeech or action.

I believe we were fome minutes in this extraordinary fituation; but, as my firength returned, I felt myfelf both afhamed and awkward awkward, and moved towards the door. Pale, and motionlefs, he fuffered me to pafs, without changing his pofture, or uttering a fyllable; and, indeed,

96

He looked a bloodlefs image of defpair ! *

When I reached the door, I turned round; I looked fearfully at the piftols, and, impelled by an emotion I could nat reprefs, I haftily ftepped back, with an intention of carrying them away: but their wretched owner, perceiving my defign, and recovering from his aftonifhment, darting fuddenly down, feized them both himfelf.

Wild with fright, and fcarce knowing what I did, I caught, almost involuntarily, hold of both his arms, and exclaimed, "O Sir! have mercy on yourfelf!"

The guilty piftols fell from his hands, which, difengaging from me, he fervently clafped, and cried, "Sweet Heaven! is this thy angel?"

Encouraged by fuch gentlenefs, I again attempted to take the piftols, but, with a look half frantic, he again prevented me, faying, "What would you do?"

"Awaken you," I cried, with a cou-

" Pope's Iliad.

rage

97

rage I now wonder at, " to worthier thoughts, and refcue you from perdition."

I then feized the piftols; he faid not a word,—he made no effort to ftop me ;—I glided quick by him, and tottered down ftairs, ere he had recovered from the extremest amazement.

I

i

The moment I reached again the room I had to fearfully left, I threw away the piftols, and flinging myfelf on the first chair, gave free vent to the feelings I had most painfully stifled, in a violent burst of tears, which, indeed, proved a happy relief to me.

In this fituation I remained fome time ; but when, at length, I lifted up my head, the first object I faw, was the poor man who had occafioned my terror, ftanding, as if petrified, at the door, and gazing at me with eyes of wild wonder.

I flarted from the chair, but trembled fo exceffively, that I almost instantly funk again into it. He then, though without advancing, and in a faltering voice, faid, "Whoever or whatever you are, relieve me, I pray you, from the fufpence under which my foul labours-and tell me if indeed I do not dream !"

To this address, fo fingular and fo folemn, I had not then the prefence of mind to frame any anfwer : but, as I prefently VOL. II. perceived E perceived that his eyes turned from me to the piftols, and that he feemed to intend regaining them, I exerted all my ftrength, and faying "O for Heaven's fake forbear !" I rofe and took them myfelf.

98

"Do my fenfes deceive me !" cried he, "do I live-? and do you ?"

As he fpoke, he advanced towards me, and I, ftill guarding the piftols, retreated, faying "No, no—you must not—must not have them !"—

"Why—for what purpofe, tell me !do you withhold them ?"—

"To give you time to think,—to fave you from eternal mifery,—and, I hope, to referve you for mercy and forgivenefs."

"Wonderful !" cried he, with uplifted hands and eyes, " moft wonderful !"

For fome time, he feemed wrapped in deep thought, till a fudden noife of tongues below, announcing the approach of the Branghtons, made him ftart from his reverie: he fprung haftily forward,—dropt on one knee,—caught hold of my gown, which he preffed to his lips, and then, quick as lightening, he rofe, and flew up ftairs to his own room.

There was fomething in the whole of this extraordinary and fhocking adventure, really too affecting to be borne; and fo entirely had I fpent my fpirits and exhausted my courage, that, before the Branghtons reached me, I had funk on the ground, without fenfe or motion.

-

I believe I muft have been a very horrid fight to them, on their entrance into the room; for, to all appearance, I feemed to have fuffered a violent death, either by my own rafhnefs, or the cruelty of fome murderer; as the piftols had fallen clofe by my fide.

How foon I recovered, I know not, but, probably, I was more indebted to the loudnefs of their cries, than to their affiftance; for they all concluded that I was dead, and, for fome time, did not make any effort to revive me.

Scarcely could I recollect where, or, indeed, what I was, ere they poured upon me fuch a torrent of queftions and enquiries, that I was almost flunned with their vociferation. However, as foon and as well as I was able, I endeavoured to fatisfy their curiofity, by recounting what had happened as clearly as was in my power. They all looked aghaft at the recital, but, not being well enough to enter into any difcuffions, I begged to have a chair called, and to return inftantly home.

Before I left them, I recommended, with great earneftnefs, a vigilant obfervance of their unhappy lodger, and that they would E 2 take take care to keep from him, if poffible, all means of felf-deftruction.

- 99

M. Du Bois, who feemed extremely concerned at my difpolition, walked by the fide of the chair, and faw me fafe to my own apartment.

The rafhnefs and the mifery of this illfated young man, engrofs all my thoughts. If, indeed, he is bent upon deftroying himfelf, all efforts to fave him will be fruitlefs. How much do I wifh it were in my power to difcover the nature of the malady which thus maddens him, and to offer or to procure alleviation to his fufferings! I am fure, my deareft Sir, you will be much concerned for this poor man; and, were you here, I doubt not but you would find fome method of awakening him from the error which blinds him, and of pouring the balm of peace and comfort into his afflicted foul!

LETTER

LETTER XIII.

Evelina in continuation.

Holborn, June 13th. YESTERDAY all the Branghtons dined here.

Our conversation was almost wholly concerning the adventure of the day before. Mr. Branghton faid, that his first thought was inftantly to turn his lodger out of doors, " Left," continued he, " his killing himfelf in my houfe, should bring me into any trouble; but then, I was afraid I should never get the money he owes me, whereas, if he dies in my house, I have a right to all he leaves behind him, if he goes off in my debt. Indeed, I would put him in prifon, -but what fhould I get by that? he could not earn any thing there to pay me. So I confidered about it fome time, and then I determined to afk him, point-blank, for my money out of hand. And fo I did, but he told me he'd pay me next week : however, I gave him to understand, that, though I was no Scotchman, yet I did not like to be over-reached any more than he; fo then, he gave me a ring, which, to my certain knowledge, must be worth ten guineas, and told me he would not part with E 3 it

ioz EVELINA.

it for his life, and a good deal more fuch fort of ftuff, but that I might keep it till he could pay me."

" It is ten to one, Father," faid young Branghton, " if he came fairly by it."

"Very likely not," anfwered he, "but that will make no great difference; for I fhall be able to prove my right to it all one,"

What principles! I could hardly ftay in the room.

"I'm determined," faid the fon, "I'll take fome opportunity to affront him foon, now I know how poor he is, becaufe of the airs he gave himfelf to me when he first came."

" And pray how was that, child ?" faid Madame Duval.

"Why you never knew fuch a fuß in your life as he made, becaufe, one day at dinner, I only happened to fay, that I fuppofed he had never got fuch a good meal in his life, before he came to England: there he fell in fuch a paffion as you can't think; but, for my part, I took no notice of it, for to be fure, thinks I, he must needs be a gentleman, or he'd never go to be fo angry about it. However, he won't put his tricks upon me again, in a hurry."

"Well," faid Mils Polly, "he's grown quite another creature to what he was, and and he does n't run away from us, nor hide himfelf, nor any thing; and he's as civil as can be, and he's always in the fhop, and he faunters about the ftairs, and he looks at every body as comes in."

"Why you may fee what he's after plain enough," faid Mr. Branghton, "he wants to fee Mifs again."

"Ha, ha, ha! Lord, how I fhould laugh," faid the fon, " if he fhould have fell in love with Mifs!"

"I'm fure," faid Mifs Branghton, "Mifs is welcome; but, for my part, I fhould be quite afhamed of fuch a beggarly conqueft."

Such was the conversation till tea-time, when the appearance of Mr. Smith gave a new turn to the difcourse.

Mifs Branghton defired me to remark with what a fmart air he entered the room, and afked me if he had not very much a quality look?

"Come," cried he, advancing to us, "you ladies must not fit together; whereever I go, I always make it a rule to part the ladies."

And then, handing Mifs Branghton to the next chair, he feated himfelf between us.

"Well, now, ladies, I think we fit very E 4 well.

well. What fay you? for my part, I think it was a very good motion." "If my Coufin likes it," faid Mifs Branghton, "I'm fure I've no objection."

" O," cried he, "I always ftudy what the ladies like,-that's my first thought. And, indeed, it is but natural that you should like beft to fit by the gentlemen, for what can you find to fay to one another ?"

" Say !" cried young Branghton, " O, never you think of that, they'll find enough to fay, I'll be fworn. You know the women are never tired of talking."

" Come, come, Tom," faid Mr. Smith, " don't be fevere upon the ladies; when I'm by, you know I always take their part."

Soon after, when Miss Branghton offered me some cake, this man of gallantry said, "Well, if I was that lady, I'd never take any thing from a woman."

Why not, Sir ?"

" Becaufe I should be afraid of being poifoned for being fo handfome."

" Who is fevere upon the ladies now?" faid I.

"Why, really, Ma'am, it was a flip of the tongue; I did not intend to fay fuch a thing; but one can't always be on one's guard."

Soon

Soon after, the conversation turning upon public places, young Branghton asked if I had ever been to George's at Hampstead?

"Indeed I never heard the place mentioned."

"Did n't you, Mifs ?" cried he, eagerly, "why then you've a deal of fun to come, I'll promife you; and, I tell you what, I'll treat you there fome Sunday foon. So now, Bid and Poll, be fure you don't tell Mifs about the chairs, and all that, for I've a mind to furprife her; and if I pay, I think I've a right to have it my own way."

"George's at Hampftead !" repeated Mr. Smith, contemptuoufly, "how came you to think the young Lady would like to go to fuch a low place as that ! But, pray Ma'am, have you ever been to Don Saltero's at Chelfea."

" No, Sir."

"No!—nay, then, I must infift on having the pleafure of conducting you there before long. I affure you, Ma'am, many genteel people go, or elfe, I give you my word, I fhould not recommend it."

"Pray, Coufin," faid Mr. Branghton, have you been at Sadler's Wells, yet?" "No, Sir."

"No! why then you've feen nothing !" E 5 "Pray,

105

"Pray, Mifs," faid the Son, "how do you like the Tower of London?"

"I have never been to it, Sir."

"Goodnefs!" exclaimed he, "not feen the Tower !---why may be you ha' n't been o' top of the Monument, neither ?"

"No, indeed, I have not."

"Why then you might as well not have come to London, for aught I fee, for you've been no where."

"Pray, Mifs," faid Polly, " have you been all over Paul's Church, yet ?"

"No, Ma'am."

"Well, but, Ma'am," faid Mr. Smith, " how do you like Vauxhall and Marybone?"

"I never faw either, Sir."

"No !—God blefs me !—you really furprife me,—why Vauxhall is the first pleafure in life !—I know nothing like it.— Well, Ma'am, you must have been with strange people, indeed, not to have taken you to Vauxhall. Why you have feen nothing of London yet.—However, we must try if we can't make you amends."

In the courfe of this catechi/m, many other places were mentioned, of which I have forgotten the names; but the looks of furprife and contempt that my repeated negatives incurred, were very diverting.

"Come," faid Mr. Smith, after tea,

" as this Lady has been with fuch a queer fet of people, let's fhew her the difference; fuppofe we go fomewhere to-night ?—I love to do things with fpirit !—Come, Ladies, where fhall we go? For my part, I fhould like Foote's,—but the Ladies muft chufe; I never fpeak myfelf."

"Well, Mr. Smith is always in fuch fpirits !" faid Mifs Branghton.

"Why yes, Ma'am, yes, thank God, pretty good fpirits ;—I have not yet the cares of the world upon me,—I am not married,—ha, ha, ha,—you'll excufe me, Ladies,—but I can't help laughing !—"

No objection being made, to my great relief, we all proceeded to the little theatre in the Haymarket, where I was extremely entertained by the performance of the Minor and the Commiffary.

They all returned hither to fupper.

LETTER XIV.

Evelina in continuation.

June 15th:

107

YESTERDAY morning, Madame Duval again fent me to Mr. Branghton's attended by M. Du Bois, to make fome E 6 party party for the evening; because she had had the vapours the preceding day, from staying at home.

As I entered the fhop, I perceived the unfortunate North Briton, feated in a corner, with a book in his hand. He caft his melancholy eyes up, as we came in, and, I believe, immediately recollected my face, for he ftarted and changed colour. I delivered Madame Duval's meffage to Mr. Branghton; who told me I fhould find Polly up ftairs, but that the others were gone out.

Up ftairs, therefore, I went; and feated on a window, with Mr. Brown at her fide, fat Mifs Polly. I felt a little awkward at diffurbing them, and much more fo, at their behaviour afterwards: for, as foon as the common enquiries were over, Mr. Brown grew fo fond, and fo foolifh, that I was extremely difgufted. Polly, all the time, only rebuked him with "La, now, Mr. Brown, do be quiet, can't you ? you fhould not behave fo before company. —Why now what will Mifs think of me?" —while her looks plainly fhewed not merely the pleafure, but the pride which fhe took in his careffes.

I did not, by any means, think it neceffary to punifh myfelf by witneffing their tendernefs, and, therefore, telling them I 9 would would fee if Mifs Branghton were returned home, I foon left them, and again defcended into the fhop.

"So, Mifs, you've come again," faid Mr. Branghton, "what, I fuppofe, you've a mind to fit a little in the fhop, and fee how the world goes, hay, Mifs?"

I made no anfwer; and M. Du Bois inftantly brought me a chair.

The unhappy ftranger, who had rifen at my entrance, again feated himfelf; and, though his head leant towards his book, I could not help obferving, that his eyes were most intently and earnestly turned towards me.

M. Du Bois, as well as his broken Englifh would allow him, endeavoured to entertain us, till the return of Miss Branghton and her brother.

"Lord, how tired I am !" cried the former, "I have not a foot to ftand upon." And then, without any ceremony, fhe flung herfelf into the chair from which I had rifen to receive her.

"You tired !" faid the brother, "why then what must I be, that have walked twice as far ?" And with equal politeness, he paid the fame compliment to M. Du Bois which his fifter had done to me.

Two chairs and three ftools compleated the furniture of the fhop, and Mr. Branghton, ton, who chofe to keep his own feat himfelf, defired M. Du Bois to take another; and then, feeing that I was without any, called out to the ftranger, "Come, Mr. Macartney, lend us your ftool."

NO EVELINA.

Shocked at their rudenefs, I declined the offer, and approaching Mifs Branghton, faid, "If you will be fo good as to make room for me on your chair, there will be no occafion to difturb that gentleman."

"Lord, what fignifies that ?" cried the brother, "he has had his fhare of fitting, I'll be fworn."

"And if he has not," faid the fifter, "he has a chair up ftairs; and the fhop is our own, I hope."

This groffnels fo much difgufted me, that I took the ftool, and carrying it back to Mr. Macartney myfelf, I returned him thanks, as civilly as I could, for this politenels, but faid that I had rather ftand,

He looked at me as if unaccuftomed to fuch attention, bowed very refpectfully, but neither fpoke, nor yet made use of it.

I foon found that I was an object of derifion to all prefent, except M. Du Bois, and, therefore, I begged Mr. Branghton would give me an answer for Madame Duval, as I was in hafte to return.

"Well, then, Tom,-Biddy,-where have you a mind to go to-night? your Aunt Aunt and Mifs want to be abroad and amongft them."

III

"Why then, Papa," faid Mifs Branghton, "we'll go to Don Saltero's. Mr. Smith likes that place, fo may be he'll go along with us."

"No, no," faid the fon, "I'm for White-Conduit Houfe; fo let's go there."

"White-Conduit Houfe, indeed ?" cried his fifter, "no, Tom, that I won't."

"Why then let it alone; nobody wants your company;—we fhall do as well without you, I'll be fworn, and better too."

"I'll tell you what, Tom, if you don't hold your tongue, I'll make you repent it, —that I affure you."

Juft then, Mr. Smith came into the fhop, which he feemed to intend paffing through; but when he faw me, he ftopped and began a most courteous enquiry after my health, protesting that, had he known I was there, he should have come down fooner. "But, bless me, Ma'am," added he, "what is the reason you stand?" and then he flew to bring me the seat from which I had just parted.

"Mr. Smith, you are come in very good time," faid Mr. Branghton, "to end a difpute between my fon and daughter, about where they fhall all go to-night."

"O fie, Tom,-difpute with a lady !" cried

II2 EVELINA.

cried Mr. Smith, "Now, as for me, I'm for where you will, provided this young Lady is of the party,—one place is the fame as another to me, fo that it be but agreeable to the ladies,—I would go any where with you, Ma'am," (to me) "unlefs, indeed, it were to church ;—ha, ha, ha, you'll excufe me, Ma'am, but, really, I never could conquer my fear of a parfon ; —ha, ha, ha,—really, ladies, I beg your pardon, for being fo rude, but I can't help laughing for my life !"

"I was just faying, Mr. Smith," faid Mifs Branghton, "that I fhould like to go to Don Saltero's;—now pray where fhould you like to go?"

"Why really, Mifs Biddy, you know I always let the ladies decide; I never fix any thing myfelf; but I fhould fuppofe it would be rather hot at the coffee-houfe, however, pray, Ladies, fettle it among yourfelves,—I'm agreeable to whatever you chufe."

It was eafy for me to difcover, that this man, with all his parade of conformity, objects to every thing that is not proposed by himfelf: but he is fo much admired, by this family, for his gentility, that he thinks himfelf a complete fine gentleman !

"Come," faid Mr. Branghton, "the best way will be to put it to the vote, and then then every body will speak their minds. Biddy, call Poll down stairs. We'll start fair."

"Lord, Papa," faid Mifs Branghton, "why can't you as well fend Tom? you're always fending me of the errands."

A difpute then enfued, but Miss Branghton was obliged to yield.

When Mr. Brown and Mifs Polly made their appearance, the latter uttered many complaints of having been called, faying fhe did not want to come, and was very well where fhe was.

"Now, Ladies, your votes;" cried Mr. Smith, "and fo, Ma'am," (to me) "we'll begin with you. What place fhall you like beft?" and then, in a whifper, he added, "I affure you, I fhall fay the fame as you do, whether I like it or not."

I faid, that as I was ignorant what choice was in my power, I muft beg to hear their decifions firft. This was reluctantly affented to; and then Mifs Branghton voted for Saltero's Coffee-houfe; her fifter, for a party to Mother Red Cap's; the brother, for White-Conduit Houfe; Mr. Brown, for Bagnigge Wells; Mr. Branghton for Sadler's Wells; and Mr. Smith for Vauxhall.

"Well now, Ma'am," faid Mr. Smith, "we have all spoken, and so you must give the

113

II4 EVELINA.

the caffing vote. Come, what will you fix upon?"

"Sir," anfwered I, "I was to fpeak laft,"

"Well, fo you will," faid Mifs Branghton, "for we've all fpoke firft."

" Pardon me," returned I, " the voting has not yet been quite general."

And I looked towards Mr. Macartney, to whom I wifhed extremely to fhew that I was not of the fame brutal nature with those by whom he was treated fo grossly.

"Why pray," faid Mr. Branghton, who have we left out ? would you have the cats and dogs vote ?"

"No, Sir," cried I, with fome fpirit, "I would have that gentleman vote,—if, indeed, he is not fuperior to joining our party."

They all looked at me, as if they doubted whether or not they had heard me right: but, in a few moments, their furprife gave way to a rude burft of laughter.

Very much difpleafed, I told M. Du Bois that if he was not ready to go, I would have a coach called for myfelf.

O yes, he faid, he was always ready to attend me.

Mr. Smith then advancing, attempted to take my hand, and begged me not to leave

EVELINA. I

leave them till I had fettled the evening's plan.

"I have nothing, Sir," faid I, "to do with it, as it is my intention to ftay at home; and therefore Mr. Branghton will be fo good as to fend Madame Duval word what place is fixed upon, when it is convenient to him."

And then, making a flight courtefie, I left them.

How much does my difguft for thefe people encreafe my pity for poor Mr. Macartney ! I will not fee them when I can avoid fo doing; but I am determined to take every opportunity in my power, to fhew civility to this unhappy man, whofe misfortunes, with this family, only render him an object of fcorn. I was, however, very well pleafed with M. Du Bois, who, far from joining in their mirth, expreffed himfelf extremely fhocked at their illbreeding.

We had not walked ten yards before we were followed by Mr. Smith, who came to make excufes, and to affure me they were only joking, and hoped I took nothing ill, for, if I did, he would make a quarrel of it himfelf with the Branghtons, rather than I fhould receive any offence.

I begged him not to take any trouble about to immaterial an affair, and affured him him I fhould not myfelf. He was fo officious, that he would not be prevailed upon to return home, till he had walked with us to Mr. Dawkins's.

115

Madame Duval was very much difpleafed that I brought her fo little fatisfaction. White Conduit Houfe was, at laft, fixed upon; and, notwithftanding my great diflike of fuch parties and fuch places, I was obliged to accompany them.

Very difagreeable, and much according to my expectations, the evening proved. There were many people all fmart and gaudy, and fo pert and low-bred, that I could hardly endure being amongft them; but the party to which, unfortunately, I belonged, feemed all at home.

LETTER XV.

Evelina in continuation.

Holborn, June 17th.

YESTERDAY Mr. Smith carried his point, of making a party for Vauxhall, confifting of Madame Duval, M. Du Bois, all the Branghtons, Mr. Brown, himfelf,—and me!—for I find all endeavours vain vain to escape any thing which these people defire I should not.

There were twenty diffutes previous to our fetting out; first, as to the time of our going: Mr. Branghton, his fon, and young Brown, were for fix o'clock; and all the ladies and Mr. Smith were for eight; the latter, however, conquered.

Then, as to the way we fhould go; fome were for a boat, others for a coach, and Mr. Branghton himfelf was for walking: but the boat, at length, was decided upon. Indeed this was the only part of the expedition that was agreeable to me, for the Thames was delightfully pleafant.

The Garden is very pretty, but too formal; I fhould have been better pleafed, had it confifted lefs of ftrait walks, where

Grove nods at grove, each alley has its brother.

The trees, the numerous lights, and the company in the circle round the orcheftra make a moft brilliant and gay appearance; and, had I been with a party lefs difagreeble to me, I fhould have thought it a place formed for animation and pleafure. There was a concert, in the courfe of which, a hautbois concerto was fo charmingly played, that I could have thought myfelf upon enchanted ground, had I had fpirits more more gentle to affociate with. The hautboy in the open air is heavenly.

IIS EVELINA.

Mr. Smith endeavoured to attach himfelf to me, with fuch officious affiduity, and impertinent freedom, that he quite fickened me. Indeed, M. Du Bois was the only man of the party to whom, voluntarily, I ever addreffed myfelf. He is civil and respectful, and I have found nobody elfe fo fince I left Howard Grove. His English is very bad, but I prefer it to speaking French myfelf, which I dare not venture to do. I converse with him frequently, both to difengage myfelf from others, and to oblige Madame Duval, who is always pleafed when he is attended to.

As we were walking about the orcheftra, I heard a bell ring, and, in a moment, Mr. Smith, flying up to me, caught my hand, and, with a motion too quick to be refifted, ran away with me many yards before I had breath to afk his meaning, though I ftruggled as well as I could to get from him. At laft, however, I infifted upon ftopping; "Stopping, Ma'am !" cried he, " why, we muft run on, or we fhall lofe the cafcade !"

And then again, he hurried me away, mixing with a crowd of people, all running with 10 much velocity, that I could not imagine what had raifed fuch an alarm. We

We were foon followed by the reft of the party; and my furprife and ignorance proved a fource of diverfion to them all, which was not exhausted the whole evening. Young Branghton, in particular, laughed till he could hardly ftand.

The fcene of the cafcade I thought extremely pretty, and the general effect ftriking and lively.

But this was not the only furprife which was to divert them at my expence; for they led me about the garden, purpofely to enjoy my first fight of various other deceptions.

About ten o'clock, Mr. Smith having chofen a box in a very confpicuous place, we all went to fupper. Much fault was found with every thing that was ordered, though not a morfel of any thing was left; and the dearnefs of the provisions, with conjectures upon what profit was made by them, fupplied difcourfe during the whole meal.

When wine and cyder were brought, Mr. Smith faid, "Now let's enjoy ourfelves; now is the time, or never. Well, Ma'am, and how do you like Vauxhall ?"

Like it !" cried young Branghton, "why, how can fhe help liking it ? fhe has never feen fuch a place before, that I'll anfwer for."

For

II9

120

" For my part," faid Mifs Branghton, I like it becaufe it is not vulgar."

"This muft have been a fine treat for you, Mifs," faid Mr. Branghton; "why, I fuppofe you was never fo happy in all your life before?"

I endeavoured to express my fatisfaction with fome pleafure, yet I believe they were much amazed at my coldness.

"Mifs ought to ftay in town till the laft night," faid young Branghton, "and then, it's my belief, fhe'd fay fomething to it! Why, Lord, it's the beft night of any; there's always a riot,—and there the folks run about,—and then there's fuch fquealing and fqualling !—and there all the lamps are broke,—and the women run fkimper fcamper;—I declare I would not take five guineas to mifs the laft night !"

I was very glad when they all grew tired of fitting, and called for the waiter to pay the bill. The Mifs Branghtons faid they would walk on, while the gentlemen fettled the account, and afked me to accompany them; which, however, I declined.

"You girls may do as you pleafe," faid Madame Duval, "but as to me, I promife you, I fha'n't go no where without the gentlemen."

"No more, I fuppofe, will my Coufin," faid faid Mifs Branghton, looking reproachfully towards Mr. Smith.

121

This reflection, which I feared would flatter his vanity, made me, most unfortunately, request Madame Duval's permission to attend them. She granted it, and away we went, having promised to meet in the room.

To the room therefore, I would immediately have gone: but the fifters agreed that they would first have a little pleafure, and they tittered, and talked fo loud, that they attracted universal notice.

"Lord, Polly," faid the eldeft, " fuppofe we were to take a turn in the dark walks!"

"Ay, do," anfwered fhe, " and then we'll hide ourfelves, and then Mr. Brown will think we are loft."

I remonstrated very warmly against this plan, telling them that it would endanger our missing the rest of the party all the evening.

"O dear," cried Miss Branghton, "I thought how uneasy Miss would be, without a beau !"

This impertinence I did not think worth answering; and, quite by compulsion, I followed them down a long alley, in which there was hardly any light.

By the time we came near the end, a Vol. II. F large large party of gentlemen, apparently very riotous, and who were hallowing, leaning on one another, and laughing immoderately, feemed to rufh fuddenly from behind fome trees, and, meeting us face to face, put their arms at their fides, and formed a kind of circle, which first stopped our proceeding, and then our retreating, for we were prefently entirely inclosed. The Mifs Branghtons fcreamed aloud, and I was frightened exceedingly : our fcreams were answered with burfts of laughter, and, for some minutes, we were kept prisoners, till, at last, one of them, rudely, feizing hold of me, faid I was a pretty little creature.

122

Terrified to death, I ftruggled with fuch vehemence to difengage myself from him, that I fucceeded, in fpite of his efforts to detain me; and immediately, and with a fwiftnefs which fear only could have given me, I flew rather than ran up the walk, hoping to fecure my fafety by returning to the lights and company we had fo foolifhly left : but, before I could poffibly accomplifh my purpofe, I was met by another party of men, one of whom placed himfelf fo directly in my way, calling out, " Whither fo faft, my love?"-that I could only have proceeded, by running into his arms. In a moment, both my hands, by different ferent perfons, were caught hold of; and one of them, in a most familiar manner, defired, when I ran next, to accompany me in a race; while the rest of the party ftood still and laughed.

123

18

ter.

I was almost diftracted with terror, and fo breathless with running, that I could not speak, till another advancing, faid, I was as handsome as an angel, and defired to be of the party. I then just articulated, "For Heaven's fake, Gentlemen, let me pass!"

Another, then, rushing fuddenly forward, exclaimed, "Heaven and earth ! what voice is that ?---"

"The voice of the prettieft little actrefs I have feen this age," answered one of my perfecutors.

"No,-no,-" I panted out, "I am no actrefs,-pray let me go,-pray let me pafs-."

"By all that's facred," cried the fame voice, which I then knew for Sir Clement Willoughby's, "'tis herfelf!"

" Sir Clement Willoughby !" cried I. " O Sir, afiift — affift me — or I shall die with terror !—"

"Gentlemen," cried he, difengaging them all from me in an inftant, "pray leave this lady to me."

Loud laughs proceeded from every mouth, and two or three faid, "Willoughby F 2 bas bas all the luck !" But one of them, in a paffionate manner, vowed he would not give me up, for that he had the first right to me, and would support it.

"You are miftaken," faid Sir Clement, this lady is—I will explain myfelf to you another time; but, I affure you, you are all miftaken."

And then, taking my willing hand, he led me off, amidft the loud acclamations, laughter, and grofs merriment of his impertinent companions.

As foon as we had efcaped from them, Sir Clement, with a voice of furprife, exclaimed, " My deareft creature, what wonder, what ftrange revolution, has brought you to fuch a fpot as this ?"

Ashamed of my fituation, and extremely mortified to be thus recognized by him, I was for fome time filent, and when he repeated his question, only flammered out, "I have,—I hardly know how,—lost myfelf from my party.—"

He caught my hand, and eagerly prefing it, in a paffionate voice, faid,-"O that I had fooner met with thee!"

Surprifed at a freedom fo unexpected, I angrily broke from him, faying, "Is this the protection you give me, Sir Clement?"

And

And then I faw, what the perturbation of my mind had prevented my fooner noticing, that he had led me, though I know not how, into another of the dark alleys, inftead of the place whither I meant to go.

olg

1C

"Good God !" I cried, "where am I? --What way are you going ?--"

"Where," anfwered he, " we shall be least observed."

Aftonished at this speech, I stopped short, and declared I would go no further.

"And why not, my angel?" again endeavouring to take my hand.

My heart beat with refentment; I pufhed him away from me with all my ftrength, and demanded how he dared treat me with fuch infolence ?

" Infolence !" repeated he.

"Yes, Sir Clement, infolence; from you, who know me, I had a claim for protection, —not to fuch treatment as this."

"By Heaven," cried he with warmth, "you diftract me,—why, tell me,—why do I fee you here ?—Is this a place for Mifs Änville ?—thefe dark walks !—no party ! —no companion !—by all that's good, I can fcarce believe my fenfes !"

Extremely offended at this fpeech, I turned angrily from him, and, not deigning to make any answer, walked on to-F 3 wards wards that part of the garden whence I perceived the lights and company.

125

He followed me; but we were both fome time filent.

"So you will not explain to me your fituation?" faid he, at length.

" No, Sir," anfwered I, difdainfully.

"Nor yet-fuffer me to make my own interpretation ?---"

I could not bear this ftrange manner of fpeaking; it made my very foul fhudder, —and I burft into tears.

He flew to me, and actually flung himfelf at my feet, as if regardles who might fee him, faying, "O Miss Anville—lovelieft of women—forgive my—my—I befeech you forgive me ;—if I have offended, —if I have hurt you—I could kill myself at the thought !—"

"No matter, Sir, no matter," cried I, "if I can but find my friends,—I will never fpeak to—never fee you again !"

"Good God !--good Heaven !---my deareft life, what is it I have done ?---what is it I have faid ?---"

"You best know, Sir, what and why;but don't hold me here, - let me be gone, and do you !"

"Not till you forgive me !-- I cannot part with you in anger."

"For fhame, for fhame, Sir !" cried I indignantly, indignantly, " do you fuppofe I am to be thus compelled ?—do you take advantage of the absence of my friends, to affront me ?"

127

"No, Madam," cried he, rifing, "I would fooner forfeit my life than act fo mean a part. But you have flung me into amazement unfpeakable, and you will not condefcend to liften to my requeft of giving me fome explanation."

"The manner, Sir," faid I, " in which you fpoke that requeft, made, and will make me fcorn to answer it."

"Scorn ! — I will own to you, I expected not fuch difpleafure from Mifs Anville."

" Perhaps, Sir, if you had, you would lefs voluntarily have merited it."

"My deareft life, furely it must be known to you, that the man does not breathe, who adores you fo passionately, fo fervently, fo tenderly as I do!—why then will you delight in perplexing me?"—in keeping me in suspence—in torturing me with doubt?—"

"I, Sir, delight in perplexing you !-You are much miftaken.-Your fufpence, your doubts, your perplexities,-are of your own creating; and, believe me, Sir, they may offend, but they can never delight me:-F 4 but, but, as you have yourfelf raifed, you must yourfelf fatisfy them."

I made no anfwer, but quickening my pace, I walked on filently and fullenly; till this moft impetuous of men, fnatching my hand, which he grafped with violence, befought me to forgive him, with fuch earneftnefs of fupplication, that, merely to efcape his importunities, I was forced to fpeak, and, in fome meafure, to grant the pardon he requefted: though it was accorded with a very ill grace; but, indeed, I knew not how to refift the humility of his entreaties: yet never fhall I recollect the occafion he gave me of difpleafure, without feeling it renewed.

We now foon arrived in the midft of the general crowd, and my own fafety being then infured, I grew extremely uneafy for the Mifs Branghtons, whole danger, however imprudently incurred by their own folly, I too well knew how to tremble for. To this confideration all my pride of heart yielded, and I determined to feek my party with the utmoft fpeed; though not without a figh did I recollect the fruitlefs attempt I had made, after the opera, of concealing from this man my unfortunate connections, nections, which I was now obliged to make known.

I haftened, therefore, to the room, with a view of fending young Branghton to the aid of his fifters. In a very fhort time, I perceived Madame Duval, and the reft, looking at one of the paintings. I muft own to you, honeftly, my dear Sir, that an involuntary repugnance feized me, at prefenting fuch a fet to Sir Clement,—he, who had been ufed to fee me in parties fo different !—My pace flackened as I approached them,—but they prefently perceived me.

" Ab, Mademoifelle !" cried M. Du Bois, " Que je suis charmé de vous voir !"

" Pray, Mifs," cried Mr. Brown, where's Mifs Polly ?"

"Why, Mifs, you've been a long while gone," faid Mr. Branghton; "we thought you'd been loft. But what have you done with your coufins?"

I hefitated,-for Sir Clement regarded me with a look of wonder.

"Pardi," cried Madame Duval, "I fha'n't let you leave me again in a hurry. Why, here we've been in fuch a fright !—and, all the while, I fuppofe you've been thinking nothing about the matter."

"Well," faid young Branghton, " as F 5 long long as Mifs is come back, I don't mind, for as to Bid and Poll, they can take care of themfelves. But the beft joke is, Mr.' Smith is gone all about a looking for you."

These speeches were made almost all in a breath : but when, at last, they waited for an answer, I told them, that in walking up one of the long alleys, we had been frightened and separated.

"The long alleys !" repeated Mr. Branghton, " and, pray, what had you to do in the long alleys? why, to be fure, you must all of you have had a mind to be affronted !"

10

M

(1)

四、四

En 30

This fpeech was not more impertinent to me, than furprifing to Sir Clement, who regarded all the party with evident aftonifhment. However, I told young Branghton that no time ought to be loft, for that his fifters might require his immediate protection.

"But how will they get it?" cried this brutal brother; "if they've a mind to behave in fuch a manner as that, they ought to protect themfelves; and fo they may for me."

"Well," faid the fimple Mr. Brown, "whether you go or no, I think I may as well fee after Mifs Polly."

The father, then, interfering, infifted that that his fon fhould accompany him; and away they went.

131

It was now that Madame Duval first perceived Sir Clement; to whom turning with a look of great difpleafure, she angrily faid, "Ma foi, fo you are comed here, of all the people in the world!—I wonder, child, you would let fuch a —fuch a perfon as that keep company with you."

" I am verry forry, Madam," faid Sir Clement, in a tone of furprife, " if I have been fo unfortunate as to offend you; but I believe you will not regret the honour I now have of attending Mifs Anville, when you hear that I have been fo happy as to do her fome fervice."

Juft as Madame Duval, with her ufual Ma foi, was beginning to reply, the attention of Sir Clement was wholly drawn from her, by the appearance of Mr. Smith, who coming fuddenly behind me, and freely putting his hands on my fhoulders, cried, "O ho, my little runaway, have I found you at laft? I have been fcampering all over the gardens for you, for I was determined to find you, if you were above ground.—But how could you be fo cruel as to leave us?"

I turned round to him, and looked with a degree of contempt that I hoped would have quieted him; but he had not the F 6 fenfe

fense to understand me; and, attempting to take my hand, he added, "Such a demure looking lady as you are, who'd have thought of your leading one fuch a dance? -Come, now, don't be fo coy,-only think what a trouble I have had in running after vou !"

" The trouble, Sir," faid I, " was of your own choice,-not mine." And I walked round to the other fide of Madame Duval.

Perhaps I was too proud,-but I could not endure that Sir Clement, whole eyes. followed him with looks of the most furprifed curiofity, fhould witnefs his unwelcome familiarity.

Upon my removal, he came up to me, and, in a low voice, faid, " You are not, then, with the Mirvans ?"

No, Sir."

" And pray-may I ask, - have you left them long ?"

" No, Sir.

" How unfortunate I am !- but yesterday I fent to acquaint the Captain I should reach the Grove by to-morrow noon! However, I shall get away as fast as possible. Shall you be long in town ?"

" I believe not, Sir."

And then, when you leave it,-which way

133 way—will you allow me to afk, which way you fhall travel?"

" Indeed,-I don't know."

"Not know !-But do you return to the Mirvans any more ?"

" I-I can't tell, Sir."

7

謂

- And then, I addreffed myfelf to Madame Duval, with fuch a pretended earneftnefs, that he was obliged to be filent.

As he cannot but observe the great change in my fituation, which he knows not how to account for, there is fomething in all these questions, and this unrestrained curiofity, that I did not expect from a man, who when he pleafes can be fo wellbred, as Sir Clement Willoughby. He feems difposed to think that the alteration in my companions authorifes an alteration in his manners. It is true, he has always treated me with uncommon freedom, but never before with fo difrespectful an abruptnefs. This observation, which he has given me cause to make, of his changing with the tide, has funk him more in my opinion, than any other part of his conduct.

Yet I could almost have laughed, when I looked at Mr. Smith, who no fooner faw me addreffed by Sir Clement, than, retreating aloof from the company, he feemed to lose at once all his happy felf-felf-fufficiency and conceit; looking now at the baronet, now at himfelf, furveying, with forrowful eyes, his drefs, ftruck with his air, his geftures, his eafy gaiety; he gazed at him with envious admiration, and feemed himfelf, with confcious inferiority, to fhrink into nothing.

Soon after, Mr. Brown, running up to us, called out, "La, what, i'n't Mifs Polly come yet ?"

"Come !" faid Mr. Branghton, " why, I thought you went to fetch her yourfelf, did n't you ?"

"Yes, but I could n't find her; -yet I dare fay I've been over half the garden."

"Half! but why did not you go over it all?"

"Why, fo I will : but only I thought I'd just come and fee if she was here first?"

" But where's Tom ?"

"Why, I don't know; for he would not ftay with me, all as ever I could fay; for we met fome young gentlemen of his acquaintance, and fo he bid me go and look by myfelf, for he faid, fays he, I can divert myfelf better another way, fays he."

This account being given, away again went this filly young man; and Mr. 5 Branghton, Branghton, extremely incenfed, faid he would go and fee after them himfelf.

"So now," cried Madame Duval, "he's gone too ! why, at this rate we fhall have to wait for one or other of them all night !"

Obferving that Sir Clement feemed difpofed to renew his enquiries, I turned towards one of the paintings, and, pretending to be very much occupied in looking at it, afked M. Du Bois fome queftions concerning the figures.

"O, Mon Dieu !" cried Madame Duval, "don't afk him; your beft way is to afk Mr. Smith, for he's been here the ofteneft. Come, Mr. Smith, I dare fay you can tell us all about them."

"Why, yes, Ma'am, yes," faid Mr. Smith, who, brightening up at this application, advanced towards us, with an air of affumed importance, which, however, fat very uneafily upon him, and begged to know what he fhould explain firft; "For I have attended," faid he, "to all thefe. paintings, and know every thing in them perfectly well; for I am rather fond of pictures, Ma'am; and, really, I muft fay, I think a pretty picture is a—a very—is really a very—is fomething very pretty.—"

"So do I too," faid Madame Duval, "but pray now, Sir, tell us who that is meant meant for," pointing to a figure of Neptune.

135

"That !--why that, Ma'am, is,-Lord blefs me, I can't think how I come to be fo flupid, but really I have forgot his name,--and yet, I know it as well as my own, too,--however, he's a General, Ma'am, they are all Generals."

I faw Sir Clement bite his lips; and, indeed, fo did I mine.

"Well," faid Madame Duval, " it's the oddeft drefs for a General ever I fee !"

"He feems fo capital a figure," faid Sir Clement to Mr. Smith, "that I imagine he muft be Generalifimo of the whole army."

"Yes, Sir, yes," answered Mr. Smith, respectfully bowing, and highly delighted at being thus referred to, "you are perfectly right,—but I cannot for my life think of his name;—perhaps, Sir, you may remember it?"

"No, really," replied Sir Clement, "my acquaintance among the Generals is not fo extensive."

The ironical tone of voice in which Sir Clement fpoke, entirely difconcerted Mr. Smith; who, again tetiring to an humble diftance, feemed fenfibly mortified at the failure of his attempt to recover his confequence.

Soon after, Mr. Branghton returned, with with his youngeft daughter, whom he had refcued from a party of infolent young men; but he had not yet been able to find the eldeft. Mifs Polly was really frightened, and declared fhe would never go into the dark walks again. Her father, leaving her with us, went in queft of her lifter.

While fhe was relating her adventures, to which nobody liftened more attentively than Sir Clement, we faw Mr. Brown enter the room. "O la !" cried Mifs Polly, " let me hide myfelf, and don't tell him I'm come."

She then placed herfelf behind Madame Duval, in fuch a manner that fhe could not be feen.

"So Mifs Polly is not come yet!" faid the fimple fwain; "well, I can't think where fhe can be! I've been a looking, and looking, and looking all about, and I can't find her, all I can do."

N

"Well but, Mr. Brown," faid Mr. Smith, "fha'n't you go and look for the lady again ?"

"Yes, Sir," faid he, fitting down, "but I must rest me a little bit first. You can't think how tired I am."

"O fie, Mr. Brown, fie," cried Mr. Smith, winking at us, "tired of looking for a lady ! Go, go, for fhame !"

"So I will, Sir, prefently; but you'd be be tired too, if you'd walked fo far: befides, I think fhe's gone out of the garden, or elfe I must have feen fomething or other of her."

137

A he, he, he! of the tittering Polly, now betrayed her, and so ended this ingenious little artifice.

At last appeared Mr. Branghton and Miss Biddy, who, with a face of mixed anger and confusion, addreffing herself to me, faid, "So Miss, so you ran away from me! Well, fee if I don't do as much by you, fome day or other! But I thought how it would be, you'd no mind to leave the gentlemen, though you'd run away from me."

I was fo much furprifed at this attack, that I could not answer her for very amazement; and the proceeded to tell us how ill the had been ufed, and that two young men had been making her walk up and down the dark walks by abfolute force, and as faft as ever they could tear her along; and many other particulars, which I will not tire you with relating. In conclusion, looking at Mr. Smith, fhe faid, " But, to be fure, thought I, at least all the company will be looking for me; fo I little expected to find you all here, talking as comfortably as ever you can. However, I know I may thank my coufin for it!" ee If

ł

139

"If you mean me, Madam," faid I, very much fhocked, "I am quite ignorant in what manner I can have been acceffary to your diftrefs."

"Why, by running away fo. If you'd ftayed with us, I'll anfwer for it, Mr. Smith and M. Du Bois would have come to look for us; but I fuppofe they could not leave your ladyfhip."

The folly and unreafonablenefs of this fpeech would admit of no anfwer. But what a fcene was this for Sir Clement! his furprife was evident; and, I muft acknowledge, my confusion was equally great.

We had now to wait for young Branghton, who did not appear for fome time; and, during this interval, it was with difficulty that I avoided Sir Clement, who was on the rack of curiofity, and dying to fpeak to me.

When, at laft, the hopeful youth returned, a long and frightful quarrel enfued between him and his father, in which his fifters occafionally joined, concerning his neglect; and he defended himfelf only by a brutal mirth, which he indulged at their expence.

Every one, now, feemed inclined to depart,—when, as ufual, a difpute arole, upon the way of our going, whether in a coach coach or a boat. After much debating, it was determined that we fhould make two parties, one by the water and the other by land; for Madame Duval declared fhe would not, upon any account, go into a boat at night.

Sir Clement then faid, that if the had no carriage in waiting, he fhould be happy to fee her and me fafe home, as his was in readinefs.

Fury ftarted into her eyes, and paffion inflamed every feature, as fhe anfwered, "Pardi, no,—you may take care of yourfelf, if you pleafe; but as to me, I promife you I fha'n't truft myfelf with no fuch perfon."

He pretended not to comprehend her meaning, yet, to wave a difcuffion, acquiefced in her refufal. The coach-party fixed upon confifted of Madame Duval, M. Du Bois, Mifs Branghton, and myfelf.

I now began to rejoice, in private, that, at leaft, our lodgings would be neither feen nor known by Sir Clement. We foon met with an hackney-coach, into which he handed me, and then took leave.

Madame Duval, having already given the coachman her direction, he mounted the box, and we were just driving off, when Sir Clement exclaimed, "By Heaven, this is the very coach I had in waiting for myfelf !"

EVELINA. I.

"This coach, your honour !" faid the man, "no, that it i'n't."

Sir Clement, however, fwore that it was, and, prefently, the man, begging his pardon, faid he had really forgotten that he was engaged.

I have no doubt but that this fcheme occurred to him at the moment, and that he made fome fign to the coachman, which induced him to fupport it : for there is not the leaft probability that the accident really happened, as it is most likely his own chariot was in waiting.

The man then opened the coach-door, and Sir Clement advancing to it, faid, "I don't believe there is another carriage to be had, or I would not incommode you; but, as it may be difagreeable to you to wait here any longer, I beg you will not get out, for you fhall be fet down before I am carried home, if you will be fo good as to make a little room."

And fo faying, in he jumpt, and feated himfelf between M. Du Bois and me, while our aftonifhment at the whole transaction was too great for speech. He then ordered the coachman to drive on, according to the directions he had already received.

For the first ten minutes, no one uttered a word;

141

a word; and then, Madame Duval, no longer able to contain herfelf, exclaimed, "Ma foi, if this is n't one of the impudenteft things ever I fee !"

Sir Clement, regardlefs of this rebuke, attended only to me; however, I anfwered nothing he faid, when I could poffibly avoid fo doing. Mifs Branghton made feveral attempts to attract his notice, but in vain, for he would not take the trouble of paying her any regard.

Madame Duval, during the reft of the ride, addreffed herfelf to M. Du Bois in French, and in that language exclaimed with great vehemence against boldness and affurance.

I was extremely glad when I thought our journey muft be nearly at an end, for my fituation was very uncafy to me, as Sir Clement perpetually endeavoured to take my hand. I looked out of the coach-window, to fee if we were near home; Sir Clement, ftooping over me did the fame, and then, in a voice of infinite wonder, called out, "Where the d—l is the man driving to? —why we are in Broad St. Giles's !"

"O, he's very right," cried Madame Duval, "fo never trouble your head about that, for I sha'n't go by no directions of yours, I promife you."

When, at last, we stopped, at an Hosier's in High Holborn.—Sir Clement faid nothing, but his eyes, I faw, were very bufily employed in viewing the place, and the fituation of the houfe. The coach, he faid, belonged to him, and therefore he infifted upon paying for it; and then he took leave. M. Du Bois walked home with Mifs Branghton, and Madame Duval and I retired to our appartments.

143

How difagreeable an evening's adventure I not one of the party feemed fatisfied, except Sir Clement, who was in high fpirits: but Madame Duval, was enraged at meeting with him; Mr. Branghton, angry with his children; the frolic of the Mifs Branghtons had exceeded their plan, and ended in their own diftrefs; their brother was provoked that there had been no riot; Mr. Brown was tired; and Mr. Smith mortified. As to myfelf, I muft acknowledge, nothing could be more difagreeable to me, than being feen by Sir Clement Willoughby with a party at once fo vulgar in themfelves, and fo familiar to me.

And you, too, my dear Sir, will, I know, be forry that I have met him; however, there is no apprehension of his visiting here, as Madame Duval is far too angry to admit him.

LETTER

LETTER XVI.

Evelina in continuation.

Holborn, June 18th.

ADAME Duval rofe very late this morning, and, at one o'clock, we had but juft breakfafted, when Mifs Branghton, her brother, Mr. Smith, and Monfieur Du Bois, called to enquire after our healths.

This civility in young Branghton, I much fufpect, was merely the refult of his father's commands; but his fifter and Mr. Smith, I foon found, had motives of their own. Scarce had they fpoken to Madame Duval, when, advancing eagerly to me, "Pray, Ma'am," faid Mr. Smith, "who was that gentleman ?"

" Pray, Coufin," cried Mifs Branghton, " was not he the fame gentleman you ran away with that night at the opera?"

"Goodness! that he was," faid young Branghton; "and, I declare, as foon as ever I faw him, I thought I knew his face."

"I'm fure I'll defy you to forget him," anfwered his fifter, "if once you had feen him: he is the finest gentleman I ever faw faw in my life; don't you think fo, Mr. Smith ?"

145

"Why, you won't give the Lady time to fpeak," faid Mr. Smith. - " Pray. Ma'am, what is the gentleman's name ?" " Willoughby, Sir."

"Willoughby ! I think I have heard the name. Pray, Ma'am, is he married ?"

" Lord, no, that he is not," cried Mifs Branghton; he looks too fmart, by a great deal, for a married man. Pray, Coufin, how did you get acquainted with him ?" " Pray, Mifs," faid young Branghton, in the fame breath, " what's his bufinefs ?"

" Indeed I don't know," answered I.

Something very genteel, I dare fay," added Mifs Branghton, " becaufe he dreffes fo fine."

" It ought to be fomething that brings in a good income," faid Mr. Smith, " for I'm fure he did not get that fuit of cloaths he had on, under thirty or forty pounds; for I know the price of cloaths pretty well; -pray, Ma'am, can you tell me what he has a year ?"

" Don't talk no more about him," cried Madame Duval, " for I don't like to hear his name; I believe he's one of the worst perfons in the world; for, though I never did him no manner of harm, nor fo much as hurt a hair of his head, I know he was VOL. II. an an accomplice with that fellow, Captain Mirvan, to take away my life."

Every body but myfelf, now crowding around her for an explanation, a violent rapping at the fireet-door was unheard; and, without any previous notice, in the midft of her narration, Sir Clement Willoughby entered the room. They all flarted, and, with looks of guilty confusion, as if they feared his refentment for having liftened to Madame Duval, they ferambled for chairs, and, in a moment were all formally feated.

Sir Clement, after a general bow, fingling out Madame Duval, faid, with his ufual eafinefs, "I have done myfelf the honour of waiting on you, Madam, to enquire if you have any commands to Howard Grove, whither I am going to-morrow morning."

Then, feeing the ftorm that gathered in her eyes, before he allowed her time to anfwer, he addreffed himfelf to me; — "And if you, Madam, have any with which you will honour me, I fhall be happy to execute them."

" None at all, Sir."

"None ! — not to Mifs Mirvan ! — no meffage ! no letter !—"

" I wrote to Mifs Mirvan yesterday by the post."

"My application fhould have been earlier, had I fooner known your addrefs."

se Ma

"Ma foi," cried Madame Duval, recovering from her furprife, "I believe never nobody faw the like of this!"

"Of what! Madam!" cried the undaunted Sir Clement, turning quick towards her, "I hope no one has offended you!"

"You don't hope no fuch a thing !" cried fhe, half choaked with paffion, and rifing from her chair. This motion was followed by the reft, and, in a moment, every body flood up.

Still Sir Clement was not abashed; affecting to make a bow of acknowledgment to the company in general, he faid, "Pray - I beg - Ladies, -- Gentlemen, -- pray don't let me disturb you, pray keep your feats."

"Pray, Sir," faid Mifs Branghton, moving a chair towards him, "won't you fit down yourfelf?"

And fo faying, this strange man feated himfelf, as did, in an instant, every body elfe, even Madame Duval herfelf, who, overpowered by his boldness, feemed too full for utterance.

He then, and with as much compositive as if he had been an expected gueft, began to difcourfe on the weather,—its uncer- $G_2$  tainty, tainty,—the heat of the public places in fummer,—the emptines of the town,—and other fuch common topics.

147

Nobody, however, anfwered him; Mr. Smith feemed afraid, young Branghton afhamed, M. Du Bois amazed, Madame Duval enraged, and myfelf determined not to interfere. All that he could obtain, was the notice of Mifs Branghton, whole nods, fmiles, and attention, had fome appearance of entering into converfation with him.

At length, growing tired, I fuppofe, of engaging every body's eyes, and nobody's tongue, addreffing himfelf to Madame Duval and to me, he faid, "I regard myfelf as peculiarly unfortunate, Ladies, in having fixed upon a time for my vifit to Howard Grove, when you are abfent from it."

"So I fuppofe, Sir, fo I fuppofe," cried Madame Duval, haftily rifing, and the next moment as haftily feating herfelf, "you'll be a wanting of fomebody to make your game of, and fo you may think to get me there again; —but, I promife you, Sir, you won't find it fo eafy a matter to make me a fool: and befides that," raifing her voice, "I've found you out, I affure you; fo if ever you go to play your tricks upon me again, I'll make no more ado,

but

but go directly to a justice of peace; fo, Sir, if you can't think of nothing but making people ride about the country, at all hours of the night, just for your diversion, why you'll find I know fome justices, as well as Justice Tyrrel."

Sir Clement was evidently embarraffed at this attack; yet he affected a look of furprife, and protefted he did not underftand her meaning.

"Well," cried fhe, " if I don't wonder where people can get fuch impudence! if you'll fay that, you'll fay any thing; however, if you fwear till you're black in the face, I sha'n't believe you; for nobody fha'n't perfuade me out of my fenfes, that I'm refolved."

" Doubtlefs not, Madam," anfwered he with fome hefitation, " and I hope you do not fuipect I ever had fuch an intention; my refpect for you-"

" O Sir, you're vaftly polite, all of a fudden! but I know what it's all for ;--it's only for what you can get !-- you could treat me like nobody at Howard Grovebut now you fee I've a houfe of my own, you've a mind to wheedle yourfelf into it; but I fees your defign, fo you need n't trouble yourfelf to take no more trouble about that, for you shall never get nothing at my house, not fo much as a diffr of G 3 tea:

149

tea: - fo'row, Sir, you fee I can play you trick for tr ck."

There wis fomething fo extremely grofs in this fpeech, that it even difconcerted Sir Clement, who was too much confounded to make any anfwer.

It was curious to observe the effect which his embarrisiment, added to the freedom with which Madame Duval addreffed him. had upon the reft of the company : every one, who, before, feemed at a lofs how, or if at all, to occupy a chair, now filled it with the most easy composure : and Mr. Smith, whole countenance had exhibited the most strking picture of mortified envy, now began to recover his usual expression of fatisfied conceit. Young Branghton, too, who had been apparently awed by the prefence of so fine a gentleman, was again himfelf, rude and familiar; while his mouth was wide diftended into a broad grin, at hearing bis aunt give the beau fuch a trimming.

Madame Duval, encouraged by this fuccefs, looked around her with an air of triumph, and continued her harangue: "And fo, Sir, I fuppofe you thought to have had it all your cwn way, and to have comed here as often as you pleafed, and to have got me to Howard Grove again, on purpofe to have ferved me as you did before; but but you shall see I'm as cunning as you, so you may go and find somebody else to use in that manner, and to put your mask on, and to make a fool of; for as to me, if you go to tell me your stories about the Tower again, for a month together, I'll never believe 'em no more; and I'll promise you, Sir, if you think I like such jokes, you'll find I'm no such person."

151

" I affure you, Ma'am,—upon my honour—I really don't comprehend—I fancy there is fome mifunderftanding—"

M

4

語る

M

"What, I suppose you'll tell me next you don't know nothing of the matter?"

" Not a word, upon my honour."

O Sir Clement ! thought I, is it thus you prize your honour !

" Pardi," cried Madame Duval, " this is the most provokingest part of all ! why you might as well tell me I don't know my own name."

"Here is certainly fome miftake; for I affure you, Ma'am-"

"Don't affure me nothing," cried Madame Duval, raifing her voice, "I know what I'm faying, and fo do you too; for did not you tell me all that about the Tower, and about M. Du Bois?—why M. Du Bois was n't never there, nor nigh it, and fo it was all your own invention."

"May there not be two perfons of the G 4 fame fame name? the miftake was but natural,-"

"Don't tell me of no miftake, for it was all on purpofe; befides, did not you come, all in a mafk, to the chariot-door, and help to get me put in that ditch ?— I'll promife you, I've had the greatest mind in the world to take the law of you ever fince, and if ever you do as much again, fo I will, I affure you!

Here Miss Branghton tittered; Mr. Smith fmiled contemptuously, and young Branghton thrust his handkerchief into his mouth to stop his laughter.

The fituation of Sir Clement, who faw all that paffed, became now very awkward, even to himfelf, and he ftammered very much in faying, "Surely, Madam—furely you—you cannot do me the—the injuftice to think—that I had any fhare in the—the —the misfortune which—"

" Ma foi, Sir, cried Madame Duval, with encreasing paffion, " you'd beft not ftand talking to me at that rate; I know it was you,—and if you ftay there, a provoking me in fuch a manner, I'll fend for a conftable this minute."

Young Branghton, at thefe words, in fpite of all his efforts, burft into a loud laugh; nor could either his fifter, or Mr. Smith,

Smith, though with more moderation, forbear joining in his mirth.

Sir Clement darted his eyes towards them, with looks of the most angry contempt, and then told Madame Duval, that he would not now detain her to make his vindication, but would wait on her fome time when the was alone.

KI.

-

ER.

1

and,

131

pn0-

M

" O pardi, Sir," cried fhe, " I don't defire none of your company; and if you was n't the most boldest perfon in the world, you would not dare look me in the face."

The ha, ha, ha's, and he, he, he's, grew more and more uncontroulable, as if the restraint from which they had burft, had added to their violence. Sir Clement could no longer endure being the object who excited them, and, having no answer ready for Madame Duval, he haftily stalked towards Mr. Smith and young Branghton, and fternly demanded what they laughed at?

Struck by the air of importance which he affumed, and alarmed at the angry tone of his voice, their merriment ceafed, as inftantaneoufly as if it had been directed by clock work, and they ftared foolifhly, now at him, now at each other, without making any anfwer but a fimple " Nothing, Sir !" " O pour

G 5

"O pour le coup," cried Madame Duval, "this is too much ! pray, Sir, what bufinefs have you to come here, a ordering people that comes to fee me ? I fuppofe next, nobody must laugh but yourfelf !"

"With me, Madam," faid Sir Clement, bowing, " a lady may do any thing, and, confequently, there is no liberty in which I fhall not be happy to indulge you :---but it has never been my cuftom to give the fame licence to gentlemen."

Then, advancing to me, who had fat very quietly, on a window, during this fcene, he faid, "Mifs Anville, I may at leaft acquaint our friends at Howard Grove, that I had the honour of leaving you in good health." And then, lowering his voice, he added, "For Heaven's fake, my deareft creature, who are thefe people? and how came you fo ftrangely fituated?"

" I beg my refpects to all the family, Sir," anfwered I, aloud, "and I hope you will find them well."

He looked at me reproachfully, but kiffed my hand; and then, bowing to Madame Duval and Mifs Branghton, paffed haftily by the men, and made his exit.

I fancy he will not be very eager to repeat his vifits, for I fhould imagine he has rarely, if ever, been before in a fituation fo awkward and difagreeable.

" O tour

Madame

Madame Duval has been all fpirits and exultation ever fince he went, and only wifhes Captain Mirvan would call, that fhe might do the fame by bim. Mr. Smith, upon hearing that he was a Baronet, and feeing him drive off in a very beautiful chariot, declared that he would not have laughed upon any account, had he known his rank, and regretted extremely having miffed fuch an apportunity of making fo genteel an acquaintance. Young Branghton vowed, that, if he had known as much, he would have efked for his cuftom: and his fifter has fung his praifes ever fince, protefting fhe thought, all along, he was a man of quality by his look.

-

il,

Ŋ

LETTER XVII.

Evelina in continuation.

June 21.

155

THE laft three evenings have paffed tolerably quiet, for the Vauxhall adventures had given Madame Duval a furfeit of public places : home, however, foon growing tirefome, fhe determined to night, fhe faid, to relieve her ennui, by fome amufement; and it was therefore fettled that we fhould call upon the Branghtons, G 6 at

at their houfe, and thence proceed to Marybone Gardens.

But, before we reached Snow-Hill, we were caught in a fhower of rain : we hurried into the fhop, where the firft object I faw was Mr. Macartney, with a book in his hand, feated in the fame corner where I faw him laft; but his looks were ftill more wretched than before, his face yet thinner, and his eyes funk almost hollow into his head. He lifted them up as we entered, and I even thought that they emitted a gleam of joy : involuntarily, I made to him my first courtefie; he rose and bowed, with a precipitation that manifested furprise and confusion.

In a few minutes, we were joined by all the family, except Mr. Smith, who fortunately was engaged.

Had all the future profperity of our lives dependend upon the good or bad weather of this evening, it could not have been treated as a fubject of greater importance. "Sure neverany thing was fo unlucky !—" "Lord, how provoking !—" "It might rain for ever, if it would hold up now !—" Thefe, and fuch exprefions, with many anxious obfervations upon the kennels, filled up all the converfation till the fhower was over.

And then a very warm debate arofe, whether whether we fhould purfue our plan, or defer it to fome finer evening; Mifs Branghtons were for the former; their father was fure it would rain again; Madame Duval, though fhe detefted returning home, yet dreaded the dampnefs of the gardens.

M. Du Bois then proposed going to the top of the house, to examine whether the clouds looked threatening or peaceable; Miss Branghton, flarting at this proposal, faid they might go to Mr. Macartney's room, if they would, but not to her's.

This was enough for the brother; who, with a loud laugh, declared he would have fome fun, and immediately led the way, calling to us all to follow. His fifters both ran after him, but no one elfe moved.

TEL,

W

In a few minutes, young Branghton, coming half way down ftairs, called out, "Lord, why don't you all come? why here's Poll's things all about the room!"

Mr. Branghton then went, and Madame Duval, who cannot bear to be excluded from whatever is going forward, was handed up ftairs by M. Du Bois.

I hefitated a few moments whether or not to join them; but, foon perceiving that Mr. Macartney had dropped his book, and that I engroffed his whole attention, I prepared, prepared, from mere embarraffment, to follow them.

157

As I went, I heard him move from his chair, and walk flowly after me. Believing that he wifhed to fpeak to me, and earneftly defiring myfelf to know if, by your means, I could poffibly be of any fervice to him, I firft flackened my pace, and then turned back. But, though I thus met him half-way, he feemed to want courage or refolution to addrefs me; for when he faw me returning, with a look extremely difordered, he retreated haftily from me.

Not knowing what I ought to do, I went to the fireet-door, where I flood fome time, hoping he would be able to recover himfelf: but, on the contrary, his agitation encreafed every moment; he walked up and down the room, in a quick, but unfteady pace, feeming equally diffreffed and irrefolute: and, at length, with a deep figh, he flung himfelf into a chair.

He stopped, but I instantly descended, 5 restraining, reftr nels time, ing: prefe mifta to fpi " bu $6 46 " yo fake If he, when mean the c 64 ierve 66 66 66 潮汕 reftraining, as well as I was able, the fullnefs of my own concern. I waited fome time, in painful expectation, for his fpeaking: all that I had heard of his poverty, occuring to me, I was upon the point of prefenting him my purfe, but the fear of miftaking or offending him, deterred me. Finding, however, that he continued filent, I ventured to fay, "Did you—Sir, with to fpeak to me ?"

"I did !" cried he, with quicknefs, "but now-I cannot !"

" Perhaps, Sir, another time, --perhaps if you recollect yourfelf-"

"Another time !" repeated he mournfully, " alas ! I look not forward but to mifery and defpair !"

"O Sir," cried I, extremely fhocked, you must not talk thus !—if you forfake yourfelf, how can you expect—"

I ftopped. "Tell me, tell me," cried he, with eagernefs, "who you are? whence you come?—and by what ftrange means you feem to be arbitrefs and ruler of the deftiny of fuch a wretch as I am?"

"Would to Heaven," cried I, "I could ferve you !"

" You can !"

" And how ? pray tell me how ?"

"To tell you—is death to me! yet I will tell you,—I have a right to your affiftance."

it, to fil

from

Believe

and ez

OF THE

ny fervic

and the age or m

in he fa

1 me,

O, I WE

wer his.

agitatm

unftead

nd irrale

figh, k

pearadi

tould IN but, et itely fol

, Callel

(e="

raining

160 ÉVELINA.

ance, —you have deprived me of the only refource to which I could apply, —and therefore—" stion:

need no

town, a joon to Soon,

ret expl

muft ]

I had

ing fo

call hin

pity and hower

relling

latter, We

from 1

triend.

Iam

what I

unhap

cient t

"Pray, pray, fpeak;" cried I, putting my hand into my pocket, " they will be down ftairs in a moment!"

" I will, Madam.—Can you—will you —I think you will !—may I then—" he ftopped and paufed, " fay, will you—"" then fuddenly turning from me, " Great Heaven ! I cannot fpeak !" and he went back to the fhop.

I now put my purfe in my hand, and following him, faid, " If indeed, Sir, I can affift you, why fhould you deny me fo great a fatisfaction? Will you permit me to—"

I dared not go on; but with a countenance very much foftened, he approached me, and faid, "Your voice, Madam, is the voice of compaffion !—fuch a voice as thefe ears have long been ftrangers to !"

Juft then, young Branghton called out vehemently to me, to come up ftairs; I feized the opportunity of haftening away: and therefore faying, "Heaven, Sir, protect and comfort you!—" I let fall my purfe upon the ground, not daring to prefent it to him, and ran up ftairs with the utmoff fwiftnefs.

Too well do I know you, my ever honoured Sir, to fear your difpleafure for this action :

action: I must, however, affure you I shall need no fresh supply during my stay in town, as I am at little expence, and hope foon to return to Howard Grove.

ly re.

utting

-" he went

I can great

)-"

[]"

ł out

rs; I

way:

pro-

my pre-

the

ho-

Soon, did I fay ! when not a fortnight is yet expired, of the long and tedious month I muft linger out here !

I had many witticifms to endure from the Branghtons, upon account of my flaying fo long with the Scotch mope, as they call him; but I attended to them very little, for my whole heart was filled with pity and concern. I was very glad to find the Marybone-fcheme was deferred, another fhower of rain having put a ftop to the diffention upon this fubject; the reft of the evening was employed in moft violent quarrelling between Mifs Polly and her brother, on account of the difcovery made by the latter, of the flate of her apartment.

We came home early; and I have ftolen from Madame Duval and M. Du Bois, who is here for ever, to write to my beft friend.

I am most fincerely rejoiced that this opportunity has offered for my contributing what little relief was in my power, to this unhappy man; and I hope it will be fufficient to enable him to pay his debts to this pitiles family.

LETTER

LETTER XVIII.

Mr. Villars to Evelina.

another and and out to Berry Hill.

lente

bis a readi T

perat

me.

weak

impla

nels a of yo

when

23 110

men

It is T

of th

T

rious

this

ftam

It.

of fc

D ISPLEASURE? my Evelina!—you have but done your duty; you have but fhewn that humanity without which I fhould blufh to own my child. It is mine, however, to fee that your generofity be not reprefied by your fuffering from indulging it; I remit to you, therefore, not merely a token of my approbation, but an acknowledgement of my defire to participate in your charity.

O my child, were my fortune equal to my confidence in thy benevolence, with what transport should I, through thy means, devote it to the relief of indigent virtue ! yet let us not repine at the limitation of our power, for, while our bounty is proportioned to our ability, the difference of the greater or less donation, can weigh but little in the scale of justice.

In reading your account of the milguided man, whofe milery has fo largely excited your compafiion, I am led to apprehend, that his unhappy fituation is lefs the effect of misfortune, than of milconduct. If he is reduced to that ftate of poverty reprefented fented by the Branghtons, he fhould endeavour by activity and industry to retrieve his affairs; and not pass his time in idle reading in the very shop of his creditor.

The piftol scene made me shudder : the courage with which you purfued this defperate man, at once delighted and terrified me. Be ever thus, my dearest Evelina, dauntless in the cause of diffress! let no weak fears, no timid doubts, deter you from the exertion of your duty, according to the fulleft fense of it that Nature has implanted in your mind. Though gentlenefs and modefty are the peculiar attributes of your fex, yet fortitude and firmnefs, when occasion demands them, are virtues as noble and as becoming in women as in men : the right line of conduct is the fame for both fexes, though the manner in which it is purfued, may fomewhat vary, and be accommodated to the ftrength or weakness of the different travellers.

There is, however, fomething fo myfterious in all you have yet feen or heard of this wretched man, that I am unwilling to ftamp a bad imprefion of his character, upon fo flight and partial a knowledge of it. Where any thing is doubtful, the ties of fociety, and the laws of humanity, claim a favourable interpretation; but remember, my

I.

eny Hill

na -

YOU but t is min ot meter it an w equal t ice, Wil ugh th le finita r bour le diffe tice. niguide excita orehend he effet . Ifh represental

my dear child, that those of diferention have an equal claim to your regard.

As to Sir Clement Willoughby, I know not how to express my indignation at his conduct. Infolence to infufferable, and the implication of fuspicions to thocking, irritate me to a degree of wrath, which I hardly thought my almost worn-out paffions were capable of again experiencing. You must converse with him no more; he imagines, from the pliability of your temper, that he may offend you with impunity; but his behaviour justifies, nay, calls for, your avowed refentment : do not, therefore, hesitate in forbidding him your fight.

The Branghtons, Mr. Smith, and young Brown, however ill-bred and difagreeable, are objects too contemptible for ferious difpleafure: yet I grieve much that my Evelina fhould be exposed to their rudeness and impertinence.

The very day that this tedious month expires, I shall fend Mrs. Clinton to town, who will accompany you to Howard Grove. Your stay there will, I hope, be short, for I feel daily an encreasing impatience to Fold my beloved child to my bosom !

ARTHUR VILLARS.

LETTER

your g thoug infanç fings deploy omiffi indul them, Moft vour 1 enc merit Yc give has I ed v more him

TH

ki

Surely

LETTER XIX.

on have

I know

and the ons were magines, that he

t his be.

ir avon.

helitate

d young reeable

ous di-

and im-

month

o town,

ort, for nce to

ARS,

TER

Evelina to the Rev. Mr. Villars.

Holborn, June 27th.

T Have just received, my dearest Sir, your kind prefent, and still kinder letter. Surely never had orphan fo little to regret as your grateful Evelina! Though motherlefs, though worfe than fatherlefs, bereft from infancy of the two first and greatest bleffings of life, never has the had caufe to deplore their loss; never has she felt the omission of a parent's tenderness, care, or indulgence; never, but from forrow for them, had reason to grieve at the separation ! Most thankfully do I receive the token of your approbation, and most studiously will I endeavour fo to difpose of it, as may merit your generous confidence in my conduct.

Your doubts concerning Mr. Macartney give me fome uneafinefs. Indeed, Sir, he has not the appearance of a man whofe forrows are the effect of guilt. But I hope, before I leave town, to be better acquainted with his fituation, and enabled, with more certainty of his worth, to recommend him to your favour.

I am very willing to relinquifh all acquaintance with Sir Clement Willoughby, as far as it may depend upon myfelf fo to do; but indeed, I know not how I fhould be able to abfolutely forbid him my fight.

Mifs Mirvan, in her last letter, informs me that he is now at Howard Grove, where he continues in high favour with the Captain, and is the life and fpirit of the houfe. My time, fince I wrote laft, has paffed very quietly ; Madame Duval having been kept at home by a bad cold, and the Branghtons by bad weather. The young man, indeed, has called two or three times, and his behaviour, though equally abfurd, is more unaccountable than ever : he fpeaks very little, takes hardly any notice of Madame Duval, and never looks at me, without a broad grin. Sometimes he approaches me, as if with intention to communicate intelligence of importance, and then, fuddenly ftopping fhort, laughs rudely in my face.

O how happy fhall I be, when the worthy Mrs. Clinton arrives !

July 29th.

nd bri

ning a "Lor

lippot

m't be pfair (

a awa

wthe ti

"If

10100 0

nak my

tan I wa

" Dea

art, th

W are me, yo

in I kr

Madar

opolitic

lited 125 in 1

Kurred

aven bo th an ally in 1

Was

Yefterday morning, Mr. Smith called, to acquaint us that the Hampstead affembly was to be held that evening; and then he presented Madame Duval with one ticket, and and brought another to me. I thanked him for his intended civility, but told him I was furprifed he had fo foon forgotten my having already declined going to the ball.

all ac.

ughby,

fhould fight.

informs

Grove

ur with aft, has

1 having

and the e young

e speaks of Ma.

, with-roaches

umicate

en, fud.

in my ie wor.

ily 29th,

led, to fembly

hen he tjeket,

and

"Lord, Ma'am," cried he, "how fhould I fuppofe you was in earneft ? come, come, don't be crofs; here's your Grandmama ready to take care of you, fo you can have no fair objection, for fhe'll fee that I don't run away with you. Befides, Ma'am, I got the tickets on purpofe."

" If you were determined, Sir," faid I, "in making me this offer, to allow me no choice of refufal or acceptance, I muft think myfelf lefs obliged to your intention, than I was willing to do.

"Dear Ma'am," cried he, "you're fo fmart, there is no fpeaking to you;—indeed, you are monftrous finart, Ma'am ! but come, your Grandmama shall ask you, and then I know you'll not be fo cruel."

Madame Duval was very ready to interfere; fhe defired me to make no further oppofition, faid fhe fhould go herfelf, and infifted upon my accompanying her. It was in vain that I remonstrated; I only incurred her anger, and Mr. Smith, having given both the tickets to Madame Duval, with an air of triumph, faid he fhould call early in the evening, and took leave.

I was much chagrined at being thus compelled pelled to owe even the fhadow of an obligation to fo forward a young man; but I determined that nothing fhould prevail upon me to dance with him, however my refufal might give offence.

167

hair, en

iplay, t

m, "wh

Thy, wh

"To t

"Toa

Aunt go

"Yes, to il; "I de

"And

"Perhap

ut's none

"BOt," athe jok

d a parti

'You're

nd Mad

mife you for I've

Why,

or for?

dy or Po

Vol. II,

11/11

In the afternoon, when he returned, it was evident that he purposed to both charm and aftonish me by his appeatance; he was dreffed in a very showy manner, but without any taste, and the inelegant smartness of his air and deportment, his visible struggle, against education, to put on the fine gentleman, added to his frequent conficious glances at a drefs to which he was but little accustomed, very effectually destroyed his aim of figuring, and rendered all his efforts useles.

During tea, entered Mifs Branghton and her brother. I was forry to obferve the confternation of the former, when the perceived Mr. Smith. I had intended applying to her for advice upon this occafion, but been always deterred by her difagreeable abruptnefs. Having caft her eyes feveral times from Mr. Smith to me, with manifeft difpleafure, the feated herfelffullenly in the window, fcarce antwering Madame Duval's enquiries, and when I fpoketo her, turning abfolutely away from me.

Mr. Smith delighted at this mark of his importance, fat indolently quiet on his chair, chair, endeavouring by his looks rather to difplay, than to conceal, his inward fatiffaction.

169

"Good gracious !" cried young Branghton, "why, you're all as fine as five-pence! Why, where are you going ?"

"To the Hampstead ball," answered Mr. Smith.

"To a ball !" cried he, "Why, what, is Aunt going to a ball? Ha, ha, ha !"

"Yes, to be fure," cried Madame Duval; "I don't know nothing need hinder me." 66

And pray, Aunt, will you dance too ?"

"Perhaps I may; but I suppose, Sir, that's none of your bufinefs, whether I do or not."

"Lord ! well, I should like to go ! I fhould like to fee Aunt dance, of all things ! But the joke is, I don't believe fhe'll get ever a partner."

"You're the noft rudeft boy ever I fee," cried Madame Duval, angrily : "but, I promife you, I'll tell your father what you fay, for I've no notion of fuch vulgarnefs."

ie Dom "Why, Lord, Aunt, what are you fo angry for ? there's no fpeaking a word, but you fly into a paffion: you're as bad as Biddy or Poll for that, for you're always a fcolding."

H

VOL. II.

in; bi vailow

ly retul

turned oth cha

e; her

Imarte

ible ftm

on thei

lent 0

render ghtona blerve a

1 the p

l applin afion, b fagreeb res fere

h mant

enlying

ark of

1 00 1

« I de-

"I defire, Tom," cried Mifs Branghton, "you'd fpeak for yourfelf, and not make fo free with my name."

"There, now, fhe's up ! there's nothing but quarrelling with the women : it's my belief they like it better than victuals and drink."

"Fie, Tom," cried Mr. Smith, "you never remember your manners before the ladies: I'm fure you never heard me fpeak fo rude to them."

"Why, Lord, you are a beau; but that's nothing to me. So, if you've a mind, you may be to polite as to dance with Aunt yourfelf." Then, with a loud laugh, he declared it would be good fun to fee them.

"Let it be never fo good, or never fo bad," cried Madame Duval, "you won't fee nothing of it, I promife you; fo pray don't let me hear no more of fuch vulgar pieces of fun; for, I affure you, I don't like it. And as to my dancing with Mr. Smith, you may fee wonderfuller things than that any day in the week."

"Why, as to that, Ma'am," faid Mr. Smith, looking much furprifed, "I always thought you intended to play at cards, and fo I thought to dance with the young lady."

114 311

Iglad

ny decla 11 all.

"Not

nly, wh "I wif x11 be !"

m't at a aty, if on

"Indee

This co

171

I gladly feized this opportunity to make my declaration, that I fhould not dance at all.

Brang

and I

th, "1

pefore t

1 me fpc

leau; li

YOU'R

s to de

tood ful

Or re

ral, "T

mile T

re of it

affure 11 17 date

e mod

lay int

, faid)

d, "]

O Play

e with

"Not dance at all !" repeated Mifs Branghton; "yes, that's a likely matter truly, when people go to balls."

"I wifh fhe may's't," faid the brother; "'caufe then Mr. Smith will, have nobody but Aunt for a partrer. Lord, how mad he'll be !"

"O, as to that," faid Mr. Smith, "I don't at all fear prevailing with the young lady, if once I get her to the room."

"Indeed, Sir," cred I, much offended by his conceit, "you are miftaken; and therefore I beg leave to undeceive you, as you may be affured my refolution will not alter."

"Then pray, Miß, if it is not impertinent," cried Miß Branghton, fneeringly, "what do you go for?"

"Merely and folely," anfired I, "to comply with the request of Madame Duval."

"Mifs," cried young Branghton, "Bid only wifhes it was fhe, for fhe has caft a fheep's-eye at Mr. Smth this long while."

"Tom," cried the fifter, rifing, "I've the greateft mind in the world to box your ears! How dare you fay fuch a thing of me?"

H 2

"No, hang it, Tom, no, that's wrong," faid Mr. Smith, fimpering, "it is indeed, to tell the lady's fecrets.—But never mind him, Mifs Biddy, for I won't believe him."

"Why, I know Bid would give her ears to go," returned the brother; "but only Mr. Smith likes Mifs beft,—fo does every body elfe."

While the fifter gave him a very angry anfwer, Mr. Smith faid to me, in a low voice, "Why now, Ma'am, how can you be fo cruel as to be fo much handfomer than your coufins? Nobody can look at them when you are by."

"Mifs," cried young Branghton, "whatever he fays to you, don't mind him, for he means no good; I'll give you my word for it, he'll never marry you, for he has told me again and again, he'll never marry as long as he lives; befides, if he'd any mind to be married, there's Bid would have had him long ago, and thanked him too."

"Come, come, Tom, don't tell fecrets; you'll make the ladies afraid of me : but, I affure you," lowering his voice, " if I did marry, it fhould be your coufin."

Should be !----did you ever, my dear Sir, hear fuch unauthorifed freedom ? I looked at him with a contempt I did not with n repref le room Very fo ickney-0 ave of N m me, ippoies, The bal rad, This roo theve it her epith linguith I was fa : Smith, Madame dance the 6 Mr. 1 a, but a a neceffit Was, h in the fa Dinuet. a having ne conie

than exh

173 to reprefs, and walked to the other end of the room.

VIONO

belin

give h

-10 de

ry and can Til

1 look a

,"wh

my m

or he ter me

ould he

m too

e: ba "ifli Very foon after, Mr. Smith fent for a hackney-coach. When I would have taken leave of Mifs Branghton, fhe turned angrily from me, without making any anfwer. She fuppofes, perhaps, that I have rather fought, than endeavoured to avoid, the notice and civilities of this conceited young man.

The ball was at the long room at Hampflead.

This room feems very well named, for I believe it would be difficult to find any other epithet which might, with propriety, diftinguiss it, as it is without ornament, elegance, or any fort of fingularity, and merely to be marked by its length.

I was faved from the importunities of Mr. Smith, the beginning of the evening, by Madame Duval's declaring her intention to dance the two first dances with him herfelf. Mr. Smith's chagrin was very evident, but as she paid no regard to it, he was necessfitated to lead her out.

I was, however, by no means pleafed, when fhe faid fhe was determined to dance a minuet. Indeed, I was quite aftonifhed, not having had the leaft idea fhe would have confented to, much lefs propofed, fuch an exhibition of her perfon. She had H 3 fome fome trouble to make her intentions known, as Mr. Smith was rather averfe to fpeaking to the Mafter of the ceremonies.

During this minuet, how much did I rejoice in being furrounded only with ftrangers ! She danced in a ftyle fo uncommon; her age, her fhowy drefs, and an unufual quantity of rouge, drew upon her the eyes, and, I fear, the derifion of the whole company. Who fhe danced with, I know not; but Mr. Smith was fo ill-bred as to laugh at her very openly, and to fpeak of her with as much ridicule as was in his power. But I would neither look at, nor liften to him; nor would I fuffer him to proceed with a fpeech which he began, expressive of his vexation at being forced to dance with her. I told him, very gravely, that complaints upon fuch a fubject might, with lefs impropriety, be made to every perfon in the room, than to me.

When the returned to us, the diftreffed me very much, by afking what I thought of her minuet. I though as I could, but the coldness of my compliment evidently difappointed her. She then called upon Mr. Smith to fecure a good place among the country-dancers; and away they went, though not before he had taken the liberty to fay to me in a low voice, "I proteft to you, Ma'am, I thall be quite out of of countenance, if any of my acquaintance flould fee me dancing with the old lady !"

For a few moments I very much rejoiced at being relieved from this troublefome man; but fcarce had I time to congratulate myfelf, before I was accofted by another, who begged the favour of hopping a dance with me.

I told him that I fhould not dance at all; but he thought proper to importune me, very freely, not to be fo cruel; and I was obliged to affume no little haughtinefs before I could fatisfy him I was ferious.

After this, I was addreffed, much in the fame manner, by feveral other young men, of whom the appearance and language were equally inelegant and low-bred: fo that I foon found my fituation was both difagreeable and improper; fince, as I was quite alone, I fear I muft feem rather to invite, than to forbid, the offers and notice I received. And yet, fo great was my apprehenfion at this interpretation, that I am fure, my dear Sir, you would have laughed had you feen how proudly grave I appeared.

I knew not whether to be glad or forry, when Madame Duval and Mr. Smith returned. The latter inftantly renewed his tirefome entreaties, and Madame Duval faid fhe would go to the card-table : and as foon as fhe was accommodated, fhe defired us to join the dancers.

H 4

as

175

I will not trouble you with the arguments which followed. Mr. Smith teazed me till I was weary of refiftance; and I fhould at laft have been obliged to fubmit, had I not fortunately recollected the affair of Mr. Lovel, and told my perfecuter, that it was impoffible I fhould dance with him, even if I wifhed it, as I had refused feveral perfons in his abfence.

He was not contented with being extremely chagrined, but took the liberty, openly and warmly, to expoftulate with me upon not having faid I was engaged.

The total difregard with which, involuntarily, I heard him, made him foon change the fubject. In truth, I had no power to attend to him, for all my thoughts were occupied in re-tracing the transactions of the two former balls at which I had been prefent. The party—the conversation—the company—O how great the contraft!

In a fhort time, however, he contrived to draw my attention to himfelf, by his extreme impertinence; for he chofe to exprefs what he called his admiration of me, in terms fo open and familiar, that he forced me to exprefs my difpleafure with equal plainnefs.

But how was I furprised, when I found

177

he had the temerity—what else can I call it ?—to impute my refentment to doubts of his honour; for he faid, "My dear Ma'am, you must be a little patient; I affure you I have no bad defigns, I have not upon my word; but, really, there is no refolving upon such a thing as matrimony all at once; what with the loss of one's liberty, and what with the ridicule of all one's acquaintance,—I affure you, Ma'am, you are the first lady who ever made me even demur upon this subject; for, after all, my dear Ma'am, marriage is the devil!"

"Your opinion, Sir," answered I, " of either the married or the fingle life, can be of no manner of confequence to me, and therefore I would by no means trouble you to difcufs their different merits."

"Why, really, Ma'am, as to your being a little out of forts, I muft own I can't wonder at it, for, to be fure, marriage is all in all with the ladies; but with us gentlemen it's quite another thing! Now only put yourfelf in my place,—fuppofe you had fuch a large acquaintance of gentlemen as I have,—and that you had always been ufed to appear a little—a little fmart among them,—why now, how fhould you like to let yourfelf down all at once into a married man ?"

H 5

I could

I could not tell what to answer; fo much conceit, and fo much ignorance, both aftonished and filenced me.

"I affure you, Ma'am," added he, "there is not only Mifs Biddy,—though I fhould have fcorned to mention her, if her brother had not blab'd, for I'm quite particular in keeping ladies fecrets,—but there are a great many other ladies that have been proposed to me,—but I never thought twice of any of them,—that is, not in a ferious way,—fo you may very well be proud," offering to take my hand, "for I affure you, there is nobody fo likely to catch me at last as yourfelf."

"Sir," cried I, drawing myfelf back as haughtily as I could, "you are totally miftaken, if you imagine you have given me any pride I felt not before, by this converfation; on the contrary, you must allow me to tell you, I find it too humiliating to bear with it any longer."

I then placed myself behind the chair of Madame Duval; who, when she heard of the partners I had refused, pitied my ignorance of the world, but no longer infisted upon my dancing.

Indeed, the extreme vanity of this man makes me exert a fpirit which I did not, till now, know that I poffeffed : but I cannot endure endure that he fhould think me at his difpofal.

The reft of the evening paffed very quietly, as Mr. Smith did not again attempt fpeaking to me; except, indeed, after we had left the room, and while Madame Duval was feating herfelf in the coach, he faid, in a voice of pique, "Next time I take the trouble to get any tickets for a young lady, I'll make a bargain beforehand that fhe fha'n't turn me over to her grandmother."

-

W.

山田

T

語う語

We came home very fafe; and thus ended this fo long projected, and most difagreeable affair.

LETTER XX.

Evelina in continuation.

HAVE just received a most affecting letter from Mr. Macartney. I will inclose it, my dear Sir, for your perusal. More than ever have I cause to rejoice that I was able to affist him.

Mr. Macartney to Miss Anville.

Madam,

MPRESSED with the deepeft, the most heart-felt fense of the exalted humanity with which you have refcued from destruction an unhappy stranger, allow me, with the humblest gratitude, to offer you my fervent acknowledgements, and to implore your pardon for the terror I have caused you.

You bid me, Madam, live: I have now, indeed, a motive for life, fince I fhould not willingly quit the world, while I withhold from the needy and diffreffed any fhare of that charity which a difposition fo noble would, otherwife, beftow upon them.

The benevolence with which you have interefted yourfelf in my affairs, induces me to fuppofe you would wifh to be acquainted with the caufe of that defperation from which you fnatched me, and the particulars of that mifery of which you have fo wonderfully, been a witnefs. Yet, as this explanation will require that I fhould divulge fecrets of a nature the most delicate, I must entreat you to regard them as facred, even though I forbear to mention the names of the parties concerned.

I was

181

I was brought up in Scotland, though my mother, who had the fole care of me, was an Englishwoman, and had not one relation in that country. She devoted to me her whole time. The retirement in which we lived, and the distance from our natural friends, she often told me were the effect of an unconquerable melancholy with which she was feized, upon the sudden loss of my father, some time before I was born.

At Aberdeen, where I finished my education, I formed a friendship with a young man of fortune, which I confidered as the chief happiness of my life ;--but, when he quitted his studies, I confidered it as my chief misfortune, for he immediately prepared, by direction of his friends, to make the tour of Europe. As I was defigned for the church, and had no prospect even of maintenance but from my own industry, I scarce dared permit even a wish of accompanying him. It is true, he would joyfully have borne my expences; but my affection was as free from meannels as his own, and I made a determination the most folemn, never to leffen its dignity, by fubmitting to pecuniary obligations.

DW,

We corresponded with great regularity, and the most unbounded confidence, for the space of two years, when he arrived at Lyons in his way home. He wrote me, thence, thence, the most preffing invitation to meet him at Paris, where he intended to remain fome time. My defire to comply with his request, and shorten our absence, was fo earnest, that my mother, too indulgent to controul me, lent me what affistance was in her power, and, in an ill-fated moment, I fet out for that capital.

My meeting with this dear friend was the happieft event of my life : he introduced me to all his acquaintance; and fo quickly did time feem to pafs at that delightful period, that the fix weeks I had allotted for my ftay were gone, ere I was fenfible I had miffed fo many days. But I must now own, that the company of my friend was not the fole fubject of my felicity : I became acquainted with a young lady, daughter of an Englishman of distinction, with whom I formed an attachment which I have a thousand times vowed, a thousand times fincerely thought would be lafting as my life. She had but just quitted a convent, in which the had been placed when a child, and though English by birth, she could fcarcely fpeak her native language. Her perfon and disposition were equally engaging; but chiefly I adored her for the greatness of the expectations which, for my fake the was willing to refign.

When the time for my refidence in Paris expired, I was almost distracted at the idea of

182

of quitting her; yet I had not the courage to make our attacliment known to her father, who might reafonably form for her fuch views as would make him reject, with a contempt which I could not bear to think of, fuch an offer as mine. Yet I had free accefs to the houfe, where fhe feemed to be left almost wholly to the guidance of an old fervant, who was my fast friend.

T)

18

0î

1

朝

關

2

1

1

21

But, to be brief, the fudden and unexpected return of her father, one fatal afternoon, proved the beginning of the mifery which has ever fince devoured me. doubt not but he had liftened to our converfation, for he darted into the room with the rage of a madman. Heavens! what a fcene followed !- what abufive language did the shame of a clandestine affair, and the confcioufnefs of acting ill, induce me to brook ! At length, however, his fury exceeded my patience,-he called me a beggarly, cowardly Scotchman. Fired at the words, I drew my fword; he, with equal alertness, drew his; for he was not an old man, but, on the contrary, ftrong and able as myfelf. In vain his daughter pleaded ; - in vain did I, repentant of my anger, retreat - his reproaches continued; myself, my country, were loaded with infamy, till, no longer constraining my rage, -we fought,-and he fell

At that moment I could almoft have deftroyed myfelf! The young lady fainted with terror; the old fervant, drawn to us by the noife of the fcuffle, entreated me to efcape, and promifed to bring intelligence of what fhould pafs to my apartment. The difturbance which I heard raifed in the houfe obliged me to comply, and, in a flate of mind inconceivably wretched, I tore myfelf away.

My friend, who I found at home, foon discovered the whole affair. It was near midnight before the woman came. She told me that her mafter was living, and her young miftrefs reftored to her fenfes. The absolute necessity for my leaving Paris, while any danger remained, was forcibly urged by my friend : the fervant promifed to acquaint him of whatever paffed, and he to transmit to me her information. Thus circumstanced, with the affistance of this dear friend, I effected my departure from Paris, and, not long after, I returned to Scotland. I would fain have ftopped by the way, that I might have been nearer the fcene of all my concerns, but the low state of my finances denied me that fatiffaction.

The miferable fituation of my mind was foon difcovered by my mother; nor would fhe reft till I communicated the caufe. She heard heard my whole ftory with an agitation which aftonished me; - the name of the parties concerned, feemed to ftrike her with horror ; - but when I faid, We fought, and he fell; - " My fon," cried fhe, " you have then murdered your father !" and fhe funk breathlefs at my feet. Comments, Madam, upon fuch a fcene as this, would to you be fuperfluous, and to me agonizing: I cannot, for both our fakes, be too concife. When the recovered, the confetted all the particulars of a tale which she had hoped never to have revealed .- Alas ! the lofs fhe had fuftained of my father was not by death ! - bound to her by no ties but those of honour, he had voluntarily deferted her ! - Her fettling in Scotland was not the effect of choice,-fhe was banished thither by a family but too justly incenfed; -pardon, Madam, that I cannot be more explicit

185

My fenfes, in the greatness of my milery, actually forfook me, and for more than a week I was wholly delirious. My unfortunate mother was yet more to be pitied, for fhe pined with unmitigated forrow, eternally reproaching herfelf for the danger to which her too ftrict filence had exposed me. When I recovered my reason, my impatience to hear from Paris almost deprived me of it again; and though the length of time time I waited for letters might juftly be attributed to contrary winds, I could not bear the delay, and was twenty times upon the point of returning thither at all hazards. At length, however, feveral letters arrived at once, and from the moft infupportable of my afflictions I was then relieved, for they acquainted me that the horrors of parricide were not in referve for me. They informed me alfo, that as foon as the wound was healed, a journey would be made to England, where my unhappy fifter was to be received by an aunt with whom fhe was to live.

06

UN,

This intelligence fomewhat quieted the violence of my forrows. I inftantly formed a plan of meeting them in London, and, by revealing the whole dreadful ftory, convincing this irritated parent that he had nothing more to apprehend from his daughter's unfortunate choice. My mother confented, and gave me a letter to prove the truth of my affertions. As I could but ill afford to make this journey, I travelled in the cheapeft way that was poffible. I took an obfcure lodging, I need not, Madam, tell you where,—and boarded with the people of the houfe.

Here I languished, week after week, vainly hoping for the arrival of my family; but my impetuosity had blinded me to the imprudence imprudence of which I was guilty in quitting Scotland fo haftily. My wounded father, after his recovery, relapfed; and when I had waited in the most comfortless fituation, for fix weeks, my friend wrote me word, that the journey was yet deferred for fome time longer.

187

di.

W.

1ñ

師

10

۵č

四一個 國 四

御

Q:

也

前

My finances were then nearly exhausted, and I was obliged, though most unwillingly, to beg further affistance from my mother, that I might return to Scotland. Oh ! Madam !—my answer was not from herself, —it was written by a lady who had long been her companion, and acquainted me that she had been taken suddenly ill of a fever,—and was no more !

The compafionate nature of which you have given fuch noble proofs, affures me I need not, if I could, paint to you the anguish of a mind overwhelmed with fuch accumulated forrows.

Inclosed was a letter to a near relation, which fhe had, during her illnefs, with much difficulty, writtten, and in which, with the ftrongeft maternal tendernefs, fhe deferibed my deplorable fituation, and entreated his intereft to procure me fome preferment. Yet fo funk was I by miffortune, that a fortnight elapfed before I had the courage or fpirit to attempt delivering this letter. I was then compelled to it by by want. To make my appearance with fome decency, I was neceffitated, myfelf, to the melancholy tafk of changing my coloured cloaths for a fuit of mourning;—and then I proceeded to feek my relation.

I was informed that he was not in town.

In this defperate fituation, the pride of my heart, which hitherto had not bowed to adverfity, gave way, and I determined to entreat the affiltance of my friend, whofe offered fervices I had a thoufand times rejected. Yet, Madam, fo hard is it to root from the mind its favourite principles, or prejudices, call them which you pleafe, that I lingered another week ere I had the refolulution to fend away a letter which I regarded as the death of my independence.

At length, reduced to my laft fhilling, dunned infolently by the people of the houfe, and almost famished, I fealed this fatal letter, and, with a heavy heart, determined to take it to the post-office. But Mr. Branghton and his fon fuffered me not to pass through their shop with impunity; they infulted me grossly, and threatened me with imprisonment, if I did not immediately fatisfy their demands. Stung to the soul, I bid them have but a day's patience, and flung from them, in a state of mind too terrible for description.

My letter, which I now found would be

be received too late to fave me from difgrace, I tore into a thoufand pieces, and fearce could I refrain from putting an inftantaneous, an unlicenfed period to my existence.

0, ŧ1

1

del

- 199-11

山

20.

In this diforder of my fenfes, I formed the horrible plan of turning foot-pad; for which purpose I returned to my lodging, and collected whatever of my apparel I could part with, which I immediately fold, and with the profits purchased a brace of piftols, powder and fhot. I hope, however, you will believe me, when I most folemnly affure you, my fole intention was to frighten the paffengers I should affault, with these dangerous weapons, which I had not loaded, but from a refolution,-a dreadful one, I own,-to fave my felf from an ignominious death if feized. And, indeed, I thought that if I could but procure money fufficient to pay Mr. Branghton, and make a journey to Scotland, I should foon be able, by the public papers, to difcover whom I had injured, and to make private retribution.

But, Madam, new to every fpecies of villainy, my perturbation was fo great that I could with difficulty fupport myfelf: yet the Branghtons observed it not as I paffed through the shop.

Here

190

Here I ftop: what followed is better known to yourfelf. But no time can ever efface from my memory that moment, when in the very action of preparing for my own deftruction, or the lawlefs feizure of the property of others, you rushed into the room, and arrefted my arm !-It was, indeed, an awful moment !--- the hand of Providence feemed to intervene between me and eternity; I beheld you as an angel!-I thought you dropt from the clouds ;- the earth, indeed, had never before prefented to my view a form fo celeftial !-- What wonder, then, that a spectacle fo aftonishing should, to a man difordered as I was, appear too beautiful to be human ?

And now, Madam, that I have performed this painful tafk, the more grateful one remains of rewarding, as far as is inmy power, your generous goodnefs, by affuring you it fhall not be thrown away. You have awakened me to a fenfe of the falfe pride by which I have been actuated,—a pride which, while it fcorned affiftance from a friend, fcrupled not to compel it from a ftranger, though at the hazard of reducing that ftranger to a fituation as defitute as my own. Yet, Oh ! how violent was the ftruggle which tore my conflicting foul, ere ere I could perfuade myself to profit by the benevolence which you were so evidently disposed to exert in my favour!

191

By means of a ring, the gift of my much-regretted mother, I have for the prefent fatisfied Mr. Branghton; and by means of your compaffion, I hope to fupport myfelf, either till I hear from my friend, to whom, at length, I have written, or till the relation of my mother returns to town.

To talk to you, Madam, of paying my debt, would be vain; I never can! the fervice you have done me exceeds all power of return; you have reftored me to my fenfes, you have taught me to curb those passions which bereft me of them, and, fince I cannot avoid calamity, to bear it as a man! An interposition fo wonderfully circumftanced can never be recollected without benefit. Yet allow me to fay, the pecuniary part of my obligation must be fettled by my first ability.

I am, Madam, with the most profound respect, and heart-felt gratitude,

> Your obedient, and devoted humble fervant,

> > J. MACARTNEY.

6

LETTER XXI.

Evelina in continuation.

Holborn, July 1, 5 o'clock in the morn.

O SIR, what an adventure have I to write !—all night it has occupied my thoughts, and I am now rifen thus early, to write it to you.

Yefterday it was fettled that we fhould fpend the evening in Marybone-gardens, where M. Torre, a celebrated foreigner, was to exhibit fome fireworks. The party confifted of Madame Duval, all the Branghtons, M. Du Bois, Mr. Smith, and Mr. Brown.

We were almost the first perfons who entered the Gardens, Mr. Branghton having declared he would have all be could get for bis money, which, at best, was only fooled away, at fuch filly and idle places.

We walked in parties, and very much detached from one another; Mr. Brown and Mifs Polly led the way by themfelves; Mifs Branghton and Mr. Smith followed, and the latter feemed determined to be revenged for my behaviour at the ball, by transferring all his former attention for me, to Mifs Branghton, who received it with an air air of exultation : and very frequently they each of them, though from different motives, looked back, to difcover whether I obferved their good intelligence. Madame Duval walked with M. Du Bois; and Mr. Branghton by himfelf; but his fon would willingly have attached himfelf wholly to me, faying frequently, "Come, Mifs, let's you and I have a little fun together; you fee they have all left us, fo now let us leave them." But I begged to be excufed, and went to the other fide of Madame Duval.

This Garden, as it is called, is neither friking for magnificence nor for beauty; and we were all fo dull and languid, that I was extremely glad when we were fummoned to the orcheftra, upon the opening of a concert; in the courfe of which, I had the pleafure of hearing a concerto on the violin by Mr. Barthelemon, who, to me, feems a player of exquifite fancy, feeling, and variety.

When notice was given us, that the fire! works were preparing, we hurried along to fecure good places for the fight: but, very foon, we were fo encircled and incommoded by the crowd, that Mr. Smith propofed the ladies fhould make intereft for a form to ftand upon; this was foon effected, and the men then left us, to ac-Vol. II. I commodate commodate themfelves better, faying they would return the moment the exhibition was over.

193

194

The firework was really beautiful, and told, with wonderful ingenuity, the flory of Orpheus and Eurydice; but, at the moment of the fatal look, which feparated them for ever, there was fuch an exploion of fire, and fo horrible a noife, that we all as of one accord, jumpt haftily from the form, and ran away fome paces, fearing that we were in danger of mifchief, from the innumerable fparks of fire which glittered in the air.

For a moment or two, I neither knew nor confidered whether I had run; but my recollection was foon awakened by a ftranger's addreffing me with, "Come along with me, my dear, and I'll take care of you."

I ftarted, and then, to my great terror, perceived that I had out-run all my companions, and faw not one human being I knew ! with all the fpeed in my power, and forgetful of my firft fright, I haftened back to the place I had left;—but found the form occupied by a new fet of people.

In vain, from fide to fide, I looked for fome face I knew; I found myfelf in the midft of a crowd, yet without party, friend, or or acquaintance. I walked, in difordered hafte, from place to place, without knowing which way to turn, or whither I went. Every other moment, I was fpoken to, by fome bold and unfeeling man, to whom my diffrefs, which, I think, muft be very apparent, only furnished a pretence for impertinent witticifms, or free gallantry.

ŋ

日子

1000

At laft, a young officer, marching fiercely up to me, faid, "You are a fweet pretty creature, and I enlift you in my fervice;" and then, with great violence, he feized my hand. I fcreamed aloud with fear, and, forcibly fnatching it away, I ran haftily up to two ladies, and cried, "For Heaven's fake, dear ladies, afford me fome protection !"

They heard me with a loud laugh, but very readily faid, "Ay, let her walk between us;" and each of them took hold of an arm.

Then, in a drawling, ironical tone of voice, they afked what had frightened my little Lady/hip? I told them my adventure very fimply, and intreated they would have the goodnefs to affift me in finding my friends.

O yes, to be fure, they faid, I fhould not want for friends, whilft I was with them. Mine, I faid, would be very grateful for any civilities with which they might I 2 favour favour me. But imagine, my dear Sir, how I must be confounded, when I obferved, that every other word I spoke produced a loud laugh! However, I will not dwell upon a conversation, which soon, to my inexpressible horror, convinced me I had sought protection from infult, of those who were themselves most likely to offer it! You, my dearest Sir, I well know, wll both feel for, and pitty my terror, which I have no words to describe.

195

Had I been at liberty, I fhould have inftantly run away from them, when I made the fhocking difcovery; but, as they held me faft, that was utterly impoffible: and fuch was my dread of their refentment or abufe, that I did not dare make any open attempt to efcape.

They afked me a thoufand queftions, accompanied by as many hallows, of who I was, what I was, and whence I came. My anfwers were very incoherent,—but what, good Heaven, were my emotions, when, a few moments afterwards, I perceived advancing our way,—Lord Orville !

Never shall I forget what I felt at that instant: had I, indeed, been funk to the cuilty state, which fuch companions might lead him to suspect, I would scarce have had feelings more cruelly depressing.

However, to my infinite joy, he paffed us without diffinguishing me; though I faw that, in a careles manner, his eyes furveyed the party.

$95

As foon as he was gone, one of thefe unhappy women faid, "Do you know that young fellow ?"

Not thinking it poffible fhe fhould mean Lord Orville by fuch a term, I readily anfwered, "No, Madam."

11

11

).

"Why then," anfwered fhe, "you have a monftrous good ftare, for a little country Mifs."

I now found I had mistaken her, but was glad to avoid an explanation.

A few minutes after, what was my delight, to hear the voice of Mr. Brown, who called out, "Lord, i'n't that Mifs what's her name?"

"Thank God," cried I, fuddenly fpringing from them both, "thank God, I have found my party."

Mr. Brown was, however, alone, and, without knowing what I did, I took hold of his arm.

"Lord, Mifs," cried he, "we've had fuch a hunt you can't think ! fome of them thought you was gone home; but I fays, fays I, I don't think, fays I, that fhe's like to go home all alone, fays I."

"So that gentleman belongs to you, Mis, does he?" faid one of the women.

I 3

"Yes,

"Yes, Madam," anfwered I, " and I now thank you for your civility; but, as I am fafe, will not give you any further trouble."

I courtfied flightly, and would have walked away; but, most unfortunately, Madame Duval and the two Miss Branghtons just then joined us.

They all began to make a thouland enquiries, to which I briefly anfwered, that I had been obliged to these two ladies for walking with me, and would tell them more another time: for, though I felt great comparative courage, I was yet too much intimidated by their presence, to dare be explicit.

Nevertheless, I ventured, once more, to with them good night, and proposed feeking Mr. Branghton. Thefe unhappy women liftened to all that was faid with a kind of callous curiofity, and feemed determined not to take any hint. But my vexation was terribly augmented, when, after having whifpered fomething to each other, they very cavalierly declared, that they intended joining our party ! and then, one of them, very boldly took hold of my arm, while the other, going round, feized that of Mr. Brown; and thus, almost forcibly, we were moved on between them, and followed by Madame Duval and the Mifs Branghtons. It

It would be very difficult to fay which was greateft, my fright, or Mr. Brown's confternation; who ventured not to make the leaft refiftance, though his uneafinefs made him tremble almost as much as myfelf. I would inftantly have withdrawn my arm; but it was held fo tight, I could not move it; and poor Mr. Brown was circumftanced in the fame manner on the other fide; for I heard him fay, "Lord, Ma'am, there's no need to fqueeze one's arm fo!"

R.

1

W.

e

And this was our fituation,—for we had not taken three fteps, when,—O Sir,—we again met Lord Orville !—but not again did he pafs quietly by us,—unhappily <sup>5</sup>I caught his eye ;—both mine, immediately, were bent to the ground ; but he approached me, and we all ftopped.

I then looked up. He bowed. Good God, with what expressive eyes did he regard me! Never were furprife and concern fo ftrongly marked,—yes, my dear Sir, he looked greatly concerned; and that, the remembrance of that, is the only confolation I feel, for an evening the most painful of my life.

What he first faid I know not; for, indeed, I feemed to have neither ears nor understanding; but I recollect that I only courtfied in filence. He paufed for an inftant, as if—I believe fo,—as if unwilling I 4 to to pais on; but then, finding the whole party detained, he again bowed, and took leave.

Indeed, my dear Sir, I thought I fhould have fainted, fo great was my emotion from fhame, vexation, and a thoufand other feelirgs, for which I have no expressions. I absolutely tore myself from the woman's aum, and then, difengaging myself from that of Mr. Brown, I went to Madame Euval, and befought that she would not faffer me to be again parted from her.

I fancy—that Lord Orville faw what paffed; for fcarcely was I at liberty, ere he returned. Methought, my dear Sir, the pleafure, the furprife of that moment, recompenfed me for all the chagrin I had before fdt: for do you not think, that this return, manifefts, from a character fo quiet, fo referved as Lord Orville's, fomething like folicitude in my concerns ?—fuch, at leaft, was the interpretation I involuntarily made upon again feeing him.

With a politeness to which I have been fome time very little used, he apologifed for returning, and then enquired after the health of Mrs. Mirvan, and the reft of the Howard Grove family. The flatterirg conjecture which I have just acknowledged, had fo wonderfully reftored my ffirits, that I believe I never answered him fo.

fo readily, and with fo little conftrant. Very fhort, however, was the duration of this conversation : for we were foon noft difagreeably interrupted.

ĉî,

1

「「「「「」」」

るときを見るのである。

eli

當

版 OF

The Miss Branghtons, though they aw almost immediately the characters of the women to whom I had fo unfortunately applied, were, neverthelefs, fo weak and foolifh, as merely to titter at their behaviour. As to Madame Duval, she was for fome time fo ftrangely impofed upon, that fhe thought they were two real ine ladies. Indeed it is wonderful to fee low eafily and how frequently fhe is deceived : our disturbance, however, arose from yoing Brown, who was now between the two women, by whom his arms were abfolutely pinioned to his fides : for a few minutes, his complaints had been only murmured; but he now called out aloud, " Goodnefs, Ladies, you hurt me like any thing ! why I can't walk at all, if you keep pinching my arms fo !"

This fpeech raifed a loud laugh in the women, and redoubled the tittering of the Mifs Branghtons. For my own part, I was moft cruelly confufed; while the countenance of Lord Orville manifested a fort of indignant altonishment; and, from that moment, he spoke to me no more, til he took leave.

I 5

Madame.

Madame Duval, who now began to fufpect her company, proposed our taking the first box we faw empty, bespeaking a supper, and waiting till Mr. Branghton should find us.

Mifs Polly mentioned one fhe had remarked, to which we all turned; Madame Duval inftantly feated herfelf; and the two bold women, forcing the frightened Mr. Brown to go between them, followed her example.

Lord Orville, with an air of gravity that wounded my very foul, then wifhed me good night. I faid not a word; but my face, if it had any connection with my heart, muft have looked melancholy indeed: and fo, I have fome reafon to believe, it did; for he added, with much more foftnefs, though not lefs dignity, "Will Mifs Anville allow me to afk her addrefs, and to pay my refpects to her before I leave town !"

O how I changed colour at this unexpected requeft !—yet what was the mortification I fuffered, in anfwering, "My Lord, I am—in Holborn."

He then bowed and left us.

What, what can he think of this adventure! how ftrangely, how cruelly have all appearances turned againft me! Had I been bleffed with any prefence of mind, I fhould fhould inftantly have explained to him the accident which occafioned my being in fuch terrible company;—but I have none !

203

16

II)

町 町...

x.

0

Ŕ

d,

As to the reft of the evening, I cannot relate the particulars of what paffed; for, to you, I only write of what I think, and I can think of nothing but this unfortunate, this difgraceful meeting. Thefe two wretched women continued to torment us all, but efpecially poor Mr. Brown, who feemed to afford them uncommon diverfion, till we were difcovered by Mr. Branghton, who very foon found means to releafe us from their perfecutions, by frightening them away. We ftayed but a fhort time after they left us, which was all employed in explanations.

Whatever may be the conftruction which Lord Orville may put upon this affair, to me it cannot fail of being unfavourable; to be feen-gracious Heaven !- to be feen in company with two women of fuch character !- How vainly, how proudly have I wifhed to avoid meeting him when only with the Branghtons and Madame Duval,-but now, how joyful should I be had he feen me to no greater difadvantage! -Holborn, too! what a direction !- he who had always-but I will not torment you, my deareft Sir, with any more of my mortifying conjectures and apprehenfions : perhaps I 6.

204

perhaps he may call,—and then I fhall have an opportunity of explaining to him all the moft fhocking part of the adventure. And yet, as I did not tell him at whofe houfe I lived, he may not be able to difcover me; I merely faid in Holborn, and he, who I fuppofe faw my embarrafiment, forbore to afk any other direction.

Well, I must take my chance!

Yet let me, in justice to Lord Orville, and in justice to the high opinion I have always entertained of his honour and delicacy,-let me observe the difference of his behaviour, when nearly in the fame fituation to that of Sir Clement Willoughby. He had at least equal caufe to depreciate me in his opinion, and to mortify and fink me in my own: but far different was his conduct ; - perplexed, indeed, he looked, and much furprised,-but it was benevolently, not with infolence. 1 am even inclined to think, that he could not fee a young creature whom he had fo lately known in a higher fphere, appear fo fuddenly, fo ftrangely, fo difgracefully altered ' in her fituation, without fome pity and concern. But, whatever might be his doubts and fufpicions, far from fuffering them to influence his behaviour, he fpoke, he looked, with the fame politeness and attention with with which he had always honoured me when countenanced by Mrs. Mirvan.

EVELINA: 205

Once again, let me drop this subject.

R

いうない

sed,

......

的

1

2017

In every mortification, every diffurbance, how grateful to my heart, how fweet to my recollection, is the certainty of your neverfailing tendernefs, fympathy, and protection! Oh Sir, could I, upon this fubject, could I write as I feel,—how animated would be the language of

Your devoted

EVELINA!

LETTER XXII.

Evelina to the Rev. Mr. Villars.

Holborn, July 1.

LISTLESS, uneafy, and without either fpirit or courage to employ myfelf, from the time I had finifhed my laft letter, I indolently feated myfelf at the window, where, while I waited Madame Duval's fummons to breakfaft, I perceived, among the carriages which paffed by, a coronet coach, and, in a few minutes, from the window of it, Lord Orville ! I inftantly retreated, but not, I believe, unfeen; for the coach immediately drove up to our door. Indeed, Indeed, my dear Sir, I muft own I was greatly agitated; the idea of receiving Lord Orville by myfelf,—the knowledge that his vifit was entirely to me,—the wifh of explaining the unfortunate adventure of yefterday,—and the mortification of my prefent circumftances,—all thefe thoughts, occurring to me nearly at the fame time, occafioned me more anxiety, confusion, and perplexity, than I can poffibly express.

I believe he meant to fend up his name; but the maid, unufed to fuch a ceremony, forgot it by the way, and only told me, that a great Lord was below, and defired to fee me: and, the next moment, he appeared himfelf.

If formerly, when in the circle of high life, and accuftomed to its manners, I fo much admired and diftinguished the grace, the elegance of Lord Orville, think, Sir, how they must strike me now,—now, when, far removed from that splendid circle, I live with those to whom even civility is unknown, and decorum a stranger !

I am fure I received him very awkwardly; depreffed by a fituation fo difagreeable, could I do otherwife? When his firft enquiries were made, "I think myfelf very fortunate," he faid, "in meeting with Mifs Anville at home, and ftill more fo, in finding her difengaged."

2

I only

207

I only courtfied. He then talked of Mrs. Mirvan; afked how long I had been in town, and other fuch general queftions, which, happily, gave me time to recover from my embarrafinent. After which, he faid, "If Mifs Anville will allow me the honour of fitting by her a few minutes (for we were both ftanding) I will venture to tell her the motive which, next to enquiring after her health, has prompted me to wait on her thus early."

We were then both feated, and, after a fhort pause, he faid, "How to apologize for fo great a liberty as I am upon the point of taking, I know not;—shall I, therefore, rely wholly upon your goodness, and not apologize at all?"

I only bowed.

ŀ

ŋ

" I should be extremely forry to appear impertinent,—yet hardly know how to avoid it."

"Impertinent ! O my Lord," cried I, cagerly, "that, I am fure, is impoffible !" "You are very good," anfwered he,

" and encourage me to be ingenuous-"

Again he ftopped: but my expectation was too great for fpeech: at laft, without looking at me, in a low voice and hefitating manner, he faid, "Were those ladies with whom I faw you laft night, ever in your company before?"

208

"No, my Lord," cried I, rifing, and colouring violently, "nor will they ever be again."

He rofe too, and, with an air of the moft condefcending concern, faid, "Pardon, Madam, the abruptnefs of a queftion which I knew not how to introduce as I ought, and for which I have no excufe to offer, but my refpect for Mrs. Mirvan, joined to the fincereft wifnes for your happinefs: yet I fear I have gone too far !"

"I am very fenfible of the honour of your Lordship's attention," faid I, "but

"Permit me to affure you," cried he, finding I hefitated, "that officioufnefs is not my characteriftic, and that I would by no means have rifked your difpleafure, had I not been fully fatisfied you were too generous to be offended, without a real caufe of offence."

"Offended !" cried I, " no, my Lord, I am only grieved, grieved, indeed ! to find myfelf in a fituation fo unfortunate, as to be obliged to make explanations which cannot but mortify and fhock me."

"It is I alone," cried he, with fome eagernefs, "who am fhocked, as it is I who deferve to be mortified; I feek no explanation, for I have no doubt; but, in miftaking me, Mifs Anville injures herfelf: allow me, me, therefore, frankly and openly to tell you the intention of my vifit."

209

I bowed, and we both returned to our feats.

VC"

調

Whi

" I will own myfelf to have been greatly furprifed," continued he, " when I met you yesterday evening, in company with two perfons who I was fenfible merited not the honour of your notice; nor was it eafy for me to conjecture the caufe of your being fo fituated; yet, believe me, my incertitude did not for a moment do you injury; I was fatisfied that their characters must be unknown to you, and I thought with concern of the fhock you would fuftain, when you discovered their unworthiness. I should not, however, upon fo fhort an acquaintance, have usurped the privilege of intimacy, in giving my unafked fentiments upon fo delicate a fubject, had I not known that credulity is the fifter of innocence, and therefore feared you might be deceived. A fomething, which I could not refift, urged me to the freedom I have taken to caution you; but I shall not easily forgive myself, if I have been fo unfortunate as to give you pain."

The pride which his first question had excited, now fubfided into delight and gratitude, and I instantly related to him, as well as I could, the accident which had occasioned cafioned my joining the unhappy women with whom he had met me. He liftened with an attention fo flattering, feemed fo much interested during the recital, and, when I had done, thanked me, in terms fo polite, for what he was pleased to call my condefcension, that I was almost assumed either to look at, or hear him.

Soon after, the maid came to tell me, that Madame Duval defired to have breakfaft made in her own room.

" I fear," cried Lord Orville, inftantly rifing, "that I have intruded upon your time, —yet who, fo fituated, could do otherwife ?" Then, taking my hand, "Will Mifs Anville allow me thus to feal my peace ?" He preffed it to his lips, and took leave.

Generous, noble Lord Orville! how difinterefted his conduct! how delicate his whole behaviour! willing to advife, yet afraid to wound me !—Can I ever, in future, regret the adventure I met with at Marybone, fince it has been productive of a vifit fo flattering? Had my mortifications been ftill more humiliating, my terrors ftill more alarming, fuch a mark of effeem may I not call it fo?—from Lord Orville, would have made me ample amends.

And indeed, my dear Sir, I require fome confolation in my prefent very difagreeable fituation;

211

fituation; for, fince he went, two incidents have happened, that, had not my fpirits been particularly elated, would greatly have difconcerted me,

During breakfaft, Madame Duval, very abruptly, afked if I fhould like to be married? and added, that Mr. Branghton had been proposing a match for me with his fon. Surprifed, and, I muft own, provoked, I affured her that, in thinking of me, Mr. Branghton would very vainly lofe his time.

Branghton would very vainly lofe his time. "Why," cr.el fhe, "I have had grander views for you, myfelf, if once I could get you to Paris, and make you be owned; but, if I can't do that, and you can do no better, why, as you are both my relations, I think to leave my fortune between you, and then, if you marry, you never need want for nothing."

I begged her not to purfue the fubject, as, I affured her, Mr. Branghton was totally difagreeable to me: but the continued her admonitions and reflections, with her ufual difregard of whatever I could anfwer. She charged me, very peremptorily, neither wholly to difcourage, nor yet to accept Mr. Branghton's offer, till the faw what could be done for me: the young man, the added, had often intended to fpeak to me himfelf, but, not well knowing how to introduce the the fubject, he had defired her to pave the way for him.

*

I fcrupled not, warmly and freely to declare my averfion to this propofal; but it was to no effect; fhe concluded, just as fhe had begun, by faying, that I fhould not bave bim, if I could do better.

Nothing, however, fhall perfuade me to liften to any other perfon concerning this odious affair.

My fecond caufe of uneafinefs arifes, very unexpectedly, from M. Du Bois, who, to my infinite furprife, upon Madame Duval's quitting the room after dinner, put into my hand a note, and immediately left the houfe.

This note contains an open declaration of an attachment to me, which, he fays, he fhould never have prefumed to have acknowledged, had he not been informed that Madame Duval deftined my hand to young Branghton,—a match which he cannot endure to think of. He befeeches me, earneftly to pardon his temerity, profeffes the moft inviolable refpect, and commits his fate to time, patience, and pity.

This conduct in M. Du Bois gives me real concern, as I was difpofed to think very well of him. It will not, however, be difficult to difcourage him, and therefore I fhall not acquaint Madame Duval of his letter, letter, as I have reafon to believe it would greatly difpleafe her.

LETTER XXIII.

Evelina in continuation.

June 3.

213

O SIR, how much uneafinefs muft I fuffer, to counterbalance one flort morning of happinefs !

IIG

1

山

顺" 副

61:

3

間

Yefterday, the Branghtons proposed a party to Kensington-gardens, and, as usual, Madame Duval insisted upon my attendance.

We went in a hackney-coach to Piccadilly, and then had a walk through Hyde Park, which, in any other company, would have been delightful. I was much pleafed with Kenfington-gardens, and think them infinitely preferable to those of Vauxhall.

Young Branghton was extremely troublefome; he infifted upon walking by my fide, and talked with me almost by compulsion: however, my referve and coldness prevented his entering upon the hateful subject which Madame Duval had prepared me to apprehend. Once, indeed, when I was, accidentally, a few yards before the rest, he faid faid, " I fuppofe, Mifs, aunt has told you about you know what ?—ha'n't fhe, Mifs ?" —But I turned from him without making any anfwer. Neither Mr. Smith nor Mr. Brown were of the party; and poor M. Du Bois, when he found that I avoided him, looked fo melancholy, that I was really forry for him.

While we were ftrolling round the garden, I perceived, walking with a party of ladies at fome diftance, Lord Orville! I inftantly retreated behind Mifs Branghton, and kept out of fight till we had paffed them: for I dreaded being feen by him again, in a public walk, with a party of which I was afhamed.

Happily I fucceeded in my defign, and faw no more of him; for a fudden and violent fhower of rain made us all haften out of the gardens. We ran till we came to a fmall green-fhop, where we begged fhelter. Here we found ourfelves in company with two footmen, whom the rain had driven into the fhop. Their livery, I thought, I had before feen; and upon looking from the window, I perceived the fame upon a coachman belonging to a carriage, which I immediately recollected to be Lord Orville's.

Fearing to be known, I whifpered Mifs Branghton not to fpeak my name. Had I confidered confidered but a moment, I fhould have been fentible of the inutility of fuch a caution, fince not one of the party call me by any other appellation than that of Coufin, or of Mifs; but I am perpetually involved in fome diffrefs or dilemma from my own heedleffnefs.

215

This requeft excited very ftrongly her curiofity; and fhe attacked me with fuch eagernefs and bluntnefs of enquiry, that I could not avoid telling her the reafon of my making it, and, confequently, that I was known to Lord Orville: an acknowledgment which proved the moft unfortunate in the world; for fhe would not reft till fhe had drawn from me the circumftances attending my firft making the acquaintance. Then, calling to her fifter, fhe faid, "Lord, Polly, only think ! Mifs has danced with a Lord !"

go o per le hou seite ini

ţ

"Well," cried Polly, "that's a thing I fhould never have thought of ! And pray Mifs, what did he fay to you ?"

This queftion was much fooner afked than anfwered; and they both became fo very inquifitive and earness, that they foon drew the attention of Madame Duval and the rest of the party, to whom, in a very short time, they repeated all they had gathered from me.

"Goodnefs, then," cried young Branghton, ton, " if I was Mifs, if I would not make free with his Lordship's coach to take me to town."

"Why ay," faid the father, "there would be fome fenfe in that; that would be making fome use of a Lord's acquaintance, for it would fave us coach-hire."

"Lord, Mifs," cried Polly, " I with you would, for I thould like of all things to ride in a coronet coach !"

"I promife you," faid Madame Duval, "I'm glad you've thought of it, for I don't fee no objection;—fo let's have the coachman called."

"Not for the world," cried I, very much alarmed, " indeed it is utterly impoffible."

"Why fo ?" demanded Mr. Branghton; pray where's the good of your knowing a Lord, if you're never the better for him?"

"Ma foi, child," faid Madame Duval, "you don't know no more of the world than if you was a baby. Pray, Sir, (to one of the footmen,) tell that coachman to draw up, for I wants to fpeak to him."

The man ftared, but did not move. "Pray, pray, Madam," faid I, "pray, Mr. Branghton, have the goodnefs to give up this plan; I know but very little of his Lordfhip, and cannot, upon any account, take fo great a liberty."

"Don't fay nothing about it," faid Madame

北

m.

hen

aint

W

in,

Qaci

maxi ble<sup>1</sup>

htu ing mi

聪

1211

n," mor

pri

:00

IN

dame Duval, " for I fhall have it my own way: fo if you won't call the coachman, Sir, I'll promife you I'll call himfelf."

The footman, very impertinently, laughed and turned upon his heel. Madame Duval, extremely irritated, ran out in the rain, and beckoned the coachman, who inftantly obeyed her fummons. Shocked beyond all expression, I flew after her, and entreated her with the utmost earnestness, to let us return in a hackney-coach :-- but oh !-fhe is impenetrable to perfuafion ! She told the man she wanted him to carry her directly to town, and that fhe would anfwer for him to Lord Orville. The man, with a fneer, thanked her, but faid he should answer for himself; and was driving off, when another footman came up to him, with information that his Lord was gone into Kenfington Palace, and would not want him for an hour or two.

"Why then, friend," faid Mr. Branghton, (for we were followed by all the party) "where will be the great harm of your taking us to town ?"

"Befides," faid the fon, " I'll promife you a pot of beer for my own fhare."

These speeches had no other answer from the coachman than a loud laugh, which was echoed by the infolent footmen. I rejoiced at their resistance, though I was cer-Vol. II. K tain, tain, that if their Lord had witneffed their impertinence, they would have been inftantly difmiffed his fervice.

"Pardi," cried Madame Duval, " if I don't think all the footmen are the moft impudenteft fellows in the kingdom ! But I'll promife you I'll have your mafter told of your airs, fo you'll get no good by 'em."

"Why pray," faid the coachman, rather alarmed, "did my Lord give you leave to use the coach?"

" It's no matter for that," anfwered fhe; " I'm fure if he's a gentleman, he'd let us have it fooner than we fhould be wet to the fkin: but I'll promife you he fhall know how faucy you've been, for this young lady knows him very well."

" Ay, that the does," faid Mifs Polly; and the's danced with him too."

Oh how I repented my foolifh mifmanagement! The men bit their lips, and looked at one another in fome confusion. This was perceived by our party, who, taking advantage of it, protested they would write Lord Orville word of their ill behaviour without delay. This quite startled them, and one of the footmen offered to run to the palace and ask his Lord's permission for our having the carriage.

This proposal really made me tremble; and the Branghtons all hung back upon it; but

EVELINA!

but Madame Duval is never to be diffuaded from a fcheme fhe has once formed. "Do fo," cried fhe, and give this child's compliments to your mafter, and tell him, as we ha'n't no coach here, we fhould be glac to go just as far as Holborn in his."

"No, no, no !" cried I ; " don't go,-I know nothing of his Lordfhip,-I fend no meffage,-I have nothing to fay to him !"

The men, very much perplexed, could with difficulty reftrain themfelves from refuming their impertinent mirth. Midame Duval foolded me very angrily, and then defired them to go directly. "Pray, hen," faid the coachman, "what name is to be given to my Lord?"

"Anville," anfwered Madame Duval,' " tell him Mifs Anville wants the oach; the young lady he danced with once."

I was really in an agony; but the winds could not have been more deaf to me than those to whom I pleaded! and therefore the footman, urged by the repeated threats of Madame Duval, and perhaps recolkcting the name himself, actually went to the palace with this ftrange meffage!

RL.

He returned in a few minutes, and bowing to me with the greatest respect, faid, "My Lord defires his compliments and his carriage will be always at Miss Anville's fervice."

K 2

I was fo much affected by this politenefs, and chagrined at the whole affair, that I could fcarce refrain from tears. Madame Duval and the Mifs Branghtons eagerly jumped into the coach, and defired me to follow. I would rather have fubmitted to the feverest punishment; but all refistance was vain.

During the whole ride, I faid not a word; however, the reft of the party were fo talkative, that my filence was very immaterial. We ftopped at our lodgings; but when Madame Duval and I alighted, the Branghtons afked if they could not be carried on to Snow Hill? The fervants, now all civility, made no objection. Remonstrances from me, would, I too well knew, be fruitlefs; and therefore, with a heavy heart, I retired to my room, and left them to their own direction.

Seldom have I paffed a night in greater, uneafinefs : — fo lately to have cleared myfelf in the good opinion of Lord Orville, fo foon to forfeit it ! — to give him reafon to fuppofe I prefumed to boaft of his acquaintance, — to publifh his having danced with me ! — to take with him a liberty I fhould have blufhed to have taken with the moft intimate of my friends ! — to treat with fuch impertinent freedom one who has honoured me with fuch diffinguifhed refpect ! —indeed,

221

-indeed, Sir, I could have met with no accident that would fo cruelly have tormented me!

If fuch were, then, my feelings, imagine, -for I cannot defcribe, what I fuffered during the fcene I am now going to write.

This morning, while I was alone in the dining-room, young Branghton called. He entered with a most important air, and ftrutting up to me, faid, "Mis, Lord Orville fends his compliments to you."

"Lord Orville !"-repeated I, much amazed.

"Yes, Mils, Lord Orville; for I know his Lordship now, as well as you.—And a very civil gentleman he is, for all he's a Lord."

"For Heaven's fake," cried I, "explain yourfelf."

1

-

"Why you muft know, Mifs, after we left you, we met with a little misfortune; but I don't mind it now, for it's all turned out for the beft: but, juft as we were a going up Snow Hill, plump we comes againft a cart, with fuch a jogg it almost pulled the coach-wheel off; however, that i'n't the worft, for as I went to open the door in a hurry, a thinking the coach would be broke down, as ill-luck would have it, I never minded that the glafs was up, and K 3 fo fo I poked my head fairly through it. Only fee, Mifs, how I've cut my forehead !"

A much worfe accident to himfelf, would not, I believe, at that moment, have given me any concern for him : however, he proceeded with his account, for I was too much confounded to interrupt him.

"Goodnefs, Mifs, we were in fuch a ftew, us, and the fervants, and all, as you can't think; for, befides the glafs being broke, the coachman faid how the coach would n't be fafe to go back to Kenfington. So we did n't know what to do; however, the footmen faid they'd go and tell his Lordship what had happened. So then father grew quite uneafy, like, for fear of his Lordship's taking offence, and prejudicing us in our bufinefs : fo he faid I should go this morning and afk his pardon, 'caufe of having broke the glafs. So then I afked the footman the direction, and they told me he lived in Berkeley-fquare; fo this morning I went,-and I foon found out the houfe."

"You did !" cried I, quite out of breath with apprehenfion.

"Yes, Mifs, and a very fine houfe it is. Did you ever fee it ?"

" No."

"No !-why then, Mifs, I know more of

of his Lordfhip than you do, for all you knew him firft. So, when I came to the door, I was in a peck of troubles, a thinking what I fhould fay to him; however, the fervants had no mind I fhould fee him, for they told me he was bufy, but I might leave my meffage. So I was juft a coming away, when I bethought myfelf to fay I come from you."

" From me !--"

10

一町前間

四個個個個

"Yes, Mifs,—for you know why fhould I have fuch a long walk as that for nothing? So I fays to the porter, fays I, tell his Lordfhip, fays I, one wants to fpeak to him as comes from one Mifs Anville, fays I."

"Good God," cried I, " and by what authority did you take fuch a liberty ?"

"Goodnefs, Mifs, do'nt be in fuch a hurry, for you'll be as glad as me when you hear how well it all turned out. So then they made way for me, and faid his Lordfhip would fee me directly; and there I was led through fuch a heap of fervants, and to many rooms, that my heart quite mifgave me; for I thought, thinks I, he'll be fo proud he'll hardly let me fpeak; but he's no more proud than I am, and he was as civil as if I'd been a lord myfelf. So then I faid, I hoped he would n't take it amifs about the glafs, for it was quite an K 4 accident; accident; but he bid me not mention it, for it did n't fignify. And then he faid he hoped you got fafe home, and was n't frightened; and fo I faid yes, and I gave your duty to him."

" O, I did it of my own head, just to make him think I came from you. But I fhould have told you before how the footman faid he was going out of town tomorrow evening, and that his fifter was foon to be married, and that he was a ordering a heap of things for that; fo it come into my head, as he was fo affable, that I'd afk him for his cuftom. So I fays, fays I, my Lord, fays I, if your Lordship i'n't engaged particularly, my father is a filverfmith, and he'd be very proud to ferve you, fays I; and Mifs Anville, as danced with you, is his coufin, and fhe's my coufin too, and fhe'd be very much obligated to you, l'm fure."

"You'll drive me wild," (cried I, ftarting from my feat) "you have done me an irreparable injury; — but I will hear no more !" — and then I ran into my own room.

I was half frantic, I really raved; the good opinion of Lord Orville feemed now irretrievably

225

irretrievably loft : a faint hope, which in the morning I had vainly encouraged, that I might fee him again, and explain the tranfaction, wholly vanished, now I found he was so foon to leave town : and I could not but conclude that, for the rest of my life, he would regard me as an object of utter contempt.

The very idea was a dagger to my heart ! —I could not fupport it, and—but I blufh to proceed—I fear your difapprobation, yet I fhould not be confcious of having merited it, but that the repugnance I feel to relate to you what I have done, makes me fufpect I muft have erred. Will you forgive me, if I own that I firft wrote an account of this tranfaction to Mifs Mirvan ?—and that I even thought of concealing it from you?—Short-lived, however, was the ungrateful idea, and fooner will I rifk the juffice of your difpleafure, than unworthily betray your generous confidence.

You are now probably prepared for what follows—which is a letter,—a hafty letter, that, in the height of my agitation, I wrote to Lord Orville.

" My Lord,

100 10

ÍM.

66

R

「二部

語

"I am fo infinitely afhamed of the application made yesterday for your Lord-K 5 ship's fhip's carriage in my name, and fo greatly fhocked at hearing how much it was injured, that I cannot forbear writing a few lines, to clear myfelf from the imputation of an impertinence which I blufh to be fufpected of, and to acquaint you, that the requeft for your carriage was made againft my confent, and the vifit with which you were importuned this morning, without my knowledge.

" I am inexpreffibly concerned at having been the inftrument, however innocently, of fo much trouble to your Lordfhip; but I beg you to believe, that reading these lines is the only part of it which I have given voluntarily.

" I am, my Lord,

"Your Lordship's most humble fervant, "Evelina Anville."

I applied to the maid of the houfe to get this note conveyed to Berkeley-fquare; but fcarce had I parted with it, before I regretted having written at all, and I was flying down ftairs to recover it, when the voice of Sir Clement Willoughby ftopped me. As Madame Duval had ordered we fhould be denied to him, I was obliged to return up ftairs; and after he was gone, my application was too late, as the maid had given it to a porter.

My

My time did not pafs very ferenly while he was gone; however, he brought me no anfwer, but that Lord Orville was not at home. Whether or not he will take the trouble to fend any;—or whether he will condefcend to call;—or whether the affair will reft as it is, I know not;—but, in being ignorant, am most cruelly anxious.

EN

t

100 in the second se

雨山山

三三三

LETTER XXIV.

Evelina in continuation.

July 4.

YOU may now, my dear Sir, fend Mrs Clinton for your Evelina with as much fpeed as fhe can conveniently make the journey, for no further oppofition will be made to her leaving this town : happy had it perhaps been for her had fhe never entered it !

This morning Madame Duval defired me to go to Snow-hill, with an invitation to the Branghtons and Mr. Smith, to fpend the evening with her: and fhe defired M. Du Bois, who breakfasted with us, to accompany me. I was very unwilling to obey her, as I neither wished to walk with M. Du Bois, nor yet to meet young Branghton. And, indeed, another, a yet more powerful K 6 reason reafon, added to my reluctance,—for I thought it poffible that Lord Orville might fend fome anfwer, or perhaps might call, during my abfence; however, I did not dare difpute her commands.

Poor M. Du Bois fpoke not a word during our walk, which was, I believe, equally unpleafant to us both. We found all the family affembled in the fhop. Mr. Smith, the moment he perceived me, addreffed himfelf to Mifs Branghton, whom he entertained with all the gallantry in his power. I rejoice to find that my conduct at the Hampftead ball has had fo good an effect. But young Branghton was extremely troublefome, he repeatedly laughed in my face, and looked fo impertinently fignificant, that I was obliged to give up my referve to M. Du Bois, and enter into converfation with him, merely to avoid fuch boldnefs.

"Mifs," faid Mr. Branghton, "I'm forry to hear from my fon that you was n't pleafed with what we did about that Lord Orville; but I fhould like to know what it was you found fault with, for we did all for the beft."

"Goodnefs! cried the fon, "why if you'd feen Mifs, you'd have been furprifed —fhe went out of the room quite in a huff, like."

"It is too late, now," faid I, " to reason upon upon this fubject; but, for the future, I must take the liberty to request, that my name may never be made use of without my knowledge. May I tell Madame Duval that you will do her the favour to accept her invitation?"

"As to me, Ma'am," faid Mr. Smith, "I am much obliged to the old lady, but I've no mind to be taken in by her again; you'll excufe me, Ma'am."

All the reft promifed to come, and I then took leave : but as I left the fhop, I heard Mr. Branghton fay, "Take courage, Tom, fhe's only coy." And, before I had walked ten yards, the youth followed.

I was fo much offended that I would not look at him, but began to converfe with M. Du Bois, who was now more lively than I had ever before feen him; for, most unfortunately, he misinterpreted the reason of my attention to him.

The first intelligence I received when I came home, was that two gentlemen had called, and left cards. I eagerly enquired for them, and read the names of Lord Orville and Sir Clement Willoughby. I by no means regretted that I missing feet the latter, but perhaps I may all my life regret that I mission to may all my life regret that I mission to may and I may fee him no more !

"My goodnefs!" cried young Branghton, rudely looking over me, "only think of that Lord's coming all this way ! It's my belief he'd got fome order ready for father, and fo he'd a mind to call and afk you if I'd told him the truth."

"Pray, Betty," cried I, " how long has he been gone ?"

"Not two minutes, Ma'am."

"Why then I'll lay you any wager," faid young Branghton, "he faw you and I a-walking up Holborn Hill!"

"God forbid !" cried I, impatiently; and too much chagrined to bear with any more of his remarks, I ran up ftairs : but I heard him fay to M. Du Bois, "Mifs is fo uppifb this morning, that I think I had better not fpeak to her again."

I wifh M. Du Bois had taken the fame refolution; but he chofe to follow me into the dining-room, which we found empty.

"Vous ne l'aimez donc pas, ce garçon, Mademoiselle !" cried he.

"Me !" cried I, "no, I deteft him !" for I was quite fick at heart.

"Ab, tu me rends la vie!" cried he, and flinging himfelf at my feet, he had just caught my hand, as the door was opened by Madame Duval.

Haftily, and with marks of guilty confusion in his face, he arose; but the rage of of that lady quite amazed me! advancing to the retreating M. Du Bois, fhe began, in French, an attack which her extreme wrath and wonderful volubility almost rendered unintelligible; yet I understood but too much, fince her reproaches convinced me she had herself proposed being the object of his affection.

.

.9

ij

de.

He defended himfelf in a weak and evafive manner, and upon her commanding him from her fight, very readily withdrew : and then, with yet greater violence, fhe upbraided me with having feduced his heart, called me an ungrateful, defigning girl, and protefted fhe would neither take me to Paris, nor any more intereft herfelf in my affairs, unlefs I would inftantly agree to marry young Branghton.

Frightened as I had been at her vehemence, this propofal reftored all my courage; and I frankly told her that in this point I never could obey her. More irritated than ever, the ordered me to quit the room.

Such is the prefent fituation of affairs. I fhall excufe myfelf from feeing the Branghtons this afternoon : indeed, I never with to fee them again. I am forry, however innocently, that I have difpleafed Madame Duval, yet I fhall be very glad to quit this town, for I believe it does not, now, contain tain one perfon I ever wifh to again meet. Had I but feen Lord Orville, I fhould regret nothing: I could then have more fully explained what I fo haftily wrote; yet it will always be a pleafure to me to recollect that he called, fince I flatter myfelf it was in confequence of his being fatisfied with my letter.

Adieu, my dear Sir; the time now approaches when I hope once more to receive your bleffing, and to owe all my joy, all my happinefs to your kindnefs.

LETTER XXV.

Mr. Villars to Evelina.

Berry Hill, July 7.

W ELCOME, thrice welcome, my darling Evelina, to the arms of the trueft, the fondeft of your friends ! Mrs. Clinton, who fhall haften to you with thefe lines, will conduct you directly hither, for I can confent no longer to be parted from the child of my bofom !—the comfort of my age !—the fweet folace of all my infirmities ! Your worthy friends at Howard Grove muft pardon me that I rob them of the vifit you propofed to make them before your your return to Berry Hill, for I find my fortitude unequal to a longer feparation.

ÈVELINA.

I have much to fay to you, many comments to make upon your late letters, fome parts of which give me no little uneafinefs; but I will referve my remarks for our future converfations. Haften, then, to the fpot of thy nativity, the abode of thy youth, where never yet care or forrow had power to annoy thee; —O that they might ever be banifhed this peaceful dwelling!

Adieu, my dearest Evelina! I pray but that thy fatisfaction at our approaching meeting, may bear any comparison with mine!

ARTHUR VILLARS.

233

LETTER XXVI.

Evelina to Miss Mirvan.

Berry Hill, July 14.

MY fweet Maria will be much furprifed, and, I am willing to flatter myfelf, concerned, when, inftead of her friend, fhe receives this letter ;—this cold, this inanimate letter, which will but ill exprefs the feelings of the heart which indites it.

When I wrote to you last Friday, I was in hourly expectation of feeing Mrs. Clinton, with whom I intended to have fet out for Howard Grove; Mrs. Clinton came, but my plan was neceffarily altered, for fhe brought me a letter,—the fweeteft that ever was penned, from the beft and kindeft friend that ever orphan was bleft with, requiring my immediate attendance at Berry Hill.

I obeyed, -and pardon me if I own I obeyed without reluctance; after fo long a feparation, fhould I not elfe have been the most ungrateful of mortals ?- And yet,oh Maria? though I wished to leave London, the gratification of my wifh afforded me no happiness ! and though I felt an impatience inexpreffible to return hither, no words, no language can explain the heavinefs of heart with which I made the journey. I believe you would hardly have known me;-indeed, I hardly know myfelf. Perhaps had I first feen you, in your kind and fympathizing bofom I might have ventered to have reposed every fecret of my foul; and then-but let me purfue my journal.

Mrs. Clinton delivered Madame Duval a letter from Mr. Villars, which requefted her leave for my return, and, indeed, it was very readily accorded : yet, when fhe found, by my willingnefs to quit town, that M. Du Bois was really indifferent to me, fhe fhe fomewhat foftened in my favour, and declared that, but for punifhing his folly in thinking of fuch a child, fhe would not have confented to my being again buried in the country.

235

All the Branghtons called to take leave of me: but I will not write a word more about them; indeed I cannot with any patience think of that family, to whofe forwardnefs and impertinence is owing all the uneafinefs I at this moment fuffer !

So great was the deprefilon of my fpirits upon the road, that it was with difficulty I could perfuade the worthy Mrs. Clinton I was not ill: but alas, the fituation of my mind was fuch as would have rendered any mere bodily pain, by comparison, even enviable!

with a deep figh, though his face beamed with delight, "My God, I thank thee !"

I fprung forward, and with a pleafure that bordered upon agony, I embraced his knees, I kiffed his hands, I wept over them, but could not fpeak: while he, now raifing his eyes in thankfulnefs towards heaven, now bowing down his reverend head, and folding me in his arms, could fcarce articulate the bleffings with which his kind and benevolent heart overflowed.

O Mifs Mirvan, to be fo beloved by the beft of men,—fhould I not be happy ?— Should I have one wifh fave that of meriting his goodnefs ?—Yet think me not ungrateful; indeed I am not, although the internal fadnefs of my mind unfits me, at prefent, for enjoying as I ought the bounties of Providence.

I cannot journalise; cannot arrange my ideas into order.

How little has fituation to do with happinefs! I had flattered myfelf that, when reftored to Berry Hill, I fhould be reftored to tranquillity : far otherwife have I found it, for never yet had tranquillity and Evelina fo little intercourfe.

I blußh for what I have written. Can you, Maria, forgive my gravity? but I reftrain it fo much and fo painfully in the prefence of Mr. Villars, that I know not how how to deny myfelf the confolation of indulging it to you.

Adieu, my dear Miss Mirvan.

Yet one thing I muft add; do not let the ferioufnels of this letter deceive you; do not impute to a wrong caule the melancholy I confels, by fuppoling that the heart of your friend mourns a too great fulceptibility; no, indeed! believe me it never was, never can be, more affuredly her own than at this moment. So witnels in all truth,

Your affectionate

EVELINA.

237

You will make my excufes to the honoured Lady Howard, and to your dear mother.

LETTER XXVII.

Evelina in continuation.

Berry Hill, July 23.

Y OU accufe me of myftery, and charge me with referve: I cannot doubt but I muft have merited the accufation;—yet, to clear myfelf,—you know not how painful will be the tafk. But I cannot refift your kind entreaties,—indeed, I do not wifh to refift them, for your friendfhip and 9 affection affection wil foothe my chagrin. Had it arifen from any other caufe, not a moment would I have deferred the communication you afk; —but, as it is, I would, were it poffible, not only conceal it from all the world, but endeavour to difbelieve it myfelf. Yet, fince I muft tell you, why triffe with your inpatience?

I know not how to come to the point; twenty times have I attempted it in vain; but I will free myfelf to proceed.

Oh, Mifi Mirvan, could you ever have believed, that one who feemed formed as a pattern for is fellow-creatures, as a model of perfection,—one whofe elegance furpaffed all defription, — whofe fweetnefs of manners digraced all comparifon,—Oh, Mifs Mirvan, could you ever have believed that Lord Orville would have treated me with indignity?

Never, never again will I truft to appearances, — never confide in my own weak judgment,—never believe that perfon to be good, who eems to be amiable ! What cruel maxims are we taught by a knowledge of the world!—But while my own reflections abforb me, I forget you are ftill in fufpence.

I had just finished the last letter which I wrote to you from London, when the maid of the houe brought me a note. It was given given to her, fhe faid, by a footman, who told her he would call the next day for an answer.

This note,-but let it speak for itself.

" To Miss Anville.

" With transport, most charming of thy fex, did I read the letter with which you yesterday morning favoured me. I am forry the affair of the carriage should have given you any concern, but I am highly flattered by the anxiety you express fo kindly. Believe me, my lovely girl, I am truly fenfible of the honour of your good opinion, and feel myfelf deeply penetrated with love and gratitude. The correspondence you have to fweetly commenced I shall be proud of continuing, and I hope the trong fenfe I have of the favour you do me, will prevent your withdrawing it. Affure yourfelf that I defire nothing more ardently, than to pour forth my thanks at your feet, and to offer those vows which are fo justly the tribute of your charms and accomplifhments. In your next, I entreat you to acquaint me how long you fhall remain in town. The fervant whom I shall commiffion to call for an anfwer, has orders to ride post with it to me. My impatience for his arrival will be very great, though inferior to

tt. 12

to that with which I burn, to tell you, in perfon, how much I am, my fweet girl, Your grateful admirer,

ORVILLE."

What a letter ! how has my proud heart fwelled every line I have copied ! What I wrote to him you know; tell me then, my dear friend, do you think it merited fuch an anfwer ?—and that I have defervedly incurred the liberty he has taken ? I meant nothing but a fimple apology, which I thought as much due to my own character, as to his; yet, by the conftruction he feems to have put upon it, fhould you not have imagined it contained the avowal of fentiments which might, indeed, have provoked his contempt ?

The moment the letter was delivered to me, I retired to my own room to read it, and fo eager was my firft perufal, that,—I am afhamed to own it gave me no fenfation but of delight. Unfulpicious of any impropriety from Lord Orville, I perceived not immediately the impertinence it implied,—I only marked the exprefiions of his own regard; and I was fo much furprifed, that I was unable, for fome time, to compofe myfelf, or read it again,—I could only walk up and down the room, repeating to myfelf, "Good God, is it poffible?

EVELENA.

241 poffible ? — am I, then, loved by Lord Orville ?"

in.

U

13

R

-

-

But this dream was foon over, and I awoke to far different feelings; upon a fecond reading, I thought every word changed,—it did not feem the fame letter, —I could not find one fentence that I could look at without blufhing: my aftonifhment was extreme, and it was fucceeded by the utmost_indignation.

If, as I am very ready to acknowledge, I erred in writing to Lord Orville, was it for bim to punish the error? If he was offended, could he not have been filent? If he thought my letter ill-judged, fhould he not have pitied my ignorance? have confidered my youth, and allowed for my inexperience,

Oh Maria, how have I been deceived in this man J. Words have no power to tell the high opinion I had of him; to that was owing the unfortunate folicitude which prompted my writing,—a folicitude I must for ever repent!

Yet perhaps I have rather reafon to rejoice than to gricve, fince this affair has fhewn me his real difpolition, and removed that partiality, which, covering his every imperfection, left only his virtues and good qualities exposed to view. Had the deception continued much longer, had my mind Vol. II. L received received any additional prejudice in his favour, who knows whither my miltaken ideas might have led me? Indeed I fear I was in greater danger than I apprehended, or can now think of without trembling, for oh, if this weak heart of mine had been penetrated with too deep an imprefiion of his merit, my peace and happines had been loft for ever!

I would fain encourage more chearful thoughts, fain drive from my mind the melancholy that has taken poffeffion of it, but I cannot fucceed; for, added to the humiliating feelings which fo powerfully opprefs me, I have yet another caufe of concern;—alas, my dear Maria, I have broken the tranquillity of the beft of men!

I have never had the courage to fhew him this cruel letter : I could not bear fo greatly to depreciate in his opinion, one whom I had, with infinite anxiety, raifed in it myfelf. Indeed, my firft determination was to confine my chagrin totally to my own bofom; but your friendly enquiries have drawn it from me; and now I wifh I had made no concealment from the beginning, fince I know not how to account for a gravity which not all my endeavours can entirely hide or reprefs.

My greateft apprehension is, left he should imagine that my refidence in London has given me a diftafte to the country. Every body I fee takes notice of my being altered, and looking pale and ill. I fhould be very indifferent to all fuch obfervations, did I not perceive that they draw upon me the eyes of Mr. Villars, which gliften with affectionate concern.

This morning, in fpeaking of my London expedition, he mentioned Lord Orville. I felt fo much difturbed, that I would inftantly have changed the fubject; but he would not allow me, and, very unexpectedly, he began his panegyric, extolling, in ftrong terms, his manly and honourable behaviour in regard to the Marybone adventure. My cheeks glowed with indignation every word he fpoke;—fo lately as I had myfelf fancied him the noblett of his fex, now that I was fo well convinced of my miftake, I could not bear to hear his undeferved praifes uttered by one fo really good, fo unfufpecting, fo pure of heart !

What he thought of my filence and uneafinefs I fear to know, but I hope he will mention the fubject no more. I will not, however, with ungrateful indolence, give way to a fadnefs which I find infectious to him who merits the most chearful exertion of my fpirits. I am thankful that he has forborne to probe my wound, and I will endeavour to heal it by the confcioufnefs L 2 that that I have not deferved the indignity I have received. Yet I cannot but lament to find myfelf in a world fo deceitful, where we muft fulpect what we fee, diftruft what we hear, and doubt even what we feel !

LETTER XXVIII.

Evelina in continuation.

Berry Hill, July 29.

Must own myself fomewhat diffressed how to answer your raillery : yet believe me, my dear Maria, your suggestions are those of fancy, not of trutb. I am unconfcious of the weakness you suffect; yet, to dispel your doubts, I will animate myself more than ever to conquer my chagrin, and to recover my spirits.

You wonder, you fay, fince my beart takes no part in this affair, why it fhould make me fo unhappy? And can you, acquainted as you are with the high opinion I entertained of Lord Orville, can you wonder that fo great a difappointment in his character fhould affect me? indeed, had fo ftrange a letter been fent to me from any body, it could not have failed fhocking me; how much more fenfibly, then, muft I feel fuch fuch an affront, when received from the man in the world I had imagined leaft capable of giving it?

You are glad I made no reply; affure yourfelf, my dear friend, had this letter been the most respectful that could be written, the clandestine air given to it, by his propofal of fending his fervant for my anfwer, inftead of having it directed to his house, would effectually have prevented my writing. Indeed, I have an aversion the most fincere to all mysteries, all private actions; however foolifhly and blameably, in regard to this letter, I have deviated from the open path which, from my earlieft infancy, I was taught to tread.

He talks of my having commenced a correspondence with him; and could Lord Orville indeed believe I had fuch a defign ? believe me fo forward, fo bold, fo ftrangely ridiculous ? I know not if his man called or not, but I rejoice that I quitted London before he came, and without leaving any meffage for him. What, indeed, could I have faid? it would have been a condefcenfion very unmerited to have taken any, the least notice of fuch a letter.

四小小

Never shall I ceafe to wonder how he? could write it. Oh, Maria, what, what could induce him fo caufelefsly to wound and affront one who would fooner have died L 3

than

than wilfully offended bim?—How mortifying a freedom of ftyle! how cruel an implication conveyed by his thanks, and expreffions of gratitude! Is it not aftonifhing, that any man can appear fo modeft, who is fo vain ?

Every hour I regret the fecrecy I have obferved with my beloved Mr. Villars; I know not what bewitched me, but I felt, at firft, a repugnance to publishing this affair that I could not furmount,—and now, I am assumed of confessing that I have any thing to confess! Yet I deferve to be punished for the false delicacy which occasioned my filence; fince, if Lord Orville himfelf was contented to forfeit his character, was it for me, almost at the expence of my own, to support it?

Yet I believe I fhould be very eafy, now the firft fhock is over, and now that I fee the whole affair, with the refertment it merits, did not all my good friends in this neighbourhood, who think me extremely altered, teaze me about my gravity, and torment Mr. Villars with observations upon my dejection, and falling away. The subject is no fooner flarted, than a deep gloom overfpreads his venerable countenance, and he looks at me with a tenderness fo melancholy, that I know not how to endure the confcious for exciting it.

Mrs.

Mrs. Selwyn, a lady of large fortune, who lives about three miles from Berry Hill, and who has always honoured me with very diftinguishing marks of regard, is going, in a fhort time, to Briftol, and has proposed to Mr. Villars to take me with her, for the recovery of my health. He feemed very much diffreffed whether to confent or refuse; but I, without any hefitation, warmly opposed the scheme, protesting my health could no where be better than in this pure air. He had the goodnefs to thank me for this readinefs to ftay with him: but he is all goodnefs! Oh that it were in my power to be, indeed, what in the kindness of his heart he has called me, the comfort of his age, and folace of his infirmities!

7.

歌

OV,

DOT

I

Never do I with to be again feparated from him. If here I am grave, elfewhere I fhould be unhappy. In his prefence, with a very little exertion, all the chearfulnefs of my dilpolition feems ready to return; the benevolence of his countenance reanimates, the harmony of his temper compose, the purity of his character edifies me ! I owe to him every thing; and, far from finding my debt of gratitude a weight, the first pride, first pleafure of my life is the recollection of the obligations conferred upon me by a goodnefs fo unequalled.

L 4

Once

Once, indeed, I thought there exifted another,—who, when time bad wintered o'er bis locks, would have fhone forth among his fellow-creatures, with the fame brightnefs of worth which dignifies my honoured Mr. Villars; a brightnefs, how fuperior in value to that which refults from mere quicknefs of parts, wit, or imagination! a brightnefs, which, not contented with merely diffufing fimiles, and gaining admiration from the fallies of the fpirits, reflects a real and a glorious luftre upon all mankind! Oh how great was my error! how ill did I judge! how cruelly have I been deceived!

I will not go to Briftol, though Mrs. Selwyn is very urgent with me;—but I defire not to fee any more of the world; the few months I have already paffed in it, have fufficed to give me a dilguft even to its name.

I hope, too, I fhall fee Lord Orville no more; accuftomed, from my firft knowledge of him, to regard him as a being fuperior to bis race, his prefence, perhaps, might banifh my refentment, and I might forget his ill conduct,—for oh, Maria !— I fhould not know how to fee Lord Orville —and to think of difpleafure !

As a fifter I loved him,—I could have entrufted him with every thought of my heart, had he deigned to wifh my confidence;

dence; fo steady did I think his honour, fo feminine his delicacy, and fo amiable his nature! I have a thousand times imagined that the whole ftudy of his life, and whole purport of his reflections, tended folely to the good and happiness of others :- but I will talk,-write,-think of him no more! Adieu, my dear friend !

LETTER XXIX.

Evelina in continuation.

Berry Hill, August 10.

YOU complain of my filence, my dear Mifs Mirvan,—but what have I to write ? Narrative does not offer, nor does a lively imagination fupply the deficiency. Lhave, however, at prefent, fufficient matter for a letter, in relating a conversation I had yesterday with Mr. Villars.

eni

師

al

Our breakfaft had been the most chearful we have had fince my return hither; and, when it was over, he did not, as ufual, retire to his fludy, but continued to converse with me while I worked. We might, probably, have paffed all the morning thus fociably, but for the entrance of a farmer, 1 5 who

249

250

who came to folicit advice concerning fome domeftic affairs. They withdrew together into the fludy.

The moment I was alone, my fpirits failed me; the exertion with which I had fupported them, had fatigued my mind: I flung away my work, and, leaning my arms on the table, gave way to a train of difagreeable reflections, which, burfting from the reftraint that had fmothered them, filled me with unufual fadnefs.

This was my fituation, when, looking towards the door, which was open, I perceived Mr. Villars, who was earneftly regarding me. "Is Farmer Smith gone, Sir?" cried I, haftily rifing, and fnatching up my work.

"Don't let me difturb you," faid he, gravely; "I will go again to my ftudy."

"Will you, Sir ?- I was in hopes you were coming to fit here."

"In hopes!-and why, Evelina, fhould you hope it ?"

This queftion was fo unexpected, that I knew not how to anfwer it; but, as I faw he was moving away, I followed, and begged him to return. "No, my dear, no," iaid he, with a forced fmile, "I only interrupt your meditations."

Again I knew not what to fay; and while I hefitated, he retired. My heart was with him, him, but I had not the courage to follow. The idea of an explanation, brought on in fo ferious a manner, frightened me. I recollected the inference you had drawn from my uneafinefs, and I feared that he might make a fimilar interpretation.

251

P P String

5 10

in the series and

5

Solitary and thoughtful, I paffed the reft of the morning in my own room. At dinner I again attempted to be chearful; but Mr. Villars himfelf was grave, and I had not sufficient spirits to support a conversation merely by my own efforts. As foon as dinner was over, he took a book, and I walked to the window. I believe I remained near an hour in this fituation. All my thoughts were directed to confidering how I might difpel the doubts which I apprehended Mr. Villars had formed, without acknowledging a circumstance which I had fuffered fo much pain merely to conceal. But, while I was thus planning for the future, I forgot the prefent; and fo intent was I upon the fubject which occupied me, that the strange appearance of my unufual inactivity and extreme thoughtfulnefs, never occurred to me. But when, at laft, I recollected myfelf, and turned round, I faw that Mr. Villars, who had parted with his book, was wholly engroffed in attending to me. I started from my reverie, and, L 6. hardly hardy knowing what I faid, afked if he had been reading ?

H: paufed a moment, and then replied, "Yes, my child ;—a book that both afflicts and perplexes me !"

He means me, thought I; and therefore I made no answer.

"What if we read it together ?" continued he, " will you affift me to clear its obfcirity ?"

I knew not what to fay, but I fighed, invountarily, from the bottom of my heart. He tofe, and, approaching me, faid, with emotion, "My child, I can no longer be a filent witnefs of thy forrow,—is not thy forrow my forrow?—and ought I to be a ftranger to the caufe, when I to deeply fympathfe in the effect?"

"Caufe, Sir !" cried I, greatly alarmed, "what caufe ?—I don't know,—I can't tell—I—"

"Fear not," faid he, kindly, " to unbofon thyfelf to me, my deareft Evelina; oper to me thy whole heart,—it can have no fælings for which I will not make allowance. Tell me, therefore, what it is that thus afflicts us both, and who knows but I may fuggeft fome means of relief?"

"You are too, too good," cried I, greatly enbarraffed; " but indeed I know not what you mean."

" I fee,"

253

12

"I fee," faid he, "it is painful to you to fpeak : fuppofe then, I endeavour to fave you by gueffing?"

"Impoffible! impoffible!" cried I, eagerly, "no one living could ever guefs; ever fuppofe—" I ftopped abruptly; for I then recollected I was acknowledging fomething was to be gueffed : however, he noticed not my miftake.

當

12

hei

1

"At leaft let me try," anfwered he, mildly; "perhaps I may be a better diviner than you imagine: if I guefs every thing that is probable, furely I muft approach near the real reafon. Be honeft, then, my love, and fpeak without referve,—does not the country, after fo much gaiety, fo much variety, does it not appear infipid and tirefome?"

"No, indeed ! I love it more than ever, and more than ever do I wifh I had never, never quitted it !"

"Oh my child ! that I had not permitted the journey ! My judgment always opposed it, but my resolution was not proof against perfuasion."

"I blush, indeed," cried I, "to recollect my earnestness;—but I have been my own punisher!"

"It is too late, now," anfwered he, "to reflect upon this fubject; let us endeavour to avoid repentance for the time to come, and

and we fhall not have erred without reaping, fome inftruction." Then feating himfelf,, and making me fit by him, he continued : "I muft now guefs again; perhaps you regret the lofs of those friends you knew in town,—perhaps you mis their fociety, and fear you may fee them no more ?—perhaps Lord Orville——"

I could not keep my feat, but rifing haftily, faid, "Dear Sir, alk me nothing more! —for I have nothing to own,—nothing to fay;—my gravity has been merely accidental, and I can give no reason for it at all. Shall I fetch you another book?—or will you have this again ?"

For fome minutes he was totally filent, and I pretended to employ myfelf in looking for a book : at laft, with a deep figh, "I fee," faid he, "I fee but too plainly, that though Evelina is returned,—I have loft my child !"

"No, Sir, no," cried I, inexpreffibly fhocked, "fhe is more yours than ever! Without you, the world would be a defart to her, and life a burthen; forgive her, then, and, if you can, condefcend to be, once more, the confident of all her thoughts."

"How highly I value, how greatly I wilh for her confidence," returned he, "fhe cannot but know,—yet to extort, to tear it from her,—my justice, my affection, both both revolt at the idea. I am forry that I was fo earneft with you;—leave me, my dear, leave me and compofe yourfelf;—we will meet again at tea."

255

"Do you then refuse to hear me?"

1

28

4

p.

14

Ka.

4

W

" No, but I abhor to compel you. I .have long feen that your mind has been ill at eafe, and mine has largely partaken of your concern: I forbore to queftion you, for I hoped that time, and absence from whatever excited your uneafinefs, might best operate in filence : but alas ; your affliction feems only to augment, -your health declines,-your look alters,-Oh Evelina, my aged heart bleeds to fee the change !---bleeds to behold the darling it had cherifhed, the prop it had reared for its fupport, when bowed down by years and infirmities, finking itfelf under the preffure of internal grief !- ftruggling to hide, what it should feek to participate !- But go, my dear, go, to your own room,-we both want compofure, and we will talk of this matter fome other time."

"Oh Sir," cried I, penetrated to the foul, "bid me not leave you !- think me not fo loft to feeling, to gratitude-"

"Not a word of that," interrupted he; "it pains me you fhould think upon that fubject; pains me you fhould ever remember that you have not a natural, an hereditary.

tary right to every thing within my power, I meant not to affect you thus,—I hoped to have foothed you !—but my anxiety betrayed me to an urgency that has diffreffed you. Comfort yourfelf, my love, and doubt not but that time will ftand your friend, and all will end well."

I burft into tears : with difficulty had I fo long reftrained them ; for my heart, while it glowed with tendernefs and gratitude, was opprefied with a fenfe of its own unworthinefs. "You are all, all goodnefs!" cried I, in a voice fcarce audible, "little as I deferve,—unable as I am to repay, fuch kindnefs,—yet my whole foul feels, thanks you for it !"

"My deareft child," cried he, "I cannot bear to fee thy tears; for my fake dry them, fuch a fight is too much for me: think of that, Evelina and take comfort, I charge thee !"

"Say then," cried I, kneeling at his feet, "fay then that you forgive me! that you pardon my referve,—that you will again fuffer me to tell you my moft fecret thoughts, and rely upon my promife never more to forfeit your confidence!—my father! my protector !—my ever-honoured ever-loved—my beft and only friend !—fay you forgive your Evelina, and fhe will ftudy better to deferve your goodnefs !"

He

257

He raifed, he embraced me; he called me his fole joy, his only earthly hope, and the child of his bofom! He folded me to his heart, and, while I wept from the fullnels of mine, with words of fweeteft kindnefs and confolation, he foothed and tranquilifed me.

Dear to my remembrance will ever be that moment, when, banifhing the referve I had fo foolifhly planned and fo painfully fupported, I was reftored to the confidence of the beft of men !

When, at length, we were again quietly and compofedly feated by each other, and Mr. Villars waited for the explanation I had begged him to hear, I found myfelf extremely embarraffed how to introduce the fubject which muft lead to it. He faw my diftrefs, and, with a kind of benevolent pleafantry, afked me if I would let him guefs any more ? I affented in filence.

"Shall I, then, go back to where I left off!"

"If—if you pleafe;—I believe fo,—" faid I, ftammering.

"Well then, my love, I think I was fpeaking of the regret it was natural you fhould feel upon quitting those from whom you had received civility and kindness, with to little certainty of ever feeing them again, or being able to return their good offices? These Thefe are circumftances that afford but melancholy reflections to young minds; and the affectionate difpolition of my Evelina, open to all focial feelings, mult be hurt more than ufual by fuch confiderations.— You are filent, my dear ?—Shall I name thofe whom I think moft worthy the regret I fpeak of ? We fhall then fee if our opinions coincide."

Still I faid nothing, and he continued.

"I knew what you would fay," cried I, haftily, "and I have long feared where your fufpicions would fall; but indeed, Sir, you are miftaken: I hate Lord Orville,—he is the laft man in the world in whofe favour I fhould be prejudiced."

I ftopped'; for Mr. Villars looked at me with fuch infinite furprife, that my own warmth made me blufh. "You bate Lord Orville !" repeated he.

I could make no answer, but took from my pocket book the letter, and giving it to him, "See, Sir," faid I, "how differently the fame man can talk and write!"

He read it three times before he fpoke; and then faid, "I am fo much aftonished, that I know know not what I read. When had you this letter ?"

I told him. Again he read it; and, after confidering its contents fome time, faid, "I can form but one conjecture concerning this most extraordinary performance: he must certainly have been intoxicated when he wrote it."

"Lord Orville intoxicated !" repeated I; "once I thought him a ftranger to all intemperance,—but it is very poffible, for I can believe any thing now."

" That a man who had behaved with fo frict a regard to delicacy," continued Mr. Villars, " and who, as far as occasion had allowed, manifested fentiments the most honourable, fhould thus infolently, thus wantonly infult a modeft young woman, in his perfect fenfes, I cannot think possible. But, my dear, you should have inclosed this letter in an empty cover, and have returned it to him again : fuch a refentment would at once have become your character, and have given him an opportunity, in fome measure, of clearing his own. He could not well have read this letter the next morning, without being fenfible of the impropriety of having written it."

Oh Maria! why had not I this hought? I might then have received fome apology; the mortification would then have been bis, not not mine. It is true, he could not have reinftated himfelf fo highly in my opinion as I had once ignorantly placed him, fince the conviction of fuch intemperance would have levelled him with the reft of his imperfect race; yet, my humbled pride might have been confoled by his acknowledgments.

But why fhould I allow myfelf to be humbled by a man who can fuffer his reafon to be thus abjectly debafed, when I am exalted by one who knows no vice, and fcarcely a failing,-but by hearfay? To think of his kindnefs, and reflect upon his praifes, might animate and comfort me even in the midft of affliction. "Your indignation," faid he, " is the refult of virtue; you fancied Lord Orville was without fault-he had the appearance of infinite worthinefs, and your fuppofed his character accorded with his appearance : guilelefs yourfelf, how could you prepare against the duplicity of another? Your difappointment has but been proportioned to your expectations, and your have chiefly owed its feverity to the innocence which hid its approach."

I will bid thefe words dwell ever in my memory, and they shall cheer, comfort, and enliven me! This conversation, though extremely affecting to me at the time it paffed, has relieved my mind from much anxiety.

anxiety. Concealment, my dear Maria, is the foe of tranquillity: however I may err in future, I will never be difingenuous in acknowledging my errors. To you, and to Mr. Villars, I vow an unremitting confidence.

And yet, though I am more at eafe, I am far from well: I have been fome time writing this letter; but I hope I fhall fend you, foon, a more chearful one.

Adieu, my fweet friend. I entreat you not to acquaint even your dear mother with this affair; Lord Orville is a favourite with her, and why fhould I publish that he deferves not that honour?

LETTER XXX.

Evelina in continuation.

Briftol Hotwell, August 28.

We

YOU will be again furprifed, my dear Maria, at feeing whence I date my letter: but I have been very ill, and Mr. Villars was fo much alarmed, that he not only infifted upon my accompanying Mrs. Selwyn hither, but earneftly defired fhe would haften her intended journey.

261

We travelled very flowly, and I did not find myfelf fo much fatigued as I expected. We are fituated upon a moft delightful fpot; the profpect is beautiful, the air pure, and the weather very favourable to invalids. I am already better, and I doubt not but I fhall foon be well; as well, in regard to mere health, as I wifh to be.

I cannot express the reluctance with which I parted from my revered Mr. Villars: it was not like that parting which, laft April, preceded my journey to Howard Grove, when, all expectation and hope, though I wept, I rejoiced, and though I fincerely grieved to leave him, I yet withed to be gone : the forrow I now felt was unmixed with any livelier fenfation; expectation was vanished, and hope I had none! All that I held most dear upon earth, I quitted, and that upon an errand to the fuccefs of which I was totally indifferent, the re-establishment of my health. Had it been to have feen my fweet Maria, or her dear mother, I should not have repined.

Mrs. Selwyn is very kind and attentive to me. She is extremely clever; her underftanding, indeed, may be called mafculine; but, unfortunately, her manners deferve the fame epithet; for, in fludying to acquire the knowledge of the other fex, fhe has loft all the fortners of her own. In regard gard to myfelf, however, as I have neither courage nor inclination to argue with her, I have never been perfonally hurt at her want of gentleness; a virtue which, neverthelefs, feems fo effential a part of the female character, that I find myfelf more awkward, and lefs at eafe, with a woman who wants it, than I do with a man. She is not a favourite with Mr. Villars, who has often been difgusted at her unmerciful propenfity to fatire : but his anxiety that I fhould try the effect of the Briftol waters, overcame his diflike to committing me to her care. Mrs. Clinton is also here; fo that I shall be as well attended as his utmost partiality could defire.

263

I will continue to write to you, my dear Mifs Mirvan, with as much conftancy as if I had no other correspondent; though during my absence from Berry Hill, my letters may, perhaps, be shortened on account of the minuteness of the journal which I must write to my beloved Mr. Villars : but you, who know his expectations, and how many ties bind me to fulfil them, will, I am sure, rather excuse any omiffion to yourfelf, than any negligence to him.

END OF THE SECOND VOLUME.

Continuation from Vol. I.

Of PLAYS, with elegant Engravings, in the NEW ENGLISH THEATRE.

Printed for J. Rivington and Sons, J. Dodfley, T. Lowndes, T. Caflon, W. Nicoll, S. Bladon, &c.

ROONOKO ; Mr. Savigny as Oroonoko. George Barnwel ; Mr. Brereton as Barnwell. 26.

27. George Barnwel; Mr. Brereton as Barnwell. 8. Tameriane; Mr. Palmer and Mifs Hopkins in Bajazet and Selima.

Venice Preferved ; Mr. Benfley as Pierre. 29.

30. Diftreft Mother; Mrs. Hartley as Andromache, by Sherwin, Vignette by Signora Angelica Kauffman and Signior Bartolozzi.

31. Provok'd Hufband; Mr. Macklin and Mr. Dunftall as Sir Francis Wronghead and John Moody. 32. Love Makes a Man; Mr. Dodd as Clodio.

33. Drummer; Mr. Parfons and Mifs Pope as Vellum and Abigail.

34. Carelefs Hulband ; Mrs. Abingdon as Lady Betty Modifh.

35. Funeral; Mr. Clarke and Mr. Quick as Lord Brompton and Mr. Sable, Vignette by Weft and Byrne. 36. Earl of Effex; Mrs. Melmoth as Queen Elizabeth.

37. Barbaroffa ; Mr. Benfley and Mifs Macklin as Barbaroffa and Irene.

38. Mahomet; Mr. Benfley as Mahomet.

39. All for Love ; Mrs. Yates as Cleopatra.

40. Jane Gray; Mrs Hartley as Jane Gray, by Sherwin; Vig-nette by Edwards and Hall.

41. Amphytrion; Mr. Woodward as Sofia.

42. Double Dealer; Mr. Palmer and Mrs. Gardiner as Careleis and Lady Pliant.

43. Inconftant ; Mr. Willon as Old Mirabel.

44. Double Gallant; Mrs. Abingdon as Lady Sadlife.

45. Conftant Couple ; Mrs. Barry as Sir Harry Wildair, Vignette by Signora Angelica Kauffman and Mr. Collier.

46. Siege of Damafcus; Mr. Smith as Phocyas.
47. Theodofius; Mr. Wroughton as Theodofius.
48. Cato; Mrs. Hartley as Marcia.

49. Douglas; Mr. Lewis as Douglas.

50. Zara; Mifs Young and Mr. Garrick as Zara and Lufignan, Vignette by Weft and Byrne. 51. City Wives Confederacy; Mifs Pope as Corinna. 52. Country Wife; Mifs P. Hopkins as Mifs Peggy. 53. Minor; Mr. Foote as Mrs. Cole.

Winor; Mr. Foote as Mrs. Cole.
Wonder; Mr. Garrick as Don Felix, Chances; Mr. Garrick as Don John, Vignette by Mortimer and Walker.
Medea; Mrs. Yates as Medea.
Grecian Daughter; Mr. J. Aikin as Phoeion.
Roman Father; Mr. Henderfon as Horatius.
Brotherse: Mr. Convict and Phoentering.

59. Brothers; Mr. Garrick as Demetrius.

60. Ifabella, or the Fatal Marriage ; Mr. Henderfon as Count Biron, Vignette by Mortimer and Hall.

