

HISTORY

THE

Robt Jairfax 1763

ENGLAND,

FROM

The INVASION of JULIUS CÆSAR

TO

The ACCESSION of HENRY VII.

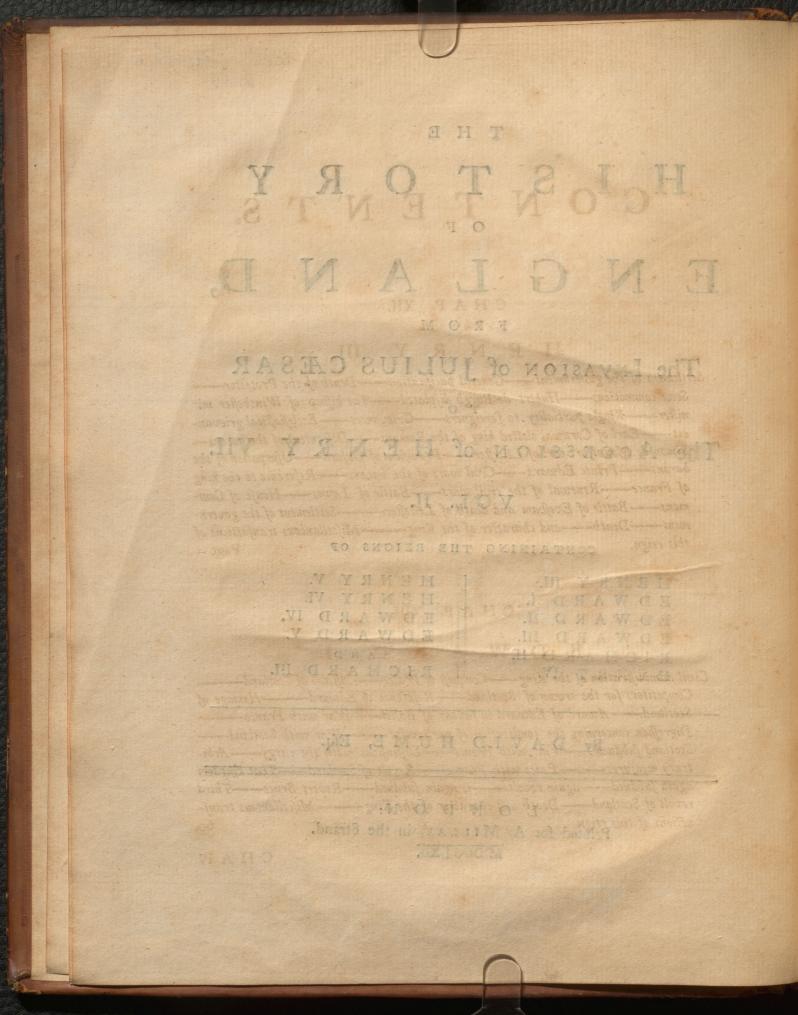

VOL. II.

CONTAINING THE REIGNS OF

HENRY III.	HENRY V.
EDWARDI.	HENRY VI.
EDWARDII.	EDWARD IV.
EDWARDIII.	EDWARD V.
RICHARD II.	AND
HENRY IV.	RICHARD III.

By DAVID HUME, Efq.

L O N D O N: Printed for A. MILLAR, in the Strand, M DCC LXII.

CHAP. XII.

HENRY III.

Settlement of the government — General pacification — Death of the Protector — Some commotions — Hubert de Burgh displaced — The bishop of Winchester minister — King's partiality to foreigners — Grievances — Ecclesiastical grievances — Earl of Cornwal elected king of the Romans — Discontent of the barons — Simon de Mountfort earl of Leicester — Provisions of Oxford — Usurpation of the barons finance — Renewal of the civil wars of the barons — Reference to the king of France — Renewal of the civil wars — Battle of Lewes — House of Commons — Battle of Evestam and death of Leicester — Settlement of the government — Death — and character of the King — Miscellaneous transactions of this reign. Page 1

CHAP. XIII.

EDWARD I.

Civil administration of the King — Conquest of Wales — Affairs of Scotland — Competitors for the crown of Scotland — Reference to Edward — Homage of Scotland — Award of Edward in favour of Baliol — War with France Digression concerning the constitution of parliament — War with Scotland Scotland subdued — War with France — Dissections with the clergy — Arbitrary measures — Peace with France — Revolt of Scotland — That kingdom again subdued — again revolts — is again subdued — Robert Bruce — Third revolt of Scotland — Death and character of the King — Miscellaneous transactions of this reign. I 60

CHAP.

VI

CHAP. XIV.

E D W A R D II.

Weakness of the King—His passion for favourites—Piers Gavaston—Discontent of the barons—Murder of Gavaston—War with Scotland—Battle of Bannockburn—Hugh le Despenser—Civil commotions—Execution of the earl of Lancaster—Conspiracy against the King—Insurrection—The King dethroned—Murdered—His character—Miscellaneous transactions in this reign. 126

CHAP. XV.

E D W A R D III.

War with Scotland Execution of the earl of Kent Execution of Mortimer, earl of March State of Scotland War with that kingdom King's claim to the crown of France Preparations for war with France War Naval victory Domestic disturbances Affairs of Britanny Renewal of the war with France Invasion of France Battle of Crecy War with Scotland Captivity of the King of Scots Calais taken. 156

CHAP. XVI.

Institution of the garter—State of France—Battle of Poistiers—Captivity of the King of France—State of that kingdom—Invasion of France—Peace of Bretigni—State of France—Expedition into Castile—Rupture with France —Ill fuccess of the English—Death of the prince of Wales—Death—and character of the King—Miscellaneous transactions in this reign. 206

CHAP. XVII.

RICHARD II.

Government during the minority—Infurrection of the common people—Discontent of the barons—Civil commotions—Expulsion or execution of the King's ministers flers—Cabals of the duke of Glocester—Murder of the duke of Glocester— Banishment of Henry duke of Heresord—Return of Henry—General insurrection—Deposition of the King—His murder—His character—Miscellaneous transfactions during this reign. 241 success all 40

CHAP. XVIII.

HENRY IV.

Title of the King—An infurrection—An infurrection in Wales—The earl of Northumberland rebels—Battle of Shrewfbury—State of Scotland—Parliamentary transactions—Death—and character of the King. 282

CHAP. XIX.

HENRY V.

The King's former diforders—His reformation—The Lollards—Punifhment of lord Cobham—State of France—Invafion of that kingdom—Battle of Azincour—State of France—New invafion of France—Affafination of the duke of Burgundy—Treaty of Troye—Marriage of the King—His death and charaster—Mifcellaneous transactions during this reign. 298

CHAP. XX.

HENRY VI.

Government during the minority—State of France—Military operations— Battle of Verneuil—Siege of Orleans—The maid of Orleans—The fiege of Orleans raifed—The King of France crowned at Rheims—Prudence of the duke of Bedford—Execution of the maid of Orleans—Defection of the duke of Burgundy—Death of the duke of Bedford—Decline of the English in France —Truce with France—Marriage of the King with Margaret of Anjou— Murder of the duke of Glocester—State of France—Renewal of the war with France—The English expelled France.

CHAP.

VII

Early battle of St. Moons +-

CHAP. XXI.

Claim of the duke of York to the crown—The earl of Warwic—Impeachment of the duke of Suffolk—Hisbanishment—and death—Popular insurrection— The parties of York and Lancaster—First armament of the duke of York— First battle of St. Albans—Battle of Blore-heath—of Northampton—A parliament—Battle of Wakefield—Death of the duke of York—Battle of Mortimer's Cross—Second battle of St. Albans—Edward IV. assure the crown—Miscellaneous transactions of this reign.

-basitad to CHAP. XXII.

E D W A R D IV.

Battle of Touton—Henry escapes into Scotland—A parliament—Battle of Hexbam—Henry taken prisoner, and confined to the Tower—King's marriage with the lady Elizabeth Gray—Warwic disgusted—Alliance with Burgundy— Insurrection in Yorkshire—Battle of Banbury—Warwic and Clarence banished—Warwic and Clarence return—Edward IV. expelled—Henry VI. restored—Edward IV. returns—Battle of Barnet, and death of Warwic— Battle of Teukesbury, and murder of prince Edward—Death of Henry VI.— Invasion of France—Peace of Pecquigni—Trial and execution of the duke of Clarence—Death and character of Edward IV. 385

CHAP. XXIII.

EDWARD V. and RICHARD III.

Edward V. State of the court — The earl of Rivers arrefted — Duke of Glacefter protector — Execution of lord Haftings — The protector aims at the crown — Affumes the crown — Murder of Edward V. and of the duke of York — Richard III. — Duke of Buckingham difcontented — The earl of Richmond — Buckingham executed — Invafion by the earl of Richmond — Battle of Rofworth — Death and character of Richard III. 419

THE

vin

THE

HISTORY

OF ENGLAND.

HENRY III.

CHAP. XII,

Settlement of the government—General pacification—Death of the Protector—Some commotions—Hubert de Burgh displaced—The bishop of Winchester minister—King's partiality to foreigners—Grievances—Ecclesiastical grievances—Earl of Cornwal elected king of the Romans—Discontent of the barons—Simon de Mountfort earl of Leicester—Provisions of Oxford—Usurpation of the barons—Prince Edward—Civil wars of the barons—Reference to the king of France— Renewal of the civil wars_Battle of Lews—House of Commons— Battle of Evesham and death of Leicester—Settlement of the government—Death—and character of the king—Miscellaneous transactions of this reign.

OST fciences, in proportion as they encreafe and improve, invent Chap. XII. methods by which they facilitate their reafonings; and employing general theorems, are enabled to comprehend in a few propositions an infinite number of inferences and conclusions. Hiftory also, being a collection of facts, which are multiplying without end, is obliged to adopt fuch arts of abridgement, to retain the more material events, and to drop all the minute circum-Vor. II: B 1216.

Chap. XII. ftances, which are only interefting during the time, or to the perfons engaged in the transactions. This truth is no where more evident than with regard to the reign, upon which we are going to enter. What mortal could have the patience to write or read a long detail of fuch frivolous events as those with which it is filled, or attend to a tedious narrative which would follow, thro' a feries of fifty fix years, the caprices and weakneffes of fo mean a prince as Henry? The chief reason, why protestant writers have been fo anxious to spread out the incidents of this reign, is in order to expose the rapacity, ambition, and artifices of the court of Rome, and to prove, that the great dignitaries of the catholic church, while they pretended to have nothing in view but the falvation of fouls, had bent all their attention to the acquifition of riches, and were reftrained by no fenfeof justice or honour, in the pursuit of that great object *. But this conclusion would readily be allowed them, tho' it were not illustrated by fuch a detail of uninterefting incidents; and follows indeed, by an evident neceffity, from the very fituation, in which that church was placed with regard to the reft of Europe. For befides that all ecclefiaftical power, as it can always cover its operations under a cloak of fanctity, and attacks men on the fide where they dare not employ their reafon, lies lefs under controul than civil government; befides this general caufe, I fay, the Pope and his courtiers were foreigners to most of the churches which they governed ; they could not possibly have any other object but to pillage the provinces for prefent gain ; and as they lived at a diftance, they would be little awed by fhame or remorfe, in practifing every lucrative expedient, which was fuggested to them. England being one of the most remote provinces, attached to the Romish hierarchy, as well as one of the richest, and the most prone to fuperstition, felt feverely during this reign, while its patience was not yet fully exhausted, the influence of these causes; and we shall often have occasion to touch curforily upon fuch incidents. But we shall not attempt to comprehend every transaction transmitted to us; and till the end of the reign, when the events become more memorable, we shall not always observe an exact chronological order in our narration.

Settlement of the government.

THE earl of Pembroke, who, at the time of John's death, was marifchal of England, was by his office at the head of the armies, and confequently, during a flate of civil wars and convulfions, at the head of the flate; and it happened fortunately for the young monarch, and for the nation, that the power could not have been intrusted into more able and more faithful hands. This nobleman, who had maintained his loyalty unfhaken to John during the loweft fortune of that monarch, determined to fupport the authority of the infant prince; and he was not difmayed with the number and violence of his enemies. Senfible, that Chap. XII. Henry, according to the prejudices of the times, would not be deemed fovereign, till crown'd and anointed by a churchman; he immediately carried the young prince to Glocefter where the ceremony of coronation was performed, in the prefence of Gualo, the legate, and a very few noblemen, by the bifhops of Winchefter and Bath*. As the concurrence of the papal authority was requifite to fupport the tottering throne, Henry was obliged to fwear fealty to the Pope, and renew that homage, to which his father had already fubjected the kingdom + : And in order to enlarge the authority of Pembroke, and give him a more regular and legal title to it, a general council of the barons was foon after fummoned at Briftol, where that nobleman was chosen protector of the kingdom.

* M. Paris. p. 623.

was

HENRY III.

PEMBROKE, that he might reconcile all men to the government of his pupil, made him grant anew a charter of liberties, which, tho' moftly copied from the former conceffions, extorted from John, contains fome alterations, which may be deemed remarkable t. The full privilege of elections in the clergy, granted by John the former King, was not confirm'd, nor the liberty of going out of the kingdom, without the royal confent : Whence we may conjecture, that Pembroke and the barons, jealous of the ecclefiaftical power, were defirous of renewing the King's claim to iffue a congè d'elire to the monks and chapters, and thought it requisite to put some check on the frequent appeals to Rome. But what may chiefly furprize us; the obligation, to which John had fubjected himfelf, of obtaining the confent of the great council before he levied any aids or fcutages from the nation, was omitted; and this article was even declared hard and fevere, and was expressly left to future deliberation. But we must confider, that, tho' this limitation may perhaps appear to us the most momentous in the whole charter of John, it was not regarded in that light by the antient barons, who were more jealous of particular acts of violence in the crown than of fuch general impofitions, which, unlefs they were evidently reafonable and neceffary, could scarce, without a general confent, be levied upon men, who had arms in their hands, and who could repel any act of oppression, by which they were all immediately affected. We accordingly find, that Henry, in the course of his reign, while he gave frequent occasions for complaint, with regard to the violations of the great charter, never once attempted, by his mere will, to levy any aids or scutages; though he was often reduc'd to great necessities, and was refused supplies by his people. So much easier was it for him to transgress the law,

* M. Paris. p. 200. Hift. Croyf. Cont. p. 474. W. Heming. p. 562. Trevet. p. 168. + M. Paris. p. 200. ‡ Rymer. Vol. 1. p. 215.

B 2

1216.

28th Oct.

11th Nov.

1216.

Chap. XII. law, when individuals alone were affected, than even to exert his acknowledged prerogatives, where the intereft of the whole body was concerned.

> This charter was again confirmed by the King in the enfuing year, with the addition of fome articles to prevent the oppressions of sheriffs : And also with an additional charter of forefts, a circumftance of great moment in those ages, when hunting was fo much the occupation of the nobility, and when the King comprehended to confiderable a part of the kingdom within his forefts, which he govern'd by peculiar and arbitrary laws. All the forefts, which had been enclofed fince the reign of Henry the fecond, were defaforested; and new perambulations were appointed for that purpose : Offences in the forests were declared to be no longer capital; but punishable by fines, imprisonments, and more gentle penalties : And all the proprietors of land recovered the power of cutting and using their own wood at their pleafure.

> THUS, thefe famous charters were brought very nearly to the fhape, in which they have ever fince flood; and they were, during many generations, the darling of the whole English nation, and effeemed the most facred rampart to national liberty and independance. As they fecured the rights of all orders of men, they were regarded with a jealous eye by all, and became the basis, in a manner, of the English monarchy, and a kind of original contract, which both limited the authority of the King, and enfured the conditional allegiance of his fubjects. Tho' often violated, they were still claimed and recalled by the nobility and people; and as no precedents were fupposed valid, that infringed them, they rather acquired, than loft authority, from the frequent attempts, made against them in feveral ages, by regal and arbitrary power.

> WHILE Pembroke, by renewing and confirming the great charter, gave fo much fatisfaction and fecurity to the nation in general, he alfo applied himfelf fuccefsfully to individuals; and wrote letters, in the King's name, to all the malecontent barons; in which he reprefented to them, that whatever jealoufy and animofity they might have entertained against the late King, a young prince, the lineal heir of their antient monarchs, had now fucceeded to the throne, without fucceeding either to the refentments or principles of his predeceffor: That the desperate expedient, which they had employed, of calling in a foreign potentate, had, happily for them as well as for the nation, failed of entire fuccefs, and it was still in their power, by a quick return to their duty, to restore the independance of the kingdom, and to fecure that liberty, for which they fo zealoufly contended : That as all past offences of the barons were now buried in oblivion, they ought, on their part, to forget their complaints against their late fovereign, who, if he had been any wife blameable in his conduct, had left to his fon the falutary falutary warning, to avoid the paths, which had led to fuch fatal extremities : Chap. XII. And that having now obtained a charter for their liberties, it was their interest to flow, by their conduct, that that acquisition was not incompatible with their allegiance, and that the rights of King and people, fo far from being hostile and oppofite, might mutually fupport and fuftain each other *.

HENRY IH. TOIM

THESE confiderations, enforced by the character of confiancy and fidelity, which Pembroke had ever maintained, had a mighty influence on the barons; and moft of them began fecretly to negotiate with him, and many of them openly returned to their duty. The diffidence, which Lewis difcovered of their fidelity, forwarded this general propention towards the King; and when the French prince refused the government of the castle of Hertford to Robert Fitz-Walter, who had been to active against the late King, and who claimed that fortrefs as his right and property, they all plainly faw, that the English were excluded from every truft, and that foreigners had engroffed all the confidence and affection of their new fovereign +. The excommunication too, denounced by the legate, against all Lewis's adherents, failed not, in the turn which mens dispositions had taken, to operate a mighty effect upon them ; and they were eafily perfuaded to confider a caufe as impious and profane, for which they had already entertained an unfurmountable averfion ‡. Tho' Lewis made a journey to France, and brought over fresh succours from that kingdom §, he found, on his return, that his party was still more weakened by the defertion of his English confederates, and that the death of John, had, contrary to his expectation, given an incurable blow to his cause. The earls of Salisbury, Arundel, and Warrenne, together with William Mareshal, eldest son of the protector, had embraced Henry's party; and every English nobleman was plainly watching an opportunity of returning to his allegiance. Pembroke was fo much ftrengthened by thefe acceffions, that he ventured to invest Mount-forel; tho', upon the approach of the count de Perche with the French army, he defifted from his enterprize, and raifed the fiege |. The count de Perche, elated with this fuccess, marched to Lincoln; and being admitted into the town, he began to attack the caftle, which he foon reduced to extremity. The protector fummoned all his forces from every quarter in order to relieve a place of fuch importance; and he appeared fo much fuperior to the French, that they fhut themfelves up within the city, and refolved to take shelter behind the walls +. But the garrifon of the castle, having received

* Rymer. vol. 1. p. 215. Brady's App. No. 143. + M. Paris. p. 200, 202. 1 M. Paris. p. 200. M. Weft. p. 277. § Chron. Dunft. vol. 1. p. 79. M. Weft. p. 277. M. Paris. + Chron. Dunft. vol. 1. p. 81. p. 203.

8

5

1216.

6

Chap XII. ceived a ftrong reinforcement, made a vigorous fally upon the beliegers; while the English army, by concert, affaulted them in the fame instant from without, mounted the walls by fcalade, and bearing down all refiftance, entered the city fword in hand. Lincoln was delivered over to be pillaged; the French army was totally routed; the count de Perche, with only two perfons more, was killed, but many of the chief commanders and about 400 knights were made prifoners by the English ‡. So little blood was shed in this important action, which decided the fate of one of the most powerful kingdoms of Europe; and fuch wretched foldiers were those antient barons, who yet were unacquainted with every thing but arms.

> Prince Lewis was informed of this fatal event, while employed in the fiege of Dover, which was still valiantly defended against him by Hubert de Burgh. He immediately retreated towards London, which was the center and life of his party; and he there received intelligence of a new difaster, which put an end to all his hopes. A French fleet bringing over a ftrong reinforcement, had appeared on the coaft of Kent, when they were attacked by the English under the command of Philip d'Albiney, and were routed and repulsed with confiderable loss. D' Albiney practifed a stratagem against them, which is faid to have contributed to the victory : Having gained the wind of the French, he came down upon them with violence; and throwing in their faces a great quantity of quick-lime, which he purpofely carried on board, he fo blinded them, that they were difabled from defending themfelves *.

AFTER this fecond misfortune of the French, the English barons hasted every where to make terms of peace with the protector, and by an early fubmission, to prevent those forfeitures, to which they were exposed on account of their rebellion. Lewis, whofe caufe was now totally defperate, began to be anxious for the fafety of his perfon, and was glad, on any honourable conditions, to make his escape from a country, where he found, that every thing was now become hoffile to him. He concluded a peace with Pembroke, promifed to evacuate the kingdom, and only flipulated in return, an indemnity to his adherents, and a reflitution of their honours and fortunes, together with the free and equal enjoyment of those liberties, which had been granted to the reft of the nation +. Thus, was happily ended a civil war, which feemed to be founded on the most General paci- incurable hatred and jealousy, and threatened the kingdom with the most fatal consequences.

1 M. Paris. p. 204, 205. Chron. de Mullr. p. 195. * M. Paris. p. 206. Ann. Warerl. p. 183. W. Heming. p. 563. Trevet. p. 169. M. Weft. p. 277. Knyghton. p. 2428. + Rymer. vol. 1. p. 221. M. Paris. p. 207. Chron. Dunft. vol. 1, p. 83. M. Weft. p. 278. Knyghton. p. 2429.

THE

HENRY III.

The precautions, which the King of France used in the conduct of this whole Chap. XII. affair, are remarkable. He pretended, that his fon had accepted of the offer from the English barons, without his advice, and contrary to his inclination: The armies fent to England were levied in Lewis's name: When that prince came over to France for aid, his father publickly refused to grant him any affistance, and would not for much as admit him to his prefence: Even after Henry's party acquired the afcendant, and Lewis was in danger of falling into the hands of his enemies, it was Blanche of Caffile his wife, not the King his father, who raifed armies and equipped fleets for his fuccour *. All thefe artifices were employed, not to fatisfy the Pope; for he had too much penetration to be for eafily imposed on: Nor yet to deceive the people; for they were too grofs even for that purpose: They only ferved for a colouring to Philip's caufe; and in public affairs, men are often better pleafed, that the truth, tho' known to every body, should be wrapt up under a decent cover, than if it were exposed in open day-light to the eyes of all the world.

After the expulsion of the French, the prudence and equity of the protector's fubfequent conduct, contributed to cure entirely those wounds, which had been made by inteffine discord. He received the rebellious barons into favour; obferved firstly the terms of peace, which he had granted them; reftored them to their possible of the reveal oblivion. The elergy alone, who had adhered to Lewis, were fufferers in this revolution. As they had rebelled against their fovereign, the Pope, by diffegarding the interdict and excommunication, it was not in Pembroke's power to make any flipulations in their favour; and Gualo, the legate, prepared to take vengeance on them for their disobedience +. Many of them were deposed; many suffered; fome banished; and all who escaped punishment, made atonement for their offences, by paying large fums to the legate, who amassied an immense treasfure by this expedient.

THE earl of Pembroke furvived not long the pacification, which had been Death of the chiefly owing to his wifdom and valour ‡; and he was fucceeded in the government by Peter, bifhop of Winchefter, a Poicteven, and Hubert de Burgh, high jufficiary. The councils of the latter were chiefly followed; and had he poffeffed equal authority in the kingdom with Pembroke, he feemed to be every way worthy of filling the place of that virtuous citizen. But the licentious and pow- Some commoerful barons, who had once broke the reins of fubjection to their prince, and ^{tions.}

† Brady's App. Nº, 144. Chron.

had

Chap. XII. 1216.

had obtained by violence an enlargement of their liberties and independance, could ill be reftrained by laws under a Minority; and the people, no lefs than the King, fuffered from their outrages and diforders. They retained by force the royal caftles, which they had ufurped during the patt convultions, or which had been committed to their cuftody by the protector *: They ufurped the demefnes +: They opprefied their vaffals: They infefted their weaker neighbours: And they invited all diforderly people to enter in their retinue, and to live upon their lands; and they gave them protection in all their robberies and extortions.

No one was more infamous for these violent and illegal practices than the earl of Albemarle, who, tho' he had early returned to his duty, and had been very ferviceable in expelling the French, augmented to the outmost of his power the general licence, which prevailed; and committed outrages in all the counties of the north. In order to suppress his disorders, Hubert seized an opportunity of getting pofieffion of Rockingham caftle, which Albemarle had garrifoned with his licentious retinue: But this nobleman, inftead of fubmitting, entered into a fecret confederacy with Fawkes de Breaute, Peter de Mauleon, and other barons, and both fortified the caftle of Biham for his defence, and made himfelf mafter by furprize of that of Fotheringay. Pandulf, who was reftored to his legatefhip in the place of Gualo, was active in fuppreffing this rebellion ; and with the concurrence of eleven bilhops, he denounced the fentence of excommunication against Albemarle and his adherents ‡: An army was levied : A foutage of ten shillings a knight's fee was imposed on all the military tenants : Albemarle's affociates gradually deferted him : And he himfelf was obliged at last to fubmit to mercy. He received a pardon, and was reftored to his whole effate.

THIS impolitic lenity, too frequent in those times, was probably the refult of a combination among the barons, who never could endure to see the total ruin of one of their own order: But it encouraged Fawkes de Breaute, a man whom King John had raifed from a low origin, to perfevere in the course of violence, to which he had owed his fortune, and to fet at nought all law and juffice. When thirty five verdicts were at one time found against him, on account of his violent expulsion of so many freeholders from their possessions; he came to the court of juffice with an armed force, feized the judge who had pronounced the fentences, and imprisoned him in Bedford castle. He then levied open war against the King; but being subdued, and taken prisoner, his life was granted him; but his estate was confiscated, and he was banished the kingdom §.

* Trivet. p. 174. † Rymer. vol. 1. p. 276. ‡ Chron. Dunft vol. 1. p. 102. § Rymer. vol. 1. p. 298. M. Paris. p. 221, 224. Ann. Waverl. p. 188. Chron. Dunft. vol. 1. p. 141, 146. M. Weft. p. 283.

JUSTICE

HENRY III.

JUSTICE was executed with greater feverity against diforders less premeditated, Chap. XII. which broke out in the city of London. A frivolous emulation in a match of wreftling, between the Londoners on the one hand, and the inhabitants of Weftminfter and those of the neighbouring villages on the other, occasioned this commotion. The former rofe in a body, and pulled down fome houses belonging to the abbot of Westminster : But this riot, which, confidering the tumultuous difposition familiar to that capital, would have been little regarded, seemed to become more ferious, by the fymptoms, which then broke out of the former attachment of the citizens to the French intereft. The populace, in the tumult, made use of the cry of war commonly employed by the French troops; mountjoy, mountjoy, God help us and our lord Lewis. The jufficiary made enquiry into the diforder; and finding one Conftantine Fitz Arnulf to have been the ringleader, an infolent man, who justified his crime in Hubert's prefence, he proceeded against him by martial law, and ordered him immediately to be hanged, without trial or form of process. He also cut off the feet of fome of Constantine's accomplices *.

THIS act of power was complained of as an infringement of the great charter : Yet the jufficiary, in a parliament, fummoned at Oxford (for the great councils began about this time to receive that appellation) made no fcruple to grant in the King's name a renewal and confirmation of that charter. When the affembly made application to the crown for this favour; as a law in those times seemed to lose its validity, if not frequently renewed; William de Briewere, one of the council of Regency, was fo bold as to fay openly, that these liberties were extorted by force, and ought not to be observed : But he was reprimanded by the archbishop of Canterbury, and was not countenanced by the King or his chief minifters+. A new confirmation was demanded and granted two years after; and an aid, amounting to a fifteenth of all moveables, was given by the parliament, in return for this indulgence ‡. The King isfued writs anew to the sheriffs, commanding the observance of the charter; but he inferted a remarkable clause in the writs, that those who payed not the fifteenth, should not for the future be entitled to the benefit of those liberties §.

THE low ftate, into which the crown was now fallen, made it requisite for a good minister to be attentive to the prefervation of the royal prerogatives, as well as to the fecurity of public liberty. Hubert applied to the Pope, who had always great authority in the kingdom, and was now confidered as its fuperior lord; and defired him to iffue a bull, declaring the King to be of full age, and entitled to

* M. Paris. p. 217, 218, 259. Annal. Waverl. p. 187. Chron. Dunft. vol. 1. p. 129. + M. ‡ M. Paris. p. 223. Ann. T. Wykes. p. 40. Chron. Dunft. vol. 1. p. 151. Weft. p. 282. § Clauf. 9. H. 3. m. 9: and m. 6. d. M. Weft. p. 284. Knyghton. p. 2430. exercife VOL. II. C 1322.

Chap. XII. 1222. MO

exercife in person all the acts of royalty *. In confequence of this declaration, the jufficiary refigned into Henry's hands the two important fortreffes of the Tower and Dover caftle, which had been entrusted to his custody; and required the other barons to imitate his example. They refused compliance: The earls of Chefter and Albemarle, John Conftable of Chefter, John de Lacy, Brian de l'Ine, and William de Cantel, with fome others, even formed a confpiracy to furprize London, and met in arms at Waltham with that intention : But finding the King prepared for defence, they defifted from their enterprize. When fummoned to court, in order to answer for their conduct, they scrupled not to appear, and to confess their defign: But they told the King, that they had no bad intentions against his perfon, but only against Hubert de Burgh, whom they were determined to remove from his office +. They appeared too formidable to be chaftifed ; and they were fo little discouraged by the failure of their first enterprize, that they met again in arms at Leicester, in order to seize the King who then relided at Northampton : But Henry, informed of their purpofe, took care to be fo well armed and attended, that the barons found it dangerous to make the attempt; and they fat down and kept their Christmas in his neighbourhood t. The archbishop and the prelates, finding every thing tend towards a civil war, interposed with their authority, and threatened the barons with the fentence of excommunication, if they perfifted in detaining the King's caftles. This menace at last prevailed : Most of the fortress were furrendered; tho' the barons complained, that Hubert's caftles were foon after reftored to him, while the King still kept theirs in his own custody. There are faid to have been 1115 caftles at that time in England §.

It must be ackowledged, that the influence of the prelates and the clergy was often of very great fervice to the public. Tho' the religion of that age can merit no other name than that of fuperstition, it ferved to unite together a body of men who had great fway over the people, and who kept the community from falling to pieces, from the factions and independant power of the nobles. And what was of great confequence; it threw a mighty authority into the hands of men, who by their profession were averse to arms and violence; who tempered by their mediation the general disposition towards military enterprizes; and who still maintained, even amids the shock of arms, those fecret links, without which it is impossible for human fociety to substit.

NOTWITHSTANDING these intestine commotions in England, and the precarious authority of the crown, Henry was obliged to carry on war in France, and

* M. Paris. p. 220. + Chron. Dunft. vol. 1. p. 137. • M. Paris. p. 221. Chron. Dunft. vol. 1. p. 138. • Coke's Comment. on Mag. Charta. chap. 17.

, he

he employed to that purpose the fifteenth which had been granted him by par- Chap. XII. liament. Lewis the eighth, who had fucceeded to his father, Philip, inftead of attending to Henry's claim, who demanded the reflitution of Normandy and the other provinces, wrefted from England, made an irruption into Poictou, took Rochelle* after a long fiege, and feemed determined to expell the English from the few provinces, which yet remained to them. Henry fent over his uncle, the earl of Salifbury; together with his brother prince Richard, to whom he had granted the earldom of Cornwal, which had escheated to the crown. Salisbury ftopt the progrefs of Lewis's arms, and retained the Poictevin and Gafcon vaffals in their allegiance: But no military action of any moment was performed on either fide. The earl of Cornwal, after two years flay in Guienne, returned to England.

THIS prince was no wife turbulent or factious in his disposition : His ruling paffion was to amafs money, in which he fucceeded fo well as to become the richeft prince in Christendom : Yet his attention to gain fometimes threw him into acts of violence, and gave diffurbance to the government. There was a manor, which formerly had belonged to the earldom of Cornwal, but had been given away to Waleran de Ties, before Richard had been invefted with that dignity, and while the earldom remained in the hands of the crown. Richard claimed this manor, and expelled the proprietor by force: Waleran complained: The King ordered his brother to do justice to the man, and reftore him to his rights : The earl faid, that he would not fubmit to these orders, till the cause was decided against him by the judgment of his peers : Henry replied, that it was first requifite to re-inftate Waleran in poffeffion, before the caufe could be tried; and he re-iterated his orders to the earl +. We may judge of the flate of the government, when this affair was like to produce a civil war. The earl of Cornwal, finding Henry peremptory in his demands, affociated himfelf with the young earl of Pembroke, who had married his fifter, and who was difcontented on account of the King's requiring him to deliver up fome royal caftles which were in his cuftody. These two noblemen took into their confederacy the earls of Chefter, Warenne, Glocefter, Hereford, Warwic, and Ferrars, who were all difgusted on a like account ‡. The malecontents affembled an army, which the King had not the power or courage to refift; and he was obliged to give his brother fatisfaction, by grants of much greater importance than the manor, which had been the first ground of the quarrel §.

THE character of the King, as he grew to man's effate, became every day better known, and was found in every circumstance totally unqualified for maintaining

* Rymer. vol. 1. p. 269. Trivet. p. 179. + M. Paris. p. 233. 1 M. Paris. p. 233. § M. Paris. p. 233.

C 2

12270

Chap. XII. 1227. 12

taining a proper fway among thole turbulent barons, whom the feudal confitution fubjected to his authority. Gentle, humane, and merciful even to a fault, he feems to have been fleady in no other circumftance of his character; but to have received every imprefion from thole who furrounded him, and whom he loved, for the time, with the most imprudent and most unreferved affection. Without activity or vigour, he was unfit to conduct war; without policy or art, he was ill fitted to maintain peace: His refertments, tho' hafty and violent, were not dreaded, while he was found to drop them with fuch facility; his friendships were little valued, because they were neither derived from choice, nor maintained with conftancy. A proper pageant of flate in a regular monarchy, where his ministers could have conducted all affairs in his name and by his authority; but too feeble in those diforderly times to fway a fcepter, whose weight depended entirely on the firmness and dexterity of the hand, which held it.

The ableft and most virtuous minister, whom Henry ever possesfied, was Hubert de Burgh *; a man who had been fleady to the crown in the most difficult and dangerous times, and who yet fhewed no difpolition, in the height of his power, to enflave or opprefs the people. The only exceptionable part of his conduct is that which is mentioned by Matthew Paris +, if the fact is really true, and proceeded from Hubert's advice, the recalling publickly and annulling the charter of forefts, a conceffion fo reafonable in itfelf, and fo paffionately claimed both by the nobility and people : But it must be confessed, that this measure is fo unlikely, both from the circumstances of the times and character of the minifter, that there is great reason to doubt of its reality, especially as it is mentioned by no other hiftorian. Hubert, while he enjoyed his authority, had an entire afcendant over Henry, and was loaded with honours and favours beyond any other fubject. Befides acquiring the property of many caftles and manors, he married the eldeft fifter of the King of Scots, was created earl of Kent, and by an unufual conceffion, was made chief jufficiary of England for life: Yet Henry, in a fudden caprice, threw off this faithful minister, and exposed him. to the violent perfecutions of his enemies. Among other frivolous crimes objected to him, he was accused of gaining the King's affections by enchantment, and of purloining from the royal treasury a gem, which had the virtue to render the wearer invulnerable, and of fending this valuable curiofity to the prince of Wales t. The nobility, who hated Hubert on account of his zeal in refuming the rights and poffeffions of the crown, no fooner faw the opening, than they inflamed the King's animofity against him, and pushed him to feek the total * Ypod. Neustriæ, p. 464: thop of Winchester. * M. Paris. p. 259. * M. Paris. p. 259.

ruin

Hubert de Burgh difplaced.

1231.

HENRY III.

ruin of his minister: Hubert took fanctuary in a church : The King ordered him to be dragged from thence: He recalled those orders : He afterwards renewed them : He was obliged by the clergy to reftore him to the fanctuary : He conftrained him foon after to furrender himfelf prisoner, and he confined him to the caftle of the Devifes. Hubert made his escape, was expelled the kingdom, was again received into favour, recovered a great share of the King's confidence, but never flowed any inclination of re-inftating himfelf in his power and authority *.

THE man, who fucceeded him in the government of the King and kingdom, Bifhop of was Peter des Roches, bishop of Winchester, a Poictevin by birth, who had been Winchester raifed by the late King, and who was no lefs diffinguished by his arbitrary prin-minister. ciples and violent conduct, than by his courage and abilities. This prelate had been left by King John jufticiary and regent of the kingdom during an expedition which that prince made into France; and his illegal administration was one chief caufe of that great combination among the barons, which finally extorted from the crown the charter of liberties, and laid the foundation of the English constitution. Henry, tho' incapable, from his character, of pursuing the fame violent maxims, which had governed his father, had imbibed the fame arbitrary principles; and in profecution of Peter's advice, he invited over a great number of Poictevins and other foreigners, who, he believed, could more fafely be trufted than the English, and who seemed requisite to counterbalance the great and independant power of the nobility +. Every office and command was bestowed on these ftrangers; their rapacity exhausted the revenues of the crown, already too much impoverished ‡; they invaded the rights of the people; and their infolence, still more provoking than their power, drew on them the hatred and envy of all orders of men in the kingdom §.

THE barons formed a combination against this odious ministry, and withdrew from their attendance in parliament; on pretence of the danger, to which they were exposed from the machinations of the Poictevins. When again fummoned to attend, they gave for answer, that the King should difmiss his foreigners from court : Otherwife they would drive both him and them out of the kingdom, and put the crown on another head, more worthy of wearing it || : Such was the ftyle, which they used to their fovereign! They at last came to parliament, but fo well attended with armed followers, that they feemed in a condition to prefcribe laws to the King and ministry. Peter des Roches, however, had in the interval found means of fowing diffention among the barons, and of bringing over to his

* M. Paris. p. 259, 260, 261, 266. Chron. T. Wykes. p. 41, 42. Chron. Dunft. vol. 1. p. 220, ‡ Chron, Dunft. vol. 1. p. 151. 221. M. Weft. p. 291, 301. + M. Paris. p. 263. § M. Paris. p. 258. H M. Paris. p. 265.

Chap. XII. 1231.

13

1233-

1233.

14

Chap. XII. party the earl of Cornwal, as well as the earls of Lincoln and Chefter. The confederates were difconcerted in their measures: Richard, earl Marischal, who had fucceeded to that dignity on the death of his brother, William, was chaced into Wales; he thence withdrew into Ireland; where he was treacheroufly murdered by the contrivance of the bifhop of Winchefter*. The effates of the more obnoxious barons were confifcated, without legal fentence or trial by their peers +; and were bestowed with a profuse liberality on the Poictevins. Peter even carried his infolence fo far as to fay publickly, that the barons of England muft not pretend to put themfelves on the fame footing with those of France, or affume the fame liberties and privileges: The monarch had a more abfolute power in the one country than in the other. It would have been more justifiable for him to fay, that men, fo unwilling to fubmit to the authority of law, could with the worfe grace claim any shelter or protection from it.

> WHEN the King, at any time, was checked in his illegal practices, and the authority of the great charter was objected to him, he was wont to reply; "Why should I observe a charter, which is neglected by all my grandees, both prelates and nobility ?" It was very reafonably replied. " You ought, fir, to fet them the example." 1

> So violent a ministry as that of the bishop of Winchester, could not be of long duration; but its fall proceeded at last from the influence of the church, not from the efforts of the nobles. Edmond, the present primate, came to court, attended by many of the other prelates; and represented to the King the pernicious measures embraced by Peter des Roches, the discontents of his people, the ruin of his affairs; and after requiring the difmiffion of the minister, and his affociates, threatened him with the fentence of excommunication, in cafe of his refufal. Henry, who knew that an excommunication, fo agreeable to the fenfe of the people, could not fail of operating the most dangerous effects, was obliged to fubmit: Foreigners were banished: The natives were reftored to their place in council § : The primate, who was a man of prudence, and who took care to execute the laws and observe the charter of liberties, bore the chief fway in the government.

1236. reigners.

But the English in vain flattered themselves that they would be long free from 14th January. the dominion of foreigners. The King, having married Eleanor, daughter to the King's parti- count of Provence ||, was furrounded by a great number of ftrangers from that country, whom he carefied with the fondeft affection, and enriched by an imprudent > * Chron. Dunft. vol. 1. p. 219. + M. Paris. p. 265. 1 M. Paris. p. 609. § M. Paris. P. 271, 272. Rymer. vol. 1. p. 448. M. Paris. p. 286.

> > gene-

HENRY III.

generofity *. The bishop of Valence, a prelate of the house of Savoy, and ma- Chap. XII. ternal uncle to the queen, was his chief minister, and employed every art to amais wealth for himfelf and his relations. Peter de Savoy, another brother of the fame family, was invefted in the honour of Richmond, and received the rich wardship of earl Warrenne: Boniface de Savoy was promoted to the fee of Canterbury : Many young ladies were invited over from Provence, and married to the chief noblemen of England, who were the King's wards +: And as the fource of Henry's bounty began to fail, his Savoyard ministry applied to Rome, and obtained a bull; permitting him to refume all paft grants; abfolving him from the oath, which he had taken to maintain them; even enjoining him to make fuch a refumption, and reprefenting these grants as invalid, on account of the prejudice which enfued from them to the Roman pontiff, in whom the fuperiority of the kingdom was vefted 1. The opposition, made to the intended refumption, prevented it from taking effect; but the nation faw the indignities, to which the King was willing to fubmit, in order to gratify the avarice of his foreign favourites. About the fame time, he published in England the fentence of excommunication, denounced against the emperor Frederic, his brother in law §; and faid in excufe, that, being the Pope's vaffal, he was obliged by his allegiance to obey all the commands of his holinefs. In this weak reign, when any neighbour infulted the King's dominions, inftead of taking revenge for the injury, he complained to the Pope as his fuperior lord, and begged him to give protection to his vaffal ||.

THE refentment of the English barons role high at the preference given to fo- Grievances. reigners; but no remonstrances and complaints could ever prevail on the King to abandon them, or even to moderate his attachment towards them. After the Provençals and Savoyards might have been supposed pretty well fatiated with the dignities and riches, which they had acquired, a new fet of hungry foreigners were invited over, and fhared among them those favours, which the King ought in policy, to have conferred on the English nobility, by whom his government could have been supported and defended. His mother, Isabella, who had been unjuftly taken by the late King from the count de la Marche, to whom the was betrothed, was no fooner mistress of herself by the death of her husband, than fhe married that nobleman +; and fhe had born him four fons, Guy, William, Geoffrey, and Aymer, whom the fent over into England to pay a vifit to their brother. The good-natured and affectionate difposition of Henry was moved at

* M. Paris. p. 236, 301, 305, 316, 541. M. Weft. p. 302, 304. + M. Paris. p. 484. M. Weft. p. 338. ‡ M. Paris. p. 295, 301. § Rymer. vol. 1. p. 383. Chron. 4 Trevet. p. 174. Dunft. vol. 1. p. 150,

1247-

the 15

1236.

1247.

16

Thap. XII. the fight of fuch near relations; and he confidered neither his own circumftances; nor the humours of his people, in the honours and riches, which he conferred upon them *. Complaints rofe as loud against the credit of the Gascon as ever they had done against that of the Poictevin and Savoyard favourites ; and to a nation prejudiced against them, all their measures appeared criminal and exceptionable. Violations of the great charter were frequently mentioned; and it is indeed more than likely, that foreigners, ignorant of the laws, and relying on the boundless affections of a weak prince, would, in an age, when a regular administration was not any where known, pay more attention to their own prefent intereft than to the liberties of the people. It is reported, that the Poictevins and other strangers, when the laws were at any time appealed to, in opposition to their oppressions, scrupled not to reply, What did the English laws signify to them ? They minded them not. And as words are often more offenfive than actions, this open contempt of the English tended much to aggravate the general discontent, and made every act of violence, committed by the foreigners, appear not only an injury, but an affront to them +.

> I reckon not among the violations of the great charter fome arbitrary exertions of prerogative, which Henry's neceffities obliged him to practife, and which, without producing any difcontent, were uniformly continued by all his fucceffors, till the last century. As the parliament often refused him supplies, and that in a manner fomewhat rude and indecent t, he obliged his opulent fubjects, particularly the citizens of London, to grant him loans of money; and it is natural to imagine, that the fame want of oeconomy, which reduced him to the neceffity of borrowing, would prevent him from being very punctual in the payment §. He demanded benevolences or pretended voluntary contributions from his nobility and prelates ||. He was the first King of England fince the conquest, who could fairly be faid to lye under the reftraint of law; and he was also the first who practifed the difpenfing power, and employed the famous claufe of Non-obstante in his grants and patents. When objections were made to this novelty, he replied, that the Pope exercised that authority; and why might he not imitate the example? But the abuse, which the Pope made of his dispensing power, in violating the Canons of general councils, in invading the privileges and cuftoms of all particular churches, and in usurping on the rights of patrons, was more likely to excite the jealoufy of the people, than to reconcile them to a fimilar practice in their civil government. Roger de Thurkesby, one of the King's justices,

> * M. Paris. p. 491. M. Weft. p. 338. Knyghton. p. 2436. + M. Paris. p. 566. 666. Ann. Waver. p. 214. Chron. Dunft. vol. 1. p. 335. ‡ M. Paris. p. 301. § M. Paris. || M. Paris. p. 507. p. 406.

was

HENRY III.

was fo displeased with the precedent, that he exclaimed, Alas! what times are we Chap. XII. fallen into? Bebold, the civil court is corrupted in imitation of the ecclesiastical, and the river is poisoned from that fountain.

THE King's partiality and profuse bounty to his foreign relations, and to their friends and favourites, would have appeared more tolerable to the English, had any thing been done mean-while for the honour of the nation, or had Henry's enterprizes in foreign countries, been attended with any fuccefs or glory to himfelf or to the public : At leaft, fuch military talents in the King would have ferved to keep his barons in awe, and have given weight and authority to his government. But tho' he declared war againft Lewis IX, in 1242, and made an expedition into Guienne, upon the invitation of his father in law, the count de la Marche, who promifed to join him with all his forces; he was unfuccefsful in his attempts against that great monarch, was worsted at Taillebourg, was deferted by his allies, loft what remained to him of Poictou, and was obliged to return, with fome lofs of honour, into England *. The Gafcon nobility were attached to the English government; because the distance of their fovereign allowed them to remain in a flate of almost total independance : And they claimed, fome time after, the King's protection against an invalion, which the King of Caltile made upon that territory. Henry returned into Guienne, and was more fuccefsful in this expedition; but he thereby involved himfelf and his nobility in an enormous debt, which both encreafed their difcontents, and exposed him to greater danger from their enterprizes +.

WANT of oeconomy and an ill judged liberality were Henry's great defects; and his debts, even before this expedition, had become fo troublefome to him, that he fold all his plate and jewels, in order to difcharge them. When this expedient was first proposed, he asked, where he would find purchasers? It was replied, the citizens of London. On my word, said he, if the treasury of Augustus were brought to market, the citizens are able to be the purchasers: These clowns, who assume to themselves the name of barons, abound in every thing, while we are reduced to necessary the more forward and greedy in his exactions upon the citizens §.

But the grievances, which the English had reason to complain of in the civil Ecclesiaftical government during this reign, seem to have been still less grievous than those grievances. which they underwent from the usurpations and exactions of the court of Rome. On the death of Langton in 1228, the monks of Christ-church elected Walter de

* M. Paris. p. 393, 394, 398, 399, 405. W. Heming. p. 574. Chron. Dunft. vol. 1. p. 153. † M. Paris. p. 614. ‡ M. Paris. p. 501. § M. Paris. p. 501, 507, 518, 578, 606, 625, 648.

D

YOL. II.

Hemesham,

1253.

1253.

18

Chap. > II. Hemefham, one of their own body, for his fucceffor : But as Henry refufed to confirm the election, the Pope, at his defire, annulled it *, and immediately appointed Richard, chancellor of Lincoln, for archbishop, without waiting for a new election. On the death of Richard in 1231, the monks elected Ralph de Neville bishop of Chichester; and tho' Henry was much pleased with the election, the Pope, who thought that prelate too much attached to the crown, affumed the power of annulling his election +. He rejected two clergymen more, whom the Monks had fucceffively chofen; and he at laft told them, that, if they would elect Edmond, treasurer of the church of Salisbury, he would confirm their choice; and his nomination was complied with. The Pope had the prudence to appoint both times very worthy primates; but men could not forbear observing his intention of thus drawing gradually to himself the right of beflowing that important dignity.

THE avarice, however, more than ambition of the fee of Rome, feems to have been in this age the ground of general complaint; and the papal minifters, finding a vaft flock of power, amaffed by their predeceffors, were defirous of turning it to prefent profit, which they enjoyed at home, rather than of enlarging their authority in diffant countries, where they never intended to refide. Every thing was become venal in the Romish tribunals; fimony was openly practifed; no favours and even no justice could be obtained without a bribe; the higheft bidder was fure to have the preference, without regard either to the merits of the perfon or of the caufe; and befides the ufual perversions of right in the decision of controverfies, the Pope openly affumed an abfolute and uncontroled authority of fetting alide, by the plenitude of his apostolic power, all particular rules and privileges of patrons, churches and convents t. Under pretence of remedying these abuses, Pope Honorius, in 1226, complaining of the poverty of his fee as the fource of all grievances, demanded from every cathedral two of the beft prebends, and from every convent two monks portions, to be fet apart as a perpetual and fettled revenue of the papal crown ; but all men being fenfible, that the revenue would continue for ever, and the abuses immediately return, his demand was unanimoufly rejected §. About three years after, the Pope demanded and obtained the tenth of all ecclefiaftical revenues, which he levied in a very oppreffive manner; requiring payment before the clergy had drawn their rents or tythes, and fending about ufurers, who advanced them the money at exorbitant interest |. In the year 1240, Otho, the legate, having in vain attempted the clergy.

* M. Paris. p. 244. + M. Paris. p. 254. 1 M. Paris. p. 290, 308, 345, 375, 421, 469, 483, 537, 609, Ann. Burt. p. 309. M. Weft. p. 305, 313, 333, 336. § M. Paris. p. 226, 227, 228. Chron, Dunft. vol. 1. p. 161. M. Weft. p. 284. || M. Paris, p. 248.

H

HENRY III.

clergy in a body, obtained feparately, by intrigues and menaces, large fums Chap. XII. from the prelates and convents, and on his departure is faid to have carried more money out of the kingdom than he left in it *. This experiment was renewed four years after with equal fuccess by Martin the Nuncio, who brought from Rome powers of fufpending and excommunicating all clergymen, that refufed to comply with his demands t. The King, who relied on the Pope for the fupport of his tottering authority, never failed to countenance these exactions ‡.

MEAN while, all the chief benefices of the kingdom were conferred on Italians; great numbers of that nation were fent over at one time to be provided for; nonrefidence and pluralities were carried to an enormous height; Manfel, the King's chaplain, is computed to have held at once feven hundred ecclefiaffical livings §; and the abufes became too great and palpable even for the blindnefs and patience of fuperfition any longer to endure them. The populace, entering into affociations, role in tumults against the Italian clergy; pillaged their barns; wasted their fields; infulted the perfons of fuch of them as they found in the kingdom ||; and when the jufticiaries made enquiry into the authors of this diforder, the guilt was found to involve fo many and those of fuch high rank, that it paffed unpunished. At laft, when Innocent IV. in 1245, called a general council at Lyons, in order to excommunicate the emperor Frederic, the King and nobility fent over agents to complain before the council of the avarice of the Romish church; and they represented among many other grievances, that the benefices of the Italian clergy in England had been effimated, and were found to amount to 60,000 marks + a year, a fum which exceeded the annual revenue of the crown itfelf*. They obtained only an evalive answer from the Pope; but as mention had been made before the council, of the feudal subjection of England to the fee of Rome, the English agents, at whose head was Roger Bigod, earl of Norfolk, exclaimed against that pretension, and infifted, that King John had no right, without the confent of his barons, to fubject the kingdom to fo ignominious a fervitude +. The Popes indeed, afraid of carrying matters too far against England, seem thenceforth to have little infisted on that exorbitant pretenfion.

*. M. Paris. p. 355, 360, 361, 366, 371. + M. Paris. p. 434. ‡ M. Paris. p. 376, 612, 613. § M. Paris. p. 575. M. Weft. p. 383. || Rymer, vol. 1. p. 323. M. Paris. p. 255, 257. Ann. Burt. p. 280, 281. Chron. Dunft. vol. 1. p. 207. 4 Innocent's bull in Rymer, vol. 1. p. 471. fays only 50,000 marks a year. * M. Paris. p. 451. The cuffoms were part of Henry's revenue, and amounted to 6000 pounds a year : They were at first finall sums paid by the merchants for the use of the King's warehouses, measures, weights, &c. See Gilbert's hiftory of the exch. p. 214. + M. Paris. p. 460.

TH13

1253-

Chap. XII. 1253.

$255.

20

THIS check, received at the council of Lyons, was not able to ftop the court of Rome in its career : Innocent exacted the revenues of all vacant benefices, the twentieth of all ecclefiaftical revenues without exception; the third of fuch as exceeded a hundred marks a year; the half of fuch as were poffeffed by non-refidents*. He claimed the goods of all inteftate elergymen +; he pretended a title to inherit all money got by ufury; he levied voluntary contributions from the people; and when the King, contrary to his usual practice, prohibited thefe exactions, he threatened to denounce against him the fame censures, which he had launched against the emperor, Frederic ‡.

But the most oppressive expedient, employed by the Pope, was the embarking Henry in an enterprize for the conquest of Naples, or Sicily on this fide the Fare, as it was called; an affair, which threw much difhonour on the King, and involved him, during fome years, in great expence and trouble. The Romifh church, taking advantage of favourable incidents, had reduced the kingdom of Sicily to the fame state of feudal vaffalage, which she pretended to extend over England, and which, by reafon of the diftance, as well as high fpirit of this latter kingdom, fhe was not able to maintain. After the death of the emperor, Frederic II. the fucceffion of Sicily devolved to Conradine, grandfon to that monarch; and Mainfroy, his natural fon, under pretence of governing the kingdom during the infancy of the prince, had formed a fcheme of eftablishing his own authority. Pope Innocent IV. who had carried on violent war against the emperor, Frederic, and endeavoured to disposses him of his Italian dominions, still continued hostilities against his grandfon; but being difappointed in all his fchemes by the activity and artifices of Mainfroy, he found, that his own force alone was not fufficient to bring to a happy iffue fo great an enterprize. He pretended to difpofe of the Sicilian crown, both as fuperior lord of that particular kingdom, and as vicar of Chrift, to whom all kingdoms of the earth were fubjected; and he made a tender of it to Richard earl of Cornwal, whofe immenfe riches, he flattered himfelf, would be able to fupport the military operations against Mainfroy. As Richard had the prudence to refuse the prefent $, he applied to the King, whole levity and thoughtless difpolition gave him more hopes of fuccefs; and he offered him the crown of Sicily for his fecond fon, Edmond ||. Henry, allured by fo magnificent a gift, without reflecting on the confequences, without confulting either with his brother or the parliament, accepted of this infidious propofal; and gave the Pope unlimited' credit to expend whatever

* M. Paris. p. 480. Ann. Burt. p. 305, 373. + M. Paris. p. 474. † M. Paris. p. 476 § M. Paris. p. 650. || Rymer. p. 502, 512, 530. M. Paris. p. 599, 613. 3.

HENRY III.

ever fums he thought neceffary for compleating the conquest of Sicily. Innocent, Chap. XII. who was engaged by his own interefts to make war with Mainfroy, was glad to carry on his enterprizes at the expence of his ally : Alexander IV. who fucceeded him in the papal throne, continued the fame policy: And Henry was furprized to find himfelf on a fudden involved in an immenfe debt, which he had never been confulted in contracting. The fum already amounted to 135541 marks befide intereft *; and he had the prospect, if he answered this demand, of being foon loaded with more exorbitant expences; if he refused it, of both incurring the Pope's difpleafure, and of lofing the crown of Sicily, which he hoped foon to have the glory of fixing on the head of his fon.

HE applied to the parliament for fupply; and that he might be fecure of not meeting with opposition, he fent no writs to the more refractory barons : But even those who were fummoned, sensible of the ridiculous cheat, imposed by the Pope, determined not to lavish their money on fuch chimerical projects, and making a pretext of the absence of their brethren, they refused to take the King's demands into confideration +. In this extremity the clergy were his only refource ; and as both their temporal and fpiritual fovereign concurred in loading them, they were ill able to defend themselves against this united authority.

THE Pope published a croifade for the conquest of Sicily; and required every one, who had taken the crofs against the infidels, or had vowed to advance money for their enterprize, to turn the war againft Mainfroy, a more terrible enemy to the chriftian faith than any Saracen ‡. He levied a tenth on all ecclefiaftical benefices in England for three years; and gave orders to excommunicate all bishops, who made not punctual payment. He granted to the King the goods of inteftate clergymen; the revenues of vacant benefices; the revenues of all non-refidents §. But thefe taxations, being levied by fome rule, were deemed less grievous, than another arbitrary imposition, which arose from the suggestion of the bishop of Hereford, and which might have opened the door to endlefs and intolerable abufes.

THAT prelate, who refided at the court of Rome by a deputation from the English church, drew bills of different values, but amounting on the whole to 150540 marks, on all the bifhops and abbots of the kingdom; and granted thefe bills to Italian merchants, who, it was pretended, had advanced money for the fervice of the war against Mainfroy As there was no likelihood of the English prelates submitting, without compulsion, to such an extraordinary demand, Ru-

* Rymer. vol. 1. p. 587. Chron. Durft. vol. 1. p. 319. + M. Paris. p. 614. ‡ Rymer. vol. 1. p. 547, 548, &c. § Rymer. vol. 1. p. 597, 598. || M. Paris. p. 612, 628. Chron. T. Wykes. p. 54.

1255.

21

ftand,

1255.

Chap. XII. fland, the legate, was charged with the office of employing his authority to that purpofe; and he fummoned an affembly of the bishops and abbots, whom he acquainted with the Pope's and the King's pleafure. Great were the furprize and indignation of the affembly at the imposition : The bishop of Worcester exclaimed that he would lofe his life rather than comply : The bishop of London faid, that the Pope and King were more powerful than he; but if his mitre were taken off his head, he would clap on a helmet in its place *. The legate was no lefs violent on the other hand; and he told the affembly, in plain terms, that all ecclefiaftical benefices were the property of the Pope, and he might dispose of them, either in whole or in part, as he faw proper +. In the end, the bifhops and abbots, being threatened with excommunication, which made all their revenues fall into the King's hands, were obliged to fubmit to the exaction : And the only mitigation which the legate allowed them, was, that the tenths, already granted, fhould be accepted as a partial payment of the bills. But the money was still infufficient for the Pope's purpose: The conquest of Sicily was as remote as ever: The demands which came from Rome were endlefs: Pope Alexander became fo urgent a creditor, that he fent over a legate into England; threatening the kingdom with an interdict, and the King with excommunication, if the arrears, which he pretended to be due to him, were not inftantly remitted ‡: And at last, Henry, sensible of the cheat, began to think of breaking off the agreement, and of refigning into the Pope's hands that crown, which, it was not intended by Alexander, that he or his family fhould ever enjoy §.

Earl of Cornwal elected King of the Romans.

THE earl of Cornwal had now reason to value himself on his forefight, in refufing the fraudulent bargain with Rome, and in preferring the folid honours of an opulent and powerful prince of the blood in England, before the empty and precarious glory of a foreign dignity. But he had not always firmness fufficient to adhere to this refolution : His vanity and ambition prevailed at last over his prudence and his avarice; and he was engaged in an enterprize equally expensive and vexatious as that of his brother, and not attended with much greater probability of fuccels. The immense opulence of Richard having made the German princes cast their eye on him as a candidate for the empire; he was tempted to expend vaft fums of money on his election, and he fucceeded fo far as to be chosen King of the Romans, which seemed to render his fucceffion infallible to the imperial throne. He went over into Germany, and carried out of the kingdom no lefs a fum than feven hundred thousand marks, if we may believe the account

* M. Paris. p. 614. + M. Paris. p. 619. ‡ Rymer. vol. 1. p. 624. M. Paris. p. § Rymer. vol. 1. p. 630. 648.

HENRY III.

account of fome antient authors *, which is probably much exaggerated +. His Chap. XII. money, while it lasted, procured him friends and partizans : But it was foon drained from him by the rapacity of the German princes; and having no perfonal or family connexions in that country, no folid foundation of power, he found at last, that he had lavished away the frugality of a whole life, in order to procure a fplendid title, and that his abfence from England, joined to the weaknefs of his brother's government, gave reins to the factious and turbulent difpofitions of the English barons, and involved his own country and family in infinite calamities.

THE fuccefsful revolt of the nobility from King John, and their impoling on Difcontents of him and his fucceffors limitations of the royal power, had made them feel their the barons. own weight and importance, had fet a dangerous precedent of reliftance, and being followed by a long minority, had impoverished, as well as weakened that crown, which they were at last induced, from the fear of worse confequences, to re-place on the head of young Henry. In the King's fituation, either great abilities and vigour were requifite to overawe the barons, or great caution and referve to give them no pretence for complaints; and it must be confessed, that this prince was poffeffed of neither of these talents. He had not prudence to choose right meafures; he wanted even that conftancy, which fometimes gives weight to wrong ones; he was entirely abandoned to his favourites, who were always foreigners; he lavished on them without diferetion his diminished revenue; and finding, that his barons indulged their disposition towards tyranny, and observed not to their own vaffals the fame rules, which they had imposed on the crown, he was apt, in his administration, to neglect all the falutary articles of the great charter; which he remarked to be fo little regarded by his nobility. This conduct had extremely leffened his authority in the kingdom; had multiplied complaints against him; and had frequently exposed him to affronts, and even to dangerous attempts upon his prerogative. In the year 1244, when he defired a fupply from parliament, the barons, complaining of the frequent breaches of the

* M. Paris, p. 638. The fame author, a few pages before, makes Richard's treasures amount to little more than half the fum. p. 634. The King's diffipations and expences, throughout his whole reign, according to the fame author, had amounted only to about 940,000 marks. p. 638.

+ The fums mentioned by antient authors, who were all monks, are often improbable, and never confiftent. But we know from an infallible authority, the public remonstrance to the council of Lions, that the King's revenues were below 60,000 marks a year : His brother therefore could never have been master of 700,000 marks; especially as he did not fell his estates in England, as we learn from the fame author : And we hear afterwards of his ordering all his woods to be cut down, in order to fatisfy the rapacity of the German princes : His fon fucceeded to the earldom of Cornwal and his other revenues.

1255.

23

great

Chap. XII. 1255.

great charter, and of the many fruitlefs applications which they had formerly made for the redrefs of this and other grievances, demanded in return that he fhould give them the nomination of the great jufticiary and of the chancellor, to whofe hands chiefly the administration of juftice was committed; and, if we may credit the hiftorian *, they had formed the plan of other limitations, as well as of affociations to maintain them, which would have reduced the King to be an abfolute cypher, and have held the crown in perpetual pupillage and dependance. The King, to fatisfy them, would agree to nothing but a renewal of the charter, and a general permiffion to excommunicate all the violators of it: And he received no other fupply, except their confent to levy a fcutage of twenty fhillings on each knight's fee for the marriage of his eldeft daughter to the King of Scotland; a burthen, which was exprefsly annexed to their feudal tenures.

Four years after, in a very full parliament, when Henry demanded a new fupply, he was openly reproached with the breach of his word, and the frequent violations of the charter. He was asked, whether he did not blush to defire any aid from his people, whom he profeffedly hated and defpifed, to whom on all occafions he preferred aliens and foreigners, and who groaned under the oppreffions, which he either permitted or exercifed over them. He was told, that, befides difparaging his nobility by forcing them to contract unequal and mean marriages with strangers, no rank of men were fo low as to escape vexations from him or his minifters ; that even the victuals confumed in his houfhold, the cloaths which himfelf and his fervants wore, efpecially the wine, which they ufed, were all taken by violence from the lawful owners, and no compensation was ever made them for the injury; that foreign merchants, to the great prejudice and infamy of the kingdom, fhunned the English harbours, as if they were possefied by pyrates, and the commerce with all nations was thus cut off by thefe violences; that lofs was added to loss, and injury to injury, while the merchants, who had been defpoiled of their goods, were also obliged to carry them at their own charges to whatever place the King was pleafed to appoint them; that even the poor fifhermen on the coaft could not escape his oppressions and those of his courtiers, and finding that they had not the full liberty of difpofing of their commodities in the English market, were frequently constrained to carry them to foreign ports, and to hazard all the perils of the ocean rather than those which awaited them from his oppreffive emiffaries; and that his very religion was a ground of complaint to his fubjects, while they observed, that the waxen tapers and splendid filks, employed in fo many useless processions, were the spoils which he had forcibly

* Math. Paris. p. 432.

ravished

HENRY III:

ravished from the true posses. Throughout this remonstrance, in which the complaints, derived from an abuse of the antient right of purveyance, may be supposed to be somewhat exaggerated, there appears a strange mixture of regal tyranny in the practices which gave rise to it, and of aristocratical liberty or rather licentious from the expressions employed by the parliament. But a mixture of this kind is observable in all the antient feudal governments; and both of them proved equally hurtful to the people.

As the King, in answer to their remonstrance, gave the parliament only good words and fair promifes, attended with the most humble submissions, which they had often found deceitful, he obtained at that time no fupply; and therefore in the year 1253, when he found himfelf again under the necessity of applying to parliament, he had provided himfelf of a new pretence, which he deemed infallible, and taking the vow of a Croifade to the holy land, he demanded their affiftance in that pious enterprize +. The parliament, however, for fome time fcrupled compliance; and the ecclefiaftical order fent a deputation of four prelates, the primate, the bishops of Winchester, Salisbury, and Carlisle, in order to remonftrate with him on his frequent violations of their privileges, the oppreffions with which he loaded them and all his subjects ‡, and the uncanonical and forced elections, which were made to vacant dignities. " It is true," replied the King, " I have been fomewhat faulty in this particular : I obtruded you, my lord of Can-" terbury, upon your fee : I was obliged to employ both entreaties and menaces, " my lord of Winchefter, to have you elected : my proceedings were very irregu-" lar, my lords of Salifbury and Carlifle, when I raifed you from the loweft " flations to your prefent dignities : I am determined henceforth to correct these " errors; and it will also become you, in order to make a thorough reformation, " to refign your prefent benefices; and try to enter again in a more regular and " canonical manner §." The bishops, furprized at these unexpected farcasms, replied, that the queftion was not at prefent how to correct past errors, but to avoid them for the future. The King promifed redrefs both of ecclefiaftical and civil grievances; and the parliament in return agreed to grant him a fupply, a tenth of the ecclefiaftical benefices and a fcutage of three marks on each knight's fee: But as they had experienced his frequent breach of promife, they required, that he should ratify the great charter in a manner still more authentic and solemn than any which he had ever hitherto employed. All the prelates and abbots were affembled : They held burning tapers in their hands : The great charter was read before them : They denounced the fentence of excommunication against eve-

* M. Paris, p. 498. See farther, p. 578. M. Weft. p. 348. 568. Chron. Dunft. vol. 1. p. 293. 1 M. Paris, p. 568. Vol. II. E Ty

Chap. XII.

1255.

Chap. XII. 1255. 26

ry one who fhould thenceforth violate that fundamental law: They threw their tapers on the ground, and exclaimed, May the foul of every one, who incurs this fentence, fo flink and corrupt in Hell! The King bore a part in this ceremony: and fubjoined; "So h lp me God, I will keep all thefe things inviolate, as I am a "man, as I am a chriftian, as I am a knight, and as I am a King crowned "and anointed."* Yet was the tremenduous ceremony no fooner finifhed, than his favourites, abufing his weaknefs and facility, made him return to the fame arbitrary and irregular administration; and the reafonable expectations of his people were thus continually eluded and difappointed \ddagger .

1258. Simond de Mountfort earl of Leicefter.

ALL these imprudent and illegal measures afforded a pretence to Simon de Mountfort, earl of Leicester, to attempt an innovation in the government, and to wreft the fcepter from the feeble and irrefolute hand which held it. This nobleman was a younger fon of that Simon de Mountfort, who had conducted with fuch valour and renown the Croifade against the Albigenses, and who, the' he tarnished his famous exploits by cruelty and ambition, had left a name very precious to all the bigots of that age, particularly to the ecclefiaftics. A large inheritance in England fell by fucceffion to this family; but as the elder brother enjoyed still more opulent possessions in France, and could not perform fealty to two masters, he transferred his right to Simon, his younger brother, who came over into England, did homage for his lands, and was raifed to the dignity of earl of Leicester. In the year 1238, he espoused Eleanor dowager of William earl of Pembroke, and fifter to the King 1; but the marriage of this princess with a fubject and a foreigner, tho' finished with Henry's consent, was loudly complained of by the earl of Cornwal, and all the barons of England; and Leicester was supported against their violence, entirely by the King's favour and authority §. But he had no fooner established himself in his possessions and dignities, than he acquired by infinuation and addrefs, a ftrong interest with the nation, and gained equally the affections of all orders of men. He loft, however, the friendship of Henry from the usual levity and fickleness of that prince; he was banished the court; he was recalled; he was entrusted with the command of Guienne II, where he did good fervice and acquired honour; he was again difgraced by the King, and his banishment from court seemed now final and irrevocable. Henry called him a traitor to his face: Leicester gave him the lye, and told him, that, if he were not his fovereign, he would foon make him re-

* M. Paris, p. 580. Ann. Burt. p. 323. Ann. Waverl. p. 210. W. Heming. p. 571. M. Weft. p. 353. † M. Paris, p. 597, 608. ‡ M. Paris, p. 314. § M. Paris, p. 315.

pent

pent of that infult. Yet was this quarrel accommodated either from the good Chap. XII. nature or timidity of the King; and Leicester was again admitted into some degree of favour and authority. But as this nobleman was become too great to preferve an entire complaifance to Henry's humours, and to act in fubferviency to his other minions; he found more advantage in cultivating his interest with the public, and in inflaming the general discontents, which prevailed against the administration. He filled every place with complaints against the infringement of the great charter, the violences committed on the people, the combination between the Pope and the King in their tyranny and extortions, Henry's neglect of his native fubjects and barons; and tho' himfelf a foreigner, he was more loud than any in reprefenting the indignity of fubmitting to the dominion of foreigners. By his hypocritical pretensions to devotion, he gained the favour of the zealots and clergy : By his feeming concern for public good, he acquired the affections of the public : And befides the private friendships, which he had cultivated with the barons, his animofity against the favourites bred an union of interefts between him and that powerful order.

A recent quarrel, which broke out between Leicester and William de Valence, Henry's half brother, a chief favourite, brought matters to extremity +, and determined the former to give full fcope to his bold and unbounded ambition, which the laws and the King's authority had hitherto with difficulty reftrained. He fecretly called a meeting of the most confiderable barons, particularly Humphrey de Bohun, high conftable, Roger Bigod, earl Mareschal, and the earls of Warwick and Glocefter; men, who by their family and poffeffions flood in the first rank of the English nobility. He represented to this company the necessity of reforming the state, and of putting the execution of the laws into other hands than those which had hitherto appeared from repeated experience, fo unfit for the charge, with which they were entrusted. He exaggerated the oppressions of the lower orders of the flate, the violations of the barons' privileges, the continued plunder of the clergy; and in order to aggravate the enormity of this conduct, he appealed to the great charter, which Henry had fo often ratified, and which was calculated to prevent for ever the return of these intolerable grievances. He magnified the generofity of their anceftors, who, at an infinite expence of blood, had extorted that famous conceffion from the crown; but lamented their own degeneracy, who allowed fo great an advantage, once obtained, to be wrefted from them by a weak prince and by infolent firangers. And he infifted, that the King's word, after fo many fubmiffions and fruitlefs promifes on his part, could no longer be relied on ; and that nothing but his abfolute inability 12;8.

† M. Paris, p. 649. E 2

27

to

Chap. XII. to violate national privileges could henceforth enfure the regular observance of 1258. them.

THESE topics, which were founded in truth, and fuited fo well the fentiments of the company, had the defired effect; and the barons entered into a refolution of redreffing the public grievances, by taking into their own hands the administration of the government. The King having fummoned a parliament, in expectation of receiving supplies for his Sicilian project, the barons appeared in the hall, clad in complete armour, and with their fwords by their fide; and the King on his entry, ftruck with this unufual appearance, afked them what was their meaning, and whether they pretended to make him their prifoner *? Roger Bigod replied in the name of the reft, that he was not their prifoner, but their fovereign; that they even intended to grant him large fupplies, in order to fix his fon on the throne of Sicily; that they only expected fome return for this expence and fervice; and that, as he had frequently made fubmiffions to the parliament, had acknowleged his paft errors, and had ftill allowed himfelf to be carried into the fame path, which gave them fuch just reason of complaint, he must now yield to more ftrict regulations, and confer authority on those who were able and willing to redrefs the public grievances. Henry, partly allured by the hopes of fupply, partly intimidated by the union and martial appearance of the barons, agreed to their demand; and promifed to fummon another parliament at Oxford, in order to digeft the new plan of government, and to elect the perfons, who were to be entrusted with the chief authority.

11. June.

Oxford.

THIS parliament, which the royalifts, and even the nation, from experience of Provisions of ... the confusions that attended its measures, afterwards denominated the mad parliament, met on the day appointed; and as all the barons brought along with them their military vaffals, and appeared with an armed force, the King, who had taken no precautions against them, was in reality a prifoner in their hands, and was obliged to fubmit to all the terms which they were pleafed to impofe upon him. Twelve barons were felected from the King's council; twelve more were chosen by parliament: To these twenty-four, unlimited authority was granted of reforming the flate; and the King himfelf took an oath, that he would maintain whatever ordinances they should think proper to enact for that purpose +. Leicester was at the head of this supreme council, to which the legislative power was thus in reality transferred; and all their measures were taken by his fecret influence and direction. Their first flep bore a specious appearance, and feemed well calculated for the end, which they profeffed to be the object of > * Annal. Theokefbury. + Rymer vol. 1. p. 655. Chron. Dunft, vol. 1. p. 334. Knyghton P. 2445. all

III. HENRY

all these innovations: They ordered that four knights should be chosen by each Chap. XII. county; that they should make enquiry into the grievances of which their neighbourhood had reason to complain, and should attend the next enfuing parliament, in order to give information to that affembly of the ftate of their particular counties *: A nearer approach to our prefent conflitution than had been made by the barons in the reign of King John, when the knights were only appointed to meet in their counties, and there to draw up a detail of their grievances. Mean while, the twenty-four barons proceeded to enact fome regulations, in order to provide a redrefs for fuch grievances as were fuppofed to be notorious to all the world. They ordered, that three feffions of parliament should be regularly held every year, in the months of February, June, and October; that a new high fheriff fhould be elected every year by the votes of the freeholders in each county +; that the sheriffs should have no power of fining the barons who did not attend at their courts, or the circuits of the jufficiaries; that no heirs should be committed to the wardship of foreigners, and no castles be entrusted to their custody; and that no new warrens or forefts should be created, nor the revenues of any counties or hundreds be let to farm. Such were the regulations which the twenty-four barons enacted at Oxford, for the redrefs of public grievances ‡.

But the earl of Leicester and his affociates, having advanced fo far to fatisfy the nation, inftead of continuing in this popular courfe, or granting the King that fupply which they had promifed him, immediately made provisions for the extenfion and continuance of their own unlimited authority. They rouzed anew the popular clamour, which had long prevailed against foreigners; and they fell with the utmost violence on the King's half brothers, who were supposed to be the authors of all national grievances, and whom Henry had no longer any power to protect. The four brothers, fenfible of their danger, took to flight with an intention of making their escape out of the kingdom ; they were eagerly purfued by the barons; Aymer, one of the brothers, who had been elected to the fee of Winchefter, took shelter in his episcopal palace, and carried the others along with him; they were furrounded in that place, and threatened to be dragged out by force, and to be punished for their crimes and misdemeanors; and the King, pleading the facredness of an ecclefiaftical fanctuary, was glad to extricate them from this danger by banishing them the kingdom §. In this act of violence, as well as in the former usurpations of the barons, the queen and her uncles were thought to have

* M. Paris p. 657, Addit. p. 140. Ann. Burt. p. 412. + Chron. Dunft. vol. 1. p. 336. § M. Paris p. 654. Ann. Burt. p. 411. Chron. T. Wykes p. 53. W. ‡ Ann. Burt. p. 413. Heming p. 579. Chron. Dunft. p. 335. M. Weft. p. 364. Ypod. Neuft. p. 467. Knyghton. p. 2445.

fecretly

Chap. XII. fecretly concurred, being jealous of the credit, acquired by the brothers, which they imagined, had eclipfed and annihilated their own *.

30

Usurpations of Bur the subsequent proceedings of the twenty four barons were sufficient to open the eyes of the whole kingdom, and to prove their intention of reducing for ever both the King and the people under the arbitrary power of a very narrow ariftocracy, which must at last have terminated either in anarchy, or in a violent usurpation and tyranny. They pretended, that they had not as yet digested all the regulations neceffary for the reformation of the state, and for the redrefs of grievances; and that they must still retain their power, till that great purpose was thoroughly effectuated : In other words, that they must be perpetual governors, and must continue to reform, till they were pleased to demit their autho. rity. They formed an affociation among themfelves, and fwore that they would ftand by each other with their lives and fortunes: They difplaced all the chief officers of the crown, the high jufticiary, the chancellor, the treafurer; and advanced either themselves or their own creatures in their stead : Even the offices of the King's houfhold were difposed of at their pleasure : The government of all the caftles was put into hands in whom they found reason to confide: And the whole power of the ftate being thus transferred to them, they ventured to impose an oath on every individual of the nation; in which the fubjects were obliged to fwear, under the penalty of being declared public enemies, that they would obey and execute all the regulations, both known and unknown, of the twenty-four barons : And all this, for the greater glory of God, the honour of the church, the fervice of the King, and the advantage of the kingdom +. No one dared to withstand this tyrannical authority : Prince Edward himfelf, the King's eldest fon, a youth of eighteen years of age, who began to give indications of that great and manly fpirit, which appeared throughout the whole course of his life, was, after making fome opposition, conftrained to take that oath, which really deposed him and his family from fovereign authority ‡. Earl Warrenne was the last perfon in the kingdom, who could be brought to give the confederated barons this mark of submission.

But the twenty four barons, not content with the usurpation of the royal power, introduced an innovation in the conflitution of parliament, which was of the utmost importance. They ordained, that that affembly should choose a committee of twelve perfons, who should, in the intervals of the fessions, posses the authority of the whole parliament, and should attend on a fummons the perfon of the King, in all his motions. But fo powerful were these barons, that this regulation was also fubmitted to; the whole government was overthrown thrown or fixed on new foundations; and the monarchy was totally fubverted, Chap. XI. without its being poffible for the King to ftrike a fingle ftroke in defence of the conflitution against the newly erected aristocracy.

* Ann Waverl. p. 210. + Chron. T. Wykes p. 52. ‡ Ann. Burt. p. 411.

THE report that the King of the Romans intended to pay a visit to England, gave alarm to the ruling barons; and they dreaded left the extensive influence and established authority of that prince would be employed to restore the prerogatives of his family, and overturn their new plan of government *. They fent over the new bishop of Worcester, who met him at St. Omars; asked him in the name of the barons, the reafon of his journey, and how long he intended to ftay in England; and infifted, that before he entered the kingdom, he should fwear to obferve the regulations established at Oxford. On Richard's refusal to take this oath, they prepared to refift him as a public enemy; they fitted out a fleet, affembled an army, and exciting the inveterate prejudices of the people against foreigners, from whom they had fuffered fo many oppreffions, fpread the report, that Richard intended to reftore by force the authority of his exiled brothers, and to violate all the fecurities provided for public liberty. The King of the Romans was at last obliged to fubmit to the terms required of him +.

Bur the barons, in proportion to their continuance in power, began gradually to lofe that popularity, which had affifted them in obtaining it; and men repined that regulations, which were only established during a time for the reformation of the flate, were likely to become perpetual, and to fubvert entirely the antient conftitution. They dreaded, that the power of the nobles, which was always oppreffive, would now exert itself without controul, by removing the counterpoife of the crown; and their apprehensions were encreased by some new edicts of the barons, which were plainly calculated to procure to themfelves an impunity in all their violences. They appointed, that the circuits of the itinerant juffices, the fole check on their arbitrary conduct; should be held only once in feven years; and men eafily faw, that a remedy, which returned after fuch long intervals, against an oppreffive power, which was perpetual, would prove totally infignificant and useless ‡. The cry became loud in the nation, that the barons should finish their intended regulations. The knights of the shires, who feem now to have been pretty regularly affembled in a feparate houfe, made remonftrances against the flowness of their proceedings; they represented, that, though the King had performed all the conditions required of him, the barons had hitherto done nothing for the public good, an I had been only careful to promote their own private advantage, and to commit injury on the crown; and they even appealed

* M. Paris, p. 661. + M. Paris, p. 661, 662. Chron. T. Wykes p. 53. ‡ M. Paris p. 667. Trivet. p. 209.

31

to 1259:

1259.

32

Chap. XII. to prince Edward, and claimed his interpofal for the interefts of the nation, and the reformation of the government*. The prince replied, that though it was from conftraint, and contrary to his private fentiments, he had fworn to adhere to the provisions of Oxford, he was determined to observe his oath : But he sent a meffage to the barons, requiring them to bring their undertaking to a fpeedy conclusion, and fulfil their engagements to the public : Otherwife, he menaced them, that, at the expence of his life, he would oblige them to do their duty, and would fhed the last drop of his blood in promoting the interests, and fatisfying the just wishes of the nation +.

> THE barons, urged by fo preffing a neceffity, published at last a new code of ordinances for the reformation of the state ‡ : But the expectations of the people were extremely disappointed, when they found, that these consisted only of some trivial alterations on the municipal law; and ftill more fo, when the barons pretended, that the tafk was not yet finished, and that they must farther prolong their authority, in order to bring the work of reformation to the defired period. The current of popularity was now much turned to the fide of the crown; and the barons had little more to rely on for their fupport, befides the private influence and power of their families, which, though exorbitant, was likely to prove inferior to the combination of King and people. Even this basis of power was daily weakened by their inteffine jealoufies and animofities; their antient and inveterate quarrels broke out when they came to divide the fpoils of the crown; and the rivalship between the earls of Leicester and Glocester, the chief leaders among them, began to disjoint the whole confederacy. The latter, more moderate in his pretenfions, was defirous of ftopping or retarding the career of the barons' usurpations; but the former, enraged at the opposition which he met with in his own party, pretended to throw up all concern in English affairs; and he retired into France §.

> THE kingdom of France, the only flate with which England had any confiderable intercourfe, was at this time governed by Lewis IX. a prince of the most fingular character, which is to be met with in all the records of hiftory. This monarch united to the mean and abject fuperstition of a monk, all the courage and magnanimity of the greatest hero; and, what may be deemed more extraordinary, the juffice and integrity of the most difinterested patriot, to the mildness and humanity of the most accomplished philosopher. So far from taking advantage of the divifions of the English, or attempting to expel those dangerous rivals from the provinces, which they still possessed in France; he had entertained many scruples with regard

> § Chron. † Annal. Burt. p. 427. ‡ Annal. Burt. p. 428, 439. * Annal Burt. p. 427. Dunft. vol. 1. p. 348.

> > I

regard to the forfeiture pronounced against the King's father, had even expressed Chap. XII. fome intention of reftoring the other provinces, and he was only prevented from taking that imprudent refolution, by the united remonstrances of his own barons, who reprefented the extreme danger of fuch a measure *, and, what had a greater influence on Lewis, the juffice of punishing by a legal fentence the barbarity and felony of John. Wherever this prince interpoled in English affairs, it was always with an intention of composing the differences between the King and his nobility; he recommended to both parties every peaceable and reconciling meafure ; and he used all his authority with the earl of Leicester, his native fubject, to bend him to a compliance with Henry. He made a treaty with England, at a time, when the diffractions of that kingdom were at the greatest height, and when the King's authority was totally annihilated; and the terms, which he granted, might, even in a more prosperous state of their affairs, be deemed reafonable and advantageous by the English. He yielded up some territories which had been conquered from Poictou and Guienne; he enfured the peaceable poffeffion of the latter province to Henry : he agreed to pay that prince a large fum of money; and he only required that the King should, in return, make a final ceffion to France of Normandy, and the other provinces, which he could never entertain any hopes of recovering by force of arms +. This ceffion was ratified by Henry, by his two fons, and two daughters, and by the King of the Romans and his three fons : Leicefter alone, either moved by a vain arrogance, or defirous to ingratiate himfelf with the English populace, protested against the deed, and infifted on the right, however diftant, which might accrue to his countefs ‡. Lewis faw in this obstinacy the unbounded ambition of the man; and as the barons infifted, that the money which was due by treaty, should be at their disposal, not at Henry's, he also faw, and probably with regret, the low condition to which this monarch, who had more erred from weaknefs than malice, was reduced by the turbulency of his own fubjects.

But the fituation of Henry changed foon after much to his advantage. The twenty four barons had now enjoyed the fovereign power for near three years; and had vifibly employed it, not for the reformation of the flate, which was their first pretence, but for the aggrandizement of themselves and of their families. The breach of truft was apparent to all the world : Every order of men felt and murmured against it : The diffentions among the barons themselves, which encreased the evil, made also the remedy more obvious and easy: And the fecret

* M. Paris, p. 604. + Rymer. vol. 1. p. 675. M. Paris, p. 566. Chron. T. Wykes. p. 53. Trevit. p. 208. M. Weft. p. 371. ‡ Chron. T. Wykes. 53. F

VOL. II.

33

1259.

20 May.

1261.

defertion

Chap. XII. 1261. 34

defertion in particular of the earl of Glocester to the crown, seemed to promise Henry certain fuccess in any attempt to refume his authority. Yet dared he not to take that step, so reconcilable both to justice and policy, without making a previous application to Rome, and obtaining an absolution from his oaths and engagements.

THE Pope was at that time very much diffatisfied with the conduct of the barons; who, in order to gain the favour of the people and clergy of England, had expelled all the Italian ecclefiastics, had confiscated their benefices, and feemed determined to maintain the liberties and privileges of the English church, in which the rights of patronage, belonging to their own families, were also included. The extreme animofity of the English clergy against the Italians, was also a fource of his difguft to this order; and an attempt which had been made by them for farther liberty and independance on the civil power, was therefore lefs acceptable to the court of Rome. About the fame time, that the barons at Oxford had annihilated the prerogatives of the monarchy, the clergy met in a fynod at Merton, and paffed feveral decrees, which were no lefs calculated to promote their own grandeur at the expence of the crown. They decreed, that it was unlawful to try the ecclefiaftics by fecular judges; that the clergy were not to regard any prohibitions from civil courts; that lay patrons had no right to confer fpiritual benefices; that the magistrate was obliged, without farther enquiry, to imprifon all excommunicated perfons; and that antient usage, without any particular grant or charter, was a fufficient authority for any clerical poffeffions or privileges *. About a century ago, these claims would have been fanctified by the court of Rome beyond the most fundamental articles of faith : They were the chief points maintained by the great martyr, Becket ; and his refolution in defending them had exalted him to the high flation which he held in the catalogue of Romifh faints : But principles were changed with the times : The Pope was become fomewhat jealous of the great independance of the English church, which made them stand less in need of his protection, and even emboldened them to refift his authority, and complain of the preference given to the Italian courtiers, whose interests, it is natutural to imagine, were the chief object of his concern. He was very ready, therefore, on the King's application, to annul these new constitutions of the church of England +. And at the fame time, he abfolved the King and all his fubjects from the oath, which they had taken to observe the provisions of Oxford 1.

Prince Edward. Prince Edward, whofe enlarged thoughts, though in fuch early youth, had taught him the great prejudice, which his father had incurred, by his levity, in-

* Ann. Burt. p. 389. + Rymer, vol. 1. p. 755. ‡ Rymer, vol. 1. p. 722. M. Paris, p. 666. W. Heming. p. 580. Ypod. Neuft. p. 468. Knyghton, p. 2446.

conftancy

conftancy and frequent breach of promife, refused for a long time to take ad- Chap. XII. vantage of this abfolution; and declared that the provisions of Oxford, however unreasonable in themselves, and however much abused by the barons, ought still to be adhered to by those who had fworn to observe them * : He himself had been conftrained by violence to take that oath; yet was he determined to keep it. By this fcrupulous fidelity, the prince acquired the confidence of all parties, and was afterwards enabled to recover fully the royal authority, and to perform fuch great actions both during his own reign and that of his father.

THE fituation of England, during this period, as well as that of most European kingdoms, was fomewhat peculiar. There was no regular military force maintained in the nation: The fword, however, was not, properly fpeaking, in the hands of the people : The barons were entrusted entirely with the defence of the community; and after any effort, which they made, either against their own prince, or against foreigners, as the military retainers departed to their own home, the armies were diffolved, and could not fpeedily be re-affembled at pleafure. It was easy therefore, for a few barons, by a combination, to get the ftart of the other party, to collect fuddenly their troops, and to appear unexpectedly in the field with an army, which their antagonifts, though equal or even fuperior in power and intereft, would not dare to encounter. Hence the fudden revolutions, which were observable in these governments : Hence the frequent victories obtained without a blow by one faction over another : And hence it happened, that the feeming prevalence of a party, was feldom a prognostic of its long continuance in power and authority.

THE King, fo foon as he received the Pope's absolution from his oath, which was accompanied with menaces of excommunication against all opposers, trusting to the countenance of the church, to the fupport promifed him by many confiderable barons, and to the returning favour of the people, immediately took off the mask, and after justifying his conduct by a proclamation, in which he set forth the private ambition, and the breach of truft, confpicuous in Leicefter and his affociates, declared that he had refumed the government, and was determined thenceforth to exert the royal authority for the protection of his fubjects. He removed Hugh le d'Espenser and Nicholas de Ely, the high justiciary and chaneellor appointed by the barons; and put Philip Baffet and Walter de Merton in their place. He substituted new sheriffs in all the counties, men of character and reputation : He placed new governors in most of the castles : He changed all the officers of his houshold : He summoned a parliament, in which the resump- 23d April.

> * M. Paris, p. 667. F 2

1262.

tion

35

1261.

36

Chap XII. tion of his authority was ratified, with on'y five diffenting voices : And the barons, after making one fruitlefs effort, to take the King by furprize at Winchefter, were obliged to acquiesce in those new regulations *.

THE King, in order to cut off every objection to his conduct, offered to refer all the differences between him and the earl of Leicester, to Margaret queen of France +. The celebrated integrity of Lewis gave a mighty influence to any decifion which iffued from his court; and Henry probably hoped, that the gallantry, on which all barons, as true knights, valued themfelves, would make them ashamed not to submit to the award of that princess. Lewis entirely merited the confidence reposed in him. By an admirable conduct, probably as political as just, he continually interposed his good offices to allay the civil discords of the English : He forwarded all healing measures, which might give fecurity to both parties: And he still endeavoured, tho' in vain, to footh by perfuasion the fierce ambition of the earl of Leicester, and to convince him how much it was his duty to fubmit peaceably to the authority of his fovereign.

1263.

THAT bold and artful confpirator wasno wife difcouraged with the bad fuccess of his past enterprizes. The death of Richard earl of Glocester, who was his chief rival in power, and who, before his decease, had joined the royal party, femed to open a new field to his violence, and to expose the throne to fresh infults and injuries. It was in vain, that the King professed his intentions of obferving strictly the great charter, even of maintaining all the regulations made by the reforming barons at Oxford or afterwards, except those which entirely annihilated the royal authority : These powerful chieftains, now obnoxious to the court, could not peaceably refign the hopes of entire independance and uncontrouled power with which they had flattered themfelves, and which they had fo Civil wars of long enjoyed. Many of them engaged in Leicester's views, and among the reft, Gilbert, the young earl of Glocester, who brought him a mighty accession of power, from the extensive authority posself by that opulent family. Even Henry, fon of the King of the Romans, commonly called Henry d'Allmaine, tho? a prince of the blood, joined the party of the barons against the King, the head of his own family. Leicefter himfelf, who still refided in France, formed fecretly the links of this great confpiracy, and planned the whole fcheme of oper-

THE princes of Wales, notwithstanding the great power of the monarchs, both of the Saxon and Norman line, still preferved authority in their own country; ard tho' they had often been conftrained to pay tribute to the crown of England,

• M. Paris, p. 668. Chron. T. Wykes, p. 55. + Rymer, vol. 1. p. 724.

ENRY III. H

land, they were with difficulty retained in fubordination or even in peace; and Chap. XII. almost throughout every reign fince the conquest, had infested the English frontiers with fuch petty incursions and fudden inroads, as feldom merited to have place in a general hiftory. The English, still contented with repelling their invalions, and chacing them back into their barren mountains, had never purfued the advantages obtained against them, nor attempted, even under their greatest and most active princes, a total, or fo much as a feudal subjection of the country. This advantage was referved to the prefent King, the weakeft and moft indolent. In the year 1237, Lewellen, prince of Wales, declining in years and broke with infirmities, but still more harraffed with the rebellion and undutiful behaviour of his fon, Griffin, had recourfe to the protection of Henry; and confenting to fubject his principality, which had fo long maintained its independance, to vaffalage under the crown of England, purchafed fecurity and tranquillity on thefe dishonourable terms. His eldeft fon and heir, David, renewed the homage to England; and having taken his brother prifoner, delivered him into Henry's hands, who committed him to cuftody in the Tower. That prince, endeavouring to make his escape from confinement, loft his life in the attempt; and the prince of Wales, freed from the apprehensions of fo dangerous a rival, paid thenceforth lefs regard to the English monarch, and even renewed those incurfions, by which the Welch, during fo many ages, had been accuftomed to infest their borders. Lewellyn, however, the fon of Griffin, who fucceeded to his uncle, had been obliged to renew the homage, which was now claimed by England as an eftablished right; but he was well pleased to inflame those civil difcords, on which he refted his prefent fecurity, and founded his hopes of future independance. He entered into a confederacy with the earl of Leicefter, and collecting all the force of his principality, invaded England with an army of 30,000 men. He ravaged the lands of Roger de Mortimer and of all the barons, who adhered to the crown *; he marched into Cheshire, and committed like depredations on prince Edward's territories; every place, where his diforderly troops appeared, was laid wafte with fire and fword; and tho' Mortimer, a gallant and expert foldier, made ftout refistance, it was found neceffary, that the prince himfelf should head the army against this invader. Edward repulsed prince Lewellen, and obliged him to take shelter in the mountains of North Wales : But he was prevented from making farther progrefs against the enemy, by the diforders, which foon after broke out in England.

THE Welfh invafion was the appointed fignal for the malecontent barons to rife in arms; and Leicester coming over secretly from France, collected all the forces

* Chron, Dunft. vol. 1. p. 354.

1263.

1263.1

38

Chap. XII. forces of his party, and commenced an open rebellion. He feized the perfon of the bishop of Hereford; a prelate very obnoxious to all the inferior clergy, on account of his devoted attachment to the court of Rome +. Simon, bifhop of Norwich, and John Manfel, becaufe they had published the Pope's bull, abfolving the King and kingdom from their oaths to obferve the provisions of Oxford, were made prifoners, and exposed to the utmost rage of the party. The King's demefnes were ravaged with unbounded fury 1; and as it was Leicefter's interest to allure to his fide, by the hopes of plunder, all the diforderly ruffians in England, he gave them a general licence to pillage the barons of the opposite party, and even all neutral perfons. But one of the principal refources of his faction was the populace of the cities, particularly of London; and as he had, by his hypocritical pretensions to fanctity, and his zeal against Rome, engaged all the monks and lower ecclefiaftics in his party, his dominion over the inferior ranks of men became absolutely uncontrolable. Thomas Fitz Richard, the mayor of London, a furious and licentious man, gave the countenance of authority to these diforders in London ; and having declared war against the substantial citizens, he loofened all the bands of government, by which that turbulent city was commonly but ill reftrained. On the approach of Easter, the zeal of superftition, the appetite for plunder, or what is often as prevalent with the populace as either of these motives, the pleasure of committing havock and destruction, prompted them to attack the unhappy Jews, who were first pillaged without refistance, and then maffacred, to the number of five hundred perfons §. The Lombard bankers were next exposed to the rage of the people ; and tho', by taking fanctuary in the churches, they escaped with their lives, all their money and goods became a prey to the licentious multitude. Even the houfes of the rich citizens, tho' English, were attacked by night; and way was made by fword and by fire to the depredation of their goods, and often to the deftruction of their perfons. The queen, who, tho' fhe was defended by the Tower, was terrified by the neighbourhood of fuch dangerous commotions, refolved to go by water to the caftle of Windfor; but as the approached the bridge, the populace affembled against her: The cry ran, drown the witch; and befides abufing her with the most scurrilous language, and pelting her with rotten eggs and dirt, they had prepared large ftones to fink her barge, when the thould attempt to thoot the bridge ; and fhe was fo frightened that fhe returned to the Tower ||.

THE violence and fury of Leicester's faction had rifen to fuch a height in all parts of England, that the King, unable to refift their power, was obliged to + Trevet, p. 211. M. Weft. p. 382, 392. ‡ Trevet, p. 211. M. Weft. p. 382. § Chron. T. Wykes, p. 59. || Chron. T. Wykes, p. 57.

fet

HENRY II.

fet on foot a treaty of peace; and to make an accommodation with the barons on Chap. XII. the most difadvantageous terms *. He agreed to confirm anew the provisions of Oxford, even those which entirely annihilated the royal authority; and the barons were again re-inftated in the fovereignty of the kingdom. They reftored Hugh le D'efpenfer to the office of high jufficiary; they appointed their own creatures fheriffs in every county of England; they took poffellion of all the royal caftles and fortreffes; they even named all the officers of the King's houfhold; and they fummoned a parliament to meet at Weftminster, in order to settle more fully their plan of government. They here produced a new lift of twenty four barons, to whom they proposed, that the administration should be entirely committed; and they infifted, that the authority of this junto should continue, not only during the reign of the King, but also during that of prince Edward.

THIS prince, who was the life and foul of the royal party, had unhappily, before the King's accommodation with the barons, been taken prifoner by Leicefter in a parley at Windfor +; and this misfortune, more than any other incident, had determined Henry to fubmit to the ignominious conditions imposed upon him. But having recovered his liberty by the treaty, Edward employed his activity in defence of the prerogatives of his family; and he gained a large party even among those who had at first adhered with the greatest zeal to the cause of the barons. His coufin, Henry d' Allmaine, Reger Bigod earl Marefhal, earl Warrenne, Humphrey Bohun earl of Hereford, John lord Baffet, Ralph Baffet, Hamon l'Eftrange, Roger Mortimer, Henry de Piercy, Robert de Brus, Roger de Leyborne, with almost all the Lords Marchers, as they were called, on the borders of Wales and Scotland, the most warlike parts of the kingdom, declared in favour of the royal caufe; and hoftilities, which were fcarce well composed, were again renewed in every part of England. But the near balance of the parties, joined to the universal clamour of the people, obliged the King and barons to open anew the negotiations for peace; and it was agreed by both fides, to fubmit the differences entirely to the arbitration of the King of France. 1.

THIS virtuous prince, the only man, who, in like circumftances, could fafe- Reference to ly have been intrusted with fuch an authority by a neighbouring nation, had ne- the King of ver ceased to interpose his good offices between the English factions; and had France. even, during the fhort interval of peace, invited over to Paris both the King and the earl of Leicester, in order to accommodate the differences between them ; but found, that the fears and animolities on both fides, as well as the ambition of Leicefter, were fo violent, as to render all his endeavours ineffectual. But when

* Chron. Dunft. vol. 1. p. 358. Trivet, p. 211. + M. Paris, p. 669. Trivet, p. 213. 1 M. Paris, p. 668. Chron. T. Wykes, p. 58. W. Heming. p. 580. Chron. Dunft, vol. 1. p. 363. this 14th Oct.

18th July.

1264.

z3d Jan.

Chap. XII. this folemn appeal, ratified by the oaths and fubfcriptions of the leaders in each faction, was made to his judgment, he was not difcouraged from purfuing his honourable purpose: He summoned the states of France at Amiens; and there, in the prefence of that affembly, as well as in that of the King of England and Peter de Montfort, Leicester's son, he brought this great cause to a trial and examination. It appeared to him, that the provisions of Oxford, even had they not been extorted by force, had they not been fo exorbitant in their nature and fubverfive of the antient conftitution, were expressly established as a temporary expedient, and could not, without breach of truft, be rendered perpetual by the barons. He therefore annulled these provisions; restored to the King the posseficition of his caftles, and the power of nomination to the great offices; allowed him to retain what foreigners he pleafed in his kingdom, and even to confer on them places of truft and dignity; and in a word, re-eftablished the royal power on the fame footing, on which it flood before the meeting of the famous parliament at Oxford. But while he thus fuppreffed dangerous innovations, and preserved unimpaired the prerogatives of the English crown, he was not negligent of the rights of the people; and befides ordering that a general amnefty should be granted for all past offences, he declared that his award was not any wife meant to derogate from the privileges and liberties, which the nation enjoyed by any former conceffions or charters from the crown *.

THIS equitable fentence was no fooner known in England, than Leicefter and his confederates determined to reject it, and to have recourse to arms, in order to procure to themselves more fafe and advantageous conditions from the King +. Without regard to his oaths and fubfcriptions, that enterprizing confpirator orthe civil wars. dered his two fons, Richard and Peter de Montfort, in conjunction with Robert de Ferrars, earl of Derby, to attack the city of Worcester; while Henry and Simon de Montfort, two others of his sons, assisted by the prince of Wales, were ordered to commit ravages on the estate of Roger de Mortimer. He himself refided at London; and employing as his inftrument, Fitz-Richard, the feditious mayor, who had violently and illegally prolonged his authority, he wrought up that city to the higheft ferment and agitation. The populace formed themfelves into bands and companies : Chofe leaders : Practifed all military exercifes : Committed violence on all the royalifts : And to give them greater countenance in their diforders, an affociation was entered into between the city and eighteen great barons, never to make peace with the King but by common confent and approbation. At the head of those who fwore to maintain this affociation, were > * Rymer, vol. 1. p. 776, 777, &c. Chron. T. Wykes, p. 58. Knyghton, p. 2446. + Chron. Dunft. vol. 1. p. 363.

Renewal of

the

the earls of Leicester, Glocester and Derby, with le d' Espenser, the chief justi- Chap XII. ciary; men who had all previoully fworn to fubmit to the award of the French monarch. Their only pretence for this breach of faith, was, that the latter part of Lewis's fentence was, as they affirmed, a contradiction to the former : He ratified the charter of liberties, yet annulled the provisions of Oxford; which were only calculated, as they maintained, to preferve that charter ; and without which, in their estimation, they had no fecurity for its observance.

THE King and prince, finding a civil war inevitable, prepared themfelves for defence; and fummoning the military vaffals from all quarters, and being re-inforced by Baliol, lord of Galloway, Brus lord of Annandale, Henry Piercy, John Comyn*, and other barons of the north, they composed an army, formidable as well from its numbers, as its military prowefs and experience. The first enterprize of the royalists was the attack of Northampton; which was defended by Simon de Montfort, with many of the principal barons of that party : And a breach being made in the walls by Philip Baffet, the place was carried by affault, and both the governor and the garrifon were made prifoners of war +. The royalists marched thence to Leicester and Nottingham, both which places opened their gates to them ‡; and prince Edward proceeded with a detachment into Derby, in order to ravage with fire and fword the lands of the earl of that name, and take revenge on him for his difloyalty §. Like maxims of war prevailed with both parties throughout England; and the kingdom was thus exposed in a moment to greater devastation, from the animofties of the rival barons, than it would have fuffered from many years of foreign or even of domeftic hoftilities, conducted by more humane and more generous principles.

THE earl of Leicefter, mafter of London, and of the courties in the fouth eaft of England, formed the fiege of Rochefter ||, which alone held for the King in those parts, and which, befides earl Warrenne, the governor, was garrifoned by many noble and powerful barons of the royal party. The King and prince haftened from Nottingham, where they were then quartered, to the relief of the place; and on their approach, Leicefter raifed the fiege and retreated to London, which, being the center of his power, he was afraid, night, in his absence, fall into the King's hands, either by force, or by a correspondence with the principal inhabitants, who were all of them fecretly inclined to the royal caufe. Reinforced by a body of 15000 citizens, and having fummoned his partizans from 5th April.

1264.

41

all

^{*} Rymer, vol. 1. p. 772. M. Weft. p. 385. Ypod. Neuft. p. 469. + Chron. T. Wykes, p. 60. W. Heming, p. 581. Chron. Dunft. p. 367. M. Weft. p. 385. t Chron. T. Wykes. p. 60. Knyghton, p. 2447. § M. Weft. p. 385. || M. Paris, p. 669. Chron. T. Wykes, p. 61. 4 W. Heming, p. 582. Chron, Dunft, vol. 1. p. 369. VOL. II. G

1264.

42

Chap. XII. all quarters, he thought himself ftrong enough to hazard a general battle with the royalists, and to determine the fate of the nation in one great engagement, which if it proved fuccefsful, must be decifive against the King, who had no retreat to his broken troops in those parts ; while Leicester himself in case of any finister accident, could easily take shelter in the city. To give the better colouring to his cause, he previously fent a message with conditions of peace to Henry, fubmiffive in the language, but exorbitant in the demands *; and when the meffenger returned with the lye and defiance from the King, the prince, and the King of the Romans, he fent a new meffage, renouncing, in the name of himfelf and of the affociated barons, all fealty and allegiance to Henry. He then marched out of the city with his army, divided into four bodies: The first commanded by his two fons, Henry and Guy de Mountfort, with Humphrey de Bohun, earl of Hereford, who had deferted to the barons; the fecond led by the earl of Glocefter, with William de Montchefney and John Fitz John; the third, composed of Londoners, under the command of Nicholas de Segrave : The fourth headed by himfelf in perfon. The bifhop of Chichefter gave a general abfolution to the army, accompanied with affurances, that, if any of them fell in the action, they would infallibly be received into heaven, as the reward of their fuffering in fo meritorious a cause !

Battle-of Lewes. 14th May.

LEICESTER, who possefied great talents for war, conducted his march with fuch skill and secrecy, that he had well nigh surprized the royalists in their quarters at Lewes in Suffex : But the promptitude of prince Edward foon repaired this negligence; and he led out the King's army to the field in three bodies. He himself conducted the van, attended by earl Warrenne and William de Valence : The main body was commanded by the King of the Romans and his fon Henry : The King himfelf was placed in the rear at the head of his principal nobility. Prince Edward rushed upon the Londoners, who had demanded the post of honour in leading the rebel army, but who, from their want of discipline and experience, were ill qualified to refift the gentry and military men, of whom the prince's body were composed. They were broke in an inftant; were chased off the field of battle; and Edward, transported by his martial ardour, and eager to revenge the infolence of the Londoners against his mother +, put them to the fword for the length of four miles, without giving them any quarter, and without reflecting on the fate, which in the mean while attended the reft of the army. The earl of Leicester seeing the royalists thrown into confusion by their eagerness in pursuit and plunder, led on his remaining troops against the bodies commanded

* M. Paris, p. 669. W. Heming, p. 583. + M. Paris, p. 670. Chron. T. Wykes, p. 62. W. Heming, p. 583. M. Weft. p. 387. Ypod. Neufl. p. 469. H. Knyghton, p. 2450.

4

by

by the two royal brothers : He defeated with great flaughter the forces led by the Chap XII. King of the Romans; and that monarch was obliged to yield himfelf prifoner to the earl of Glocefter: He penetrated to the body, where the King himfelf was placed, threw it into diforder, purfued his advantage, chaced it into the town of Lewes, and obliged Henry to furrender himfelf prifoner *.

PRINCE Edward, returning to the field of battle from his precipitate purfuit of the Londoners, was aftonifhed to find it covered with the dead bodies of his friends, and ftill more to hear that his father and uncle were defeated and taken prifoners, and that Arundel, Comyn, Brus, Hamon l'Eftrange, Roger Leyborne, and all the confiderable barons of his party, were in the hands of the victorious enemy. Earl Warrenne, Hugh Bigod, and William de Valence, ftruck with defpair at this event, immediately took to flight, hurried to Pevencey, and made their escape beyond sea +: But the prince, intrepid amidst the greatest difafters, exhorted his troops to revenge the death of their friends, to relieve the royal captives, and to fnatch an eafy conquest from an enemy, difordered by their own victory ‡. He found his followers intimidated by their fituation, while Leicefter, afraid of a fudden and violent blow from the prince, amufed him by a pretence of negotiation, till he was able to recall his troops from the purfuit, and to bring them into order §. There now appeared no farther refource to the royal party; furrounded by the armies and garrifons of the enemy, deftitute of forage and provisions, and deprived of their fovereign, as well as of all their principal leaders, who could alone infpirit them to an obftinate refiftance. The prince, therefore, was obliged to fubmit to Leicester's terms, which were short and fevere, agreeable to the fuddenness and necessity of the fituation. He ftipulated, that he and Henry d' Allmain should furrender themselves prisoners as pledges in the place of the two Kings; that all other prifoners on both fides should be releafed ||; and that in order to fettle fully the terms of agreement, applications should be made to the King of France, that he should name fix Frenchmen, three prelates and three noblemen : Thefe fix to choofe two others of their own country : And thefe two to choose one Englishman, who, in conjunction with themfelves, were to be invefted by both parties with full powers to make what regulations they thought proper for the fettlement of the kingdom. The prince and young Henry accordingly delivered themfelves into Leicefter's hands, who fent them under a guard to Dover caftle. Such are the terms of agreement, commonly called the Mije of Lewes, from an obfolete French term of that

* M. Paris, p. 670. M. Weft. p. 387. § W. Heming, p. 584. ing, p. 584.

+ Chron. T. Wykes, p. 63. t W. Hem-|| M, Paris, p. 671. Knyghton, p. 2451. G 2 meaning :

43

1264.

1264.

44

Chap. XII. meaning : For it appears, that all the gentry and nobility of England, who difdained the language of their native country, made familiar use of the French, till this period, and for fome time after.

LEICESTER, had no fooner obtained this great advantage, and got the whole royal family in his power, than he openly violated every article of the treaty, and acted as fole mafter, and even tyrant of the kingdom. He still detained the King in effect a prisoner, and made use of that prince's authority to purposes. the most prejudicial to his interests, and the most oppressive of his people *. Heevery where difarmed the royalifts, and kept all his own partizans in a military posture + : He observed the same partial conduct in the delivery of the captives, and even threw many of the royalists into prifon beside those who were taken in the battle of Lewes : He carried the King from place to place, and obliged. all the royal caftles, under pretence of Henry's commands, to receive a governor and garrifon of his own appointment : All the officers of the crown and of the household were named by him; and the whole authority, as well as arms of the flate, was lodged in his hands: He inflituted in the counties a new kind of magistracy, endowed with new and arbitrary powers, that of confervators of the peace ‡: His rapacious avarice appeared barefaced to the whole nation, and were sufficient to make us question the greatness of his ambition, at least the largeness of his mind; if we had not reason to think, that he intended to employ. his unbounded acquifitions as the inftruments for acquiring farther power and grandeur. He seized no less than the estates of eighteen barons as his share of the fpoil gained in the battle of Lewes : He engroffed to himfelf the ranfom of all the prifoners; and told his barons, with a wanton infolence, that it was fufficient for them, that he had faved them by that victory from the forfeitures and attainders, which hung over them §: He even treated the earl of Glocester in the fame injurious manner, and turned to his own profit the ranfom of the King of the Romans, who had in the field of battle, furrendered himfelf to that nobleman. Henry, his eldeft fon, made a monopoly of all the wool of the kingdom, the only valuable commodity for foreign markets which it at that time produced ||. The inhabitants of the cinque-ports, during the prefent diffolution of. government, betook themfelves to the most licentious piracy, made a prey of the ships of all nations, threw the mariners into the sea, and by these practices foon banished all merchants from the English coasts and harbours. Every foreign commodity role to an exorbitant price; and woollen cloaths, which the

* Rymer, vol. 1. p. 790, 791, &c. 212. Chron. T. Wykes, p. 63. || Chron, T. Wykes, p. 65.

+ Rymer, vol. 1. p. 795. Brady's Appeals, Nº. 211, ‡ Rymer, vol. 1. p. 792. § Knyghton, p. 2451.

English

English had not then the art of dying, were worn by them white, and without Chap. XII. receiving the laft hand of the manufacturer. In answer to the complaints which arofe on this occasion, Leicester replied, that the kingdom could well enough fubfift within itfelf, and needed no intercourse with foreigners. And it was found, that he even combined with the pyrates of the cinque ports, and received as his fhare the third of their prizes *.

No farther mention was made of the reference to the King of France, fo effential an article in the agreement of Lewes; and Leicester summoned a parliament, composed altogether of his own partizans, in order to rivet, by their authority, that power which he had acquired by fo much violence, and which he used with fo much tyranny and injuffice. An ordinance was there paffed, to which the King's confent had been previoufly extorted, that every act of royal power should be exercised by a council of nine perfons, who were to be chosen and removed by the majority of three, Leicester himself, the earl of Glocester, and the bishop of Chichester +. By this intricate plan of government, the scepter was really put into Leicefter's hands; as he had the entire direction of the bilhop of Chichefter, and thereby commanded all the refolutions of the council of three, who could appoint or difcard at pleafure every member of the fupreme council.

But it was impossible that things could long remain in this strange situation. It behoved Leicester either to descend with some danger into the rank of a fubject, or to mount up with no lefs into that of a fovereign ; and his exorbitant ambition, unreftrained by any fear or principle, gave too much reafon to fufpect him of the latter intention. Mean while, he was exposed to anxiety from every quarter ; and felt that the smallest incident was capable of overturning that immense and ill cemented fabric, which he had reared. The Queen, whom her hufband had left abroad, had collected in foreign parts an army of desperate adventurers, and had affembled a great number of ships, with a view of invading the kingdom, and of bringing relief to her unfortunate family. Lewis, detefting Leicefter's ufurpations and perjuries, and difgusted by the refusal of the English barons, to fubmit to his award, favoured all her enterprizes, and was generally believed to be making preparations for the fame purpofe. An English army, by the pretended authority of the captive King, was affembled on the fea coaft to oppofe this projected invafion 1; but Leicefter owed his fecurity more to crofs winds, which long detained and at last diffipated and broke the Queen's fleet, than to * Chron. T. Wykes, p. 65. + Rymer, vol. 1. p. 793. Brady's App. Nº. 213. 1 Brady's App. Nº. 216, 217. Chron. Dunft. vol. 1. p. 373. M. Weft. p. 385.

8

1204-

45 any

Chap. XII. any refiftance, which, in their present situation, could be expected from the English *.

LEICESTER found himself better able to resist the spiritual thunders, which were levelled against him. The Pope, still adhering to the King's cause against the barons, difpatched cardinal Guido as his legate into England, with orders to excommunicate the three earls, Leicester, Glocester, and Norfolk, by name, and all others in general, who concurred in the oppreffion and captivity of their fovereign +. Leicester menaced the legate with death, if he set his foot within the kingdom; but Guido, meeting in France the bishops of Winchester, London, and Worcefter, who had been fent thither on a negociation, commanded them, under the penalty of ecclefiaftical cenfures, to carry his bull into England, and to publifh it against the barons. When the prelates arrived off the coast, they were boarded by the pyratical mariners of the cinque ports, to whom probably they gave a hint of the cargo, which they brought along with them : The bull was torn and thrown into the fea; which furnished the artful prelates with a plausible excuse for not obeying the orders of the legate ‡. Leicester appealed from Guido to the Pope in perfon; but before his ambassadors could reach Rome to defend his caufe, the Pope was dead, and they found the legate himfelf, from whom they had appealed, feated on the papal throne, under the name of Urban IV. That daring leader was no wife difmayed with this event ; and as he found that a great part of his popularity in England was founded on his oppofition to Rome, which was now become odious, he perfifted with the more obftinacy in the profecution of his measures.

1265.

mons.

THAT he might both encrease, and turn to advantage his popularity, Leicester 20th January. fummoned a new parliament in London, where he knew his power was uncontrolable; he fixed this affembly on a more democratical basis, than any which had ever been fummoned fince the foundation of the English monarchy. Befides the barons of his own party, and feveral ecclefiaftics, who were not immediate Houseofcom- tenants of the crown ; he ordered returns to be made of two knights from every shire, and what is more remarkable, of deputies from the buroughs, which had always in former ages been esteemed of too mean a rank to be allowed a place in the national councils §. This period is commonly effeemed the epoch of the house of commons of England; and it is certainly the first time, that mention is made by historians of any representatives fent to parliament by the boroughs. In > * Chron. Mailr. p. 226. Chron. T. Wykes, p. 63. + Rymer, vol. 1. p. 798. Chron. Dunft. vol. 1. p. 373. ‡ M. Paris, p. 671. T. Wykes, p. 65. § Rymer, vol. 1. p. 802.

> > all

all the general accounts given in preceding times of parliaments, the nobility and Chap. XII. barons are only spoke of by historians as the constituent members; and even in the most particular narratives delivered of parliamentary transactions, as in the trial of Thomas a Becket, where the events of each day, and almost of each hour, are carefully recorded by contemporary authors *, there is not, throughout the whole, the least appearance of a house of commons. But tho' that house derived its first existence from fo precarious and even fo invidious an origin as Leicefter's usurpation, it proved foon, when fummoned by the legal princes, one of the most useful, and, in process of time, one of the most powerful members of the national conftitution; and gradually refcued the kingdom from ariftocratical as well as from regal tyranny. But Leicester's policy, if we must afcribe to him fo great a bleffing, only forwarded by fome years an inflitution, for which the general state of things had already prepared the nation; and it is otherwife inconceivable, that a plant, fet by fo inaufpicious a hand, could have attained to fo vigorous a growth, and have flourished in the midst of fuch tempests and convulfions. The feudal fystem, with which the liberty, much more the power of the commons, was totally incompatible, began gradually to decline; and both King and people, who felt its inconveniences, contributed to favour this new power, which was more fubmiffive than the barons to the regular authority of the crown, and at the fame time afforded protection to the inferior orders of the flate.

LEICESTER, having thus affembled a parliament of his own model, and trufting to the attachment of the populace of London, feized the opportunity of crushing his rivals among the powerful barons. Robert de Ferrars, earl of Derby, was accufed in the King's name, feized, and committed to cuftody, without being brought to any legal trial +. John Gifford, menaced with the fame fate, fled from London, and took shelter in the marches of Wales. Even the earl of Glocefter, whofe power and influence had fo much contributed to the fuccefs of the barons, but who was of late extremely difgusted by Leicester's arbitrary and infolent conduct, who engrossed the whole power of the party, found himself in danger from the prevailing authority of his antient confederate; and he retired from parliament 1. This known division among the leaders, gave courage to all Leicester's enemies and to the King's friends; who were now fure of protection from fo potent a leader. Tho' Roger Mortimer, Hamon L'eftrange, and other powerful marchers of Wales, had been obliged to leave the kingdom, their authority full remained over the territories fubjected to their jurifdiction ; and there were many others who were difpofed to give difturbance to the new government.

* Fitz Stephen Hift Quad ip Hoveden, &c + Chron. T. Wykes, p. 66. Ann. Waverl. 1 M. Paris, p. 671. Ann. Waverl. p. 216. p; 216; 1265.

The 1265.

48

Chap. XII. The animofities, infeparable from the feudal ariftocracy, broke out with fuch fresh violence, and threatened the kingdom with new convulsions and diforders.

THE earl of Leicefter, furrounded with these difficulties, embraced a measure, from which he proposed to reap some present advantages, but which proved in the end the fource of all his future calamities. The active and intrepid prince Edward had languished in prifon ever fince the fatal battle of Lewes; and being extremely popular in the kingdom, there arofe a general defire of feeing him again reftored to liberty *. As Leicester found, that he could with difficulty oppose the concurring wifnes of the nation, he flipulated with the prince, that in return, he should order his adherents to deliver up to the barons, all their caftles, particularly those on the borders of Wales; and should fwear neither to depart the kingdom during three years, nor introduce into it any foreign forces +. The King took an oath to the fame effect, and he also passed a charter, in which he confirmed the agreement or mife of Lewis; and even permitted his subjects to rife in arms against him, if he should ever attempt to infringe it ‡. So little care had Leicester taken, tho' he constantly made use of the authority of this captive prince, to preferve to him any appearance of royalty or kingly prerogatives.

11th March. In confequence of this treaty, prince Edward was brought into Westminsterhall, and was declared free by the barons: But inftead of really recovering his liberty, as he had vainly expected, he found, that the whole transaction was a fraud on the part of Leicefter; that he still continued a prisoner at large, and was strictly guarded by the emissaries of that nobleman ; and that while the faction reaped all the benefit from the performance of his part of the treaty, care was taken that he himself should enjoy no advantage by it. As Glocester, on his rupture with the barons, had retired for fafety to his eftates on the borders of Wales; Leicefter followed him with an army to Hereford §, continued ftill to menace and negotiate, and that he might add authority to his caufe, he carried both the King and prince along with him. The earl of Glocefter here concerted with young Edward the manner of that prince's efcape. He found means to convey to him a horfe of an extraordinary fwiftnefs; and appointed Roger Mortimer, who had returned into the kingdom, to be ready at hand with 28th May. a finall party to receive the prince, and to guard him to a place of fafety. Edward pretended to take the air with fome of Leicester's retinue, who were his guards; and making matches between their horfes, after he thought he had tired and blown them fufficiently, he fuddenly mounted Glocefter's horfe, called to his > > attendants, attendants, that he had long enough enjoyed the pleasure of their company, and Chap. XII. now bid them adieu. They followed him for fome space, without being able to overtake him; and the appearance of Mortimer with his company put an end to their pursuit *.

> * Knyghton, p. 2451. † Ann. Waverl. p. 216. † Blackerton's Mag. Charta, p. Chron. Dunft. vol. 1. p. 378. § Chron. T. Wykes, p. 67. Ann. Waverl. p. 218. W. Heming. p. 585. Chron. Dunft. vol. 1. p. 383, 384.

THE royalists, fecretly prepared for this happy event, immediately flew to arms; and the joy of this gallant prince's delivery, the oppressions under which the nation laboured, the expectation of a new scene of affairs, and the countenance of the earl of Glocester, procured Edward an army which Leicester was utterly unable to withftand +. This nobleman found himfelf in a remote quarter of the kingdom, furrounded by his enemies, barred of all communication with his friends by the Severne, whofe bridges Edward had broke down ‡, and obliged to fight the caufe of his party under fuch multiplied difadvantages. In this extremity he wrote to his fon, Simon de Montfort, to hasten from London with an army for his relief; and Simon had advanced to Kenilworth, with that view; where fancying that all Edward's force and attention were directed against his father, he lay perfectly fecure and unguarded. But the prince, making a fudden and forced march, furprized him in his camp, diffipated his army, and took the earl of Oxford, and many other noblemen prifoners, almost without refistance §. Leicefter, ignorant of his fon's fate, passed the Severne in boats during Edward's absence, and lay at Evesham, in expectation of being every hour joined by his friends from London : When the prince, who made profit of every favourable Battle of Evemoment, appeared in the field before him. Edward made a body of his troops tham, and advance from the road which led to Kenilworth, and ordered them to carry the cefter. death of Leibanners taken from Simon's army; while he himfelf, making a circuit with the 4th August. reft of his army, proposed to attack the enemy from the other quarter ||. Leicefter was long deceived by this ftratagem, and took one division of Edward's army for his friends; but at last, perceiving his mistake, and observing the great fuperiority and excellent difposition of the royalists, he exclaimed, that they had learned from him their military order; adding, " The Lord have mercy on our " fouls: for I fee our bodies are the prince's 4." The battle immediately began, tho' on very unequal terms. Leicester's army, by living in the mountains of Wales without bread, which was not then much used among the inhabitants *, had been extremely weakened by ficknefs and defertion, and was foon broke by

* M. Paris, p. 672. Chron. T. Wykes, p. 97. Ann. Waverl. p. 218. W. Heming, p. 585. Knyghton, p. 2452. + Chron. T. Wykes, p. 68. t Chron. Dunft. vol. 1. p. 383. § M. Paris, p. 672. Chron. Mailr. p. 230. Chron. T. Wykes, p. 69. Ann. Waverl. p. 219. W. Heming, p. 586. Knyghton, p. 2452. || M. Paris, p. 672. Chron. Mailr. p. 231. 4. M. Paris, p. 672. W. Heming. p. 586. Knyghton, p. 2453. * Chron. T. Wykes, p. 69. VOL. II.

49

1265.

H

the

Chap. XII. 1265.

the victorious royalifts; while his Welfh allies, accuftomed to a defultory kind of war, immediately took to flight, and were purfued with great flaughter *. Leicefter himfelf, afking for quater, was flain in the heat of the action, with his eldeft fon Henry, Hugh le d'Efpenfer, and about one hundred and fixty knights, and many other gentlemen of his party. The old King had been purpofely placed by the rebels in the front of the battle; and being clad in armour, and thereby not known by his friends, he received an wound, and was in danger of his life: But crying out, I am Henry of Winchefter, your king, he was faved; and put in a place of fecurity by his fon, who flew to his affiftance \ddagger .

THE violence, ingratitude, tyranny, rapacity, and treachery of the earl of Leicefter, give a very bad idea of his moral character, and make us regard his death, as the most happy event, which, in this conjuncture, could have happened to the English nation : Yet must we allow the man to have posseful great abilities, and the appearance of great virtues, who, tho' a ftranger, could, at a time when ftrangers were the most odious, and the most universally decried, have acquired fo extensive an interest in the kingdom, and have fo nearly paved his way to the throne itfelf. His military capacity, and his political craft, were equally eminent : He poffeffed the talents both of governing men and conducting bufiness : And tho' his ambition was boundless, it feems neither to have exceeded his courage nor his genius; and he had the happiness of making the low populace, as well as the haughty barons, co-operate towards the fuccefs of his felfifh and dangerous purposes. A prince of greater ability and vigour than Henry might have directed the talents of this nobleman either to the exaltation of his throne, or to the good of his people. But the advantages given to Leicefter, by the weak and variable administration of the King, brought on the ruin of royal authority, and produced infinite confusions in the kingdom, which indeed in the end : preferved and extremely improved the national liberty and conftitution. His popularity, even after his death, continued fo great, that, tho' excommunicated by Rome, the people believed him to be a faint ; and many miracles were faid to be wrought upon his tomb 1.

Settlement of the government.

THE victory of Evefham, with the death of Leicefter, proved decifive in favour of the royalifts, and made an equal, tho' a very opposite imprefion on friends and enemies, in every part of England. The King of the Romans recovered his liberty: The other prifoners of the royal party were not only freed, but courted, by their keepers: Fitz-Richard, the feditious mayor of London, who had marked out forty of the moft wealthy citizens for flaughter, immediately ftopped his hand on receiving news of this greatevent: And almost all the caftles garrifoned by the barons, haftened to make their fubmiffions and to open their gates to the King. Chap. XII. The isle of Axholme alone, and that of Ely, trufting to the strength of their situation, ventured to make refiftance; but were at last reduced, as well as the caftle of Dover, by the valour and activity of prince Edward *. Adam de Gourdon, a courageous baron, maintained himfelf fome time in the forefts of Hampfhire, committed depredations on the neighbourhood, and obliged the prince to lead a body of troops into that country against him. Edward attacked the camp of the rebels; and being transported by the ardour of action, leapt over the trench with a few followers, and encountered Gourdon himfelf in fingle combat. The victory was long difputed between these valiant combattants; but ended at last in the prince's favous, who wounded his antagonist. threw him from his horfe, and took him priferer. He not only granted him his life; but introduced him that very night to the queen at Guilford, procured him his pardon, reftored him to his eftate, received him into favour, and was ever after very faithfully ferved by him +.

* Knyghton, p. 2453. † Chron. de Nailr. p. 232. W. Heming. p. 587. ‡ Chron. de Mailr. p. 232.

A total victory of the fovereign over fo extensive a rebellion commonly produces a revolution of government, and ftrengthens, as well as enlarges, for fome time, the prerogatives of the crown: Yet no facrifices of national liberty were made on this occasion ; the great charter remained still inviolate ; and the King. fenfible that his own barons, by whofe affiftance done he had prevailed, were no lefs jealous of their independance than the other party, feems thenceforth to have more carefully abstained from all those exertions of arbitrary power, which had afforded to plaufible a pretence to the rebels. The clemency of this victory is alfo remarkable : No blood was fhed on the fcaffdd : No attainders, except of the Mountfort family, were executed : And tho' a parliament, affembled at Winchefter, forfeited all those, who had borne arms against the King, eafy compositions were made with them for their lands 1; and the higheft fum, levied on the most notorious offenders, exceeded not five years rent of their estate. Even the earl of Derby, who again rebelled, after having been pardoned and reftored to his fortune, was obliged to pay only feven years ent, and was a fecond time reftored. The mild disposition of the King, and the prudence of the prince, tempered the infolence of victory, and gradually reflored order to the feveral members of the flate, disjointed by fo long a continuance of civil wars and commotions.

THE city of London, which had carried farthet the rage and animofity againft the King, and which feemed determined to ftand upon its defence after almost

* M. Paris, p. 676. W. Heming, p. 588. † M. Pari, p. 675. ‡ M. Paris, p. 675.

H 2

131 all

1205.

1266.

Chap. XII. 1255. 52

all the kingdom had fubmitted, was, after fome interval, reftored to moft of its liberties and privileges, and Fitz Richard, the mayor, who had been guilty of fo much illegal violence, was only punifhed by fine and imprifonment. The countefs of Leicefter, the King's fifter, who had been extremely forward in all attacks on the royal family, was difmiffed the kingdom with her two fons, Simon and Guy *, who proved very ungrateful for this lenity. Five years afterwards, they affaffinated, at Viterbo in Italy, their coufin Henry d' Allmaine, who at that very time was endeavouing to make their peace with the King; and by taking fanctuary in the church of the Francifcans, they efcaped the punifhment due to fo great an enormity +.

1267.

THE merits of the earl of Glocester, after he returned to his allegiance, had been fo great, in reftoring the prince to his liberty, and affifting him in his victories against the rebellious barons, that it was almost impossible to content him in his demands; and his youth and temerity, as well as his great power, tempted him, on fome new difgust, to raife again the flames of rebellion in the kingdom. The mutinous populace of London, at his infligation, took to arms; and the prince was obliged to collect an army of 30,000 men, in order to suppres them ‡. Even this fecond rebellion did not provoke the King to any acts of cruelty; and the earl of Glocester himself escaped with a total impunity. He was only obliged to enter into a bond of 20,000 marks, that he never again would be guilty of rebellion §: A strange method of enforcing the laws, and a proof of the dangerous independance of the barons in those ages! These potent nobles were, from the danger of the example, averfe to the execution of the laws of forfeiture and felony against any of their brethren; tho' they could not with a good grace refuse to concur in obliging them to fulfill any voluntary contract and engagement, into which they had entered.

1270.

THE prince, finding the flate of the kingdom tolerably compofed, was feduced, by his avidity for glory, and by the prejudices of the age, as well as by the earneft follicitations of the King of France, to undertake an expedition againft the infidels in the Holy Land ||; and he endeavoured previoufly to fettle the flate in fuch a manner, as to dread no bad effects from his abfence. As the dangerous power and turbulent difposition of the earl of Glocefter gave him apprehensions, he infifted on carrying him along with him, in confequence of a vow,

* Chron. T. Wykes, p. 72. p. 94. W. Heming. p. 589. Trevet, p. 240. Wykes, p. 81. M. Paris, p. 677. * Chron. T. Wykes, p. 79. Chron. T. Wykes, p. 79. * Chron.

which

which that nobleman had made to undertake the fame voyage; and in the mean Chap. XIL. time, he obliged him to refign fome of his caftles, and to enter into a new bond not to difturb the peace of the kingdom *. He failed from England with an army; and arrived in Lewis's camp before Tunis in Africa, where he found that great monarch already dead, from the intemperance of the climate and the fatigues of his enterprize. The great and only weakness of this prince was his imprudent zeal for Croifades; but it was this prepoffeffion chiefly that procured him from the clergy the title of St. Lewis, by which he is known in the French hiftory; and if that appellation had not been fo extremely profituted by the Romish church, as to become rather a term of reproach, he feems, by his uniform probity and goodnefs, as well as his piety, to have fully merited the title. He was fucceeded by his fon, Philip, denominated the Hardy; a prince of fome merit, tho' much inferior to that of his father.

PRINCE Edward, not discouraged by this event, continued his voyage to the Holy Land, where he fignalized himfelf by acts of valour : Revived the glory of the English name in those parts : And struck fuch terror into the Saracens, that they employed an affaffin to murder him, who wounded him in the arm, but perished in the attempt +. Mean while, his absence from England was attended with many of those pernicious confequences, which had been dreaded from it. The laws were not executed : The barons oppreffed the common people with impunity 1 : They gave shelter on their eftates to bands of robbers, whom they employed in committing ravages on the eftates of their enemies: The populace of London returned to their ufual licentioufnefs : And the old King, unequal to the burthen of government, called aloud for his gallant fon to return §, and to affift him in fwaying that fcepter, which was ready to drop from his feeble and uncertain hands. At last, overcome by the cares of government, and the infirmities of age, he visibly declined, and he expired at St. Edmondsbury in the 64th year of his age, and 56th of his reign; the longest reign which is to be met with in the English annals. His brother, the King of the Romans (for he never attained the title of emperor) died about feven months before him.

THE most obvious circumstances of Henry the third's character is his incapa- and character city for government, which rendered him as much a prifoner in the hands of his of the King. own ministers and favourites, and as little at his own disposal, as when detained a captive in the hands of his enemies. From this fource, rather than from infincerity or treachery, arofe his negligence in observing his promises; and he was

* Chron. T. Wykes, p. 90. + M. Paris, p. 678, 679. W. Heming, p. 520. t Chron. Dunft. vol. 1. p. 404. § Rymer, vol. 1. p. 869. M. Paris, p. 678.

1272. 16th Novr. Death

too

1271.

53

1270.

1272.

54

Thap. XII. too eafily induced, for the fake of present convenience, to facrifice the lafting advantages arifing from the truft and confidence of his people. Hence were derived his profusion to favourites, his attachment to strangers, the variableness of his conduct, his hafty refentments, and his fudden forgiveness and return of affection. Inftead of reducing the dangerous power of his nobles, by obliging them to obferve the laws towards their inferiors, and fetting them the falutary example in his own government; he was feduced to imitate their conduct, and to make his arbitrary will, or rather that of his ministers, the rule of his actions. Instead of accommodating himfelf, by a strict frugality, to the embarrassed fituation in which his revenue had been left, by the military expeditions of his uncle, the diffipations of his father, and the usurpations of the barons; he was tempted to lewy money by irregular exactions, which, without inriching himfelf, impoverished, at least difgusted his people. Of all men, nature seemed least to have fitted him for being a tyrant; yet are there inftances of oppreffion in his reign, which, tho' derived from the precedents left him by his predeceffors, had been carefully guarded against by the great charter, and are inconsistent with all rules of good government. And on the whole, we may fay, that greater abilities with his good difpositions, would have prevented him from falling into his faults; or with worfe difpositions, would have enabled him to maintain and defend them.

THIS prince was noted for his piety and devotion, and his regular attendance on public worfhip; and a faying of his on that head is much celebrated by antient writers. He was engaged in a difpute with Lewis IX. of France, concerning the preference between fermons and maffes : He maintained the fuperiority of the latter, and affirmed, that he would rather have one hour's conversation with a friend, than hear twenty the most elaborate discourses, pronounced in praise of him *.

HENRY left two fons, Edward his fucceffor, and Edmond earl of Lancafter; and two daughters, Margaret queen of Scotland, and Beatrix, dutchefs of Brittanny. He had five other children, who died in their infancy.

Miscellaneous

THE following are the most remarkable laws enacted during this reign. There transactions of had been great disputes between the civil and ecclesiaftical courts about bastardy. The common law had deemed all those bastards who were born before wedlock : By the canon law they were ligitimate : And when any difpute of inheritance arofe, it had been formerly ufual for the civil courts to iffue writs to the fpiritual, directing them to enquire into the legitimacy of the perfor. The bishop always returned an answer agreeable to the canon law, tho' contrary to

* Walfing. Edw. 1. p. 43-

the

the municipal law of the kingdom. For this reafon, the civil courts had chang. Chap. XII. ed the nature of their writ, and instead of requiring the spiritual courts to enquire concerning the legitimacy of the perfon, they only proposed the fimple queftion of fact, whether he was born before or after the marriage. The prelates complained of this practice to the parliament affembled at Merton in the twentieth of this King, and defired that the civil law might be rendered conformable to the canon : But received from all the nobility the memorable reply : Nolumus leges Angliæ mutare : We will not change the laws of England *.

AFTER the civil wars, the parliament, fummoned at Marlebridge, gave their approbation to most of the ordinances, which had been enacted by the reforming barons, and which, tho' advantageous to the fecurity of the people, had not received the fanction of a proper authority. Among other laws, it was there enacted, that all appeals from the courts of inferior lords should be carried directly to the King's courts, without paffing thro' the courts of the lords immediately fuperior +. It was ordained that money fhould bear no interest during the minority of the creditor ‡. This law was very reasonable, as the estates of minors were always in the hands of their lords, and the creditors could not pay intereft where they had no revenue. The charter of King John had granted this indulgence: It was omitted in that of Henry III. for what reafon is unknown; but it was renewed in the flatute of Marlebridge. Most of the other articles of this flatute are calculated to reftrain the oppreffions of fheriffs, and the violences and iniquities committed in diffraining cattle and other goods. Cattle and the inftruments of husbandry composed at that time the chief riches of the people.

In the 25th year of this King an affize was fixed of bread, the price of which was fettled, according to the different prices of corn, from one shilling a quarter to feven shillings and fix pence §. These great variations alone are a proof of bad tillage : Yet did the prices often rife much higher, than any taken notice of by the laws. The Chronicle of Dunstable tells us, that in this reign, wheat was once fold for a mark, nay for a pound a quarter; that is, three pounds of our prefent money ||. The fame law affords us a proof of the little communication between the parts of the kingdom, by remarking the very different prices which the fame commodity bore at the fame time. A brewer, fays the flatute, may fell two gallons of ale for a penny in cities, and three or four gallons for the fame price in the country. At prefent, fuch commodities, by the great confumpt of the people, and the great flocks of the brewers, are rather cheapest in cities. The

* Statute of Merton, chap. 9. + Statute of Marleb. chap. 20. § Statutes at large, p. 6. || So alfo Knyghton, p. 2444.

1 Id. chap. 16.

Chronicle

1272.

56

Chap. XII. Chronicle of Dunftable observes, that wheat one year was fold in many places for eight shillings a quarter, but never rose in Dunstable above a crown.

Тно' commerce was still very low, it feems rather to have encreased fince the Conquest; at least, if we may judge of the encrease of money by the price of bread. The medium between the highest and lowest prices of wheat, assigned by the flatute, is four shillings and three pence a quarter, that is, twelve shillings and nine pence of our prefent money. This is near the half of the middling price in our time. Yet the middling price of cattle, fo late as the reign of King Richard, we found to be above eight times lower than the prefent. Is not the true inference, from comparing these facts, that in all uncivilized nations, cattle, which propagate of themselves, bear always a lower price than corn, which requires more art and flock to raife it, than these nations are possefied of ? It is to be remarked, that Henry's affize of corn was copied from a preceding affize established by King John; and confequently, the prices which we have here compared of corn and cattle may be looked on as contemporary; and they were drawn, not from one particular year, but from an estimation of the middling prices. It is true, the prices, affigned by the affize of Richard, were meant as a standard for the accompts of sheriffs and escheators; and as confiderable profits were allowed to them, we may naturally fuppofe, that the common value of cattle was somewhat higher : Yet still, so great a difference between the prices of corn and cattle as that of four to one, compared to the prefent rates, affords important reflections concerning the very different state of industry and tillage in the two periods.

INTEREST had in that age mounted to an enormous height, as might be expected from the barbarism of the times and mens ignorance of commerce. There are inftances of fifty per cent. payed for money *. Such profits tempted the Jews to remain in England, notwithstanding the grievous oppressions to which they were continually exposed from the prevalent bigotry and rapine of the age. It is easy to imagine how precarious their flate must be under an indigent prince, fomewhat restrained in his tyranny over his native subjects, but who posseffed an unlimited authority over them, the fole proprietors of money in the kingdom, and hated on account of their riches, their religion, and their ufury : Yet will our ideas fcarce come up to the extortions which in fact we shall find to have been practiced upon them. In the year 1241, 20,000 marks were exacted from them + : Two years after, money was again extorted ; and one Jew alone, Aaron of York, was obliged to pay above 4000 marks ‡: In 1250, Henry renewed

* M. Paris, p. 586.

+ M. Paris, p. 372.

1 M. Paris, p. 410.

his

his oppreffions; and the fame Aaron was condemned to pay him 30,000 marks up- Chap. XII. on an acculation of forgery *: The high penalty imposed upon him, and which, it feems, he was thought able to pay, is rather a prefumption of his innocence than of hisguilt. In 1255, the King demanded 8000 marks from the Jews, and threatened to hang them, if they refused compliance. They now lost all patience, and defired leave to retire with their effects out of the kingdom. But the King replied : " How can I remedy the oppressions you complain of ? I am myself " beggared. I am despoiled, I am stripped of all my revenues : I owe above " 200,000 marks; and if I had faid 300,000, I should not exceed the truth: " I am obliged to pay my fon, prince Edward, 15,000 marks a year: I have " not a farthing; and I must have money, from any hand, from any quarter, " or by any means." He then delivered over the Jews to the carl of Cornwal, that those whom the one brother had flead, the other might embowel, to make use of the words of the hiftorian +. King John, his father, once demanded 10,000 marks from a Jew of Briftol; and on his refusal, ordered one of his teeth to be drawn every day till he should confent. The Jew lost feven teeth; and then paid the fum required of him ‡.

To give a better pretence to extortions, the improbable and abfurd accufation, which has been at different times advanced against that nation, was revived in England, that they had crucified a child in derifion of our Saviour's fufferings. Eighteen of them were hanged at once for this crime §: Tho' it is no wife credible, that even the antipathy born them by the Christians, and the oppressions under which they laboured, would ever have pushed them to be guilty of that dangerous enormity. But it is natural to imagine, that a race, exposed to fuch infults and indignities both from King and people, and who had fo uncertain an enjoyment of their riches, would carry usury to the greatest extremities, and by their great profits make themfelves fome compensation for their continued perils.

Commerce must be in a wretched condition where interest was fo high, and where the fole proprietors of money were exposed to fuch rapine and injustice. But the bad police of the country was another obstacle to all improvements; and rendered all communication dangerous, and all property precarious. The Chronicle of Dunstable fays ||, that men during this reign were never fecure in their houses, and that whole villages were often plundered by bands of robbers, tho no civil wars prevailed in the kingdom. In 1249, fome years before the infurrection of the barons, two merchants of Brabant came to the King at Winchefler, and told him, that they had been despoiled of all their goods by certain robbers,

* M. Paris, p. 525. § M. Pa-1 M. Paris, p. 160. + M. Paris, p. 606. ris, p. 613. || Vol. 1. p. 155. whom VOL. II.

1272.

58

Chap. XII. whom they knew, becaufe they faw their faces every day in his court; that like practices prevailed all over England, and travellers were every day robbed, bound, wounded and murdered; that these crimes escaped with impunity, because the minifters of juffice themfelves were in a confederacy with the robbers; and that they for their part, inftead of bringing matters to a fruitlefs trial by law, were willing, tho' merchants, to try their caufe with the robbers by arms and a duel. The King, provoked at these abuses, ordered a jury to be inclosed, and to try the robbers: The jury, tho' confifting of twelve men of property in Hampshire, were found to be also in a confederacy with the robbers, and acquitted them. Henry in a rage committed the jury to prifon, threatened them with fevere punifhment, and ordered a new jury to be enclosed, who, dreading the fate of their fellows, at last found a verdict against the criminals. Many of the King's own houfhold were discovered to have participated in the guilt; and faid for their excuse, that they received no wages from him, and were obliged to rob for a maintenance*. Knights and equires, fays the Dictum of Kenelworth, who were robbers. if they have no land, Shall pay the half of their goods, and find sufficient security to keep benceforth the peace of the kingdom. Such were the manners of the times!

ONE can the lefs repine, during the prevalence of fuch manners, at the frauds and forgeries of the clergy; as it gives much lefs diffurbance to fociety, to take mens money from them with their own confent, tho' by deceits and lies, than to ravish it by open force and violence. During this reign, the papal power was at its fummit, and was even beginning infenfibly to decline, by reafon of the immeafurable avarice and extortions of the court of Rome, which difgufted the clergy as well as laity in every kingdom of Europe. England itfelf, tho' funk in the deepeft abyfs of ignorance and fuperfition, had ferioufly entertained thoughts of shaking off the papal yoke +; and the Roman pontiff was obliged to think of new expedients for rivetting it faster upon them. For this purpose, Gregory IX. published his decretals t, which are a collection of forgeries, favourable to the court of Rome, and confift of the fuppofed decrees of Popes in the first centuries. But these forgeries are so gross, and confound so palpably all language, hiftory, chronology, and antiquities; matters more flubborn than any fpeculative truths whatever; that even that church, which is not flartled at the most monstrous contradictions and absurdities, has been obliged to abandon them to the critics. But in the dark age of the thirteenth century, they paffed for undifputed and authentic; and men, entangled in the mazes of this falfe literature, joined to the philosophy, equally falle, of the times, had nothing where-

* M. Paris, p. 509. + M. Paris, p. 421: 1 Trevet, p. 191.

withal

withal to defend themfelves, but fome fmall remains of common fenfe, which paffed for profaneness and impiety, and the indelible regard to felf-interest, which, as it was the sole motive in the priests for framing these impostures, ferved also, in some degree, to protect the laity against them.

ANOTHER expedient, devifed by the church of Rome in this period for fecuring its power, was the inflitution of new religious orders, and chiefly the Dominicans and Franciscans, who proceeded with all the zeal and fuccess that attend novelties ; were better qualified to gain the populace than the old orders, now become rich and indolent; maintained a perpetual rivalship with each other in promoting their gainful fuperftitions; and acquired a great dominion over the minds, and confequently over the purfes of men, by counterfeiting a defire of poverty and a contempt for riches. The quarrels, which arofe between these orders, lying still under the controul of the fovereign pontiff, never diffurbed the peace of the church, and ferved only as a fpur to their industry in promoting the common cause; and tho' the Dominicans loft fome popularity by their denial of the immaculate conception, a point in which they unwarily engaged too far to be able to recede with honour, they counterballanced this difadvantage by acquiring more folid eftablishments, by gaining the confidence of kings and princes, and by exercifing the jurifdiction affigned them, of ultimate judges and punishers of herefy. Thus, the feveral orders of monks became a kind of regular troops or garrifons of the Romish church; and tho' the temporal interests of fociety, still more those of true piety, were hurt by their various devices to catch the populace, they proved the chief fupports of that mighty fabric of fuperstition, and till the revival of true learning, fecured it-from any dangerous invafion.

59 ich Chap. XII.

1272.

CHAP. XIII.

WAR D E D I.

Civil administration of the King _____ Conquest of Wales _____ Affairs of Scotland ——Competitors for the crown of Scotland ——Reference to Edward—Homage of Scotland—Award of Edward in favour of Baliol-War with France-Digression concerning the constitution of parliament ____ War with Scotland ____ Scotland fubdued ____ War with France—Diffensions with the clergy—Arbitrary measures— Peace with France-Revolt of Scotland-That kingdom again fubdued-again revolts-is again fubdued-Robert Bruce-Third revolt of Scotland ____ Death and character of the King____ miscellaneous transactions of this reign.

1272.

60

Chap. XIII: FT HE English were as yet fo little trained to obedience under a regular government, that the death of almost every King, fince the Conquest, had been attended with diforders; and the council, reflecting on the recent civil wars, and on the animofities which naturally remain after these great convulsions, had reafon to apprehend very dangerous confequences from the abfence of the fon and fucceffor of Henry. They therefore haftened to proclaim prince Edward, to fwear allegiance to him, and to fummon the flates of the kingdom, in order to provide for the public peace in this important conjuncture*. Walter Giffard, archbishop of York, the earl of Cornwal, fon of Richard, King of the Romans, and the earl of Glocefter, were appointed guardians of the kingdom, and proceeded peaceably to the exercise of their authority, without either meeting with opposition from any of the people, or being disturbed with emulation and faction among themfelves. The high character acquired by Edward during the late commotions, his military genius, his fuccefs in fubduing the rebels, his moderation in fettling the kingdom, had procured him great efteem, mixt with affection, among all orders of men; and no one could reafonably entertain hopes of making any advantage of his absence, or of raising disturbance in the nation. The earl of Glocester himself, whose great power, and turbulent spirit, had excited most jealoufy, was forward to give proofs of his allegiance; and any male- Chap XIII. contents, who remained, being deftitute of a leader, were obliged to remain in 1.27.2. fubmission to the government.

Rymer, vol. 2. p. 1. Walfing. p. 43. Trevet, p. 239.

cited

Prince Edward had reached Sicily in his return from the Holy Land, when he received information of the death of his father; and he difcovered a deep concern on this occasion. At the fame time, he learned the death of an infant fon, John, whom his princefs, Eleanor of Castile, had born him at Acre in Paleftine; and as he appeared much lefs affected with that misfortune, the King of Sicily expressed a surprize at this difference of sentiment : But was told by Edward, that the death of a fon was a loss which he might hope to repair; the death of a father was a lofs irreparable *.

EDWARD proceeded homewards; but as he foon learned the quiet fettlement of the kingdom, he was in no hurry to take poffeffion of the throne, but fpent near a year in France, before he made his appearance in England. In his paffage by Chalons in Burgundy, he was challenged by the prince of that country to a tournament which he was preparing; and as Edward excelled in thefe martial and dangerous exercises, the true image of war, he declined not the opportunity of acquiring honour and renown, in that great affembly of the neighbouring nobles. But the image of war was here unfortunately turned into the thing itself. Edward and his retinue were so successful in the joufts, that the French. knights, provoked at their fuperiority, made a ferious attack upon them, which was repulfed, and a good deal of blood was idly fhed in the quarrel +. This rencounter received the name of the petty battle of Chalons.

EDWARD went from Chalons to Paris, and did homage to Philip for the dominions which he held in France ‡. He thence returned to Guienne, and gave a fettlement to that province, which was in fome confusion. He made his journey by land into England; in his paffage he accommodated at Montreuil a difference with Margaret, counters of Flanders, heirers of that territory &; he was received with joyful acclamations by his people, and was folemnly crowned at Weftmin- 19th August. fter by Robert, archbishop of Canterbury.

THE King immediately applied himfelf to the re-eftablishment of his kingdom, Civil adminiand to the correcting of those diforders, which the civil commotions and the loofe fration of the administration of his father had introduced into every part of government. The King. administration of his father had introduced into every part of government. The plan of his policy was equally generous and prudent. He confidered the great barons both as the immediate rivals of the crown, and the oppreffors of the peo-

* Walfingh. p. 44. Trevet, p. 240. + Walfing. p. 44. Trevet, p. 241. M. Weft. p. 402. t Walfin. p. 45. § Rymer, vol. z. p. 32, 33.

1273%

61

1274.

ples

1274.

1275. 16th Feb.

Chap. XIII. ple; and he proposed by an exact distribution of justice, and a rigid execution of the laws, to give at once protection to the inferior orders of the flate, and to diminish the arbitrary power of the great, on which their dangerous authority was chiefly founded. Making it a rule of his own conduct to obferve, except on extraordinary occasions, the privileges fecured to them by the great charter, he acquired a right to infift upon their observance of the same charter towards their vaffals and inferiors; and he made the crown be regarded by all the gentry and commonalty of the kingdom, as the great fountain of juffice, and the general affylum against oppression. Besides enacting several excellent statutes, in a parliament which he fummoned at Weftminster, he took care to inspect the conduct of all his magistrates and judges, to displace fuch as were either negligent or corrupt, to provide them with fufficient force for the execution of juffice, to root out all bands and confederacies of robbers, and to reprefs those more filent robberies, which were committed either by the power of the nobles, or under the countenance of public authority. By this rigid administration, the face of the kingdom was foon changed; and order and juffice took place of violence and oppreffion : But amidft the excellent inftitutions and public-fpirited plans of Edward, there still appears fomewhat both of the feverity of his perfonal character, and of the prejudices of the times.

As the various kinds of malefactors, the murderers, robbers, incendiaries, ravifhers, and plunderers, had become fo numerous and powerful, that the ordinary minifters of justice, especially in the western counties, were afraid to execute the laws against them, the King found it neceffary to provide an extraordinary remedy for the evil; and he erected for the punifhment of crimes a new tribunal, which, however useful, would have been deemed, in times of more regular liberty, a very great stretch of illegal and arbitrary power. It confisted of commissioners, who were empowered to enquire into diforders and crimes of all kinds, and to inflict the proper punifhments upon them. The officers, charged with this unufual commiffion, made their circuits throughout the counties of England most infected with this evil, and carried terror into all those parts of the kingdom. In their zeal to punish crimes, they did not fufficiently diftinguish between the innocent and guilty ; the fmallest fuspicion became the ground of accusation and trial; the flightest evidence was received against criminals; the prisons were crowded with malefactors, real or pretended; fevere fines were levied for fmall offences; and the King, tho' his exhausted revenue was supplied by this expedient, found it neceffary to ftop the course of fo great rigour, and after terrifying and diffipating diffipating by this tribunal the gangs of diforderly people in England, he very Chap. XIII. prudently annulled the commission *; and never afterwards renewed it.

Among the various diforders, to which the kingdom was fubject, no one was more univerfally complained of than the adulteration of the coin; and as this crime required more art than the English of that age, who chiefly employed force and violence in their iniquities, were poffeffed of, the imputation fell chiefly upon the Jews +. Edward alfo feems to have indulged a ftrong prepoffeffion against that nation; and this ill-judged zeal for Christianity being naturally augmented by an expedition to the Holy Land, he let loofe the whole rigour of his justice against this unhappy people. Two hundred and eighty of them were hanged at once for this crime in London alone, befides those who fuffered in other parts of the kingdom t. The houfes and lands, (for the Jews had of late ventured to make purchases of that kind) as well as the goods of great multitudes, were fold and confifcated : and the King, left it should be fuspected, that the riches of the fufferers were the chief part of their guilt, ordered one half of the money, raifed by these confiscations, to be fet apart, and beftowed upon fuch as were willing to be converted to Christianity. But the refentment of their injuries was more prevalent over them, than the temptation from their poverty; and very few of them could be induced by intereft to embrace the religion of their perfecutors. The miferies of this people were not here terminated. Tho' the arbitrary talliages and exactions levied upon them, had yielded a conftant and a confiderable revenue to the crown; Edward, prompted by his zeal and rapacity, refolved fome time after § to purge the kingdom entirely of that hated race, and to feize to himfelf at once their whole property as the reward of his labour ||. He left them only money fufficient to bear their charges into foreign countries, where new perfecutions and extortions awaited them : But the inhabitants of the cinque ports, imitating the bigotry and avidity of their fovereign, despoiled most of them of this small pittance, and even threw many of the Jews into the fea: A crime, for which the King, who was determined to be the fole plunderer in his dominions, inflicted a capital punifhment upon them. No lefs than fifteen thousand Jews were at this time robbed of their effects and banished the kingdom: Very few of that nation have fince lived in England : And as it is impoffible for a kingdom to fubfift without lenders of money, and none will lend without a compensation, the practice of usury, as it was then called, was thenceforth exercifed by the English

63

1275.

^{*} Spellman's Gloff. in verbo Trailbafton. But Spellman was either mistaken in placing this commission in the fifth year of the King, or it was renewed in 1305. See Rymer, vol. 2. p. 960. Trivet. p. 338. M. Weft. p. 450. + Walfin, p. 48. Heming, vol. 1. p. 6. ‡ T. Wykes, P. 107. § In the year 1290. || Walfin, p. 54. Heming, vol. 1. p. 20. Trivet, p. 266. I themfelves.

1275 ..

64

Chap. XIII. themfelves, upon their fellow-citizens, or by Lombards and other foreigners. It is very much to be queffioned whether the dealings of thefe new ulurers were equally open and unexceptionable with those of the old. By a law of Richard, it was enacted, that three copies should be made of every bond given to a Jew; one to be put into the hands of a public magiltrate, another into those of a man of credit, and a third to remain with the Jew himfelf *. But as the canon law, feconded by the municipal, permitted no Christian to receive interest, all transactions of this kind muft, after the banishment of the Jews, have become more fecret and clandeftine, and the lender, of confequence, be paid both for the ufe of his money, and for the infamy and danger which he incurred by lending it.

> THE great poverty of the crown, tho' no excufe, was probably the caufe of this egregious tyranny exercifed against the Jews; but Edward practifed also other more honourab'e means of remedying that evil. He employed a ftrict frugality in the management and diffribution of his revenue: He engaged the parliamene to vote him a fifteenth of all moveables; the Pope to grant him the tenth of all ecclefialtical revenues for three years; and the merchants to confent to a perpetual impolition of half a mark on every fack of wool exported, and a mark on three hundred fkins. He alfo iffued commissions to enquire into all encroachments on the royal demefne; into the value of efcheats, forfeitures, and wardfhips; and into the means of repairing or improving every branch of the revenue +. The commissioners, in the execution of their office, began to carry matters too far against the nobility, and to question the titles to estates, which had been transmitted from father to fon for feveral generations. Earl Warrenne, who had done fuch eminent fervice in the late reign, being required to fhow his titles, drew his fword; and fubjoined, that William, the Norman, had not conquered the kingdom for himfelf alone; his anceftor was a joint adventurer in the caufe: and he himfelf was determined to maintain what had from that period remained unqueftioned in his family. The King, fenfible of the danger, very prudently defifted from making farther enquiries of this nature.

1276. Conquest of Wales.

Bur the active spirit of Edward could not long remain without employment. He foon after undertook an enterprize more fafe for himfelf, and more advantageous to his people. Lewellyn, prince of Wales, had been deeply engaged with the Mounfort faction; had entered into all their confpiracies against the crown; had frequently fought on their fide; and till the battle of Evenham, fo fatal to that party, had employed every expedient to depress the royal cause, and to promote the fuccefs of the barons. In the general accommodation, made with the van-

* Trivet. p. 128.

† Ann. Waverl. p. 235.

quished,

quished, Lewellyn had also obtained his pardon ; but as he was the most power- Chap. XIII. ful, and therefore the most obnoxious vasial of the crown, he had reason to entertain anxiety about his fituation, and to dread the future effects of refentment and jealoufy in the English monarchs. For this reason, he had determined to provide for his fecurity by maintaining a fecret correspondence with his former affociates ; and he even made his addreffes to a daughter of the earl of Leicefter, who was fent to him from beyond fea, but being intercepted in her passage near the isles of Scilly, was detained in the court of England *. This incident encreafing the mutual jealoufy between Edward and Lewellyn, the latter, when required to come to England, and do homage to the new King, fcrupled to put himself into the hands of an enemy, defired a fafe conduct from Edward, infifted upon having the King's fon and other noblemen delivered to him as hoftages, and demanded, that his fpouse should be previously fet at liberty +. The King, having now brought the state to a full settlement, was not difpleased with this occafion of exercifing his authority, and fubduing entirely the principality of Wales. He refused all Lewellyn's demands, except that of a fafe conduct; fent him repeated fummons to perform the duty of a vaffal; levied an army to reduce him to obedience; obtained a new aid of a fifteenth from parliament; and marched out with certain affurance of fuccefs against the enemy. Befides the great difproportion of force between the kingdom and principality, the circumftances of the two flates were now entirely reverfed; and the fame intefline diffentions, which had formerly weakened England, now prevailed in Wales, and had even taken place in the reigning family. David and Roderic, brothers to Lewellyn, had been difpoffeffed of their inheritance by that prince, had been obliged to have recourfe to the protection of Edward, and feconded with all their intereft, which was extensive, his attempts to enflave their native country. The Welfh prince had no other refource but in the inacceffible fituation of his mountains, which had hitherto, thro' many ages, defended his forefathers against all the attempts of the Saxon and Norman conquerors; and he retired among the hills of Snowdun, refolute to defend himfelf to the last extremity. But Edward equally vigorous and cautious, entering by the north with a formidable army, pierced into the heart of the country; and having carefully explored every road before him, and fecured every pass behind him, approached the Welsh army in its last retreat. He here avoided the putting to trial the valour of a nation, proud of its antient independance, and enflamed with animofity against its hereditary enemies; and he trufted to the flow, but fure effects of famine, for reducing that people to 1276.

1277.

65

* Walfin. p. 46, 47. Heming, vol. 1. p. 5. Trivet, p. 248. Walfin. p. 46. Trivet. p. 247.

+ Rymer, vol. z. p. 68.

VOL. II.

K

fub-

1277.

10th Nov.

66

Chap. XIII. fubjection. The rude and fimple manners of the natives, as well as the mountainous fituation of their country, had made them entirely neglect tillage, and truft to pasturage alone for their sublistance : A method of life which had hitherto fecured them against the irregular attempts of the English, but exposed them to certain ruin, when the conquest of the country was steddily purfued, and prudently planned by Edward. Destitute of magazines, cooped up in a narrow corner, they and their cattle fuffered equally from famine; and Lewellyn, without being able to ftrike a ftroke for his independance, was at last obliged to submit at difcretion, and receive the terms imposed upon him by the victor *. He bound himfelf to pay to Edward 50000 l. as reparation of damages; to do homage to the crown of England; to permit all the other barons of Wales, except four near Snowdun, to fwear fealty to the fame crown; to relinquish the country between Chefhire and the river Conway; to fettle on his brother Roderic a thousand marks a year, and on David five hundred; and to deliver ten hoftages for fecurity. of his future fubmiffion +.

> EDWARD, on the performance of the other articles, remitted to the prince of Wales the payment of the 50000 l. ‡, which were flipulated by treaty, and which, it is probable, the poverty of the country made it abfolutely impoffible for him to levy. But complaints of other hardfhips foon arole on the fide of the vanquished : The English, insolent on their easy and bloodless victory, oppressed the inhabitants of the diffricts which were yielded to them : The lords marchers committed with impunity all kinds of violence on their Welsh neighbours: New and more fevere terms were imposed on Lewellyn himself; and Edward, when the prince attended him at Worcefter, exacted a promife that he would retain no perfon in his principality who should be difagreeable to the English monarch §. There were other perfonal infults, which raifed the indignation of the Welfh, and made them determine rather to encounter a force, which they had already experienced to be fo much fuperior, than to bear any longer the oppreffion of the haughty victors. Prince David, feized with the national fpirit, made peace with his brother, and promifed to concur in the defence of public liberty. The Welsh flew to arms; and Edward, not displeased with the occasion of making his conquest final and absolute, fummoned together all his military tenants, and advanced into Wales with an army, which the inhabitants could not reafonably hope to refift. The fituation of the country gave the Welfh at first fome advantage over Luke de Tany, one of Edward's captains, who had passed the Menau + Rymer, vol. 2. p. 88. Walfin. p. 47. Trivet. p. 251. T. Wykes, * T. Wykes, p. 105. § Dr. Powell's Hift. of Wales, p. 344, 345. p. 106. ‡ Rymer, p. 92.

with

E D W A R D I.

with a detachment * : But Lewellen, being furprized by Mortimer, was defeated Chap XIII. and flain in the action, and 2000 of his followers put to the fword +. David, who fucceeded him in the principality, could never collect an army fufficient to face the English; and being chaced from hill to hill, and hunted from one retreat to another, was obliged to conceal himfelf under various difguifes, and was at last betrayed in his lurking-place to the enemy. Edward fent him in chains to Shrewsbury; and bringing him to a formal trial before all the peers of England, ordered this fovereign prince to be hanged, drawn, and quartered, as a traitor, for defending by arms the liberties of his native country, together with his own hereditary authority 1. All the Welfh nobility fubmitted to the conqueror; the laws of England, with the sheriffs and other ministers of justice, were eftablished in that principality; and tho' it was long before national antipathies were extinguished, and a thorough union accomplished between the people, yet this important conquest, which it had required eight hundred years fully to effectuate, was at last, thro' the abilities of Edward, compleated by the English.

THE King, fenfible that nothing kept alive the ideas of military valour and of ancient glory, fo much as the traditional poetry of the people, which, affifted by the power of mufic, and the jollity of feftivals, made deep impression on the minds of the youth, gathered together all the Welfh bards, and from a barbarous, tho' not abfurd policy, ordered them to be put to death §.

THERE prevails a vulgar flory, which, as it fuits exactly the capacity of the monkish writers, is carefully recorded by them: That Edward affembling the Welsh, promised to give them a prince of unexceptionable manners, a Welshman by birth, and one who could speak no other language. On their acclamations of joy, and promise of obedience, he invested in the principality his second fon Edward, then an infant, who had been born at Carnarvon. The death of his eldeft fon Alfonso, soon after, made young Edward heir of the monarchy: The p incipality of Wales was fully annexed to the crown ; and henceforth gives a title to the eldeft fon of the kings of England.

THE fettlement of Wales appeared fo complete to Edward, that in lefs than two years after, he went abroad in order to make peace between Alphonfo, King of Arragon, and Philip le Bel, who had newly fucceeded his father Philip le Hardy in the throne of France ||. The difference between these two princes had

* Walfin. p. 50. Heming, vol. 1. p. 9. Trivet, p. 258. T. Wykes, p. 110. vol. 1. p. 11. Trivet, p. 257. Ann. Waverl. p. 235. 1 Heming, vol. 1. p. 12. Trivet, p. 259. Ann. Waverl. p. 238. T. Wykes, p. 111. M. Weft. p. 411. § Sir J. Wynne, p. 15. mer, vol. 2. p. 149, 150, 174. Ry-

K 2

arifen

1286.

1283.

12845

1281.

1286.

68

Chap. XIII. arifen about the kingdom of Sicily, which the Pope, after his hopes from England failed him, had beftowed on Charles, brother to St. Lewis, and which was claimed upon other titles, by Peter King of Arragon, father to Alphonfo. Edward had powers from both princes to fettle the peace, and he fucceeded in his endeavours; but as the controversy no wife regards England, we shall not enter into a detail of it. He ftayed abroad above three years; and on his return, found many diforders to have prevailed, both from open violence, and from the corruption of justice.

> THOMAS CHAMBERLAIN, a gentleman of fome note, had affembled feveral of his affociates at Bofton, in Lincolnshire, under pretence of holding a tournament, an exercise practifed by the gentry only; but in reality with a view of plundering the rich fair of Boston, and robbing the merchants. To facilitate his purpose, he privately fet fire to the town; and while the inhabitants were employed in quenching the flames, the confpirators broke into the booths, and carried off the goods. Chamberlain himfelf was detected and hanged; but maintained fo fteddily the point of honour to his accomplices, that he could not be prevailed with, either by money or promifes, to difcover any of them. Many other inftances of robbery and violence broke out, in all parts of England; tho' the fingular circumftances, attending this confpiracy, have made it alone be particularly recorded by hiftorians *.

1280.

Bur the corruption of the judges, by which the fountains of juffice were poisoned, seemed still of more dangerous consequence. Edward, in order to remedy this prevailing abuse, fummoned a parliament, and brought the judges to a trial, where all of them, except two, who were clergymen, were convicted of this flagrant iniquity, were fined, and deposed from their office. The amount of the fines levied upon them, is alone a fufficient proof of their guilt; being above one hundred thousand marks, an immense fum in those days, and sufficient to defray the charges of an expensive war between two great kingdoms. The King afterwards made all the new judges fwear, that they would take no bribes; but his expedient, of depofing and fining the old ones, was the more effectual remedy.

WE come now to give an account of the affairs of Scotland, which form the most interesting transaction of this reign, and of fome of the fubsequent; tho* the intercourse of that kingdom with England, either in peace or war, had hitherto produced fo few events of moment, that to avoid tedioufnefs, we have omitted many of them, and have been very concife in relating the reft. If the

* Heming, vol. 1. p. 16, 17.

Scots

Scots had, before this period, any real hiftory, worthy of the name, except what Chap. XII. they pick up from scattered paffages of the English historians, these events, however minute, yet being the only foreign transactions of the nation, might deferve a place in it.

THO' the government of Scotland had been continually exposed to those fac- Affairs of tions and convultions, which are incident to all barbarous, and to many civiliz. Scotland. ed nations; and tho' the fucceffions of their Kings, the only part of their hiftory which deferves any credit, had been often difordered by irregularities and ufurpations; the true heir of the royal family had ftill in the end prevailed, and Alexander III. who had espoused Edward's fifter, probably inherited, after a period of above eight hundred years, and thro' a fucceffion of males, the fcepter of all the Scottish princes, who had governed the nation, fince its first establishment in the island. This prince died in 1286 by a fall from his horfe at Kinghorn *, without leaving any male iffue, and without any defcendants, except Margaret, born of Eric, King of Norway, and of Margaret, daughter of the Scottifh monarch. This princefs, commonly called the maid of Norway, tho' a female, and an infant, and a foreigner, yet being the lawful heir of the kingdom, had, thro' her grandfather's care, been recognized fucceffor by the ftates of Scotland +; and on Alexander's death, the difpolitions, which had been previoully made against that event, appeared fo just and prudent, that no diforders, as might naturally be apprehended, enfued in the kingdom. Margaret was acknowledged queen of Scotland ; five Guardians, the bishops of St. Andrews and Glasgow, the earls of Fife and Buchan, and James, fleward of Scotland, entered peaceably upon the administration; and the infant princefs, under the protection of Edward, her great uncle, and Eric, her father, who exerted themfelves on this occasion, seemed firmly feated on the throne of Scotland. The English monarch was naturally engaged to build mighty projects on this event; and having lately, by force of arms, brought Wales under subjection, he attempted, by the marriage of Margaret with his eldeft fon, Edward, to unite the whole ifland into one monarchy, and thereby to give it full fecurity both against domestic convulsions and foreign invafions. The amity, which had of late prevailed between the two nations, and which, even in former times, had never been interrupted by any violent wars or injuries, facilitated extremely the execution of this project, fo favourable to the happinefs and grandeur of both kingdoms; and the flates of Scotland readily gave their affent to the English proposals, and even agreed, that their young fovereign should be educated in the court of Edward. Anxious, however, for the liberty and independancy of their country, they took care to ftipulate very

* Heming. vol. 1. p. 29. Trevet. p. 267.

+ Rymer, vol. 2, p. 266.

equitable

1200.

69

1289.

70

Chap. XIII. equitable conditions, ere they entrusted themselves into the hands of so great and fo ambitious a monarch; that they fhould enjoy all their antient laws, liberties, and cuftoms; that in cafe young Edward and Margaret should die without iffue, the crown of Scotland should revert to the next heirs, and should be inherited by them free and independent; that the military tenants of the crown should never be obliged to go out of Scotland, in order to do homage to the fovereign of the united kingdoms, nor the chapters of cathedral, collegiate or conventual churches, in order to make elections; that the parliaments, fummoned for Scots affairs, fhould always be held within the bounds of that kingdom; and that Edward should bind himself, under the penalty of 100,000 marks, payable to the Pope for the use of the holy wars, to observe all these articles *. It is not easy to conceive that two nations could have treated more on a footing of equality than Scotland and England maintained during the course of this whole transaction : And tho' Edward gave his affent to the article, concerning the future independancy of the Scottish crown, with a faving of his former rights; this referve gave no alarm to the nobility of Scotland, both because these rights, having been hitherto little heard of, had occafioned no difturbance, and because the Scots had fo near a profpect of feeing them entirely abforbed in the rights of their fovereignty.

1291.

Competitors for the crown of Scotland.

But this project, fo happily formed and fo amicably conducted, failed of fuccefs, by the fudden death of the Norvegian princefs, who expired on her paffage to Scotland +, and left a very difmal prospect to the kingdom. Tho' diforders were for the prefent obviated by the authority of the regency formerly established, the fucceffion of the crown itfelf was now become an object of difpute; and the regents could not expect, that a controverfy, which is not ufually decided by reafon and argument alone, would be peaceably fettled by them, or even by the ftates of the kingdom, amidft fo many powerful pretenders. The pofterity of William, King of Scotland, the prince, who was taken prifoner by Henry II. being all extinct by the death of Margaret of Norway; the right to the crown was devolved on the line of David, earl of Huntington, brother to William, whofe male line, being also extinct, left the fucceffion open to the posterity of his daughters. The earl of Huntington had three daughters; Margaret, married to Alan lord of Galloway, Ifabella, wife of Robert Brus or Bruce, lord of Annandale, and Adama, who espoused Henry lord Haftings. Margarer, the eldeft of the three fifters, left one daughter, Devergilda, married to John Baliol, by whom fhe had a fon of the fame name, one of the prefent candidates for the crown: Isabella II. bore a fon, Robert Bruce, who was now alive, and also infifted on his claim ;

* Rymer, vol. 2. p. 482.

4

+ Heming, vol. 1. p. 30. Trevet. p. 268.

E D W A R D I.

claim : Adama III. left a fon, John Haftings, who pretended that the king. Chap. XIII. dom of Scotland, like many other inheritances, was divisible among the three daughters of the earl of Huntington, and that he, in the right of his mother, had a title to the third of it. Baliol and Bruce united againft Haftings, in maintaining that the fucceffion to the crown was impartible; but each of them, fupported by plaufible reafons, afferted the preference of his own title. Baliol was fprung from the elder branch; Bruce was one degree nearer the common flock : If the right of representation was regarded, the former had the better claim: If propinquity was confidered, the latter was entitled to the preference * : The fentiments of men were divided : All the nobility had taken party with one fide or the other : The people followed implicitely their leaders : The two candidates themfelves had great power and numerous retainers in Scotland : And it is no wonder, that among a rude people, more accuftomed to arms than enured to laws, a controverfy of this nature, which could not be decided by any former precedent among them, and which is capable of exciting commotions in the moft legal and best established governments, should threaten the state with the most fatal convultions.

EACH age has its peculiar mode in conducting bulinefs; and men, guided more by cuftom than by reafon, follow, without enquiry, the manners, which are prevalent in their own time. The present practice, in the controversies between ftates and princes, feems to have been to choose a foreign prince, as an equal arbiter, by whom the queftion was decided, and whofe fentence prevented those difmal confusions and diforders, infeparable at all times from war, but which were multiplied an hundred fold, and difperfed into every corner, by the nature of the feudal governments. It was thus that the English king and barons, in the forgoing reign, had endeavoured to compose their domestic diffensions by a reference to the King of France; and the celebrated integrity of that monarch had prevented all the bad effects, which might naturally have been dreaded from fo perilous an expedient. It was thus, that the kings of France and Arragon, and afterwards other princes, had fubmitted their controverfies to Edward's judgment; and the remoteness of their flates, the great power of the princes, and the little intereft, which he had on either fide, had induced him to acquit himfelf with honour in his decifions. The parliament of Scotland, therefore, threatened Reference to with a furious civil war, and allured by the great reputation of the English mo-Edward. narch, as well as by the prefent amicable correspondence between the kingdoms; agreed in making a reference to Edward; and Fraser, bishop of St. Andrews, with other deputies, was fent to notify to him their refolution, and to claim his good

* Heming. vol. 1. p. 36.

71

1291.

IZQI.

72

Chap. XIII. good offices in the prefent dangers to which they were exposed *. His inclination, they flattered themselves, led him to prevent their diffentions, and to interpofe with a power, which none of the candidates would dare to withftand : When this expedient was proposed by one party, the other deemed it dangerous to object to it : Indifferent perfons thought that the imminent perils of a civil war would thereby be prevented : And no one reflected on the ambitious character of Edward, and the almost certain ruin, which must attend a small state, divided by factions, when it thus implicitely fubmits itself to the will of fo powerful and encroaching a neighbour.

Homage of Scotland.

THE temptation was too ftrong for the virtue of the English monarch to re-He proposed to lay hold of the present favourable opportunity, and if not fift. to create, at least to revive, his claim of a feudal fuperiority over Scotland; a claim which had hitherto lain in the deepest obscurity, and which, if ever it had been an object of attention, or had been fo much as fuspected, would have effectually prevented the Scottish barons from choosing him for an arbiter. He well knew, that, if this pretention was once fubmitted to, as it feemed difficult in the prefent fituation of Scotland to oppose it, the absolute fovereignty of that kingdom, (which had been the cafe with Wales) would foon follow; and that one great vassal, cooped up in an island with his liege lord, without refource from foreign powers, without aid from any fellow vaffals, could not long maintain his dominions against the efforts of a mighty kingdom, affisted by all the cavils which the feudal law afforded his fuperior against him. In purfuit of this great object, very advantageous to England, perhaps in the end no lefs beneficial to Scotland, but extremely unjust and iniquitous in itfelf, Edward bufied himfelf in fearching for proofs of his pretended fuperiority ; and inftead of looking into his own archives, which, if his claim had been real, must have afforded him numerous records of the homages paid by the Scottifh princes, and could alone yield him any authentic testimony, he made all the monasteries be ranfacked for old chronicles and hiftories wrote by Englishmen, and he collected all the paffages, which feemed any wife to favour his pretentions +. Yet even in this method of proceeding, which must have discovered to himself the injustice of his claim, he was far from being fortunate. He began his proofs from the time of Edward the elder, and continued them thro' all the Saxon and Norman times; but produced nothing to his purpose ‡. The whole amount of his authorities during the Saxon period, when ftripped of the bombaft and inaccurate ftyle of the monks, is, that the Scots had fometimes been defeated by the English, had received

* Heming. vol. 1. p. 31.

+ Walfing. p. 55.

1 Rymer. vol. 2. p. 559.

EDWARDL

r ceived peace on difadvantageous terms, had made fubmissions to the English Chap. XIII. monarch, and had even perhaps fallen into fome dependance on a power, which was fo much fuperior, and which they had not at that time fufficient force to refift. His authorities from the Norman period were, if possible, still less conclufive : The hiftorians indeed make frequent mention of an homage paid by the northern potentate; but no one of them fays that it was done for his kingdom, and feveral of them declare, in express terms, that it was relative only to the fiefs which he enjoyed fouth of the Tweed *; in the fame manner, as the King of England himfelf fwore fealty to the French monarch, for the fiefs, which he inherited in France. And to fuch fcandalous shifts was Edward reduced, that he quotes a passage from Hoveden +, where it is afferted, that a Scottish King had done homage to England; but he purposely omits the latter part of the same sentence, which expresses that this prince did homage for the lands, which he held in England.

WHEN William, King of Scotland, was taken prifoner in the battle of Alnwic, he was obliged, for the recovery of his liberty, to fwear fealty to the victor for his crown itfelf. The deed was performed according to all the rites of the feudal law: The record was preferved in the English archives, as well as mentioned by all the hiftorians : But as it is the only one of the kind, and as hiftorians speak of this superiority as a great acquisition gained by the fortunate arms of Henry II. ‡ there can remain no doubt, that the kingdom of Scotland was, in all former periods, entirely free and independent. Its fubjection continued a very few years : King Richard, desirous, before his departure for the Holy Land, to conciliate the friendship of William, renounced that homage, which he fays in express terms, had been extorted by his father ; and he only retained the usual homage, which had been done by the Scottish princes for the lands, which they held in England.

But tho' this transaction rendered the independance of Scotland still more unquestionable, than if no fealty had ever been sworn to the English crown; the Scottish Kings, apprized of the point aimed at by their powerful neighbour, feem for a long time to have retained fome jealoufy on that head, and in doing homage, to have anxioufly obviated all fuch pretensions. When William in 1200 did homage to John at Lincoln, he was careful to infert a falvo for his royal dignity § : When Alexander III. fent affistance to his father in law, Henry III. during the barons wars, he previously procured an acknowledgment, that this aid * Hoveden, p. 492, 662. M. Paris, p. 109. M. Weffm. p. 256. + P. 662. lib. 2. cap. 4. Knyghton, p. 2392. § Hoveden, p. 811. 1 Neubr. VOL. II. I.

73

1291.

W35

1291.

Chap. XIII. was only granted from friendship, not from any right claimed by the English monarch * : And when the fame prince was invited to affift at the coronation of this very Edward, he declined attendance, till he received a like acknowledgment +.

* Rymer, vol. z. p. 844.

+ Rymer, vol. z. p. 216, 845. There cannot be the least question, that the homage usually paid by the kings of Scotland was not for their crown, but for fome other territory. The only question remains, what that territory was? It was not always for the earldom of Huntington, nor the honour of Penryth ; because we find it sometimes done at a time when these possessions were not in the hands of the kings of Scotland. It is probable, that the homage was performed in general terms without any particular specification of territory ; and this inaccuracy had proceeded either from some dispute between the two kings about the territory and fome oppofite claims, which were compromifed by the general homage, or from the fimplicity of the age, which employed few words in every transaction. To prove this we need but look into the letter of King Richard, where he refigns the homage of Scotland, referving the usual homage. His words are, Sæpedietus W. Rex ligius homo nofter deveniat de omnibus terris de quibus antecessores sui antecessorum nostrorum ligii homenes fuerunt, et nobis atque hæredibus noßris fideletatem jurarunt. Rymer, vol. 1. p. 65. Thefe general terms were probably copied from the ufual form of the homage itfelf,

It is no proof that the kings of Scotland pofferfed no lands nor baronies in England, becaufe we cannot find them in the imperfect histories and records of that age. For instance, it appears clearly from another passage of this very letter of Richard, that the Scottish King had lands both in the county of Huntington and elsewhere in England ; tho' the earldom of Huntington itself was then in the perfon of his brother, David ; and we know at prefent of no other baronies, which William held. It cannot be expected that we should now be able to specify all his fees which he either possessed or claimed in England ; when it is probable that the two monarchs themselves and their ministers, would at that very time have differed in the lift : The Scottish King might posses fome to which his right was disputed ; he might claim others, which he did not posses: And neither of the kings was willing to refign his pretensions by a particular enumeration.

A late author of great industry and learning, but full of prejudices, and of no penetration, Mr. Carte, has taken advantage of the undefined terms of the Scots homage, and has pretended that it was done for Lothian and Galloway, that is, all the territories of the country now called Scotland, lying fouth of the Clyde and Forth. But to refute this pretention at once, we need only confider, that if thefe territories were held in fee of the English Kings, there would, by the nature of the feudal law as established in England, have been continual appeals from them to the courts of the lord Paramont; contrary to all the histories and records of that age. We find, that, as foon as Edward really established his fuperiority, appeals immediately commenced from all parts of Scotland : And that King, in his writ to the king's bench, confiders them as a neceffary confequence of the feudal tenure. Such large territories also would have supplied a confiderable part of the English armies, which never could have escaped all the historians. Not to mention that there is not any inftance of a Scots prisoner of war being tried as a rebel, in the many hoftilities between the kingdoms, where the Scots armies were chiefly filled from the fouthern counties.

MR. Carte's notion with regard to Galloway, which comprehends, in the language of that age, or rather in that of the preceding, most of the fouth west counties of Scotland ; his notion, I fay, refts en

BUT

75

Bur as all these reasons, (and stronger could not be produced) were but a feeble Chap. XIIA rampart against the power of the fword, Edward, carrying with him a great army, which on fo flight a foundation, that it fcarce merits being refuted. He will have it (and merely becaufe he will have it) that the Cumberland, yielded by King Edmund to Malcolm I. meant not only the county in England of that name, but all the territory northwards to the Clyde. But the cafe of Lothian deferves some more confideration.

Ir is certain, that in very antient language, Scotland means only the country north of the firths of Clyde and Forth. I shall not make a parade of literature to prove it ; because I do not find that this point is difputed by the Scots themfelves. The fouthern country was divided into Galloway and Lothian; and the latter comprehended all the fouth eafl counties. This territory was certainly a part of the antient kingdom of Northumberland, and was entirely peopled by Saxons, who afterwards received a great mixture of Danes among them. It appears from all the English histories, that the whole kingdom of Northumberland paid very little obedience to the Saxon monarchs, who governed after the diffolution of the heptarchy; and the northern and remote parts of it feem to have fallen into a kind of anarchy, fometimes pillaged by the Danes, and fometimes concurring with them in their ravages upon other parts of England. The kings of Scotland, lying nearer them, took at last possession of the country, which had scarce any government, and we are told by Matthew of Weffminfter, p. 193. that King Edgar made a grant of the territory to Kenneth III. that is, he refigned claims, which he could not make effectual, without beflowing on them more trouble and expence than they were worth : For thefe are the only grants of provinces made by kings; and fo ambitious and active a prince as Edgar would never have given prefents of any other kind. Tho' Matthew of Weftminfter's authority may appear fmall with regard to fo remote a transaction; yet we may admit it in this cafe, becaufe Ordericus Vitalis, a very good authority, tells us, p. 701. that Malcolm acknowledged to William Rufus, that the conqueror had confirmed to him the former grant of Lothian. But it follows not, because Edgar made this species of grant to Kenneth, that therefore he exacted homage for that territory. Homage and the whole rites of the feudal law were very little known to the Saxons; and we may alfo fuppofe, that the claim of Edgar was fo antiquated and weak, that in refigning it, he made no very valuable conceffion, and Kenneth might well refuse to hold by fo precarious a tenure a territory, which he at prefent held by the fword. In fhort, no author fays, he did homage for it.

THE only colour indeed of authority for Mr. Carte's notion is, that Matthew Paris, who wrote in the reign of Henry III. before Edward's claim of fuperiority was heard of, fays that Alexander III. did homage to Henry III. pro Laudiano et aliis terris. See page 555. This word feems naturally to be interpreted Lothian. But in the first place, Matthew Paris's testimony, tho' confiderable, will not outweigh that of all the other hiftorians, who fay that the Scots homage was always done for lands in England. Secondly, if the Scots homage was done in general terms (as has been already proved) it is no wonder that historians should differ in their account of the object of it, fince the parties themfelves were not fully agreed. Thirdly, there is reafon to think that Laudianum in Matthew Paris does not mean Lothian in Scotland. There appears to have been a territory, which antiently bore that or a fimilar name, in the north of England. For (1) The Saxon Chronicle, p. 197. fays that Malcolm Kenmure met William Rufus in Lodene in England. (2) It is agreed by all the hiftorians, that Henry II. only reconquered from Scotland the northern counties of Northumberland, Cumberland, and Westmorland. See Newbriggs, p. 383. Wykes, p. 30. Hemingford, p. 492. Yet the fame country is called by other historians Loidis, comitatus Lodonenfis, or fome such name. See M. Paris, p. 68. M. Weft. p. 247. Annal. Waverl, p. 159. and Diceto, p. 531. (3) This last mentioned author, L 2 when 1291.

10th May.

Chap. > III. which was to enforce his proofs, advanced to the frontiers, and invited the Scots parliament and all the competitors to attend him in the caffle of Norham, a place fituated on the fouthern banks of the Tweed, in order to determine that caufe, which had been referred to his arbitration. But tho' this deference feemed due to fo great a monarch, and was no more than what his father and the English barons had, in fimilar circumstances, paid to Lewis IX. the King, careful not to give umbrage, and determined never to produce his claim, till it should be too late to think of opposition, fent the Scottish barons an acknowledgement, that, tho' at this time they paffed the frontiers, fuch a ftep should never be drawn into precedent, nor afford the English kings a pretence for exacting a like submission in any future transactions *. When the whole Scottish nation had thus unwarily put themselves in his power, Edward opened the conferences at Norham; and informed the parliament, by the mouth of Roger le Brabançon, his chief jufticiary, that he was come thither to determine the right among the competitors to their crown; that he was determined to do ftrict juffice to all parties; and that he was intitled to this authority, not in virtue of the reference made to him, but in the quality of fuperior and liege lord of the kingdom +. He then produced his proofs of this fuperiority, which he pretended to be unqueftionable; and he required of them an acknowledgment of it; a demand, which was fuperfluous if the fact was already known and avowed, and which plainly betrays Edward's confciousness of his lame and defective title. The Scots parliament were aftonished at so new a pretension, and answered only by their filence. But the King, in order to maintain the appearance of free and regular proceedings, when he speaks of Lothian in Scotland, calls it Loheneis, p. 574. tho' he had called the English territory Loidis. (4) King David's charter to the church of Durham, begins with this passage. Omnibus Scotis & Anglis, tam in Scotia, quam in Ledoneis corstitutis, &cc. See Spellman Gloßs. in verbo Scotia. Whence we may learn, that the province of Lodoneium was not only fituated fouth of the Tweed. but also extended beyond Durham, and made a part of England.

I thought this long note requifite in order to correct Mr. Carte's miftake, an author whofe dillgence and industry has given light to many passages of the more antient English history.

* Rymer, vol. 2. p. 539, 845. Walfing. p. 56.

+ Rymer, vol. 2. p. 543. It is remarkable that the English chancellor spoke to the Scots parl'ament in the French tongue. This was also the language commonly made use of by all parties on that occasion. Ibid. passim. The most confiderable of the Scots, as well as almost all the English barons, were of French origin ; they valued themfelves upon it ; and pretended to defpife the language and manners of the island. It is difficult to account for the fettlement of fo many French families in Scotland, the Bruces, Baliols, St. Clairs, Somervilles, Gordons, Frasers, Cummins, Colvilles, Umfrevilles, Mowbrays, Hays, Maules, who were not supported there as in England, by the power of the fword. But the fuperiority of civility and knowledge, however fmall, over total ignorance and barbarifm, is prodigious.

defired

E D W A R D I:

cois

1400 ule,

due

too

10

·C.

011

11-m;

11.

ors

n,

0.

2. 3

-

t

defired them to remove into their own country, to deliberate upon his claim, to Chap. XIII. examine his proofs, to propofe all their objections, and then to inform him of their refolutions: And he appointed a plain at Upfetleton, on the northern banks of the Tweed, for that purpole.

WHEN the Scottish barons affembled in this place, tho' moved with indignation at the injuffice of this unexpected claim, and at the fraud with which it had been conducted, they found themselves betrayed into a lituation, in which it was impoffible for them to make any defence for the ancient liberty and independance of their country. The King of England, a martial and politic prince, at the head of a powerful army, lay at a very fmall diftance, and was only feparated from them by a river fordable in many places. Tho' by a fudden flight fome of them might themfelves be able to make their escape; what hopes could they entertain of fecuring the kingdom against his future enterprizes? Without a head, without union among themfelves, attached all of them to different competitors, whose title they had rashly submitted to the decision of this foreign usurper, and who were thereby reduced to an abfolute dependance upon him; they could only expect by refiftance to entail on themfelves and their posterity a more grievous and more destructive fervitude. Yet even in this desperate state of their affairs, the Scottish barons, as we learn from Walfingham *, one of the best historians of that period, had the courage to reply, that till they had a King, they could take no refolution on fo momentuous a point : The journal of King Edward fays, that they made no answer at all +: That is, perhaps, no particular answer or objection to Edward's claim : And by this folution it is possible to reconcile the journal with the hiftorian. The King, therefore, interpreting their filence as a confent, addreffed himfelf to the feveral competitors, and previoufly to his pronouncing fentence, required their acknowledgement of his fuperiority.

IT is evident from the genealogy of the royal family of Scotland, that there could only be two queftions about the fucceffion, that between Baliol and Bruce on the one hand, and lord Haftings on the other, concerning the partition of the crown; and that between Baliol and Bruce themfelves, concerning the preference of their respective titles, supposing the kingdom indivisible: Yet there appeared on this occasion no lefs than nine claimants befides, who challenged the crown; John Comyn or Cummin Lord of Badenoch, Florence earl of Holland, Patrick Dunbar earl of March, William de Vescey, Robert de Pynkeni, Nicholas de Soules, Patrick Galythly, Roger de Mandeville, Robert de Rofs; not to mention the

* Page 56. M. Weft. p. 436. It is faid by Hemingford, vol. 1. p. 33. that the King menaced violently the Scots barons, and forced them to compliance, at least to filence. + Rymer, vol. 2. P. 548.

77

1291.

king

1291.

Chap. XIII. King of Norway, who claimed as heir to his daughter Margaret *. Some of these competitors were descended from more remote branches of the royal family ; others were even fprung from illegitimate children; and as none of them had the least pretence of right, it is natural to conjecture, that Edward had fecretly encouraged them to appear in the lift of claimants, that he might fow the more divisions among the Scottish nobility, make the cause appear the more intricate, and be able to choose, among a great number, the most obsequious candidate.

BUT he found them all equally obsequious on this occasion +. Robert Bruce was the first who acknowledged Edward's right of superiority over Scotland; and he had fo far foreseen the King's pretensions, that even in his petition, where he fet forth his claim to the crown, he had previoufly applied to him as liege-lord of the kingdom; a ftep which was not taken by any of the other candidates 1. They all, however, with feeming willingness made a like acknowledgement when required ; tho' Baliol, left he fhould give offence to the Scots nation, had taken care to be absent during the first days; and he was the last who recognized the King's title §. Edward next deliberated concerning the method of proceeding in the difcuffion of this great controverfy. He appointed, that Baliol and fuch of the candidates as adhered to him, should choose forty commissioners; Bruce and his adherents other forty: To thefe the King added twenty four Englishmen: And he ordered these hundred and four commissioners to examine the cause deliberately among themselves, and make their report to him # : And he promifed in the enfuing year to give his determination. Mean while, he pretended, that it was requifite to have all the fortreffes of Scotland delivered into his hands, in order to enable him, without opposition, to put the true heir in possession of the crown; and this exorbitant demand was complied with, both by the ftates and the candidates 4. The governors also of all the castles immediately refigned their command; except Umfreville earl of Angus, who refused, without a formal acquittal from the parliament and the feveral claimants, to furrender his fortreffes to fuch a domineering arbiter, who had given to Scotland fo many just reasons of fuspicion *. Before this affembly had broke up, which had fixed fuch a mark of difhonour on the nation, all the prelates and barons there prefent fwore fealty to Edward; and that prince appointed commissioners to take a like oath of all the other barons and perfons of diftinction in Scotland +.

* Walfin. p. 58. + Rymer, vol. 2. p. 529, 545. Walfin. p. 56. Heming. vol. 1. p. 33. 34. Trivet. p. 269. M. Weft. p. 415. ‡ Rymer, vol. 2. p. 577. 578, 579. vol. 2. p. 546. || Rymer, vol. 2. p. 555, 556. + Rymer, vol. 2. p. 529. Walfin. § Rymer, p. 56, 57. * Rymer, vol. 2. p. 531. + Rymer, vol. 12. p. 573.

A

THE

THE King, having finally made, as he imagined, this important acquifition, Chap. XIII. left the commissioners to fit at Berwick, and examine the titles of the several candidates, who claimed the precarious crown, which Edward was willing for fome time to allow the lawful heir to enjoy. He went fouthwards, both in order to affift at the funerals of his mother, Queen Eleanor, who died about this time, and to compose fome differences which had arifen among his principal nobility. Gilbert earl of Glocefter, the greatest baron of the kingdom, had espoused the King's daughter; and being elated by that alliance, and still more by his own exorbitant power, which, he thought, fet him above the laws, he permitted his bailiffs and vaffals to commit violences on the lands of Humphrey Bohun earl of Hereford, who retaliated the injury by like violences. But this was not a reign in which fuch illegal proceedings could pass with impunity. Edward procured a fentence against the two earls, committed them both to prifon, and would not reftore them to their liberty, till he exacted a fine of 1000 merks from Hereford, and one of 10,000 from his fon-in-law.

DURING this interval, the titles of John Baliol and of Robert Bruce, whole claims appeared to be the best founded among the competitors to the crown of Scotland, were the fubject of general disquisition, as well as of debate among the commisfioners. Edward, in order to give greater authority to his intended decifion, proposed this general question both to the affembly, and to all the celebrated lawyers in Europe; Whether a perfon descended from the eldest fister, but farther removed by one degree, was preferable in the fucceffion of kingdoms, fiefs, and other impartible inheritances, to one descended from the younger fifter, but one degree nearer the common flock ? This was the true flate of the cafe; and the right of reprefentation had now gained fuch ground every where, that an uniform anfwer was returned to the King in the affirmative. He therefore pronounced sentence in favour of Baliol; and when Bruce, upon this disappointment, joined afterwards lord Haftings, and claimed a third of the kingdom, which he now pretended to be divifible, Edward, tho' the interefts of his ambition feemed more Award of Edto require the partition of Scotland, again pronounced fentence in favour of Ba- wardin favour liol. That candidate, upon renewing his oath of fealty to England, was put in of Baliol. poffestion of the kingdom *; all his fortreffes were reftored to him +; and the conduct of Edward, both in the deliberate folemnity of the proceedings, and in the juffice of his award, was fo far unexceptionable.

HAD the King entertained no other view than that of establishing his superiority over Scotland, tho' the iniquity of that claim was apparent, and was aggra-

* Rymer, vol. 2. p. 590, 591, 593, 600. + Rymer, vol. 2. p. 590.

sansup is 1203.

vated

1291.

79.

1292.

1293.

80

Chap. XIII. vated by the most egregious breach of trust, he might have fixed his pretensions, and have left that important acquifition to his posterity : But he immediately proceeded in fuch a manner, as made it apparent, that, not contented with this usurpation, he aimed alfo at the abfolute fovereignty and dominion of the kingdom. Inftead of gradually enuring the Scots to bear the yoke, and exerting his rights of fuperiority with moderation, he encouraged all appeals to England; required King John himfelf, by fix different fummons on trivial occasions, to come to London *; refused him the privilege of defending his cause by a procurator; and obliged him to appear at the bar of his parliament as a private perfon +. These humiliating demands were hitherto quite unknown to a King of Scotland : They are however the neceffary confequences of vaffalage by the feudal law; and as there was no preceding inflance of fuch treatment fubmitted to by a prince of that country, Edward must, from that circumstance alone, had there remained any doubt, have been himself convinced, that his claim was altogether an usurpation 1. But his intention plainly was, to enrage Baliol by these indignities, to engage him in rebellion, and to affume the dominion of the flate as the punishment of his treason and felony. Accordingly Baliol, tho' a prince of a foft and gentle fpirit, returned into Scotland highly provoked at this usage, and determined at all hazards to vindicate his liberty; and the war, which foon after broke out between France and England, gave him a favourable opportunity for executing his purpose.

> THE violences, robberies and diforders, to which that age was fo fubject, were not confined to the licentious barons and their retainers at land: The fea was equally infefted with pyracy: The weak execution of the laws had given licence to all orders of men : And a general appetite for rapine and revenge, fupported by a false point of honour, had also infected the merchants and mariners, and pushed them, on any provocation, to seek redress, by immediate retaliation upon the aggreffors. A Norman and English ship met off the coast near Bayonne; and having both occasion for fresh water, they fent their boats to land, and the feveral crews came at the fame time to the fame fpring : There enfued

• Rymer, vol. 2. p. 603, 605, 606, 608, 615, 616. + Ryley's Placit. Parl. p. 152, 153.

t See Rymer, vol. 2. p. 533, where Edward writes to the King's Bench to receive appeals from Scotland. He knew the practice to be unufual; yet he establishes it as an infallible confequence of his fuperiority. We learn also from the fame book, p. 603, that immediately upon receiving the homage, he changed the flyle of his addrefs to the Scots King, whom he now calls diletto & fideli, inflead of fratri diletto & fideli, the appellation which he had always before used to him; see p. 109, 124, 168, 280, 1064. This is a certain proof, that he himfelf was not deceived, as was fcarce indeed poffible, but that he was confcious of his usurpation. Yet he folemnly fwore afterwards to the juffice of his pretentions, when he defended them before Pope Boniface.

3

War with France.

a quarrel

EDWARDOL

a quarrel for the preference: A Norman, drawing his dagger, attempted to ftab Chap. XIII. an Englishman; who, grappling with him, threw his adversary on the ground; and the Norman, as was pretended, falling on his own dagger, was flain *. This fcuffle between two feamen about water, kindled foon a bloody war between the two nations, and involved a great part of Europe in the quarrel. The mariners of the Norman ship carried their complaints to the French King : Philip, without enquiring into the truth, without afking for redrefs, bid them take revenge, and trouble him no more about the matter +. The Normans, who had been more regular than usual in applying to the crown, needed but this hint to proceed to immediate violence. They feized an English ship in the channel; and hanging, along with fome dogs, feveral of the crew on the yard-arm, in prefence of their companions, difmiffed the veffel ±; and bad the mariners inform their countrymen, that vengeance was now taken for the blood of the Norman killed at Bayonne. This injury, accompanied by fo general and deliberate an infult, was refented by the mariners of the cinque ports, who, without carrying any complaints to the King, or waiting for redrefs, retaliated by committing like barbarities on all French veffels without diffinction. The French, provoked by their loffes, preyed on the fhips of all Edward's fubjects, whether English or Gascon : The fea became a fcene of pyracy between the nations : The fovereigns, without either feconding or repressing the violence of their fubjects, feemed to continue indifferent spectators: The English made private affociations with the Irish and Dutch feamen; the French with the Flemish and Genoese §: And the animolities of the people on both fides became every day more violent and barbarous, A fleet of two hundred Norman veffels fet fail to the fouth for wine and other commodities; and in their paffage, feized all the English ships which they met with ; hanged the feamen, and feized the goods. The inhabitants of the English fea ports, informed of this event, fitted out a fleet of fixty fail, ftronger and better manned than the others; and awaited the enemy on their return. After an obstinate battle, they put them to rout, and funk, destroyed, or took the greatest part of them ||. No quarter was given, and it is pretended, that the loss of the French on this occasion, amounted to 15,000 men : Which is accounted for by this circumstance, that the Norman fleet was employed in transporting a confiderable body of foldiers from the fouth.

The affair was now become too important to be any longer overlooked by the princes. On Philip's fending an envoy to demand reparation and reftitution, the

* Walfin. p. 58. Heming. vol. 1. p. 39. + Walfin, p. 58. ‡ Heming, vol. 1. p. 40. M. Weft. p. 419. § Heming. vol. 1. p. 40. || Walfin. p. 60. Trivet, p. 274. Chron. Dunft. vol. 2. p. 609.

VOL. II.

81

1293.

M

King

1293.

82

Chap XIII. King difpatched the bifhop of London to the French court, in order to accomdate the quarrel. He first faid, that the English courts of justice were open to all men; and if any Frenchman were injured, he might feek reparation by courfe of law *. He next offered to adjust the matter by private arbitrators, or by perfonal interview with the King of France, or by a reference either to the Pope or the college of cardinals, or any particular cardinals, agreed on by both parties +. The French, probably the more difgufted, as they were hitherto lofers in the quarrel, refufed all these expedients : The veffels and the goods of merchants were confifcated on both fides: Depredations were continued by the Gafcons on all the weftern coafts of France, as well as by the English in the channel: Philip cited the King, as duke of Guienne, to appear in his court at Paris, and answer for these offences : And Edward, apprehensive of danger to that province, fent John St. John, an experienced foldier, to Bourdeaux, and gave him directions to put Guienne in a posture of defence 1.

1294:

THAT he might however prevent a final rupture between the nations, the King dispatched his brother, Edmond, earl of Lancaster, to Paris; and as that prince had espoused the Queen of Navarre, mother to Jane, Queen of France, he seemed, on account of that alliance, the most proper perfon for finding expedients to accommodate the difference. Jane pretended to interpose with her good offices : Mary, the Queen-dowager, feigned the fame amicable disposition: And these two princesses told Edmond, that the circumftance, the most difficult to adjust, was the point of honour with Philip, who thought himfelf affronted by the injuries committed against him by his fub-vaffals in Guienne : But if once Edward would confent to give him feizin and pofferfion of that province, he would think his honour fully repaired, and engage to reftore it immediately, and would accept of a very eafy fatisfaction for all the other injuries. The King was confulted on this occasion, and as he then found himfelf in immediate danger of war with the Scots, which he regarded as the more important concern, this politic prince, blinded by his favourite paffion for fubduing that nation, allowed himfelf to be deceived by fo grofs an artifice §. He fent his brother orders to fign and execute the treaty with the two queens; Philip folemnly promifed to execute his part of it; and the King's citation to appear in the court of France, was accordingly recalled : But the French monarch was no fooner put in poffeffion of Guienne, than the citation was renewed; Edward was condemned for non-appearance; and Guienne, by a formal fentence, was declared to be forfeited and annexed to the crown II.

+ Trivet, p. 275. 107 . * Trivet, p. 275. ‡ Trivet, p. 276. § Rymer, vol. 2. p. 619, 620. Walfin. p. 61. Heming. vol. 1. p. 42, 43. Trivet, p. 277. || Rymer, vol. 2. p. 620, 622. Walfin. p. 61. Trivet, p. 278.

EDWARD,

E D W A R D I.

EDWARD, fallen into a like fnare with that which he had fpread for the Scots, Chap. XIII. was inraged; and the more fo, as he was justly ashamed of his own conduct, in being to egregiously over-reached by the court of France. Sensible of the extreme difficulties, which he would encounter in the recovery of Gafcony, where he had not retained a fingle place in his hands; he endeavoured to compensate that lofs, by forming alliances with feveral European princes, who, he propofed, should attack France on all quarters, and make a diversion of her forces. Adolphus de Naffau, King of the Romans, entered into a treaty with him for that purpose *; as did alfo Amadæus, count of Savoy, the archbishop of Cologne, the counts of Gueldre and Luxembourg; the duke of Brabant and count of Barre, who had married his two daughters, Margaret and Eleanor : But thefe alliances were extremely burdenfome on his narrow revenues, and proved in the iffue entirely ineffectual. More impression was made on Guienne by an English army, which he compleated by emptying the jails of many thousand thieves and robbers, who had been confined there for their crimes. So low had the profession of arms fallen, and fo much had it degenerated from the footing, on which it ftood during the vigour of the feudal system !

THE King himfelf was detained in England, first by contrary winds +, then by his apprehentions of a Scots invation, and by a rebellion of the Welfh, whom he repressed and brought again under subjection ‡. The army, which he sent to Guienne, was commanded by his nephew, John de Bretagne, earl of Richmond, and under him by St. John, Tibetot, de Vere, and other officers of reputation §; who made themfelves mafters of the town of Bayonne, as well as of Bourg, Blaye, Rions, St. Severe, and other places, which ftraitened Bourdeaux, and cut off its communication both by fea and land. The favour, which the Gafcon nobility bore to the English government, facilitated these conquests, and feemed to promife ftill greater fucceffes; but this advantage was foon loft by the mifconduct of fome of the officers. Philip's brother, Charles de Valois, who commanded the French armies, having laid fiege to Podenfac, a fmall fortrefs near Rions, obliged Giffard, the governor, to capitulate; and the articles, tho? favourable to the English, left all the Gascons prisoners at discretion, of whom about fifty were hanged by Charles as rebels: A policy, by which he both intimidated that people, and produced an irreparable breach between them and the Englifh ... That prince immediately attacked Rions, where the earl of Richmond

* Heming. vol. 1. p. 51. + Chron. Dunft. vol. z. p. 622. 1 Walfing. p. 62. Heming. vol. 1. p. 55. Trevet, p. 282. Chron. Dunft. vol. 2. p. 622. § Trevet. p. 279. || Heming. vol. 1. p. 49.

himfelf

vol. 1. p. 96 Trevet p. 284.

1294.

1295.

1295.

84

Chap. XIII. himfelf commanded; and as the place feemed not very defenfible, the English general drew his troops to the water-fide with an intention of embarking with the greatest part of the army. The enraged Gascons fell upon his rear, and at the fame time opened their gates to the French, who, befides making themfelves mafters of the place, took many prifoners of diffinction. St. Severe was more vigoroufly defended by Hugh de Vere, fon to the earl of Oxford; but was at laft obliged to capitulate. The French King, not contented with thefe fucceffes in Gascony, threatened England with an invasion; and by a sudden attempt, his troops took and burnt Dover *, but were obliged foon after to retire. And in order to make a greater diversion of the English force, and engage Edward in dangerous and important wars, he formed a fecret alliance with John Baliol, King of Scotland ; the commencement of that strict union, which, during fo many ages, was maintained, by mutual interefts and neceffities, between the French and Scottish nations. John confirmed this alliance by stipulating a marriage between his eldest fon and the daughter of Philip de Valois +.

Digreffion concerning the constitution of parliament.

THE expences, attending these multiplied wars of Edward, and his preparations for war, joined to alterations, which had infenfibly taken place in the general state of affairs, obliged him to have frequent recourse to parliamentary supplies, introduced the lower orders of the ftate into the publick councils, and laid the foundations of great and important changes in the government. Tho' nothing could be worfe calculated for cultivating the arts of peace or maintaining peace itfelf, than the long fubordination of vaffalage from the King to the meaneft gentleman, and the confequent flavery of the lower people, evils infeparable from the feudal fyftem; that fyftem was never able to fix the ftate in a proper warlike pofture, or give it the full exertion of its power for defence, and fill lefs for offence, against a public enemy. The military tenants, unacquainted with obedience, unexperienced in war, held a rank in the troops by their birth, not by their merits or fervices; composed a very diforderly and confequently a very feeble army; and during the few days, which they were obliged by their tenures to remain in the field, were often more formidable to their own prince than to foreign powers, against whom they were affembled. The fovereigns came gradually to difuse this cumbersome and dangerous machine, fo apt to recoil upon the hand which held it; and exchanging the military fervice for pecuniary supplies, inlifted forces by means of a contract with particular officers, (fuch as those the Italians denominate Condottieri) whom they difmiffed at the end of the war. The barons and knights themfelves often entered into thefe engage-

* Trevet, p. 284. Chron. Dunft. vol. 2. p. 642. † Rymer, vol. 2. p. 680, 681, 695, 697. Heming. vol. 1. p. 76. Trevet. p. 285.

8

ments

ments with the prince, and were enabled to fill their bands, both by the autho- Chap XIII. rity which they poffeffed over their vaffals and tenants, and from the great numbers of loofe, diforderly people, whom they found on their eftates, and who willingly embraced an opportunity of gratifying their appetite for war and rapine. Mean-while, the old Gothic fabric, being neglected, went gradually to decay; and tho' the conqueror had divided all the lands of England into fixty thousand knight's fees, the number of these was infensibly diminished by various artifices; and the king at laft found, that, by putting the law in execution, he could affemble only a very fmall part of the antient force of the kingdom. It was an ufual expedient for men, who held of the King or a great baron by military tenure, to transfer their lands to the church, and receive them back by another tenure called frankalmoigne, by which they were not bound to perform any fervice*. A law was made against this practice; but the abuse had probably gone far before it was attended to, and probably was not entirely corrected by the new ftatute, which, like most of the laws of that age, we may conjecture to have been but feebly executed by the magiftrate against the perpetual interests of fo many individuals. The conftable and mareschal, when they must ered the armies, often in a hurry, and for want of better information, received the fervice of a baron for fewer knight's fees, than were due by him; and one precedent of this kind was held good against the King, and became ever after a reason for diminishing the fervice +. The rolls of knight's fees were very inaccurately kept; no care was taken to clear them before the armies were fummoned into the field 1; it was then too late to think of examining records and charters; and the fervice was accepted on the footing which the vaffal himfelf was pleafed to acknowledge, after all the various fubdivisions and conjunctions of property had thrown an obfourity on the nature and extent of his tenure §. It is eafy to judge of the intricacies which would attend difputes of this kind with individuals; when even the number of military fees, belonging to the church, whofe property was fixed and unalienable, became the fubject of controverfy; and we find in particular, that when the bishop of Durham was charged with seventy knights fees for the aid levied to marry Henry II's daughter to the duke of Saxony, the prelate acknowledged ten, and difowned the other fixty ||. It is not known in what manner this difference was terminated; but had the queftion been concerning an armament to defend the kingdom, the bishop's fervice would probably have been received

* Madox's Baronia Anglica, p. 114. + Madox's Baronia Anglica, p. 115.

‡ We hear only of one King, Henry II. who took this pains; and the record, called Liber niger Scaccarii, was the refult of it. § Madox. Bar. Ang. p. 116. || Madox. Bar. Ang. p. 122. Hift. of the Exch, p. 404.

22 54 de ce a competition lo rewithout

85

1295.

1295.

86

Chap. XIII. without opposition for ten fees, and this rate must also have fixed all his future payments. Pecuniary fcutages, therefore, diminished as much as military fervices *: Other methods of filling the exchequer as well as the armies must be devifed : New fituations produced new laws and inftitutions : And the great alterations in the finances and military power of the crown, as well as in private property, were the fource of equal innovations in every part of the legiflature or civil government.

> THE exorbitant estates, conferred by the Norman, on his barons and chieftains, remained not long entire and unimpaired. The landed property was gradually shared out into more hands; and those immense baronies were divided, either by provisions to younger children, by partitions among co heirs, by fale, or by escheating to the King, who gratified a great number of his courtiers, by dealing them out among them in fmaller portions. Such moderate eftates, as they required oeconomy, and confined the proprietors to their own houfes, were better calculated for duration; and the order of knights and fmall barons grew daily more numerous, and began to form a very respectable rank or order in the state. As they were all of them immediate valials of the crown by military tenure, they were, from the principles of the feudal law, equally intitled with the greatest barons, to a feat in the national or general councils; and this right, tho' regarded as a privilege, which the owners would not entirely relinquish, was also confidered as a burthen, which they defired to be fubjected to only on extraordinary occasions. Hence it was provided in the charter of King John, that, while the great barons were fummoned to the general council by a particular writ, the fmall barons, under which appellation the knights were alfo comprehended, should on'y be called by a general fummons of the sheriff. The distinction between great and finall barons, like that between rich and poor, was not exactly defined; but, agreeable to the inaccurate genius of that age and to the fimplicity of antient government, was left very much to be determined by the difcretion of the King and his minifters. It was usual for the prince to require, by a particular fummons, the attendance of a baron in one parliament, and to neglect him in future parliaments +; nor was this uncertainty ever complained of as an injury. He attended when required : He was better pleased on other occasions to be exempted from the burthen : And as he was acknowledged to be of the

. In order to pay the fum of 100,000 marks, as King Richard's ranfom, twenty shillings were imposed on each Knight's fee. Had the fees remained on the original footing, as settled by the conqueror, this foutage would have amounted to 90,000 marks, which was nearly the fum required : But we find, that many other grievous taxes were imposed to complete it : A certain proof, that many frauds and abuses had prevailed in the roll of knights fees. + Chancellor Weit. enquiry into the manner of creating peers, p. 43, 46, 47, 55.

fame

E D W A R D I.

fame order with the greatest barons, it gave them no furprize to fee him Chap. XIII. take his feat in the great councils, whether he appeared of his own accord, or by a particular fummons from the King. The barons from Wit, therefore, began gradually to intermix themfelves with the antient barons from Tenure; and as Cambden tells us *, from an antient manufcript, now loft, that after the battle of Evenham, a politive law was enacted, prohibiting every baron to appear in parliament, who was not invited thither by a particular fummons, the whole baronage of England held thenceforward their feat by writ, and this important privilege of their tenures was in effect abolished. Only where writs had been regularly continued for fome time in one great family, the omiffion of them would have been regarded as an affront, and even as an injury.

A like alteration gradually took place in the order of earls, who were the higheft rank of barons. The dignity of an earl, like that of a baron, was antiently territorial and official +: He exercifed jurifdiction within his county : He levied the third of the fines to his own profit : He was at once a civil and a military, magistrate : And tho' his authority, from the first conquest of the Normans, was hereditary in England, the title was fo much connected with the office, that where the King intended to create a new earl, he had no other expedient than to erect a certain territory into a county or earldom, and to beftow it upon the perfon and his family ‡. But as the fheriffs, who were the vice-gerents of the earls, were named by the King, and removeable at pleafure, he found them more dependant upon him; and endeavoured to throw the whole authority and jurifdiction of the office into their hands. This magistrate was at the head of the finances, and levied all the King's rents within his county : He affeffed at pleafure the talliages on the inhabitants in royal demefne: He had ufually committed to him the management of wards and often of escheats : He prefided in the lower courts of judicature : And thus, tho' inferior to the earl in dignity, he was foon confidered, by this union of the judicial and fifcal powers, and by the confidence reposed in him by the King, as much superior to him in authority, and undermined his influence within his own jurifdiction §. It became usual, in creating an earl, to give him a fixt fallary, commonly about twenty pounds a year, in lieu of his third of the fines : The diminution of his power kept pace with the retrenchment of his profit : And the dignity of earl, inftead of territorial and official,

§ There are inflances of princes of the blood who accepted of the office of theriff. Spellman in voce Vicecomis.

1295.

87

^{*} In Britann. p. 122. + Spellm. Gloff. in voce, Comis.

^{24 ±} Effays on British Antiquities. This practice, however, seems to have been more familiar in Scotland and the kingdoms on the continent, than in England.

1295.

88

Chap. XIII. cial, dwindled into perfonal and titular. Such were the mighty alterations, which had already fully taken place, or were gradually advancing, in the house of peers; that is, in the parliament : For there was antiently no other house.

> But tho' the introduction of barons by writ, and of titular earls, had given fome encrease to the royal authority; there were other causes, which counterballanced those innovations, and tended in a higher degree to diminish the power of the fovereign. The difuse, into which the feudal militia had in a great measure fallen, made the barons almost entirely forget their dependence on the crown : By the diminution of knights fees, the King had no reasonable compensation when he levied fourages and exchanged their fervices for money : The alienations of the crown lands had reduced him to poverty: And above all, the conceffion of the great charter had fet bounds to royal authority, and had rendered it more difficult and dangerous for the prince to exert any extraordinary acts of arbitrary power. In this fituation it was natural for the King to court the friendship of the leffer barons and knights, whole influence was nowife dangerous to him, and who, being exposed to oppreffion from their powerful neighbours, fought a legal protection under the shadow of the throne. He defired, therefore, to have their prefence in parliament, where they ferved to controul the turbulent refolutions of the great. To exact a regular attendance of the whole body would have produced confusion, and would have imposed too heavy a burthen upon them: To fummon only a few by writ, tho' it was practifed and had a good effect, ferved not entirely the King's purpofe; becaufe thefe members had no farther authority than attended their perfonal character, and were eclipfed by the appearance of the more powerful nobility. He therefore difpenfed with the attendance of most of the leffer barons in parliament; and in return for this indulgence, (for fuch it was then effeemed) required them to choofe in each county a certain number of their own body, whofe charges they bore, and who, having gained the confidence, carried with them, of course, the authority of the whole order. This expedient had been practifed at different times, in the reign of Henry III *. and regularly, during that of the prefent King. The numbers fent up by each county varied at the will of the prince + : They took their feat among the other peers ; because by their tenure they belonged to that order ‡ : The introducing them into that house fcarce appeared to be an innovation : And tho' it was eafily in the King's power, by varying their number, to command the refolutions of the whole parliament, this circumstance was little attended to, in an age, when force was

* Rot. Clauf. 38. Hen. III. m. 7. and 12 d: As alfo Rot. Clauf. 42. Hen. III. m. 1. d. Prynne's pref. to Cotton's Abridgement. + Brady's answer to Petyt, from the records, p. 151. ‡ Brady's Treatife of Boroughs, App. Nº. 13.

more

E D W A R D I.T 21 H

more prevalent than laws, and when a refolution, tho' taken by the majority of Chap. XIII. a legal affembly, could not be executed, if it oppofed the will of the more power-1295ful minority.

Bur there were other important confequences, which followed the diminution and difuse of the antient feudal militia. The King's expences, in levying and maintaining a military force for every enterprize, was encreafed beyond what his narrow revenues were able to bear : As the fcutages of his military tenants, which were accepted in lieu of their perfonal fervice, had fallen to nothing; there were no means of fupply but from voluntary aids granted him by the parliament and church : Or from the talliages which he might levy upon the towns and inhabitants in royal demefne. In the former year, Edward had been obliged to exact no lefs than the fixth of all moveables from the laity, and the half of all ecclefiaffical benefices * for his expedition into Poictou, and the suppression of the Welfh: And this diftrefsful fituation, which was likely often to return upon him and his fucceffors, made him think of a new device, and fummon up the reprefentatives of all the boroughs to parliament. This period, which is the twenty third of his reign, feems to be the real and true epoch of the house of commons; and the first faint dawnings of popular government in England. For the representatives of the counties were only deputies from the fmaller barons and leffer nobility : And the former precedent of representatives from the boroughs, who were fummoned by the earl of Leicester, was regarded as the act of a violent usurpation, had been difcontinued in all the fubfequent parliaments, and if that measure had not become requisite on other accounts, this example was more likely to blaft than give credit to it.

DURING the course of two centuries, the kings of England, in imitation of other European princes, had embraced the falutary policy of encouraging and protecting the lower and more industrious orders of the flate; whom they found well difpofed to obey the laws and civil magiftrate, and whofe ingenuity and labour furnished commodities, requisite for the ornament of peace and support of war. Tho' the inhabitants of the country were still left at the disposal of their imperious lords; many attempts were made to give more fecurity and liberty to citizens, and make them enjoy unmolefted the fruits of their industry. Boroughs were erected by royal patent within the demeine lands : Liberty of trade was conferred upon them : The inhabitants were allowed to farm at a fixt rent their own tolls and cuftoms +: They were permitted to elect their own magiftrates: Juftice was diffributed to them by these magistrates, without obliging

* Brady of boroughs, p. 31. from the records. Heming. vol. 1. p. 52. M. Weft. p. 422. Ryley, + Madox. Firma Burgi, p. 21. p. 462. N

VOL. II.

them

1295.

90

Chap. XIII. them to attend the fheriff or county courts : And fome fhadow of independance was gradually acquired to the people, by means of thefe equitable privileges *-The King, however, retained still the power of levying talliages or taxes upon them at pleafure +; and tho' their poverty and the cuftoms of the age made these demands neither frequent nor exorbitant, fuch unlimited authority in the fovereign was a fenfible check upon commerce, and was utterly incompatible with all the principles of a free government. But when the multiplied neceffities of the crown produced a greater demand for fupply, the King, whole prerogative entitled him. to exact it, found, that he had not power fufficient to enforce his edicts, and that it was requilite, before he imposed taxes, to fmooth the way for his demand, and to obtain the previous confent of the boroughs, by follicitation, remonstrances, and authority. The inconvenience of transacting this business with every particular borough was foon felt; and Edward became fenfible, that the most expeditious way of obtaining fupply, was to affemble together the deputies of all the boroughs, to lay before them the neceffities of the flate, to difcuss the matter in their presence, and to require their consent to the demands of their fovereign. For this reason, he issued writs to the sheriffs, enjoining them to fend to parliament, along with two knights of the fhire, two deputies from each borough within their county ‡, and these provided with sufficient powers from their community, to confent, in their name, to what he and his council should require of them. As it is a most equitable rule, fays he, in his preamble to this writ, that what concerns all should be approved of by all; and common dangers be repelled by united efforts §; a noble principle, which may feem to indicate a liberal mind in the King, and which laid the foundations of a free and an equitable government.

AFTER the election of these deputies, by the aldermen and common council, they gave fureties for their attendance before the King and parliament : Their charges were borne by the borough, which fent them : And they had fo little idea of appearing as legiflators, a character extremely wide of their low rank and con-

* Brady of boroughs, Appen. Nº. 1, 2, 3.

+ The King had not only the power of talliating the inhabitants within his own demefnes, but that of granting to particular barons the power of talliating the inhabitants within theirs. See Brady's answer to Petyt, p. 118. Madox hift. of the Exchequer, p. 518.

‡ Writs were iffued to about 120 cities and boroughs.

§ Brady of boroughs, p. 25, 33, from the records. The writs of the parliaments immediately preceding, remain : and the return of knights is there required, but not a word of the boroughs : A demonstration, that this was the very year in which they commenced. In the year immediately preceding, the taxes were levied by a feeming or forced confent of each particular borough, beginning with London. Id. p. 31, 32, 33, from the records. Alfo his answer to Petyt, p. 40, 41.

dition.

E D W A R D I.

dition *, that no intelligence could be more difagreeable to any borough, than to Chap. XIII. find that they must elect, or to any individual than that he was elected, to a truft from which no profit or honour could poffibly be expected +. They composed not, properly speaking, any effential part of the parliament : They met apart both from the barons and knights ‡, who difdained to mix with fuch mean perfonages : After they had given their confent to the taxes, required of them, their bufiness being now finished, they separated, even tho' the parliament still continued to fit, and to canvals the national bufinels §: And as they all confifted of men, who were real burgeffes of the place, from which they were fent, the fheriff, when he found no perfon of abilities or wealth fufficient for this office, often used the freedom of omitting particular boroughs in his returns; and as he re-· ceived the thanks of the people for this indulgence, he gave no offence to the court, who levied, without distinction, the tax agreed to by the majority of deputies ||.

THE union, however, of the reprefentatives from all the boroughs gave gradually more weight to the whole order; and it became cuftomary for them, in return for the fupplies, which they granted, to prefer petitions to the crown for the redrefs of any particular grievances, of which they found reason to complain. The more the King's demands multiplied, the fafter these petitions encreafed both in number and authority; and the prince found it difficult to refuse men, whose grants had supported his throne, and to whose affistance he might fo foon be again obliged to have recourfe. The commons however were still much below the rank of legislators 4. Their petitions, tho' they received a verbal

* Reliquiæ Spellm. p. 64. Prynne's pref. to Cotton's Abridg. and the Abridg. paffim.

+ Brady of boroughs, p. 59, 60.

‡ Brady of boroughs, p. 37, 38, from the records, and append. p. 19. Alfo his append. to his anf. to Petyt. Record. And his gloff. in Verb. Communitas Regn. p. 33.

§ Ryley's Placit. Parl. p. 241, 242, &c. Cotton's Abridg. p. 14.

|| Brady of boroughs, p. 52, from the records. There is even an inftance in the reign of Edward III, when the King named all the deputies. Id. anf. to Petyt, p. 161. If he fairly named the most confiderable and creditable burgefies, little exception would be taken; as their bufinefs was not to check the King, but to reason with him and confent to his demands. It was not till the reign of Richard II. that the sheriffs were deprived of the power of omitting boroughs at pleasure. See Stat. at large, 5th Rich. II. cap. 4.

+ In the reign of Henry IV. the King told the commons, that they were only petitioners, that is, they had not any proper legislative authority. Cotton's abridg. p. 392. All judgment, fays the Record. appertains to the King and the lords. The commons were fo little accuftomed to transact public bufinefs, that they had no speaker, till after the parliament 6th Edw. III. See Prynne's preface to Cotton's abridg. Not till the first of Richard II. in the opinion of most antiquarians. The commons were 1295.

1295.

91

Nz

92

Chap. XIII. bal affent from the throne, were only the rudiments of laws : The judges were afterwards entrusted with the power of putting them into form : And the King, by adding to them the fanction of his authority, and that fometimes without the affent of the nobles, beftowed validity upon them. The age did not refine fo much as to perceive the danger of these irregularities. No man was displeased, that the fovereign, at the defire of any class of men, should iffue an order, which only concerned that clafs; and his predeceffors were fo near poffeffing the whole legiflative power, that he gave no difgust by affuming it in this feemingly inoffenfive manner. But time and farther experience gradually opened mens eyes and corrected fuch abuses. It was found, that no laws could be fixed for one order of men without affecting the whole; and that the force and efficacy of laws depended entirely on the terms employed in wording them. The houfe of peers, therefore, the most powerful order of the state, reasonably expected, that their affent should be expressly granted to all public ordinances *: And in the reign of Henry V. the commons required that no laws should be framed merely upon their petitions, unlefs the flatutes were worded by themfelves, and had paffed their house in the form of a bill +.

BUT as the fame causes, which produced a partition of property, continued still to operate; the number of knights and leffer barons, or what the English call the gentry, perpetually encreafed, and funk into a rank still more inferior to the great nobility. The equality of tenure was loft in the great inferiority of power and property; and the house of representatives from the counties was gradually separated from that of the peers, and formed a diffinct order in the state t: The growth of commerce, meanwhile, augmented the private wealth and confideration of the burgeffes; the frequent demands of the crown encreased their public importance; and as they refembled the knights of fhires in one material circumstance, that of representing particular bodies of men; it no longer appeared unfuitable to unite them together in the fame house, and to confound their were very unwilling to meddle in any flate affairs, and commonly either referred themfelves to the lords, or defired a felect committee of that house to affist them, as appears from Cotton. 5 E. III. n. 5. 15 E. III. n. 17; 21 E. III. n. 5; 47 E. III. n. 5; 50 E. III. n. 10; 51 E. III. n. 18; 1 R. II. n. 12; 2 R. II. n. 12; 5 R. II. n. 14, 2 parl. 6 R. II. n. 14; parl. 2. 6 R. II. n. 8, &c.

* In these inftances found in Cotton's abridgement, where the King appears to answer of himself the petitions of the commons, he probably exerted no more than that power, which was long inherent in the crown, of regulating leffer matters by his edicts or proclamations. But no durable or general statute feems ever to have been made by the King from the petition of the commons alone, without the affent of the peers.

+ Brady's answer to Petyt, p. 85, from the records.

‡ Cotton's abridgement, p. 13.

rights

rights and privileges *. Thus the third eftate, that of the commons, reached at Chap. XIII. last its prefent form; and as the country gentlemen made thenceforwards no fcruple of appearing as deputies of the boroughs, the diffinction between the members was entirely loft, and the lower house acquired thence a great acceffion of weight and importance in the kingdom. Still, however, the office of this effate was very different from that which it has fince exercifed with fo much advantage to the public. Inftead of checking and controuling the authority of the King, they were naturally induced to adhere to him, as the great fountain of law and juffice, and to support him against the exorbitant power of the aristocracy, which was at once the fource of oppreffion to themfelves, and diffurbed him in the execution of the laws. The King, in his turn, gave countenance to an order of men, fo useful and fo little dangerous: The peers also were obliged to pay them fome confideration: And by this means, the third eftate, formerly fo abject in England, as well as in all other European nations, role by flow degrees to their prefent im-

* It was very agreeable to the maxims of all the feudal governments, that every order of the flate fhould give their confent to the acts which more immediately concerned them ; and as the notion of a political fystem was not then fo well understood, the other orders of the state were often not confulted on these occasions. In this reign, even the merchants, tho' no public body, granted the King impofitions on merchandize, becaufe the first payments came out of their pockets. They did the fame in the reign of Edward III. but the commons had then observed, that the people paid these duties, tho' the merchants advanced them; and they therefore remonstrated against this practice. Cotton's abridg. p. 39. The taxes imposed by the knights on the counties were always lighter than those which the burgeffes laid on the boroughs, a prefumption, that in voting these taxes the knights and burgeffes did not form the fame house. See chancellor Weft's enquiry into the manner of creating peers, p. 8. But there are so many proofs, that these two orders of representatives were long separate, that it is needless to infift on them. Mr. Carte, who had carefully confulted the rolls of parliament, affirms, that they never appear to have been united till the 16th of Edward III. See Hift. vol. z. p. 451. But 'tis certain that this union was not even then final : In 1372, the burgefies acted by themfelves, and voted a tax after the knights were difmiffed. See Tyrrel Hift. vol. 3. p. 734, from Rot. Clauf. 46 Edw. III. n. 9. In 1376, they were the knights alone, who passed a vote for the removal of Alice Pierce from the King's perfon, if we may credit Walfingham, p. 189. There is an inftance of a like kind in the reign of Richard II. Cotton, p. 193. The different taxes voted by these two branches of the lower house, kept them naturally feparate : But as their petitions had mostly the fame object, viz. the redrefs of grievances, and the fupport of law and juffice both against the crown and the barons, this cause as naturally united them, and was the reafon why they at last joined in one house for the dispatch of bufinefs. The barons had few petitions : There privileges were of more antient date : Grievances feldom affected them : They were themselves the chief oppressors. In 1333, the knights by themselves concurred with the bishops and barons in advising the King to stay his journey into Ireland. Here was a petition which regarded a matter of flate, and was fuppofed to be above the capacity of the burgefles. The knights, therefore, acted a part in this petition. See Cotton. abridg. p. 13. Chief baron Gilbert thinks, that the reafon why taxes began always with the commons or burgeffes was, that they were limited by the inftructions of their boroughs. See hift. of the Exchequer, p. 37.

1 200

portance:

93

1295:

94

Chap. XIII. portance ; and in their progrefs made arts and commerce, the neceffary attendants of liberty and equality, flourish in the kingdom *.

WHAT sufficiently proves, that the commencement of the house of burgeffes, who were the true commons, was not an affair of chance, but arofe from the neceffities of the present situation, is, that Edward, at the very fame time, fummoned deputies from the inferior clergy, the first that ever met in England +, and he required them to impose taxes on their constituents for the public service. Formerly the ecclefiaftical benefices bore no part of the burthens of the flate : The Pope had indeed of late often levied impofitions upon them : He had fometimes granted this power to the fovereign ‡ : Edward himfelf had in the former year exacted by menaces and violence, a very grievous tax of half their revenue : But as this precedent was dangerous, and could not eafily be repeated in a government, which required the confent of the fubject to any extraordinary refolution; Edward found it more prudent to affemble a lower house of convocation, to lay before them his necessities, and to ask fome supply. But on this occasion he met

* The chief argument from antient authority, for the opinion that the reprefentatives of boroughs preceded the forty-ninth of Henry III. is the famous petition of the borough of St. Albans, first taken notice of by Selden, and then by Petyt, Brady, Tyrrel, and others. In this petition, prefented to the parliament in the reign of Edward II. the town of St. Albans afferts, that tho' they held in capite of the crown, and owed only, for all other fervices, their attendance in parliament, yet the sheriff had omitted them in his writs; whereas both in the reign of the King's father, and all his predeceflors, they had always fent members. Now, fay the defenders of this opinion, if the commencement of the house of commons was in Henry III's reign, this expression could not have been used. But Madox, in his History of the Exchequer, p. 522, 523, 524, has endeavoured to destroy the authority of this petition for the purpose alledged. He asserts, first, that there was no such tenure in England as that of holding by attendance in parliament, instead of all other fervice. Secondly, That the borough of St. Albans never held of the crown at all, but was always demenne land of the abbot. It is no wonder, therefore, that a petition which advances two falshoods, should contain one historical mistake, which indeed amounts only to an inaccurate expression. Accordingly St. Albans continued still to belong to the abbot. It never held of the crown, till after the diffolution of the monasteries. But the affurance of these petitioners is remarkable. They wanted to shake off the authority of their abbot, and to hold of the King; but were unwilling to pay any fervices even to the crown: Upon which they framed this petition, which latter writers have made the foundation of fo many inferences and conclusions. From the tenor of the petition it appears, that there was a close connexion between holding of the crown, and being represented in parliament : The latter had fcarce ever place without the former : Yet we learn from Tyrrel's Append. vol. 4. that there were fome inflances to the contrary. It is not improbable, that Edward followed the roll of the earl of Mountfort, who had fummoned, without diffinction, all the confiderable boroughs of the kingdom; among whom there might be fome few who did hold of the crown. Edward also found it necessary to impose taxes on all the boroughs of the kingdom without diffinction. This was a good expedient for augmenting his revenue.

+ Archbp. Wake's State of the Church of England, p. 235. Brady of boroughs, p. 34: Gilbert's Hift. of the Exch. p. 46. 1 Ann. Waverl. p. 227, 228. T. Wykes, p. 99, 120.

with

with difficulties. Whether that the clergy thought themfelves the moft indepen- Chap. XIII. dant body of men in the kingdom, or were difgusted by the former exorbitant impolitions, they absolutely refused their affent to the King's demand of a fifth of their moveables; and it was not till a fecond meeting, that on their perfifting in this refusal, he was willing to accept of a tenth. The barons and knights granted him, without hefitation, an eleventh; the burgeffes, a feventh. But the clergy still fcrupled to meet on the King's writ; lest by fuch obedience they fhould feem to acknowledge the authority of the temporal power : And this compromise was at last fallen upon, that the King should issue his writ to the archbishop; and that the archbishop should, in confequence of it, fummon the clergy, who, as they then appeared to obey their fpiritual fuperior, no longer hefitated to meet in convocation. This expedient, however, was the caufe, why the ecclefiaftics met in two houses of convocation, under their several archbishops, and formed not one eftate, like those in other countries of Europe, as was at first the King's intention *. We now return to the course of our narration.

EDWARD, confcious of the reasons of difgust which he had given the King of Scots, informed of the dispositions of that people, and expecting the most violent effects of their refentment, which he knew he had fo well merited; employed the fupplies, granted him by his people, in making preparations against the hostilities of his northern neighbour. When in this fituation, he received intelligence of the treaty fecretly concluded between John and Philip; and tho' uneafy at this concurrence of a French and Scots war, he refolved not to encourage his enemies by a pufillanimous behaviour, or by yielding to their united efforts. He fummoned John to perform the duty of a vallal, and to fend him a fupply of forces against an invasion from France, with which he was then threatened : He next required, that the fortreffes of Berwic, Jedborough, and Roxborough, should be put into his hands as a fecurity during the war + : He cited John to appear in an English parliament, held at Newcastle: And when none of these fuccessive demands were complied with, he marched northward with numerous forces, 30,000 foot, and 4000 horfe, to chastife his rebellious vasial. The Scottish nation, who had little reliance on the vigour and fpirit of their prince, affigned him a council of twelve noblemen, in whole hands the fovereignty was really lodged ‡, and who put the country in the beft pofture, of which the prefent diffractions would admit. A great army, composed of 40,000 infantry, tho' supported only by 500 cavalry, advanced to the frontiers; and after a fruitlefs attempt * Gilbert's Hift. of Excheq. p. 51, 54. + Rymer, vol. 2. p. 692. Walfin. p. 64. Heming, vol. 1. p. 84. Trivet. p. 286. 1 Heming, vol. 1. p. 75.

95

1295.

1296.

upon 1296.

96

Chap. XIII. upon Carlifle, marched eaftwards to defend those provinces, which Edward was preparing to attack. But fome of the most confiderable of the Scottish nobles, Robert Bruce, the father and fon, the earls of March and Angus, prognofficating the ruin of their country, from the concurrence of inteffine divisions and a foreign invalion, endeavoured here to ingratiate themselves with Edward, by an early fubmiffion ; and the King, encouraged by this favourable incident, led his army into the enemies' country, and croffed the Tweed without opposition at 28th March. Coldstream. He then received a meffage from John, by which that prince, having now procured, for himfelf and his nation, Pope Celeftine's difpensation from former oaths, renounced the homage which had been done to England, and fet Edward at defiance *. This bravado was but ill supported by the military operations of the Scots. Berwic was already taken by affault : Sir William Douglas, the governor, was made prisoner : Above 7000 of the garrison were put to the fword + : And Edward, elated by this great advantage, difpatched earl Warrenne with 10,000 men, to lay fiege to Dunbar, which was defended by the flower of the Scottish nobility.

THE Scots, sensible of the importance of this place, which, if taken, laid their whole country open to the enemy, advanced with their main army, under the command of the earls of Buchan, Lenox, and Mar, in order to relieve it. Warrenne, not difmayed by the great fuperiority of their number, marched out 27th April. to give them battle. He attacked them with great vigour; and as undifciplined troops, the more numerous they are, are but the more exposed to a panic upon any alarm, he foon threw them into confusion, and chaced them off the field with great flaughter ‡. The loss of the Scots is faid to have amounted to 20,000 men : The caftle of Dunbar, with all its garrifon, furrendered next day to Edward, who, after the battle, had brought up the main body of the English, and who now proceeded with an affured confidence of fuccefs. The caftle of Roxborough was yielded by James, steward of Scotland §; and that nobleman, from whom is defcended the royal family of Stuart, was again obliged to fwear fealty to Edward. After a feeble refiftance, the caftles of Edinburgh and Stirling opened their gates to the enemy. All the fouthern parts were inftantly fubdued by the English; and to enable them the better to reduce the northern, whose inacceffible fituation feemed to give them fome more fecurity, Edward received a ftrong reinforcement of Welfh and Irifh, who being accustomed to a defultory kind of war, were the best qualified to pursue the fugitive Scots into > * Rymer, vol. 2. p. 607. Walfin. p. 66. Heming. vol. 1. p. 92. + Walfin. p. 66. Heming, vol. 1. 89. Trivet, p. 289. ‡ Walfin. p. 67. Heming. vol. 1. p. 96. Trivet, p. 291. Chron. Dunft. vol. 2. p. 650. § Heming. vol. 1. p. 97. Trivet, p. 292.

> > the

E D W A R D I.

the receffes of their lakes and mountains *. But the fpirit of the nation was al- Chap. XIII. ready broke by their misfortunes; and the feeble and timid Baliol, difcontented Scotland fubwith his own fubjects, and over-awed by the English, abandoned all those re- dued. fources, which his people might yet have poffeffed in this extremity. ' He haftened to make his fubmission to Edward; he expressed the deepest penitence for his difloyalty to his liege lord; and he made a folemn and irrevocable refignation of his crown into the hands of that monarch +. Edward marched northwards to Aberdeen and Elgin, without meeting an enemy : No Scotfman approached him but to pay him fubmiffion and do him homage ‡: Even the turbulent highlanders, ever refractory to their own princes, and averfe to the reftraint of laws, endeavoured to prevent the devastation of their country, by giving him early proofs of obedience : And Edward, having brought the whole kingdom to a feeming flate of tranquility, returned to the fouth with his army. There was a flone, to which the popular fuperflition of the Scots paid the higheft veneration : All their Kings were feated on it when they received the rite of inauguration : An antient tradition affured them, that wherever this frone was placed, their nation should always govern : And it was carefully preferved at Scone, as the true palladium of their monarchy, and their ultimate refource amidst all their misfortunes. Edward got poffeffion of it; and carried it with him to England §. He gave orders to deftroy all the records, and all those monuments of antiquity, which might preferve the memory of the independance of the kingdom, and refute the English claims of fuperiority. The Scots pretend, that he alfo deftroyed all the annals preferved in their convents: But it is not probable, that a nation, fo rude and unpolifhed, would be poffeffed of any hiftory, which deferves much to be regreted. The great feal of Baliol was broke; and that prince himfelf was carried a prifoner to London, and committed to cuftody in the Tower. Two years afterwards he was reftored to his liberty, and fubmitted to a voluntary banishment in France, where, without making any farther attempts for the recovery of his royalty, he died in a private flation. Earl Warrenne was left governor of Scotland #: Englifhmen were entrufted with all the chief offices : And Edward, flattering himfelf that he had attained the end of all his wifhes, and that the long train of fraud and violence which he had practifed against Scotland, had terminated in the final reduction of that kingdom, returned with his victorious army into England.

An attempt, which he made about the fame time, for the recovery of Guienne, War with was not equally fuccessful. He fent thither an army of 7000 men, under the France.

* Heming. vol. 1. p. 98. Chron. Dunft. vol. 2. p. 650. + Rymer, vol. 2. p. 718. Walfing. p. 67. Heming. vol. 1. p. 99. Trivet, p. 292. 1 Heming. vol. 1. p. 100, 101. § Walfing. p. 68. Trivet, p. 299. | Rymer, vol. 2. p. 726. Trivet, p. 295. VOL. II. 0

97

com-

1296.

98

Chap. XIII. command of his brother the earl of Lancaster; and that prince gained at first fome advantages over the French at Bourdeaux : But he was foon after feized with: a diftemper, of which he died at Bayonne. The command devolved on the early of Lincoln, who was not able to perform any thing confiderable during the reft of the campaign *.

But the active and ambitious spirit of Edward, while his conquests brought such confiderable accessions to the English monarchy, could never be fatisfied, fo long as. Guienne, the antient patrimony of his family, was wrefted from him by the difhonest artifices of the French monarch. Finding, that the diftance of that province rendered all his efforts against it feeble and uncertain, he proposed to attack France in a quarter where the appeared more vulnerable; and with this view, he married. his daughter Elizabeth to John earl of Holland, and at the fame time contracted an alliance with Guy earl of Flanders, stipulated to pay him the fum of 75,000 l. and projected an invation with their united forces upon Philip, their common enemy +. He hoped, that, when he himfelf at the head of the English, Flemish, and Dutch armies, re-inforced by his German allies, to whom he had promifed or remitted very confiderable fums, should enter the frontiers of France, and threaten the capital itfelf with imminent danger, Philip would at last be obliged to relinquish his acquisitions, and purchase peace by the restitution of Guienne. But in order to fet this great machine in movement, confiderable fupplies were requifite from the parliament; and Edward, without much difficulty, obtained from the barons and knights a new grant of a twelfth of all their moveables, and from the boroughs, that of an eighth. The great and almost unlimited power of the King over the latter, enabled him to throw the heaviest part of the burthen on them; and the prejudices, which he feems always to have entertained against the church, on account of their former zeal for the Mountfort faction, made him refolve to load them with still more confiderable impositions, and he required of them a fifth of their moveables. But he here met with an oppolition, which for fome time difconcerted all his measures, and engaged him in enterprizes, which were fomewhat dangerous to him, and would have proved ruinous to any of his predeceffors.

Diffentions with the clergy.

BONIFACE VIII. who had fucceeded Celeftine in the papal throne, was a man of the most losty and enterprizing spirit; and tho' he wanted that austerity of manners, which commonly accompanies ambition in men of his order, he was determined to carry the authority of the tiara, and his dominion over the temporal power, to as great a height as it had ever attained in any former period. Senfible that

A Heming. vol. 1. p. 72, 73, 74.

+ Rymer, vol. 2. p. 761. Walfing. p. 68.

his,

E D W A R D I:

his immediate predeceffors, by oppreffing the church in every province of Chrift- Chap. XIII. endom, had extremely alienated the affections of the clergy, and had afforded the civil magistrate a pretence for laying like impositions on ecclesiastical revenues, he attempted to refume the former station of the fovereign pontiff, and to establish himfelf as the common protector of the spiritual order against all invaders. For this purpofe, he iffued very early in his pontificate a general bull, probihiting all princes to levy without his confent any taxes from the clergy, and all clergymen to fubmit to fuch impositions; and threatening both of them with the penalties of excommunication in cafe of difobedience *. This important edict is faid to have been procured by the folicitation of Robert de Winchelsey, archbishop of Canterbury, who intended to employ it as a rampart against the violent extortions which the church had felt from Edward, and the ftill greater, which that prince's multiplied neceffities gave them reafon to apprehend. When a demand, therefore, was made on the clergy of a fifth of their moveables, a tax which was probably much more grievous than a fifth of their revenue, as their lands were mostly flocked with their cattle, and cultivated by their villains; the clergy took shelter under the bull of Pope Boniface, and pleaded confcience in refufing compliance +. The King came not immediately to extremities on this repulfe; but after locking up all their granaries and barns, and prohibiting all rent to be paid them, he appointed a new fynod, to confer upon his demand. The primate, not difmayed by these proofs of Edward's resolution, here plainly told him, that the clergy owed obedience to two fovereigns, their fpiritual and their temporal; but their duty bound them to a much ftricter attachment to the former than to the latter : They could not comply with his commands (for fuch, in fome measure, the requests of the crown were then deemed) in contradiction to the express prohibition of the fovereign pontiff ‡.

THE clergy had feen, from many proofs, that Edward paid very little regard to those numerous privileges, on which they set so high a value. He had formerly feized, in an arbitrary manner, all the money and plate lodged in thechurches and convents, and had applied them to the public fervice §; and they could not but expect more violent treatment on this sharp refusal, grounded on fuch dangerous principles. Inftead of applying to the Pope for a relaxation of his bull, he refolved immediately to employ the power in his hands; and he told the ecclefiaftics, that, fince they refufed to fupport the civil government, they were unworthy to receive any benefit from it; and he would accordingly put them out

* Rymer, vol. 2. p. 706. Heming. vol. 1. p. 104. + Heming, vol. 1. p. 107. Trivet, p. 296. Chron. Dunft. vol. 2. p. 652. ‡ Heming, vol. 1. p. 107. § Walfin. p. 65. Heming. vol. 1. p. 51. 0 2 of 1297.

1296.

L1297.

100

Chap. XIII. of the protection of the laws. This vigorous measure was immediately carried into execution *. Orders were issued to the judges to receive no cause brought before them by the clergy; to hear and decide all causes in which they were defendants: To do every man justice against them; to do them justice against no body +. The ecclefiaftics immediately found themfelves in the most miserable situation imaginable. They could not remain in their own houses or convents for want of sublistance : If they went abroad, in quest of a maintenance, they were difmounted from their horses, robbed of their cloaths, abused by every ruffian, and no redrefs could be obtained by them for the most violent injury. The primate himfelf was attacked on the high way, was ftripped of all his equipage and furniture, and was at last reduced to board himself with a fingle fervant in the house of a country clergyman ‡. The King, mean while, remained an indifferent fpectator of all these violences; and without employing his officers in commiting any immediate injury on the priefts, which might have appeared invidious and oppreffive, he took ample vengeance on them for their obstinate refufal of his demands. Tho' the archbishop isfued a general fentence of excommunication against all who attacked the perfons or property of ecclefiastics, it was not regarded; while Edward enjoyed the pleafure of feeing the people become the voluntary inftruments of his justice against them, and enure themselves to throw off that refpect for the facred order, by which they had been fo long over-awed and governed.

> THE fpirits of the clergy were at last broke by this harfh treatment. Befides that the whole province of York, which lay nearest the danger that still hung over them from the Scots, voluntarily from the first voted a fifth of their moveables; the bithops of Salifbury, Ely, and fome others, made a composition for the fecular clergy within their fees; and they agreed, not to pay the fifth, which would have been an act of disobedience to Boniface's bull, but to deposite a fum equivalent in fome church appointed them; where it was taken by the King's officers §. Many particular convents and clergymen made payment of a like fum, and received the King's protection ||. Those who had not ready money, entered into recognizances for the payment. And there was fcarce found one ecclefiaftic in the kingdom, who feemed willing to fuffer for the fake of religious privileges, this new species of martyrdom, the most tedious and languishing of any, the most mortifying to spiritual pride, and not rewarded by that crown of glory, which the church holds up, with fuch oftentation, to her devoted adherents.

* Walfin, p. 69. Heming. vol. p. 107: † M. Weft. p. 429. 1 Heming. vol. 1. p. § Heming. vol. 1. p. 108, 109. Chron. Dunft. p. 653. 109. || Chron. Dunft. vol. 2. p. 654.

BUT

EDWARDI.

Bur as the money, granted by parliament, tho' confiderable, was not fuffi. Chap. XIII. cient to fupply the King's neceffities, and that levied by compositions with the Arbitrary clergy came in flowly, Edward was obliged, for the fake of farther fupply, to measures. exert his arbitrary power, and to lay an opprefive hand on all orders of men in the kingdom. He limited the merchants in the quantity of wool allowed to be exported; and at the fame time forced them to pay him a duty of forty shillings a fack, which was computed to be much above the fifth of the value *. He feized all the reft of the wool, as well as all the leather of the kingdom, into his hands, and disposed of these commodities for his own benefit + : He required the theriffs of each county to fupply him with 2000 quarters of wheat, and as many of oats, which he permitted them to feize wherever they could find them : The cattle and other commodities neceffary for fupplying his army were laid hold of without the confent of the owners ‡ : And tho' he promifed afterwards to pay the equivalent of all these goods, men faw but little probability that a prince, who fubmitted fo little to the limitations of law, could ever, amidft his multiplied neceffities, be reduced to a strict observance of his engagements. He showed at the fame time an equal difregard to the principles of the feudal law, by which all the lands of his kingdom were held : In order to encreafe his army, and enable him to support that great effort, which he proposed to make against France, he required the attendance of every proprietor of land, poffeffed of twenty pounds a year, even tho' he held not of the crown, and was not obliged by the tenure of his eftate to perform any fuch fervice §.

THESE acts of violence and of arbitrary power, notwithstanding the great perfonal regard generally borne to the King, bred murmurs in every order of men ; and it was not long, before fome of the great nobility, jealous of their own privileges, as well as of national liberty, gave countenance and authority to thefe complaints. Edward affembled an army on the fea-coaft, which he proposed to fend over into Gafcony, while he himfelf should in perfon make an impression on the fide of Flanders, and he intended to put these forces under the command of Humphrey Bohun, earl of Hereford, the conftable, and Roger Bigod, earl of Norfolk, the marefchal of England. But thefe two powerful earls refufed to execute his orders, and affirmed, that they were only obliged by their office to attend his perfon in the wars. A violent altercation enfued; and the King, in the height of his paffion, addreffing himfelf to the conftable, exclaimed, Sir earl, by God, you shall either go or hang. By God, Sir King, replied Hereford, I will neither

* Walfing. p. 69. Trevet, p. 296. vol. I. p. IIIm § Walfing. p. 60.

+ Heming. vol. 1. p. 52, 110. 1 Heming.

IOI

Chap. XIII. ther go nor hang *. And he immediately departed, with the marefchal, and above 1297. thirty other confiderable barons.

UPON this opposition, the King laid aside the project of an expedition against Guienne; and affembled the army, which he proposed to transport into Flanders. But the two earls, irritated in the contest and elated by impunity, pretending that none of their anceftors had ever ferved in that country, refufed to perform the duty of their office in mustering the army +. The King, now finding it adviseable to proceed with moderation, instead of forfeiting the earls, who poffessed their dignities by hereditary right, appointed Thomas de Berkeley, and Geoffrey de Geyneville, to act in that emergence, as conftable and mareschal ‡. He endeavoured to reconcile himfelf with the church; took the primate again into favours; made him, in conjunction with Reginald de Grey, tutor to the prince, whom he proposed to appoint guardian of the kingdom during his absence; and he even affembled a great number of the nobility in Westminster-hall, to whom he deigned to make an apology for his paft conduct. He pleaded the urgent neceffities of the crown; his extreme want of money; his engagement from honour as well as interest to support his allies abroad : And he promised, if ever he returned in fafety, to redrefs all their grievances, to reftore the execution of the laws, and to make all his fubjects compensation for the loss, which they had fuftained. Mean-while, he begged them to fufpend their animolities; to judge of him by his future behaviour, of which, he hoped, he would be more mafter; to remain faithful to his government, or if he perished in the prefent war, to preferve their allegiance to his fon and fucceffor ||.

THERE were certainly, from the concurrence of difcontents among the great and the grievances of the people, materials fufficient in any other period to have kindled a civil war in England: But the vigour and abilities of Edward kept every one in awe; and his dexterity in ftopping on the brink of danger, and retracting the measures, to which he was puthed by his violent temper and arbitrary principles, faved the nation from fo great a calamity. The two great earls dared not to break out into open violence; and they proceeded no farther than framing a remonstrance, which was delivered to the King at Winchelfea, when he was ready to embark for Flanders. They there complained of the violations of the great charter and that of forefts; the violent feizure of corn, leather, cattle, and above all, of wool, a commodity, which they affirmed to be equal in value to half the lands of the kingdom; the arbitrary imposition of forty shillings a fack on the fmall quantity of wool allowed to be exported by the mer- Chap. XIII. chants ; and they claimed an immediate redrefs of all thefe grievances *. The King told them, that the greatest part of his council were now absent, and without their advice he could not deliberate on measures of fo great confequence +.

* Heming. vol. 1. p. 112. P. 430. Heming. vol. 1. p. 113. Heming. vol. 1. p. 113. Heming. vol. 1. p. 114. M. Weft. p. 430.

EDWARDI.

But the conftable and marefchal, with the barons of their party, refolved to Diffentions take advantage of Edward's absence, and to obtain an authentic affent to their with the demands. When fummoned to attend the parliament at London, they came barons. with a great body of cavalry and infantry; and before they would enter the city, required that the gates should be put into their custody t. The primate, who fecretly favoured all their pretentions, advifed the council to comply; and thus they became mafters both of the young prince and of the refolutions of parliament. Their demands, however, were very moderate ; and fuch as fufficiently juftify the purity of their intention in all their past measures : They only required, that the two charters should receive a folemn confirmation; that a clause should be added to secure the nation for ever against all impositions and taxes without confent of parliament; and that they themfelves and their adherents, who had refused to attend the King into Flanders, should be pardoned for this offence, and should be again received into favour §. The prince of Wales and his council affented to thefe terms; and the charters were fent over to the King in Flanders to be there confirmed by him. Edward felt the utmost reluctance to this measure, which, he apprehended, would for the future impose fetters on his conduct, and fet limits to his lawlefs authority. Under various pretences, he delayed three days the giving any answer to the deputies; and when the pernicious confequences of his refufal were reprefented to him, he was at last obliged, after many internal ftruggles, to affix his feal to the charters, as alfo to the claufe that bereaved him of the power, which he had hitherto affumed, of impofing arbitrary taxes upon the people ||.

THAT we may finish at once this interesting transaction concerning the settlement of the charters, we shall briefly mention the subsequent events which relate to it. The conftable and mareschal, informed of the King's compliance, were fatisfied; and not only ceafed from difturbing the government, but affifted the regency with all their power against the Scots, who had rifen in arms, and had thrown off the yoke of the English +. But being fensible, that the smallest pretence would fuffice to make Edward retract these detested laws, which, tho' they had

* Walfing. p. 72. Heming. vol. 1: p. 115. Trevet, p. 302. + Walfing. p. 72. Heming. vol. 1. p. 117. Trevet, p. 304. ‡ Heming. vol. 1. p. 138. § Walfing. p. 73. Heming. vol. 1. p. 138, 139, 140, 141. Trevet. p. 308. || Walfing. p. 74. Heming. vol. I. p. 143. + Heming. vol. 1. p. 143.

1297.

103

1.297.

104

Chap. XIII. had often received the fanction both of King and parliament, and had been acknowledged during three reigns, were never yet deemed to have fufficient validity; they infifted, that he should again confirm them on his return to England, and fhould thereby renounce all plea which he might derive from his refiding in a foreign country, when he formerly affixed his feal to them *. It appeared, that they judged aright of Edward's character and intentions: He delayed this confirmation as long as poffible; and when the fear of worfe confequences obliged him again to comply, he added expressly a falvo for his royal dignity or prerogative, which in effect enervated the force of the whole charter +. The two earls and their adherents left the parliament in difcontent; and the King was conftrained, in a future feffion, to grant the people, without any fubterfuge, a pure and abfolute confirmation of those laws ‡, which were fo much the object of their paffionate affection. Even farther fecurities were then provided for the establishment of national privileges. Three knights were appointed to be chosen in each county, and were invefted with the power of punishing by fines and imprisonment, every transgreffion or violation of the charters § : A precaution, which, tho' it was foon difused, as encroaching too much on royal prerogative, proves the attachment, which the English in that age bore to liberty, and their well founded jealoufy of the arbitrary disposition of Edward.

> THE work, however, was not yet entirely finished and compleat. In order to execute the leffer charter, it was requifite by new perambulations to fet bounds to the royal forefts, and to defafforeft all those lands which former encroachments had comprehended within their limits. Edward difcovered the fame re-Justance to comply with this equitable demand; and it was not till after many delays on his part, and many follicitations and requefts, and even menaces of war and violence ||, on the part of the barons, that the perambulations were made, and exact boundaries fixt, by a jury in each county, to the extent of his forefts 4. Had not his ambitious and active temper raifed him fo many foreign enemies, and obliged him to have recourse fo often to the affistance of his fubjects, it is likely that these conceffions could never have been extorted from him.

> * Heming. vol. 1. p. 159. + Heming. vol. 1. p. 167, 168. 1 Heming. vol. 1. § Hemingford, vol. 1. p. 170. p. 168.

> || Walfing. p. 80. We are told by Tyrrel, vol. 2. p. 145. from the Chronicle of St. Albans, that the barons, not contented with the execution of the charter of forefts, demanded of Edward as high terms as had been imposed on his father by the earl of Leicester : But no other historian mentions this particular.

4 Heming. vol. 1. p. 171. M. Weft. p. 431, 433.

BUT

E D W A R D I.I 21 H

Bur while the people, after fo many fuccefsful ftrugles, deemed themfelves Chap. XIII. happy in the fecure poffession of their privileges; they were surprized in 1305 to 1297. find, that Edward had fecretly applied to Rome, and had procured from that mercenary court, an abfolution from all the oaths and engagements, which he had fo often reiterated to observe both the charters. There are fome historians * fo credulous as to imagine, that this perilous ftep was taken by him for no other purpose than to acquire the merit of granting a new confirmation of the charters, as he did foon after; and a confirmation fo much the more unquestionable, that it could never after be invalidated by his fucceffors from the pretence of any force or violence which had been imposed on him. But befides, that this might have been done with a much better grace, if he had never applied for any fuch abfolution, the whole tenor of his conduct proves him to be little fusceptible of fuch refinements in patriotifm; and this very deed itfelf, in which he confirmed anew the charters, carries in the face of it a very opposite prefumption. Tho' he ratified the charters in general, he still laid hold of the papal bull fo far as to invalidate the late perambulations of the forefts, which had been made with fuch care and attention, and to referve to himfelf the power, in cafe of favourable incidents, to extend as much as formerly these arbitrary jurifdictions. If the power was not in fact made use of, we can only conclude, that the favourable incidents did not occur.

THUS, after the contefts of near a whole century, and those ever accompanied with violent jealousies, often with public convulsions, the great charter was finally eftablished; and the English nation have the honour of extorting, by their perfeverance, this conceffion from the ablest, the most warlike, and the most ambitious of all their princes +. It is computed, that above thirty confirmations of it were at different times required of feveral Kings, and granted by them, in full parliament; a precaution, which, while it discovers fome ignorance of the true nature of law and government, proves a very laudable jealous of national privileges in the people, and an extreme anxiety, left contrary precedents should ever be pleaded as an authority for infringing them. Accordingly we find, that, tho' arbitrary practices often prevailed, and were even able to establish themselves into fettled customs, the validity of the great charter was never afterwards formally disputed; and that grant was still regarded as the basis of the English government, and the fure rule by which the authority of every custom was to be tried and canvassed. The jurisdiction of the Star-chamber, martial law, imprison-

* Brady, vol. 2. p. 84. Carte, vol. 2. p. 292.

+ It must however be remarked, that the King never forgaves the chief actors in this transaction, and he found means afterwards to oblige both the constable and marefchal to refign their offices into his hands. The former received a new grant of it: But the office of marefchal was given to Thomas of Brotherton, the King's fecond fon.

VOL. II.

P

ment

Chap. XIII. 1297.

ment by warrants from the privy council, and other practices of a like nature, tho' eftablished for feveral centuries, were fearce ever allowed by the English to be parts of their constitution :- The affection of the nation for liberty still prevailed over all precedent, and even all political reasoning: The exercise of these powers, after being long the fource of fecret murmurs among the people, was, in fullness of time, folemnly abolished, as illegal, at least as oppressive, by the whole legislative authority.

To return to the period, from which this account of the charters has led us : Tho' the King's impatience to appear at the head of his armies in Flanders made him overlook all confiderations, either of domestic difcontents or of commotions among the Scots; he had been fo long retarded by the feveral obstructions thrown in his way, that he loft the proper feason for action, and after his arrival made no progress against the enemy. The King of France, taking advantage of his absence, had broke into the Low Countries; had defeated the Flemings in the battle of Furnes; had made himself master of Lisle, St. Omer, Courtrai, and Ypres; and feemed in a fituation to take full vengeance on the earl of Flanders, his rebellious vaffal. But Edward, feconded by an English army of 50,000 men (for this is the number affigned by hiftorians *) was foon able to ftop the career of his victories; and Philip, finding all the weak refources of his kingdom to be already exhausted, began to dread a reverse of fortune, and to apprehend an invafion on France itself. The King of England, on the other hand, difappointed of affiftance from Adolph, King of the Romans, which he had purchased at a very high price, and finding many urgent calls for his prefence in England, was defirous of ending on any honourable terms a war, which ferved only to divert his force from the execution of more important projects. This difpofition of both monarchs foon produced a ceffation of hoftilities for two years; and engaged them to fubmit their differences to the arbitration of Pope Boniface.

1298.

BONIFACE was the laft of the fovereign pontiffs who exercifed an authority over the temporal jurifdiction of princes; and thefe exorbitant pretenfions, which he had been tempted to affume from the fuccefsful example of his predeceffors, but of which the feafon was now paft, involved him in fo many calamities, and were attended with fo unfortunate a cataftrophe, that they have been fecretly abandoned, tho' never openly relinquifhed, by his fucceffors in the apoftolic chair. Edward and Philip, equally jealous of papal claims, took care to infert in their reference, that Boniface was made judge of the differences by their confent, as a private

* Heming. vol. 1. p. 146.

EDWARDI.

private perfon, not by any right of his pontificate ; and the Pope, without feem- Chap. XIII. ing to be offended at this mortifying claufe, proceeded to give a fentence between them, in which they both acquiesced *. He brought them to agree, that their union should be cemented by a double marriage; that of Edward himself, who was now a widower, with Margaret, Philip's fifter, and that of the prince of Wales with Ifabella, the daughter of that monarch +. Philip was likewife willing to reftore Guienne to the English, which he had indeed no pretensions to detain ; but he infifted, that the Scots and their King, John Baliol, fhould, as his allies, Peace with France. be also comprehended in the treaty, and should be reftored to their liberty. The difference was, after feveral difputes, compromifed by making mutual facrifices to each other. Edward agreed to abandon his ally the earl of Flanders, on condition that Philip should treat in like manner his ally the King of Scots. The prospect of conquering these two countries, whose situation made them to commodious an acquifition to the different kingdoms, prevailed over all other confiderations; and tho' they were both finally difappointed in their hopes, their conduct was very reconcilable to the principles of an interested policy. This was the first specimen which the Scots had of the French alliance, and which was exactly conformable to what a smaller power must always expect, when it blindly attaches itself to the will and fortunes of a greater. That unhappy people, now engaged in a brave, tho' unequal contest for their liberties, were totally abandoned by the ally, in whom they reposed their final confidence, to the will of an imperious conqueror.

THO' England, as well as other European countries, was, in its antient state, Revolt of very ill qualified for making, and still worse for maintaining conquests, Scot-Scotland. land was fo much inferior in its internal force, and was fo ill fituated for receiving foreign fuccours, that it is no wonder an ambitious monarch should have cast his eye on fo tempting an acquifition, which brought both fecurity and greatness to his native kingdom. But the inftruments whom Edward employed to maintain his dominion over the northern kingdom, were not happily chosen; and acted not with the requisite prudence and moderation, in reconciling the Scottish nation to a yoke, which they bore with fuch extreme reluctance. Warrenne retiring into England, on account of his bad flate of health, left the administration entirely in the hands of Ormesby, who was appointed justiciary of Scotland, and Creffingham, who bore the office of treafurer ; and a very fmall military force remained to fecure the precarious authority of these ministers. The latter had no other * Rymer, vol. 2. p. 817. Heming. vol. 1. p. 149. Trivet, p. 310.

P 2

+ Rymer, vol. 2. p. 823.

object

1298.

1298.

108

Chap. XIII. object but the amaffing money by rapine and injustice : The former diffinguished himfelf by the rigor and feverity of his temper : And both of them, treating the Scots as a conquered people, made them fenfible, too early, of the grievous fervitude, into which they had fallen. As Edward required, that all the proprietors of land should swear fealty to him; every one, who refused or delayed the giving this teftimony of fubmiffion, was outlawed, and confined, and punished without mercy; and the braveft and most generous spirits of the nation were thus exafperated to the highest degree against the English government *venedia alsola on fonolise so

THERE was one William Wallace, of a fmall fortune, but defcended of an antient family, in the west of Scotland, whose courage prompted him to undertake, and enabled him finally to execute, the defperate attempt of delivering his native country from the dominion of foreigners. This man, whofe valorous exploits are the object of just admiration, but have been much exaggerated by the traditions of his countrymen, had been provoked by the infolence of an English officer to put him to death; and finding himfelf obnoxious on that account to the feverity of the administration, he fled into the woods, and offered himfelf as a leader to all those whom their crimes or bad fortune, or avowed hatred of the English, had reduced to a like neceffity. He was endowed with a gigantic force of body, with heroic courage of mind, with difinterested magnanimity, with an incredible patience and ability to bear hunger, fatigue, and all the feverities of the feafons; and he foon acquired among those desperate fugitives that authority to which his virtues fo justly intitled him. Beginning with fmall attempts, in which he was always fuccefsful, he gradually proceeded to more momentuous enterprizes; and he discovered equal caution in securing his followers, and valour in annoying the enemy. By his knowledge of the country, he was enabled, when purfued, to enfure a retreat among the moraffes or forests or mountains; and again, collecting his difperfed affociates, appeared unexpectedly in another quarter, and furprized and routed and put to the fword the unwary English. Every day brought accounts of his great actions, which were received with no lefs favour by his countrymen than terror by the enemy: All those, who thirsted after military fame, were defirous to partake of his renown : His successful yalour feemed to vindicate the nation from the ignominy into which it had fallen, by its tame submission to the English: And tho' no nobleman of note ventured as yet to join his party, he had gained a general confidence and attachment, which birth and fortune are not alone able to confer.

* Walfing. p. 70. Heming. vol. 1. p. 118. Trevet. p. 299.

WALLACE,

EDWARD I.

WALLACE, having by many fortunate enterprizes, brought the valour of his Chap. XIII. followers to correspond to his own, resolved to firike a decisive blow against the English government; and he concerted the plan of attacking Ormesby at Scone, and of taking vengeance on him, for all the violence and tyranny of which he had been guilty. The jufficiary apprized of his intention, fled haftily into England : All the other officers of that nation imitated his example : Their terror added alacrity and courage to the Scots; who betook themfelves to arms in every quarter : Many of the principal barons, and among the reft fir William Douglas *, openly countenanced Wallace's party: Robert Bruce fecretly favoured and promoted the fame caufe : And the Scots, fhaking off their fetters, prepared themfelves to defend, by an united effort, that liberty which they had fo unexpectedly recovered from the hands of their oppreffors.

BUT Warrenne, collecting an army of 40,000 men in the north of England, prepared to re-eftablish his authority; and he endeavoured by the celerity of his armament, and of his march, to compensate for his past negligence, which had enabled the Scots to shake off the English government. He fuddenly entered Annandale, and came up with the enemy at Irvine, before their forces were fully collected, and before they had put themfelves in a proper pofture of defence. Many of the Scots nobles, alarmed with their dangerous fituation, here fubmitted to the English, renewed their oaths of fealty, promised to deliver hostages for their good behaviour, and received a pardon for all paft offences +. Others who had not yet declared themfelves, fuch as the fleward of Scotland and the earl of Lennox, joined, tho' with reluctance, the English army; and waited a favourable opportunity of embracing the caufe of their diftreffed countrymen. But Wallace, whole authority over his retainers was more fully confirmed by the abfence of the great nobles, perfevered obstinately in his purpose; and finding himfelf unable to give battle to the enemy, he marched northwards, with an intention of prolonging the war, and of turning to his advantage the fituation of that mountainous and barren country. When Warrenne advanced to Stirling, he found Wallace encamped at Cambufkenneth, on the opposite banks of the Forth; and being continually urged by the impatient Creffingham, who was actuated both by perfonal and national animolities against the Scots ±, he prepared to attack them in that polition, which Wallace, no lefs prudent than courageous, had chosen for his army §. In spite of the remonstrances of Sir Richard Lundy, a Scotsman of birth and family, who fincerely adhered to the English, he ordered his army to pass a bridge which lay over the Forth; but he was foon convinced, by fatal

* Walfin. p. 70. Heming, vol. 1. p. 118. + Heming, vol. 1. p. 121, 122. t Heming, vol. 1. p. 127. § On the 11th of September 1297.

109 experience,

1298.

1298.

110

Chap. XIIF, experience, of the error of his conduct. Wallace, allowing fuch numbers of the English to pass as he thought proper, attacked them before they were fully formed, put them to rout, pushed part of them into the river, where they were drowned, destroyed the reft by the edge of the fword, and obtained a complete victory over them *. Among the flain was Creffingham himfelf, whole memory was fo extremely odious to the Scots, that they flea'd his dead body, and made faddles and girths of his skin +. Warrenne, finding the remainder of his army extremely difmayed by this misfortune, was obliged again to evacuate the kingdom, and retire into England. The caftles of Roxborough and Berwick, ill fortified and feebly defended, fell foon after into the hands of the Scots.

> WALLACE, univerfally revered as the deliverer of his country, now received from the hands of his followers, the dignity of regent or guardian under the captive Baliol; and finding, that the diforders of war, as well as the unfavourable feasons, had produced a famine in Scotland, he urged his army to march into England, to subfift at the expence of the enemy, and to revenge all past injuries, by committing retaliations on that hoftile nation. The Scots, who deemed every thing possible under fuch a leader, joyfully attended his call; and Wallace, breaking into the northern counties during the winter feafon, laid every place wafte with fire and fword; and after extending on all fides, without oppofition, the fury of his ravages, as far as the bifhopric of Durham, he returned loaded with fpoils, and crowned with glory, into his own country ‡. The diforders, which at that time prevailed in England, from the refractory behaviour of the conftable and marefchal, made it impossible to collect an army fufficient to refift the enemy, and exposed the nation to this loss and dishonour.

> BUT Edward, who received in Flanders intelligence of these events, and had already concluded a truce with France, now haftened over into England, in certain hopes, by his activity and valour, not only of wiping off this difgrace, but of recovering that important conqueft of Scotland, which he always regarded as the chief glory and advantage of his reign. He appealed the murmurs of his people by conceffions and promifes : He reftored to the citizens of London the election of their own magistrates, of which they had been bereaved in the latter part of his father's reign : He ordered ftrict enquiry to be made concerning the quantities of corn and other goods, which had been violently feized before his departure, as if he intended to pay the value to the owners §: And making public profeffions of confirming and observing the charters, he regained the confidence of the > * Walfin. p. 73. Heming. vol. 1. p. 127, 128, 129. Trivet, p. 307. + Heming. vol. ‡ Heming. vol. 1. p. 131, 132, 133. I. p. 130. § Rymer, vol. z. p. 813.

> > discon-

E D W A R D I.

discontented nobles. Having by all these popular arts rendered himself entirely Chap. XIII. mafter of his people, he collected the whole military force of England, Wales, and Ireland; and marched with an army of near an hundred thousand combatants to the northern frontiers.

NOTHING could have enabled the Scots to refift, but for one feafon, fo mighty a power, except an entire union among themfelves; but as they were deprived of their King, whole perfonal qualities, even when he was prefent, appeared fo contemptible, and had left among his fubjects no principle of attachment to him or his family; factions, jealoufies, and animofities, unavoidably arofe among the great, and diffracted all their councils. The elevation of Wallace, tho' purchased by fo great merit, and fuch eminent fervices, was the object of envy to the nobility, who repined to fee a private gentleman raifed above them by his rank, and ftill more, by his glory and reputation. Wallace himself, fensible of their jealously, and dreading the ruin of his country from those intestine discords, voluntarily refigned his authority, and retained only the command over that body of his followers, who, being accustomed to victory under his standard, refused to follow into the field any other leader. The chief power devolved on the fleward of Scotland, and Cummin of Badenoch; men of eminent birth, under whom the great chieftans were more willing to ferve in defence of their country. The two Scottish commanders, collecting their feveral forces from every quarter, fixed their flation at Falkirk, and proposed there to abide the affault of the English. Wallace was at the head of a third body, which acted under his command. The Scots army placed the pikemen along their front : Interlined the intervals between the three bodies with archers : And dreading the great fuperiority of the English in cavalry, endeavoured to secure their front by palifadoes, tied together with ropes *. In this disposition, they expected the approach of the enemy.

THE King, when he arrived in fight of the Scots, was pleafed with the profpect 22d July. of being able, by one decifive flroke, to determine the fortune of the war; and kirk. dividing his army also into three bodies, he led them to the attack. The English archers, who began about this time to surpass those of other nations, first chaced the Scottish bowmen off the field; and then pouring in their arrows among the pikemen, who were cooped up within their intrenchments, began to throw I them into diforder, and rendered the affault of the English pikemen and cavalry more easy and fuccessful. The whole Scottish army was broke, and chaced off the field with great flaughter ; which the hiftorians, attending more to the exaggerated relations of the populace, than to the probability of things, make amount

* Walfing. p. 75. Heming. vol. 1. p. 163.

Battle of Fal-

20

III

Chap. XIII. to fifty or fixty thousand men *. It is only certain, that the Scots never suffered 1298. a greater loss in any action, nor one which seemed to threaten more inevitable ruin to their country.

II2

In this general rout of the army, Wallace's military skill and prefence of mind enabled him to keep his troops together; and retiring behind the Carron, which lay in his rear, he marched leifurely along the banks of that fmall river, which protected him from the enemy. Young Bruce, who had already given many proofs of his afpiring genius, but who ferved hitherto in the English army, appeared on the oppofite banks; and diftinguishing the Scottish chieftain, as well by his majeftic port, as by the intrepid activity of his behaviour, called out to him, and defired a fhort conference. He here reprefented to Wallace the fruitlefs and ruinous enterprize in which he was engaged; and endeavoured to perswade him to bend at last his inflexible spirit to submission under superior power and superior fortune : He insisted on the unequal contest between a weak state, deprived of its head and agitated by inteffine difcord, and a mighty nation, conducted by the ableft and moft martial monarch of the age, and poffeffed of every refource either for drawing out the war, or for pushing it with vigor and activity : If the love of his country was his motive for perfeverance, his obstinacy tended only to prolong her mifery; if he carried his views to private grandeur and ambition, he might reflect, that, even if Edward fhould withdraw his armies, it appeared from past experience, that fo many haughty nobles, proud of the preeminence of their families, would never fubmit to perfonal merit, whofe fuperiority they were lefs inclined to regard as an object of admiration, than as a reproach and injury to themfelves. To these exhortations Wallace replied, that if he had hitherto acted alone, as the champion of his native country, it was folely becaufe no fecond or competitor, or what he rather wifhed, no leader had as yet appeared to place himself in that honourable station : That the blame lay entirely on the nobility, and chiefly on Bruce himfelf, who uniting perfonal merit to dignity of family, had deferted the poft, which both nature and fortune, by fuch powerful calls, invited him to affume: That the Scots, poffeffed of fuch a head, would, by their unanimity and concord, have furmounted the chief difficulty under which they now laboured, and might hope, notwithstanding their present loss, to oppose fuccessfully all the abilities and power of Edward: That Heaven itself could not set a more glorious prize before the eyes either of virtue or ambition, than to conjoin in one object, the acquifition of royalty with the defence of national independance: And that as the interests of his country, no more

* Walfing p. 76. T. Wykes, p. 127. Heming. vol. 1. p. 163, 164, 165. Trivet, p. 313, fays only 20,000. M. Weft. p. 431, fays 40,000.

EDWARDI.

more than those of a brave man, could never be fincerely cultivated by a facri- Chap. XIII, fice of liberty, he himfelf was determined, as far as poffible, to prolong, not her mifery, but her freedom, and was defirous, that his own life, as well as the exiftence of the nation, might terminate, when they could no longer be preferved but by receiving the chains of a haughty victor. The gallantry of thefe fentiments, tho' delivered by an armed enemy, ftruck the generous mind of Bruce : The flame was conveyed from the breaft of one hero to that of another : He repented of his engagements with Edward; and opening his eyes to the honourable path, pointed out to him by Wallace, fecretly determined to feize the first opportunity of embracing the caufe, however defperate, of his oppreffed country *.

THE fubjection of Scotland, notwithftanding this great victory of Edward, was not yet entirely completed. The English army, after reducing all the fouthern provinces, was obliged to retire for want of provisions; and left the northern counties in the hands of the natives. The Scots, no lefs enraged with their prefent defeat, than elevated by their past victories, still maintained the contest for liberty; but being fully fenfible of the great inferiority of their forces, they endeavoured, by application to foreign courts, to procure to themfelves fome affiltance. The fupplications of the Scottish ministers were rejected by Philip; but were more fuccefsful with the court of Rome. Boniface, pleafed with an occasion of exerting his authority, wrote a letter to Edward, exhorting him to put a ftop to Scotland athe oppreffions of Scotland, and difplaying all the proofs, fuch as they had gain fubdued. probably been furnished him by the Scots themselves, for the antient independance of that kingdom +. Among other arguments, hinted at above, he mentioned the treaty conducted and finished by Edward himself, for the marriage of his fon with the heirefs of Scotland; a treaty which would have been abfurd, had he been fuperior lord of the kingdom, and had poffeffed by the feudal law the right of difpoling of his ward in marriage. He mentioned feveral other ftriking facts, which fell within the compass of Edward's own knowledge; particularly, that Alexander, when he did homage to the king, openly and expressly declared in his prefence, that he fwore fealty not for his crown, but for the lands which he held in England : And the Pope's letter might have passed for a very reasonable one, had he not fubjoined his own claim to be liege lord of Scotland; a right, which had never once been heard of, but which, with a fingular confidence, he afferted

* This flory is told by all the Scots writers; tho' it must be owned that Trivet and Hemingford, authors of good credit, both agree that Bruce was not in Edward's army.

VOL. II.

113

1298.

1299.

1300.

to

Q

[†] Rymer, vol. 2. p. 844. Walfin. p. 78, 80. Heming. vol. 1. p. 172. Trivet. p. 318. M. Weft. p. 435.

114

Chap. XIII, to be full, entire, and derived from the most remote antiquity. The affirmative ftyle, which had been fo fuccefsful with him and his predeceffors in fpiritual contests, was never before abused after so egregious a manner in any civil controversy.

1301.

THE reply, which Edward wrote to Boniface's letter, contains particulars no lefs fingular and remarkable *. He there proves the fuperiority of England by historical facts, deduced from Brutus, the Trojan, who, he faid, first founded the British monarchy in the age of Eli and Samuel : He supports his position by all the events which passed in the island before the arrival of the Romans : And after laying great ftrefs on the extensive dominion and heroic victories of King Arthur, he vouchfafes at last to defcend to the times of Edward, the elder, with which, in his fpeech to the states of Scotland, he had chosen to begin his claim of fuperiority. He afferts it to be a fact, notorious and confirmed by the records of antiquity, that the English monarchs had often conferred the kingdom of Scotland on their own fubjects; had dethroned these vassal kings when unfaithful to them; and had fubftituted others in their place. He difplays with great pomp the full and complete homage which William had done to Henry II; without mentioning the former abolition of that extorted deed by King Richard, and the renounciation of all future claims of the fame nature. Yet this paper he begins with a folemn appeal to the Almighty, the fearcher of hearts, for his own firm perfuafion of the justice of his claim; and no lefs than an hundred and four barons affembled in parliament at Lincoln, concur, in maintaining before the Pope, under their feals, the validity of these pretensions +. At the same time, however, they take care to inform Boniface, that, tho' they had justified their cause before him, they did not receive him for their judge: The crown of England was free and fovereign : They had fworn to maintain all its royal prerogatives, and would never permit the king himfelf, were he willing, to relinquish its independancy.

1302.

THAT neglect, almost total, of truth and justice, which fovereign states difcover in their transactions with each other, is an evil inveterate in the world; is one great fource of the mifery to which the human species is continually exposed; and it may be doubted, whether in many instances it is found in the end to contribute to the interests of those princes themselves, who thus facrifice their integrity to their politics. As few monarchs have lain under ftronger temptations to violate the principles of equity, than Edward in his transactions with Scotland; fo never were they violated with lefs fcruple and re-

* Rymer, vol. 2. p. 863. Walfing. p. 81. Heming. vol. 1. p. 177. Trivet, p. 320. M. Weft. p 439. Ryley, p. 596. + Rymer, vol. 2. p. 873. Walfing. p. 85. Heming. vol. 1. p. 186. 'Trivet, p. 330. M. Weft. p. 443.

ferve :

EDWARD 1.

ferve: Yet his advantages were hitherto precarious and uncertain ; and the Scots, once Chap. XIII. rouzed to arms and enured to war, began to appear a formidable enemy, even to this military and ambitious prince. They chofe John Cummin for their regent ; Scotland #and not content with maintaining their independance in the northern parts, they gain revolts. made incursions into the fouthern counties, which, Edward imagined, he had totally fubdued. John de Segrave, whom he had left guardian of Scotland, led 1303. an army to oppose them ; and lying at Rollin near Edinburgh, fent out his forces 24th Feb. in three divisions, to provide themselves in forage and sublissance from the neighbourhood. One party was fuddenly attacked by the regent and Sir Simon Frafer; and being unprepared, were immediately routed and purfued with great flaughter. The few that escaped, flying to the second division, gave warning of the approach of the enemy : The foldiers ran to their colours : And were immediately led out to take revenge for the death of their countrymen. The Scots, elated with the advantage already obtained, made a vigorous impreffion upon them: The English, animated with vengeance, maintained a ftout refiftance : The victory was long undecided between them; but at last declared itself entirely in favour of the former, who broke the English, and chaced them to the third division, now advancing with a hafty march to support their diffressed companions. Many of the Scots had fallen in the two first actions; most of them were wounded; and all of them extremely fatigued by the long continuance of the combat : Yet were they fo transported with fuccess and military rage, that, having fuddenly recovered their order, and arming the followers of their camp with the fpoils of the flaughtered enemy, they drove with fury upon the ranks of the difmayed English. The favourable moment decided the battle; which the Scots, had they met with a fteddy refiftence, were not long able to maintain : The English were chaced off the field : Three victories were thus gained in one day * : And the renown of these great exploits, seconded by the favourable dispositions of the people, soon made the regent mafter of all the fortreffes in the fouth; and it became neceffary for Edward to begin anew the conquest of the kingdom.

THE King prepared himfelf for this enterprize with his ufual vigout and ability. He affembled both a great fleet and a great army; and entering the frontiers of Scotland, appeared with a force, which the enemy could not think of refifting in the open field : The Englifh navy which failed along the coaft, fecured the army from any danger of famine : Edward's vigilance preferved them from furprizes : And by this prudent difpolition, they marched victorioufly from one extremity of the kingdom to the other, ravaging the open country, taking in all the caftles $+_5$

* Heming. vol. 1. p. 197.

+ Heming. vol. 1. p. 205.

2

115

and

Chap. XIII. and receiving the fubmiffions of all the nobility, even those of Cummin the re-1303.

gent. The most obstinate resistance was made by the castle of Brechin, defended by Sir Thomas Maule; and the place opened not its gates, till the death of the governor, by difcouraging the garrifon, obliged them to fubmit to the fate, which had overwhelmed the reft of the kingdom. Wallace, tho' he attended Is again fubthe English army in their march, found but few opportunities of fignalizing that valour, which had formerly made him fo terrible to his enemies.

1304.

dued.

116

EDWARD, having compleated his conqueft, which employed him during the fpace of near two years, now undertook the more difficult work, of fettling the country, of establishing a new form of government, and of making his acquisition durable to the crown of England. He feems to have carried matters to extremity against the natives : He abrogated all the Scottish laws and customs *. He endeavoured to fubstitute the English in their place: He entirely razed or deftroyed all the monuments of antiquity : Such records or histories as had escaped his former fearch were now burnt or dispersed : And he hastened, by too precipitate fleps, to abolish entirely the Scottish name, and to fink it finally into the English.

1305.

EDWARD, however, still deemed his favourite conquest exposed to some danger, fo long as Wallace was alive; and being prompted both by revenge and policy, he employed every art to difcover his retreat, and become mafter of his perfon. At last, that hardy warrior, who was determined, amidst the universal flavery of his country-men, still to maintain his independance, was betrayed into Edward's hands by Sir John Monteith, his friend, whom he had made acquainted with the place of his concealment. The King, whofe natural bravery fhould have induced him to refpect like qualities in an enemy, enraged at fome violence committed by Wallace during the fury of war +, refolved to overawe the Scots by an example of feverity; and he ordered Wallace to be carried up in chains to London ; to be tried as a rebel and traitor, tho' he never had made fubmiffion, nor fworn fealty to England; and to be executed on Tower-hill ‡. This was the unworthy fate of a hero, who, thro' a course of many years, had, with fignal conduct, intrepidity and perfeverance, defended, against a public and opprefive enemy, the liberties of his native country.

23 Auguft.

Bur the barbarous policy of Edward failed of the purpofe, to which it was directed. The Scots, already difgufted with the great innovations introduced by

* Ryley, p. 506. + Walfing. p. 84. Heming. vol. 1. p. 120. ‡ Walfing. p. 50. Trivet, p. 340. Murinmuth, p. 36.

the

E D W A R D I,

the fword of a conqueror into their laws and government, were farther enraged Chap. XIII. at the injuffice and cruelty exercifed upon Wallace; and all the envy, which, during his lifetime, had attended that gallant chieftain, being now buried in his grave, he was univerfally regarded as the champion of Scotland, and the patron of her expiring independance. The people, inflamed with refentment, were every where difposed to rife against the English government; and it was not long before a new and more fortunate leader prefented himfelf, who conducted them to liberty, to victory, and to vengeance.

ROBERT BRUCE, the fon * of that Robert, who had been one of the competitors for the crown, had fucceeded, by his father's death, to all his pretentions ; Robert Bruce. and the death of John Baliol which happened nearly about the fame time in France, with the captivity of Edward, the only fon of that prince, feemed to open a full career to the genius and ambition of this young nobleman. He faw, that the Scots, when the right to their crown had expired in the males of their antient royal family, had been divided into parties nearly equal between the houses of Bruce and Baliol; and that every incident, which had fince happened, had tended to wean them from any attachment to the latter. The flender capacity of John had proved unable to defend them against their enemies : He had meanly refigned his crown into the hands of the conqueror : He had, before his delivery from captivity, re-iterated that refignation in a manner feemingly voluntary; and had in that act thrown out many reflections extremely difhonourable to his antient fubjects, whom he publickly called traitors, ruffians, and rebels, and with whom, he declared, he was determined to maintain no farther connexions + : He had, during the time of his exile, adhered ftrictly to that refolution; and his fon, being a prifoner, feemed ill qualified to revive the rights, now fully abandoned, of his family. Bruce therefore hoped, that the Scots, fo long exposed, from the want of a leader, to the oppressions of their enemies, would unanimoufly fly to his flandard, and would feat him on the vacant throne, to which he brought fuch plaufible pretentions. His afpiring fpirit, inflamed by the fervor of youth, and buoyed up by his natural courage, faw the glory alone of the enterprize, or regarded the prodigious difficulties, which attended it, as the fource only of farther glory. The miferies and oppreffions, which he had beheld his countrymen fuffer in their unequal contest; the repeated defeats and misfortunes, which they had undergone, proved to him fo many incentives to bring * Hemingford, vol. 1. p. 218. calls him the grandfon of Robert; and is very particular in the account of the times in which his father and grandfather died. Hemingford is the belt historian of that + Brady's hift. vol. 2. App. Nº. 27. age.

1305.

1306.

them

118

Chap. XIII. them relief, and conduct them to revenge against the haughty victors. The circumstances, which attended Bruce's first declaration, are variously related; but we shall rather follow the account given by the Scots historians; not that their authority is in general any wife to be compared to that of the English; but because they may be supposed to be sometimes better informed concerning facts, which fo nearly interefted their own nation.

BRUCE, who had long harboured in his breaft the defign of freeing his enflaved country, ventured at last to open his mind to John Cummin, a powerful nobleman, with whom he lived in first intimacy. He found in his friend all the appearance of his own fentiments; and needed to employ no arts of perfuasion to make him embrace the refolution of throwing off, on the first favourable opportunity, the usurped dominion of the English. But on the departure of Bruce, who attended Edward to London, Cummin, who either had diffembled all along with him, or began to reflect more coolly in his absence on the desperate nature of the undertaking, refolved to attone for his crime of affenting to this rebellion, by the merit of revealing the fecret to the King of England. Edward did not immediately commit Bruce to cuftody; because he proposed, at the same time, to feize his three brothers, who refided in Scotland; and he contented himfelf with fecretly fetting fpies upon him, and ordering all his motions to be flrictly guarded. A nobleman of Edward's court, Bruce's intimate friend, was apprized of his danger; but not daring, amidst fo many watchful eyes, to hold any conversation with him, he fell on an expedient to give him warning, that it was full time he should make his escape. He sent him by a servant, a pair of gilt fpurs and a purfe of gold, which he pretended to have borrowed from him; and left it to the fagacity of his friend to difcover the meaning of the prefent. Bruce immediately contrived the means of his escape; and as the ground was at that time covered with fnow, he had the precaution, it is faid, to order his horfes to be fhod with their fhoes turned backwards, that he might deceive those, who should track his path over the open fields or cross roads, thro' which he purpofed to travel. He arrived in a few days at Dumfries in Annandale; the chief feat of his family intereft; and he happily found a great number of the Scottish nobility there affembled, and among the reft, John Cummin, his former affociate.

toth Feb.

THE noblemen were aftonished at the appearance of Bruce in their company; and still more when he discovered to them the object of his journey. He told them, that he was come to live or die with them in defence of the liberty of his country, and hoped, with their affistance, to redeem the Scottish name from all the indignities, which it had fo long fuffered from the tyranny of their imperious mafters : That the facrifice of the rights of his family was the first injury which had pre-4

pared

EDWARD I.

pared the way for their enfuing flavery; and by refuming them, which was his Chap. XIII. firm purpose, he opened to them the joyful prospect of recovering from the fraudulent usurper their antient and hereditary independance : That all their past misfortunes had proceeded from their difunion ; and they would foon appear no lefs formidable than of old to their enemies, if they now deigned to follow into the field their rightful prince, who knew no medium between death and victory : That their mountains and their valour, which had, during fo many ages, protected their liberty from all the efforts of the Roman empire, would still be fufficient, were they worthy of their generous anceftors, to defend them against the utmost violence of the English tyrant : That it was unbecoming men, born to the most antient independance, known in Europe, to fubmit to the will of any mafters; but fatal to receive those, who, being irritated by fuch perfevering opposition, and enflamed with the highest animofity, would never deem themselves fecure of their usurped dominion but by exterminating all the antient nobility, and even all the antient inhabitants : And that, being reduced to this desperate extremity, it were better for them at once to perifh, like brave men, with their fwords in their hands, than to dread long, and at last undergo, the fate of the unfortunate Wallace, whole merits, in the brave and obstinate defence of his country, were finally rewarded by the hands of an English executioner.

THE fpirit with which this difcourse was delivered, the bold sentiments which it conveyed, the novelty of Bruce's declaration, affifted by the graces of his youth and manly deportment, made deep impreffion on the minds of his audience, and rouzed all those principles of indignation and revenge, with which they had long been fecretly actuated. The Scottish nobles declared their unanimous refolution to use the utmost efforts in delivering their country from bondage, and to fecond the courage of Bruce, in afferting his and their undoubted rights, againft their common oppreffors. Cummin alone, who had fecretly taken his meafures with the King, oppofed this general determination ; and by reprefenting the great power of England, governed by a prince of fuch uncommon vigour and abilities, he endeavoured to fet before them the certain destruction, which they must apprehend, if they again violated their oaths of fealty, and shook off their allegiance to the victorious Edward *. Bruce, already apprized of his treachery, and forfeeing the certain failure of all his own fchemes of ambition and glory from the opposition of so potent a leader, took immediately his resolution; and moved partly by refentment, partly by policy, followed Cummin on the diffolution of the affembly, attacked him in the cloyfters of the Grey Friars thro' which he paffed, and running him thro' the body, left him for dead. Sir Thomas Kirkpa-

* M. Weft. p. 453.

1306.

119

tric,

1306.

120

Chap. XIII. tric, one of Bruce's friends, afking him foon after, if the traitor was flain. J believe fo, replied Bruce. And is that a matter, cried Kirkpatric, to be left to conjetture? I will fecure him. Upon which he drew his dagger, ran to Cummin, and ftabbed him to the heart. This deed of Bruce and his affociates, which contains circumstances, justly condemned by our prefent manners, was regarded in that age as an effort of manly vigour and just policy. The family of Kirkpatric took for the creft of their arms, which they ftill wear, a hand with a bloody dagger: And chofe for their motto thefe words, I will fecure him; the expression employed by their anceftor, when he executed that violent action.

Third revolt of Scotland.

THE murder of Cummin affixed the feal to the confpiracy of the Scottish nobles : They had now no refource left but to fhake off the yoke of England, or to perish in the attempt : The genius of the nation rouzed itself from its prefent dejection : And Bruce, flying to different quarters, excited his partizans to arms, attacked with fuccefs the difperfed bodies of the English, got possession of many of the caftles, and having made his authority be acknowledged in most parts of the kingdom, was folemnly crowned and inaugurated in the abbey of Scone by the bishop of St. Andrews, who had zealously embraced his cause. The English were again chaced out of the kingdom, except fuch as took shelter in the strong fortreffes that remained in their hands; and Edward found, that the Scots, twice conquered in his reign, and often defeated, must yet be anew fubdued. Not difcouraged with these unexpected difficulties, he sent Aymer de Valence with a considerable force into Scotland to check the progress of the infurgents; and that general, falling unexpectedly upon Bruce at Methven in Perthshire, threw his army into fuch diforder, as ended in a total defeat *. Bruce fought with the most heroic courage, was thrice difmounted from his horfe in the action, and as often recovered himfelf ; but was at last obliged to yield to fuperior fortune, and take shelter with a few followers in the western isles. The earl of Athole, Sir Simon Fraser, and Sir Christopher Seton, who had been taken prisoners, were ordered by Edward to be executed as rebels and traitors +. Many other acts of rigor were exercifed by him; and that prince, vowing revenge against the whole Scottifh nation, whom he deemed incorrigible in their averfion to his government, affembled a great army, and was preparing to enter the frontiers, fecure of fuccefs, and determined to make the defenceless Scots the victims of his feverity : When he unexpectedly fickened and died at Carlifle; enjoining with his laft breath his fon and fucceffor to profecute the enterprize, and never to defift till he had finally fubdued the kingdom of Scotland. He expired in the fixty ninth 1307.

Death 7th July.

* Walfing. p. 91. Heming. vol. 1. p. 222, 223. Trevet, p. 344. + Heming. vol. 1, p. 223. M. Weft. p. 456.

3 year

EDWARD I.

year of his age, and the thirty fifth of his reign, hated by his neighbours, but Chap. XIII. extremely refpected and revered by his own fubjects. 1307.

THE enterprizes finished by this prince, and the projects which he formed and and character brought very near to a conclusion, were more prudent, more regularly conduct- of the King. ed, and more advantageous to the folid interefts of his kingdom than those which were undertaken in any reign either of his anceftors or his fucceffors. He reftored authority to the government, difordered by the weaknefs of his father; he maintained the laws against all the efforts of his turbulent barons; he fully annexed to his crown the principality of Wales; he took the wifeft and most effectual measures for reducing Scotland to a like condition; and tho' the equity of this latter enterprize may reasonably be queftioned, the circumftances of the two kingdoms promifed fuch certain fuccefs, and the advantage was fo visible of uniting the whole ifland under one head, that those who give great indulgence to reasons of flate in the measures of princes, will not be apt to regard this part of his conduct with much feverity. But Edward, however exceptionable his character may appear on the head of juffice, is the model of a politic and warlike King: He possession possible field industry, penetration, courage, vigour, and enterprize : He was frugal in all expences that were not neceffary; he knew how to open the public treafures on a proper occafion; he punished criminals with feverity; he was gracious and affable to his fervants and courtiers; and being of a majeftic figure, expert at all bodily exercifes, and in the main well proportioned in his limbs, notwithftanding the great length and the smallness of his legs, he was as well qualified to captivate the populace by his exterior appearance, as to gain the approbation of men of fense by his more folid virtues.

But the chief advantage, which the people of England reaped, and still con-Miscellaneous tinue to reap, from the reign of this great prince, was the correction, extension, transactions of this reign. amendment, and eftablishment of the laws, which Edward maintained in great vigour, and left much improved to posterity : For the work of wife legislators commonly remain; while the acquifitions of conquerors often perifh with them. This merit has justly gained to Edward the appellation of the English Justinian. Not only the numerous statutes, passed in his reign, touch the chief points of jurifprudence, and, according to Sir Edward Coke*, truly deferve the name of establishments, because they were more constant, standing, and durable laws than any made fince; but the regular order of his administration gave an opportunity to the common law to refine itfelf, and brought the judges to a certainty in their determinations, and the lawyers to a precision in their pleadings. Sir Matthew

* Institute, p. 156.

121

VOL. II.

Hale

122

Chap. XIII. Hale has remarked the fudden improvement of English law during this reign ; and ventures to affert, that, till his own time, it had never received any confiderable encrease *. Edward settled the jurisdiction of the several courts; first established the office of justice of peace; abstained from the practice too common before him, of interrupting justice by mandates from the privy council +; repressed robberies and diforders ‡; encouraged trade by giving merchants an eafy way of recovering their debts §; and in fhort, introduced a new face of things by the vigour and wifdom of his government. As law began now to be well established, the abuse of that happiness began also to be remarked. Instead of their former affociations for robbery and violence, men entered into formal combinations to support each other in law-fuits; and it was found requisite to check this grievance by act of parliament ||.

THERE happened in this reign a confiderable alteration in the execution of the laws : The King abolished the office of chief justiciary, which he thought possesfed too much power, and was dangerous to the crown 4 : He compleated the division of the court of exchequer into four diffinct courts, which managed, each, its feveral branch, without dependance on any one magistrate; and as the lawyers invented a method, by means of their fictions, to carry bufinefs from one court to another, the feveral courts became rivals and checks to each other; a circumftance which tended much to improve the practice of the law in England.

But the' Edward appeared thus, thro' his whole reign, a friend to law and justice, it cannot be faid, that he was an enemy to arbitrary power; and in a governmert more regular and legal than was that of England in his age, fuch practices as those which may be remarked in his administration, would have given fufficient ground of complaint, and fometimes were even in his age the object of general displeasure. The violent plunder and banishment of the Jews; the putting the whole clergy, at once, out of the protection of law; the feizing all the wool and leather of the kingdom; the heightening the impositions on the former valuable commodity; the new and illegal commission of Trail-baston; the taking all the money and plate of monasteries and churches, even before he had any quarrel with the clergy; the fubjecting every man possefied of twenty

* History of the English law, p. 158, 163.

† Anticuli super Cart. cap. 6. Edward enacted a law to this purpose; but it is very doubtful, whether he ever observed it. We are fure that fcarce any of his fucceffors did. The multitude of these letters of protection were a ground of complaint by the commons in 3 Edw. II. See Ryley, p. 525. This practice is declared illegal by the flatute of Northampton paffed in the fecond of Edward III. but ftill continued, like many other abuses. There are instances of it fo late as the reign of Q. Elizabeth. § Statute of Acton Burnel.

4 Spelman. Gloff. in verbo justiciarius. Gilbert's hift. of the Exchequer, p. 8. || Statute of Confpirators.

pounds

E D W A R DOI.

pounds a year to military fervice, tho' not bound to it by his tenure; his visible Chap. XIII. reluctance to confirm the great charter, as if that concession had had ro validity from the deeds of his predeceffors ; the captious claufe which he at lat annexed to his confirmation ; his procuring, after all, the Pope's difpensation from the oaths which he had taken to observe that charter; and his levying of arbitrary talliages even after the statute, or rather charter, by which he had renounced that prerogative ; thefe are fo many demonstrations of his arbitrary disposition, and prove with what exception and referve we ought to celebrate his love of justice. He took care that his fubjects should do justice to one another; but he defired always to have his own hands free in all his transactions, both with them and with hs neighbours.

THE chief obstruction to the execution of justice in those times was the power of the great barons; and Edward was perfectly qualified, by his character and abilities, to keep these tyrants in awe, and to reftrain their illegal practices. This falutary purpole was accordingly the great object of his attention; ye: he was imprudently led into a measure which tended very much to encrease and confirm their exorbitant authority. He passed a statute, which, by allowing then to entail their eftates, made it impracticable to diminish the property of the great families, and left them all means of encrease and acquisition.

EDWARD observed a contrary policy with regard to the church : He kems to have been the first christian prince who passed a statute of mortmain; and prevented by law the clergy from making new acquifitions of lands, which by the ecclesiaftical canons they were for ever prohibited to alienate. The opposition between his maxims with regard to the nobility and ecclefiaftics, leads us o conjecture, that it was only by chance he paffed the beneficial statute of mortmain, and that his fole object was, to maintain the number of knights fees, and to prevent the fuperiors from being defrauded of the profits of wardship, marriage, livery, and other emoluments arifing from the feudal tenures. This is indeed the reason affigned in the statute itself, and appears to have been his real object in enacting it. The author of the annals of Waverly afcribes this act chiefly to the King's anxiety for maintaining the military force of the kingdom; but adds that he was much miftaken in his purpofe; for that the Amalekites were overcome more by the prayers of Moles than by the fword of the Ifraelites +.

EDWARD was very active in reftraining the usurpations of the church, and excepting his ardour for Croifades, which adhered to him during his whole life, feems, in other respects, to have been little infected with superstition, the vice

* Brady of burroughs, p. 25, from the records. Dit + + P. 234. So alfo M. Weft. p. 109. R 2 chiefly 1307.

1307.

124

Chap. XIII. chiefly of weak minds. But the paffion for Croifades was really in that age the paffion for glory. As the Pope now felt himfelf fomewhat more reftrained in his former practice of pillaging the national churches by general impositions upon them, he permitted the generals of particular orders, who refided at Rome, to levy taxes on the feveral convents fubjected to their jurifdiction; and Edward was obliged to enact a law against this new abufe. It was also become a practice of the court of Rome to provide fuccessors to benefices before they became vacant: Edward found it likewife neceffary to reftrain by law this new fource of injuffice and imposition.

> THE tribute of 1000 marks a year, to which King John, in doing homage to the Pope, had fubjected the kingdom, had been pretty regularly paid fince his time, tho' the vaffalage was conftantly denied, and indeed, for fear of giving offence, had been but little infifted on. The payment was called by a new name of census, not by that of tribute. King Edward seems to have always paid this money with great reluctance, and he fuffered it, at one time, to run on for fix years *, at another for eleven + : But as princes in that age flood continually in need of the Pope's good offices, for dispensations of marriages and other conceffions, the court of Rome found always means, fooner or latter, to catch the money. The levying of first fruits was also a new device, begun in this reign, by which his holinefs got his fingers very frequently into the purfes of the faithful; and the King feens unwarily to have given way to it.

> EDWARD had by his first wife, Eleanor of Castile, four sons, but Edward his heir and fucceffor, was the only one that furvived him. She alfo bore him eleven daughters, most of whom died in their infancy : Joan was married first to the earl of Glocefter, and after his death, to Ralph de Monthermer; Margaret espoused John duke of Brabant : Elizabeth espoused first John earl of Holland : and afterwards the earl of Hereford : Mary was a nun at Ambrefbury. He had by his fecond wife, Margaret of France, two fons and a daughter; Thomis created earl of Norfolk, and Marefchal of England; and Edmond who was created earl of Kent by his brother when King. The princefs died in her infancy.

> In the former reign the taxes had been partly foutages, partly a proportional part of the moveables, granted by parliament : In this, fcutages were entirely dropt; and the affefiment on moveables was the chief method of taxation, Edward in his fourth year had a fifteenth granted him; in his fifth year a twelfth; in his eleventh year a thirtieth from the laity, a twentieth from the clergy; in his

* Rymer, vol. 2. p. 77, 107. † Id. p. 862.

EDWARDI

his eighteenth year a fifteenth ; in his twenty fecond year a tenth from the laity, Chap. XIII: a fixth from London and other corporate towns, half of their benefices from the clergy; in his twenty third year an eleventh from the barons and others, a tenth from the clergy, a feventh from the burgeffes ; in his twenty fourth year a twelfth from the barons and others, an eighth from the burgeffes, from the clergy, nothing, becaufe of the Pope's inhibition; in his twenty fifth year an eighth from the laity, a tenth from the clergy of Canterbury, a fifth from those of York; in his twenty ninth year a fifteenth from the laity, on account of his confirming the perambulation of the forefts; the clergy granted nothing; in his thirty third year, first a thirtieth from the barons and others, and a twentieth from the burgeffes, then a fifteenth from all his fubjects; in his thirty fourth year a thirtieth from all his fubjects for knighting his eldeft fon.

THESE taxes were moderate; but the King had also duties upon exportation and importation granted him from time to time : The heaviest was commonly upon wool. Poundage, or a shilling a pound, was not regularly granted the. Kings for life till the reign of Henry V.

winnier. But the sheaters at of its care a blated att they hopes, and the wol in n to be used by unquilibre the share but the state of the state of the state of the the source should be a set to a the water of the set of the surger to the the unbalent diff. of data of the prophet desired them it, the mithrane to b at 20 diale anishes merestions, and by this father, fait is the enter-1307.

CHAP.

CHAP. XIV.

EDWARD II.

Weakness of the King-His passion for favourites-Piers Gavaston ---- Discontent of the barons----- Murder of Gavaston----- War with Scotland ____ Battle of Bannockburn ____ Hugh le Defpenfer ____ Civil commotions ____ Execution of the earl of Lancaster ____ Conspiracy against the King-Infurrection-The King detbroned-Murdered-His Character-Miscellaneous transactions in this reign.

Chap. XIV. ME preposseffions, entertained in favour of young Edward, kept the Eng-L lifh from being fully fenfible of the extreme lofs, which they had fuftained by the death of the great monarch, who filled the throne; and all men hastened with alacrity to take the oath of allegiance to his fon and fucceffor. This prince was in the twenty-third year of his age, was of an agreeable figure, of a mild and gentle difposition; and having never discovered a propensity to any dangerous vice, it was very natural to prognosticate tranquility and happiness from his go-Weakness of vernment. But the first act of his reign blasted all these hopes, and shewed him to be totally unqualified for that perilous fituation, in which every English monarch during those ages, had, from the unstable form of the constitution, and the turbulent difpolitions of the people, derived from it, the misfortune to be placed. The indefatigable Robert Bruce, tho' his army had been diffipated and he himfelf had been obliged to take shelter in the western isles, remained not long in tranquility; but before the death of the late King, had fallied from his retreat, had again collected his followers, had appeared in the field, and had obtained by furprize an important advantage over Aymer de Valence, who commanded the English forces *. He was now become fo confiderable as to have afforded the King of England fufficient glory in fubduing him, without incurring any danger of his feeing all those mighty preparations, made by his father, fail in the enterprize. But Edward, instead of pursuing his advantages, marched but a little way into Scotland; and having an utter incapacity, and equal averfion for all application or ferious bufinefs, he immediately returned upon his footfteps, and difperfed his army. His grandees perceived from this conduct, that the authority of the crown, fallen into fuch feeble hands, was no longer to be dreaded, and Chap. XIV. that every infolence might be practiced by them with impunity.

* Trivet, p. 346.

' of

EDWARD II.

THE next measure, taken by Edward, gave them an inclination to attack those prerogatives, which no longer kept them in awe. There was one Piers Gavafton, His paffion for the fon of a Gafcon knight of fome diffinction who had have make for a local state. the fon of a Gafcon knight of fome diffinction, who had honourably ferved the late King, and who, in reward of his merits, had obtained an eftablishment for Piers Gavahis fon in the family of the prince of Wales. This young man foon infinuated fton. himfelf into the affections of his mafter, by his agreeable behaviout, and by fupplying him with all those innocent, tho' frivolous amusements, which fuited his capacity and his inclinations. He was endowed with the utmost elegance of fhape and perfon, was noted for a fine mien and eafy carriage, diffinguished himfelf in all warlike and genteel exercifes, and was celebrated for those quick fallies of wit, by which his country is diftinguished. By all these accomplishments he gained fo entire an afcendant over young Edward, whofe heart was ftrongly difposed to friendship and confidence, that the late King, apprehensive of the confequences, had banished him the kingdom, and had, before he died, made his fon promise never to recall him *. But he no sooner found himself master, as he vainly imagined, than he fent for Gavaston, and even before his arrival at court, endowed him with the whole earldom of Cornwal, which had efcheated to the crown, by the death of Edmond, fon of Richard King of the Romans +. Not content with conferring on him those possessions, which had fufficed as an appanage for a prince of the blood, he daily loaded him with new honours and riches; married him to his own niece, fifter of the earl of Glocester ‡, and seemed to enjoy no pleasure in his royal dignity, but as it enabled him to exalt to the higheft fplendor this object of his fond affections.

THE haughty barons, offended at the fuperiority of a minion, whole birth, Difcontent of tho' reputable, they defpifed, as much inferior to their own, concealed not their the barons. difcontent; and foon found reafons to justify their animofity in the character and conduct of the man they hated. Inftead of difarming envy by the moderation and modefty of his behaviour, Gavaston displayed his power and influence with the utmost oftentation; and deemed no circumstance of his good fortune fo agreeable as its enabling him to eclipfe and mortify all his rivals. He was vainglorious, profuse, rapacious; fond of exterior pomp and appearance, giddy with profperity; and as he imagined, that his fortune was now as ftrongly rooted in the kingdom, as his afcendant was uncontrouled over the weak monarch, he took

* Walfing. p. 95. Ypod. Neuft. p. 499. Trivet. cont. p. 2. ing. vol. 1. p. 243. Walfin, p. 96. Ypod. Neuft. p. 499. Trivet. cont. p. 2. + Rymer, vol. 3. p. 1. Hemvol. 1. p. 245. Ypod. Neuft. p. 500. T. de la More, p. 593. ‡ Heming.

128

Chap. XIV. no farther care of engaging partizans, who might fupport his fudden and ill effa-¹³⁹⁷ blifhed grandeur. At all tourneaments, he took delight in foiling the English nobility, by his fuperior addrefs : In each conversation, he made them the object of his wit and raillery : Every day his enemies multiplied upon him; and nought was wanting but a little time to cement their union, and render it fatal, both to him and to his mafter §.

It behoved the King to take a journey to France, both in order to do homage for the dutchy of Guienne, and to efpouse the princess Isabella, to whom he had long been contracted, tho' unexpected accidents had hitherto retarded the confummation of the marriage *. Edward left Gavaston guardian of the realm †, with more ample powers, than had usually been conferred ‡; and on his return with his young queen, renewed all the proofs of that fond attachment to his favourite, of which every one fo loudly complained. This princess was of an imperious and intriguing fpirit; and finding, that her husband's capacity required, as well as his temper inclined, him to be governed, the thought herfelf best intitled, on every account, to perform the office, and the contracted a mortal hatred against the perfon, who had disappointed her in these expectations. She was well pleased, therefore, to see a combination of the nobility forming against Gavaston, who, fensible of her hatred, had wantonly provoked her by new infults and injuries.

1.308.

THOMAS, earl of Lancaster, coulin-german to the King, and first prince of the blood, was by far the most opulent and powerful subject in England, and posfessed in his own right, and soon after in that of his wife, heirefs of the family of Lincoln, no less than fix earldoms, with a proportional effate in land, attended with all the jurifdictions and power, which commonly in that age were annexed to landed property. He was turbulent and factious in his disposition; mortally hated the favourite, whose influence with the King exceeded his own; and he soon became the head of that party among the barons, who defired the depression of this infolent stranger. The confederated nobles bound themselves by oath, to expel Gavaston: Both fides began already to put themselves in a warlike posture : The licentious of civil war : And the royal authority, despised in the King's own hands, and hated in those of Gavaston, became insufficient for the execution of the laws, and the maintenance of peace in the kingdom. A parliament being furmoned at Westminster, Lancaster and his party came thither with an armed retinue; and were there enabled to impose their own terms on the fovereign. They required Chap. XIV. the banishment of Gavaston, imposed an oath on him never to return, and engaged the bishops, who never failed to interpose in all civil concerns, to pronounce him excommunicate, if he remained any longer in the kingdom *. Edward was obliged to fubmit +; but even in his compliance, gave proofs of his fond attachment to his favourite. Inftead of removing all umbrage, by fending him to his own country, as was expected, he appointed him lord lieutenant of Ireland 1, attended him to Briftol on his journey thither, and before his departure conferred on him new lands and riches both in Gascony and England §. Gavaston, who did not want bravery, and possessed talents for war ||, acted during his government, with vigour against fome Irish rebels, whom he subdued.

§ T. de la More, p. 593. Walling. p. 97. * T. de la More, p. 593: Trivet. cont. p. 3. † Rymer, vol. 3. p. 47. Ypod. Neuft. p. 499. † Brady's App. N^o. 49.

E D W A R D II,

MEAN-WHILE, the King, lefs fhocked with the illegal violence which had been imposed upon him, than unhappy in the absence of his minion, employed every expedient to fosten the opposition of the barons to his return ; as if success in that point were the chief object of his government. The high office of hereditary steward was conferred on Lancaster : His father-in-law, the earl of Lincoln, was bought off by other conceffions : Earl Warrenne was also mollified by civilities, grants, or promises : The infolence of Gavaston, being no longer before men's eyes, was less the object of general indignation : And Edward, deeming matters fufficiently prepared for his purpofe, applied to the court of Rome, and obtained a difpenfation from that oath, which the barons had com. pelled Gavaston to take, that he would abjure for ever the realm 4. He went down to Chefter, to receive him on his first landing from Ireland; flew into his arms with transports of joy; and having obtained the formal consent of the barons in parliament to his re-establishment, fet no longer any bounds to his extravagant fondness and affection. Gavaston himself, forgetting his past misfortunes, and blind to their causes, refumed the fame oftentation and infolence; and became more than ever the object of general deteftation among the barons.

THE nobility first discovered their animofity by absenting themselves from parliament; and finding, that this expedient had not been fuccefsful, they began to think of employing fharper and more effectual remedies. Tho' there had fcarce been any other national ground of complaint, except fome diffipation of the public treasure : Tho' all the acts of mal-administration, objected to the King, and his favourite, seemed of a nature more proper to excite heart burnings in a ball or affembly, than commotions in a great kingdom: Yet fuch was the fituation of

* Trivet, cont. p. 5. + Rymer, vol. 3. p. 80. ‡ Rymer, vol. 3. p. 92. Murimuth, § Rymer, vol. 3. p. 87. P. 39-|| Heming. vol. 1. p. 248. T. de la More, p. 593. 4. Rymer, vol. 3. p. 167.

VOL. II.

129

1308.

Chap. XIV. the times, that the barons were determined, and were able, to make them the 1308. reasons of a total alteration in the conflitution and civil government. Having 7th February. come to parliament, in defiance of the laws and the King's prohibition, with a numerous retinue of armed followers, they found themfelves entirely mafters; and prefented a petition, which was equivalent to a command, requiring Edward to devolve on a chosen junto the whole authority both of the crown and of the 16th March. parliament. The King was obliged to fign a commission, empowering the prelates and barons to elect twelve perfons, who fhould, till the term of Michaelmas in the year following, have authority to enact ordinances for the government of the kingdom, and the regulation of the King's houfhold; confenting that thefe ordinances should thenceforth and for ever have the force of laws and statutes ; allowing the ordainers to form affociations among themfelves, and their friends, for their ftrist and regular observance ; and all this for the greater glory of God, the fecurity of the church, and the honour and advantage of the king and kingdom *. The barons in return figned a declaration, in which they acknowledged, that they owed these concessions merely to the King's free bounty ; promised that this should never be drawn into precedent; and engaging, that the power of the ordainers should expire at the term appointed +.

130

ISIT.

THE chosen junto of twelve accordingly framed their ordinances, and presented them to the King and parliament, for their confirmation in the enfuing year. Some of these ordinances were laudable, and tended to the regular execution of juffice : fuch as those, requiring sheriffs to be men of property, abolishing the practices of iffuing privy feals for the fuspension of justice, restraining the practice of purveyance, prohibiting the adulteration or alteration of the coin, excluding foreigners from the farms of the revenue, ordering all payments to be regularly made into the exchequer, revoking all late grants of the crown, and giving the parties damages in the cafe of vexatious profecutions. But what chiefly grieved the King was the ordinance for the removal of evil counfellors, by which a great number of perfons were by name excluded from every office of power and profit; and Piers Gavaston himself was for ever banished the King's dominions, under the penalty, in case of disobedience, of being declared a public enemy. Other perfons, more agreeable to the barons, were fubftituted in all the offices. And it was ordained, that, for the future, all the confiderable dignities in the houshold, as well as in the law, revenue, and military governments, should be appointed by the baronage in parliament; and the power of making war,

* Brady's App. Nº. 50. Heming. vol. 1. p. 347. Walfing. p. 97. Ryley, p. 526. + Brady's App. Nº. 51.

EDWARDI.

war, or affembling his military tenants, fhould no longer be folely vefted in the Chap. XIV. King, nor be exercifed without the confent of the nobility.

EDWARD, from the fame weakness both of his temper and situation, which had engaged him to grant this unlimited commission to the barons, was led to give a parliamentary fanction to their ordinances: But as a confequence of the fame character, he fecretly made a proteft against them, and declared, that, fince the commission was granted only for the making of ordinances to the advantage of the King and kingdom, fuch articles, as fhould be found prejudicial to both, were to be held as not ratified and confirmed *. It is no wonder, indeed, that he retained a firm purpose to revoke ordinances, which had been imposed on him by violence, which entirely annihilated the royal authority, and above all, which deprived him of the company and fociety of a perfon, whom, by an unufual infatuation, he valued above all the world, and above every other confideration of intereft or tranquility.

So foon, therefore, as Edward, removing to York, had freed himfelf from the immediate terror of the baron's power, he invited back Gavaston from Flanders, which that favourite had made the place of his retreat; and declaring his banishment to be illegal, and contrary to the laws and customs of the kingdom +, openly re instated him in his former credit and authority. The barons, highly provoked at this difappointment, and apprehenfive of danger to themfelves from the declared animofity of fo powerful a minion, faw, that, either his or their ruin was now inevitable; and they renewed with redoubled zeal their former confederacies against him. The earl of Lancaster was a dangerous head of this alliance : Guy, earl of Warwic, entered into it with a furious and precipitate passion : Humphrey Bohun, earl of Hereford, the constable, and Aymer de Valence, earl of Pembroke, brought to it a great acceffion of power and interest : Even earl Warrenne deferted the royal caufe, which he had hitherto fupported, and was induced to embrace the fide of the confederates ‡: And as Robert de Winchelsey, archbishop of Canterbury, declared himsfelf of the fame party, he determined the body of the clergy, and confequently the people, to declare against the King and his minion. So predominant, at that time, was the power of the great nobility, that the combination of a few of them was always able to shake the throne, and fuch an univerfal concurrence became irrefiftible. The earl of Lancaster fuddenly raifed an army, and marched to York, where he found the King already removed to Newcastle §: He flew thither in pursuit of him;

* Ryley's Placit, Parl. p. 530, 541. + Brady's App. Nº. 53. Walfing. p. 98. 1 Tri-§ Walfing. p. 101. vet, cont. p. 4.

S 2

131

1311.

1312.

and

10th May.

Chap. XIV. and Edward bad just time to elcape to Tinmouth, where he embarked, and failed with Gavaston to Scarborough. He left his favourite in that fortress, which, had it been properly fupplied with provisions, was deemed impregnable; and he marched forward to York, in hopes of raifing an army, which might be able to fupport him against his enemies. Pembroke was fent by the confederates to besiege the caffle of Scarborough; and Gavaston, sensible of the bad condition of his garrifon, was obliged to capitulate with the enemy, and furrender himfelf prifoner *. He flipulated, that he fhould remain in Pembroke's hands for two months; that endeavours fhould, during that time, be mutually used for a general accommodation ; that if the terms proposed by the barons were not accepted, the caftle fhould be reftored to him in the fame condition as when he furrendered it; and that the earl of Pembroke and Henry Piercy fhould, by contract, pledge all wheir lands for the fulfilling of these conditions +. Pembroke, now master of the perfon of this public enemy, conducted him to the caftle of Dedington, near Banbury; where, under pretence of other bufinefs, he left him protected by a a feeble guard ‡. Warwic, probably in concert with Pembroke, attacked the castle : The guards refused to make any refistance : Gavaston was yielded up to him, and conducted to Warwic caftle : The earls of Lancafter, Hereford, and Arundel, immediately repaired thither §: And without any regard, either to the laws or the military capitulation, they ordered the head of this obnoxious favourite to be flruck off, by the hands of the executioner ||.

THE King was retired northward to Berwic, when he heard of Gavafton's murder; and his refentment was proportioned to the affection which he had ever borne him, while living. He threatened vengeance on all the nobility, who had been active in that bloody scene, and he made preparations for war in all parts of England. But being less constant in his enmities than in his friendships, he foon after hearkened to terms of accommodation; granted the barons a pardon for all offences; and as they ftipulated to ask him publicly pardon on their knees 4, he was fo pleafed with these vain appearances of exterior fubmission, that he seemed to have fincerely forgiven them all past injuries. But as they still pretended, notwithstanding their lawless conduct, a great anxiety for the maintenance of law; and required the eftablishment of their former ordinances as a necessary fecurity for that purpose; Edward told them, that he was willing to grant them a free and legal confirmation of fuch of these ordinances as were not entirely derogatory to the prerogatives of the crown. This answer was received for the present Chap. XIV. as fatisfactory. The King's perfon, after the death of Gavafton, was now become lefs obnoxious to the public; and as the ordinances, infifted on, appeared to be nearly the fame with those, who had been formerly extorted from Henry III. by Mountfort, and which had been attended with fo many fatal confequences, they were, on that account, demanded with lefs vehemence by the nobility and people. The minds of all men feemed to be much appealed towards each other : The animofities of faction no longer prevailed : And England, now united under its head, would henceforth be able, it was hoped, to take vengeance on all its enemies ; particularly on the Scots, whofe progrefs was the object of general refentment and indignation.

* Walfin p. 101. + Rymer, vol. 2. p. 324. ‡ T. de la More, p. 593. § Dudg. Baron. vol. 2. p. 44. Walfin, p. 101. T. de la More, p. 593. Triver, cont. p. 9. 4 Ryley, 538. Rymer, vol. 3. p. 366.

Murder of Gavafton. ift July.

ARDON ARDON, 21 H

IMMEDIATELY after Edward's retreat from Scotland, Robert Bruce left his War with fastnesses, in which he intended to have sheltered his feeble force; and supplying scotland. his defect of power by fuperior vigour and abilities, he made deep imprefiions on all his enemies, foreign and domeftic. He chaced the lord Argyle and the chieftain of the Macdonalds from their hills, and made himfelf entirely mafter of the high country : He thence invaded with fuccess the Cummins in the low countries of the north : He took the caftles of Inverness, Forfar, and Brechin : He gained daily fome new acceffion of territory; and what was a more important acquifition, he daily reconciled the minds of the nobility to his dominion, and enlifted under his flandard every bold leader, whom he enriched by the spoils of his enemies. Sir James Douglas, in whom commenced the greatness and renown of that warlike family, feconded him in all his enterprizes : Edward Bruce, Robert's own brother, diftinguished himself by actions of valour : And the terror of the English power being now abated by the feeble conduct of the King, even the least fanguine of the Scots began to entertain hopes of recovering their independancy; and the whole kingdom, except a few ftrong fortreffes, which he had not the means to attack, had acknowleged the authority of Robert.

IN this fituation, Edward found it neceffary to grant a truce to Scotland; and Robert fuccefsfully employed this interval in confolidating his power, and introducing order into the civil government, disjointed by fuch a long continuance of war and factions. The interval was very fhort : The truce, ill observed on both fides, was at last openly violated; and war recommenced with greater fury than ever. Robert, not contented with defending himfelf, made fuccefsful inroads into England, fubfifted his needy followers by the plunder of that country, and taught them to defpife the military genius of a nation, who had long been the object of their terror. Edward at last, rouzed from his lethargy, conducted an army into Scotland; and Robert, determined not to rifque too much against an enemy C. LE INC fo

133

1321.

1314.

134

Chap. XIV. fo much fuperior, retired again into his mountains. The King advanced beyond Edinburgh; but being deftitute of provisions, and being ill supported by the English nobility, who were then employed in framing their ordinances, he was foon obliged to return home, without gaining any advantage over the enemy. But the appearing union of all the parties in England, after the death of Gavaston, feemed to reftore that kingdom to its native force, opened again the prospect of fubjecting Scotland, and promised a happy conclusion to a war, in which both the interests and passions of the nation were fo deeply concerned.

> EDWARD affembled forces from all quarters, with a view of finishing by one blow this important enterprize. He fummoned the most warlike of his vasfals from Gascony : He inlisted troops from Flanders and other foreign countries : He invited over great numbers of the diforderly Irifh as to a certain prey : He joined to them a body of the Welfh, who were actuated by like motives : And affembling the whole military force of England, he marched to the frontiers with an army which according to the Scots writers amounted to an hundred thousand men, but which was probably much inferior to that number *.

THE army, collected by Robert, exceeded not thirty thousand combatants; but being compoled of men, who had diffinguished themselves by many acts of valour, who were rendered desperate by their situation, and who were enured to all the varieties of fortune, they might juftly, under such a leader, be deemed formidable to the most numerous and best appointed armies. The castle of Stirling, which, with Berwic, was the only fortrefs of Scotland, that remained in the hands of the English, had been long belieged by Edward Bruce; and Philip de Mowbray, the governor, after an obstinate defence, was at last obliged to capitulate, and to promife that if, before a certain day, which was now approaching, he was not relieved, he should open his gates to the enemy +. Robert therefore, fenfible, that here was the ground on which he must expect the English, chose the field of battle with all the skill and prudence imaginable, and made the neceffary preparations for their reception. He posted himself at Bannockburn, about two miles from Stirling: where he had a hill on his right flank, and a morafs on his left: And not content with having taken these precautions to prevent his being furrounded by the more numerous army of the English; he forfaw the fuperior ftrength of the enemy in cavalry, and made provisions against it. Having a rivulet in front, he commanded deep pits to be dug along its banks.

* We find in Rymer, vol. 3. p. 481. a lift of all the infantry affembled from all parts of Englandand Wales; and they are only 21540. It is not likely therefore that the whole army could be near fo nu-

EDWARDJ.

banks, and fharp ftakes to be planted in them, and he ordered the whole to be Chap XIV. carefully covered over with turf *. The English arrived in fight on the evening, and a bloody conflict immediately enfued between two bodies of cavalry; where Robert, who was at the head of the Scots, engaged in fingle combat with Henry de Bohun, a gent'eman of the family of Hereford ; and at one stroke cleft his adversary to the chin with a battle ax, in fight of the two armies. The Englifh horfe fled with precipitation to their main body.

THE Scots, encouraged by this favourable event, and glorying in the valour of their prince, prognofticated a happy iffue to the combat on the enfuing day : The English, confident in their numbers, and elated with past fuccesses, longed Battle of Banfor an opportunity of revenge : And the night, tho' extremely short in that fea- nockburn. fon and in that climate, appeared tedious to the impatience of the feveral combatants. Early in the morning, Edward drew out his army, and advanced towards 25th June. the Scots. The earl of Glocefter, his nephew, who commanded the left wing of cavalry, impelled by the ardour of youth, rushed on to the attack without precaution, and fell among the covered pits, which had been prepared by Bruce for the reception of the enemy +. This body of horse was difordered: Glocester himfelf was overthrown and flain : Sir James Douglas, who commanded the Scottifh cavalry, gave the enemy no leifure to rally, but pushed them off the field with confiderable lofs, and purfued them in fight of their whole line of infantry. While the English army were alarmed with this unfortunate beginning of the action, which commonly proves decifive, they observed an army on the heights towards their left, which feemed to be marching leifurely in order to furround them; and they were distracted by their multiplied fears. This was a number of waggoners and fumpter boys, whom Robert had collected together; and having fupplied them with military ftandards, gave them the appearance at a diftance of a formidable army. The ftratagem took effect : A panic feized the English : They threw down their arms and fled : They were pursued with great flaughter, for the space of eighty miles, till they reached Berwic : And the Scots, befides an ineftimable booty, took many perfons of quality prifoners, and above 400 gentlemen, whom Robert treated with great humanity ‡, and whofe ranfom was a new acceffion of wealth to the victorious army. The King himfelf very narrowly escaped by taking shelter in Dunbar, whose gates were opened to him by the earl of March; and he thence passed by sea to Berwic.

SUCH was the great and decifive battle of Bannockburn, which fecured the independancy of Scotland, fixed Bruce on the throne of that kingdom, and may be deemed the greatest overthrow, which the English monarchy, fince the con-

* T. de la More. p. 594.

† T. de la More, p. 594.

1 Ypod, Neuft. p. 501. quest,

1314.

134

Chap. XIV. fo much fuperior, retired again into his mountains. The King advanced beyond Edinburgh; but being deftitute of provisions, and being ill supported by the English nobility, who were then employed in framing their ordinances, he was foon obliged to return home, without gaining any advantage over the enemy. But the appearing union of all the parties in England, after the death of Gavaston, feemed to reftore that kingdom to its native force, opened again the prospect of fubjecting Scotland, and promised a happy conclusion to a war, in which both the interests and passions of the nation were fo deeply concerned.

1314.

EDWARD affembled forces from all quarters, with a view of finishing by one blow this important enterprize. He fummoned the most warlike of his vasials from Gascony : He inlisted troops from Flanders and other foreign countries : He invited over great numbers of the diforderly Irifh as to a certain proy : He joined to them a body of the Welfh, who were actuated by like motives : And affembling the whole military force of England, he marched to the frontiers with an army which according to the Scots writers amounted to an hundred thousand men, but which was probably much inferior to that number *.

THE army, collected by Robert, exceeded not thirty thousand combatants; but being compoled of men, who had diffinguished themselves by many acts of valour, who were rendered desperate by their fituation, and who were enured to all the varieties of fortune, they might juftly, under fuch a leader, be deemed formidable to the most numerous and best appointed armies. The castle of Stirling, which, with Berwic, was the only fortrefs of Scotland, that remained in the hands of the English, had been long befieged by Edward Bruce; and Philip de Mowbray, the governor, after an obstinate defence, was at last obliged to capitulate, and to promife that if, before a certain day, which was now approaching, he was not relieved, he should open his gates to the enemy +. Robert. therefore, sensible, that here was the ground on which he must expect the English, chose the field of battle with all the skill and prudence imaginable, and made the neceffary preparations for their reception. He posted himself at Bannockburn, about two miles from Stirling: where he had a hill on his right flank, and a morals on his left: And not content with having taken these precautions to prevent his being furrounded by the more numerous army of the English; he forfaw the fuperior ftrength of the enemy in cavalry, and made provisions against Having a rivulet in front, he commanded deep pits to be dug along its at.

* We find in Rymer, vol. 3. p. 481. a lift of all the infantry affembled from all parts of Englandand Wales; and they are only 21540. It is not likely therefore that the whole army could be near fo numerous as is reported.

† Rymer, vol. 3. p. 481.

banks.

EDWARDJ.

banks, and fharp ftakes to be planted in them, and he ordered the whole to be Chap XIV. carefully covered over with turf *. The English arrived in fight on the evening, and a bloody conflict immediately enfued between two bodies of cavalry; where Robert, who was at the head of the Scots, engaged in fingle combat with Henry de Bohun, a gent'eman of the family of Hereford ; and at one stroke cleft his adversary to the chin with a battle ax, in fight of the two armies. The Englifh horfe fled with precipitation to their main body.

THE Scots, encouraged by this favourable event, and glorying in the valour of their prince, prognofticated a happy iffue to the combat on the enfuing day : The English, confident in their numbers, and elated with past fuccesses, longed Battle of Banfor an opportunity of revenge : And the night, tho' extremely short in that fea- nockburn. fon and in that climate, appeared tedious to the impatience of the feveral combatants. Early in the morning, Edward drew out his army, and advanced towards 25th June. the Scots. The earl of Glocefter, his nephew, who commanded the left wing of cavalry, impelled by the ardour of youth, rushed on to the attack without precaution, and fell among the covered pits, which had been prepared by Bruce for the reception of the enemy +. This body of horse was difordered: Glocester himfelf was overthrown and flain : Sir James Douglas, who commanded the Scottifh cavalry, gave the enemy no leifure to rally, but pushed them off the field with confiderable lofs, and purfued them in fight of their whole line of infantry. While the English army were alarmed with this unfortunate beginning of the action, which commonly proves decifive, they observed an army on the heights towards their left, which feemed to be marching leifurely in order to furround them; and they were distracted by their multiplied fears. This was a number of waggoners and fumpter boys, whom Robert had collected together; and having fupplied them with military ftandards, gave them the appearance at a diftance of a formidable army. The ftratagem took effect : A panic feized the English : They threw down their arms and fled : They were pursued with great flaughter, for the space of eighty miles, till they reached Berwic : And the Scots, befides an ineftimable booty, took many perfons of quality prifoners, and above 400 gentlemen, whom Robert treated with great humanity ‡, and whofe ranfom was a new acceffion of wealth to the victorious army. The King himfelf very narrowly escaped by taking shelter in Dunbar, whose gates were opened to him by the earl of March; and he thence passed by sea to Berwic.

SUCH was the great and decifive battle of Bannockburn, which fecured the independancy of Scotland, fixed Bruce on the throne of that kingdom, and may be deemed the greatest overthrow, which the English monarchy, fince the con-

* T. de la More. p. 594. - † T. de la More. p. 594.

1 Ypod. Neuft. p. 501. quest.

1314.

1314.

1315.

Chap. XIV. quest, has ever received. The numbers of flain on these occasions are always uncertain, and are commonly much magnified by the victors : But this defeat made a deep impression on the minds of the English; and it was remarked, that, for fome years, no fuperiority of numbers could encourage them to keep the field against the Scots *. Robert, to make advantage of his prefent fuccefs, broke into England, and ravaged all the northern counties without opposition : He befieged Carlifle, tho' that place was faved by the valour of Sir Andrew Harcla, the governor : He was more fuccefsful against Berwic, which he took by affault +: And Robert, elated by his continued prosperity, entertained hopes of making the most important conquests on the English. He sent over his brother Edward, with an army of 6000 men, into Ireland; and that nobleman affumed the title of King of Ireland ‡ : He followed foon after himfelf with more numerous forces : The horrible and abfurd oppreffions, which the Irifh fuffered under the English government, made them, at first, fly to the standard of the Scots, whom they regarded as their deliverers : But a grievous famine, which at that time laid defolate both Ireland and Britain, reduced the Scottish army to the greatest extremities ; and Robert was obliged to return, with his forces much diminished, into his own country. His brother, after having experienced a variety of fortune, was defeated and flain near Dundalk by the English, commanded by lord Bermingham § : And these projects, too extensive for the force of the Scottish nation, thus vanished into fmoke.

THE King, befides fuffering those difasters from the invalion of the Scots and the infurrection of the Irifh, was also infefted with a rebellion in Wales ||; and above all by the factions of his own nobility, who took advantage of the public calamities, infulted his fallen fortunes, and endeavoured to effablish their own independance on the ruins of the throne. Lancaster and the barons of his party, who had declined attending Edward on his Scottifh expedition, no fooner faw him return with difgrace, than they infifted on the renewal of their ordinances, which they still pretended to have validity; and the King's unhappy condition obliged him to fubmit to their demands. The ministry was new modeled by the direction of Lancaster +: That nobleman was placed at the head of the council: It was declared, that all the offices should be filled, from time to time, by the votes of parliament, or rather, by the will of the great barons * : And the nation, under this new model of government, endeavoured to put itfelf in a better posture of defence against the Scots. But the factious nobles were far from be- Chap. XIV. ing terrified with the progress of these public enemies : On the contrary, they founded the hopes of their own future grandeur on the weaknefs and diffreffes of the crown : Lancaster himself was suspected, with great appearance of reason, of holding a fecret correspondence with the King of Scots: And tho' he was himfelf entrusted with the command of the English armies, he took care that every enterprize should be disappointed, and every plan of operations prove unfuccessful.

* Walfing. p. 106. + T. de la More. p. 594. Murimuth, p. 53. cont. p. 28. § Rymer, vol 3. p. 767, 777. Walfing. p. 3. Ypod. Neuft. p. 503. T. de la More. p. 594. Trivet, cont. p. 29. || Rymer, vol. 3. p. 553. 4 Ryley, p. 560. Rymer, vol. 3. p. 722. * Brady, vol. 2. p. 122. from the records, app. Nº. 61. Ryley, p. 560. posture

EDWARD II.

ALL the European kingdoms, especially that of England, were at this time totally unacquainted with the office of a prime minister, fo well understood at prefent in all regular monarchies; and the people could form no conception of a man, who, tho' ftill in the rank of a fubject, poffeffed all the power of a fovereign, eafed the prince of the burthen of affairs, fupplied his want of experience or capacity, and maintained all the rights of the crown, without degrading the greateft nobles by their fubmiffion to his temporary authority. Edward was plainly by nature unfit to hold himfelf the reins of government: He had no vices; but was unhappy in a total incapacity for ferious bufinefs: He was fenfible of his own defects, and neceffarily fought to be governed : Yet every favourite, whom he fucceffively chofe, was regarded as a fellow fubject, exalted above his rank and flation : He was the object of envy to the great nobility : His character and conduct were decryed with the people: His authority over the king and kingdom was confidered as an ufurpation: and unlefs the prince had embraced the dangerous expedient, of devolving his power on the earl of Lancaster or fome mighty barons, whole family interest was fo extensive as to be able alone to maintain his influence, he could expect no peace nor tranquillity upon the throne.

THE King's chief favourite, after the death of Gavaston, was Hugh le D'ef- Hugh leD'efpenfer or Spenfer, a young man of English birth, of high rank, and of a noble penfer. family*. He poffeffed all the exterior accomplifhments of perfon and addrefs, which were fitted to engage the weak mind of Edward; but was devoid of that moderation and prudence, which might have qualified him to mitigate the envy of the great, and conduct him thro'all the perils of that dangerous flation, to which he was advanced. His father, who was of the fame name, and who, by means of his fon, had alfo attained great influence over the King, was a nobleman venerable from his years, refpected thro' all his paft life for wildom, valour, and integrity, and well fitted by his talents and experience, could affairs have admitted of any temperament, to have supplied the defects both of the King

VOL. II.

* Dugd. Baron. vol. 1, p. 389. T

and 1315.

1315.

138

Chap. XIV. and of his minion*. But no fooner was Edward's attachment declared for young Spenfer, than the turbulent Lancaster, and most of the great barons, regarded him as their rival, made him the object of their animofity, and formed violent plans for his ruin +. They first declared their discontent by withdrawing from parliament; and it was not long ere they found a pretence for proceeding to greater extremities against him.

1321.

THE King, who fet no limits to his bounty towards his minions, had married Civil commo- the younger Spenfer to his niece, one of the co-heirs of the earl of Glocester, flain at Bannockburn; and the favourite, by his fuccession to that opulent family, had inherited great possessions in the marches of Wales ‡, and being defirous of extending still farther his influence in those quarters, he is accused of having committed injuffice towards the barons of Audley and D'ammori, who had alfo married two fifters of the fame family. There was likewife a baron in that neighbourhood, called William de Braouse, lord of Gower, who had made a fettlement of his eftate on John de Mowbray, his fon in law; and in cafe of failure of that nobleman and his iffue, had fubflituted the earl of Hereford, in the fucceffion to the barony of Gower. Mowbray, on the decease of his father in law, entered immediately into possession of the estate, without the formality of taking livery and feizin from the crown; and Spenfer, who coveted that barony, perfuaded the King to put in execution the rigor of the feudal law, to feize Gower as escheated to the crown, and to confer it upon him §. This transaction, which was the proper fubject of a law-fuit, immediately excited a civil war in the kingdom. The earls of Lancaster and Hereford flew to arms: Audley and D'ammori joined them with all their forces : The two Rogers de Mortimer and Roger de Clifford, with many others, difgusted for private reasons with the Spensers, brought a confiderable acceffion to the party : And their army being now formidable, they fent a meffage to the King, requiring him immediately to difmifs or confine the younger Spenfer; and menacing him, in cafe of refufal, with renouncing their homage and allegiance to him, and taking revenge on that minister by their own authority. They fcarce waited for an anfwer; but immediately fell upon the lands of young Spenfer, which they pillaged and destroyed; murdered his fervants, drove off his cattle, and burned his houses . They proceeded thence to commit like devaltations on the estates of Spenser, the father, whose character hitherto they had feemed to refpect. And having drawn and figned a formal

* T. de la More. p. 594. + Walfing. p. 113. T. de la More. p. 595. Murimuth, p. 55, t Trivet, cont. p. 25. § Monach. Malmes. || Murimuth, p. 55.

affociation

E D W A R D 11.

affociation among themselves *, they marched up to London with all their forces, Chap. XIV. frationed themfelves in the neighbourhood of that city, and demanded of the King the banishment of both the Spenfers. These noblemen were then absent; the father abroad ; the fon at fea ; and both of them employed in different commiffions: The King, therefore replied, that his coronation oath, by which he was bound to observe the laws, restrained him from giving his affent to fo illegal a demand, or condemning noblemen who were accufed of no crime, nor had any opportunity afforded them of making answer +. Equity and reason were but a feeble opposition to men, who had arms in their hands, and who, being already involved in guilt, faw no fafety but in fuccess and victory. They entered London with their troops; and giving in to the parliament, which was then fitting, a charge against the Spenfers, of which they attempted not to prove one article, they procured, by menaces and violence, a fentence of perpetual exile and forfeiture against these ministers ‡. This sentence was voted by the lay barons alone : For the commons, tho' now an eftate in parliament, were yet of fo little confideration, that their affent was never demanded; and even the voice of the prelates was neglected amidit the present diforders. The only fymptom, which these turbulent barons gave of their regard to law, was their requiring from the King an indemnity for their illegal proceedings §; after which, they difbanded their army, and feparated, in fecurity, as they imagined, to their feveral caftles.

THIS act of violence, in which the King was obliged to acquiefce, rendered his perfon and his authority fo contemptible, that every one thought himfelf entitled to treat him with neglect. The queen, having occasion foon after to pass by the caftle of Leeds in Kent, which belonged to the lord Badlefmere, defired a night's lodging; but was refufed admittance, and fome of her attendants, who prefented themfelves at the gate, were killed ||. The infult and brutality towards this princefs, who had always endeavoured to live on good terms with the barons, and who joined them heartily in their hatred of the younger Spenfer, was an action which no body pretended to vindicate; and the King thought, that he might, without giving general umbrage, affemble an army, and take vengeance on the offender. No one came to the affiftance of Badlesmere; and Edward prevailed 4: But having now fome forces on foot, and having concerted meafures with his friends throughout England, he ventured to take off the mask, to attack all his enemies, and to recal the two Spenfers, whofe fentence he declared

* Tyrrel, vol. 2. p. 280, from the register of C. C. Canterbury. + Walfing. p. 114. 1 Totle's collect. part. 2. p. 50. Walfing. p. 114. § Tottle's collect. part. 2. p. 54. Rymer, vol. 3. p. 891. || Rymer, vol. 3: p. 89. Walfing. p. 114, 115. T, de la More p 595. Murimuth, p. 56. + Walfing. p. 1.15.

1321.

139

illegal,

Chap. XIV. illegal, unjuft, contrary to the tenor of the great charter, paffed without the af-1321. fent of the prelates, and extorted by violence from him and the effate of barons *. Still the commons were not mentioned by either party.

1322.

140

THE King had now got the ftart of his adverfaries; an advantage, which, in those times, was commonly decifive : And hastened with his army to the marches of Wales, the chief feat of the enemies power, whom he found totally unprepared for refiftance. Many of the barons in those parts endeavoured to appeale him by fubmiffion +: Their caftles were feized, and their perfons committed to custody. But Lancaster, in order to prevent the total ruin of his party, fummoned together all his vaffals and retainers; declared his alliance with Scotland, which had long been fufpected; received the promife of a reinforcement from that country under the command of Randolf, earl of Murray, and Sir James Douglas ‡; and being joined by the earl of Hereford, advanced with all his forces against the King, who had collected an army of 30,000 men, and was fuperior to his enemies. Lancaster posted himself at Burton upon Trent, and endeavoured to defend the paffages of the river § : But being difappointed in that plan of operations; this nobleman, who had no military genius, and whofe perfonal courage was even fufpected, fled with his army to the north, in expectation of being there joined by his Scottifh allies |. He was purfued by the King; and his army diminished daily; till he came to Boroughbridge, where he found Sir Andrew Harcla posted with fome forces on the opposite fide of the river, and ready to difpute the paffage with him. He was repulfed in an attempt which he 16th March. made to force his way; the earl of Hereford was killed; the whole army of the rebels was disconcerted ; Lancaster himself was become incapable of taking any measures either for flight or defence; and he was feized without refiftance by Harcla, and conducted to the King 4. In those violent times, the laws were for much neglected on both fides, that, even where they might, without any fenfible inconvenience, have been observed, the conquerors deemed it unneceffary to pay any regard to them. Lancaster, who was guilty of open rebellion, and was taken in arms against his fovereign, instead of being tried by the laws of his country, which pronounced the fentence of death against him, was condemned by a courtmartial *, and led to execution. Edward, however little vindictive in his natural temper, here indulged his revenge, and practifed against the prifoner the fame indignities, which had been exercifed by his orders against Gavaston. He was 23d March. Execution of the earl of Lancaster.

* Rymer, vol. 3. p. 907. T. de la More, p. 595. + Walfing p. 115. Murimuth, p. 57. ‡ Rymer, vol. 3. p. 958. § Walfing. p. 115. || Ypod, Neuft. p. 504. 4 T. de la More, p. 596. Walfing. p. 116. * Tyrrel, vol. 2. p. 291: from the Records.

cloathed

EDWARD II.

cloathed in a mean attire, placed on a lean jade without a bridle, a hood was put Chap. XIV. on his head, and in this pofture, attended by the acclamations of the people, this prince was conducted to an eminence near Pomfret, one of his own caftles, and there beheaded *.

THUS perished Thomas earl of Lancaster, the first prince of the blood, and one of the most potent barons who had ever been in England. His public conduct fufficiently difcovers the violence and turbulency of his character : His private deportment appears not to have been more innocent + : And his hypocritical devotion, by which he gained the favour of the monks and populace, will rather be regarded as an aggravation than an alleviation of his guilt 1. Badlesmere. Giffard, Barret, Cheyney, Fleming, and about eighteen of the most notorious offenders, were afterwards condemned by a legal trial and were executed §. Many were thrown into prifon: Others made their efcape beyond fea: Some of the King's fervants were rewarded from the forfeitures : Harcla received for his fervices the earldom of Carlifle II, and a large eftate, which he foon after forfeited with his life, for a treasonable correspondence with the King of Scotland 4. But the greatest part of all those vast escheats was feized by young Spenser, whose rapacity was infatiable *. Many of the barons of the King's party were difgufted with this partial division of the spoils : The envy against Spenser rose higher than ever : The ufual infolence of his temper, raifed by fuccefs, impelled him to commit many acts of violence +. The people, who always hated him, made him still more the object of their aversion : All the relations of the attainted barons and gentlemen fecretly vowed revenge : And tho' tranquility was in appearance reftored to the kingdom, the general contempt of the King and odium against Spenser, bred dangerous humours, the source of future revolutions and convultions.

In this fituation no fuccefs could be expected from foreign wars ; and Edward, after making one more fruitles attempt against Scotland, whence he retreated with difhonour, found it neceffary to terminate hoftilities with that kingdom, by a truce of thirteen years ‡: Robert, tho' his title to the crown was not acknowledged in the treaty, was fatisfied with enfuring his poffeffion of it during fo long a time. He had repelled with gallantry all the attacks of England : He had fuccessfully carried war both into that kingdom and into Ireland : He had reject-

* Leland's Coll. vol. 1. p. 668. + Knyghton, p. 2540. ‡ Hidgen, lib. 7. cap. 42, § T de la More, p. 596. || Rymer, vol. 3. p. 943. Walfing. p. 118. + Rymer, vol. 3. p. 988, 994, 999. vol. 4. p. 4. Walfing. p. 118. Ypod Neuff. p. 505. * Dudg. vol. 1. p. 393. † Dudg. vol. 1. p. 393. T. de la More, p. 597. 1 Rymer, vol. 3. p. 1022. Murimuth, p. 60.

1322

141

ed

1323.

142

Chap. XIV. ed with difdain the Pope's authority, who pretended to impose his commands upon him, and oblige him to make peace with his enemies : His throne was firmly established, as well in the affections of his subjects, as by force of arms : Yet there naturally remained fome inquietude in his mind, while at war with a flate, which, however at present difordered by faction, was of itself so much an over-match for him both in riches and in numbers of people. And this truce was, at the fame time, the more convenient for England; because the nation was in that juncture threatened with hoftilities from France.

1324.

PHILIP the Fair, King of France, who died in 1315, had left the crown to his fon Lewis Hutin, who, after a short reign, dying without male issue, was succeeded by Philip the Long, his brother, whofe death foon after made way for Charles the Fair, the youngest brother of that family. This monarch had some reasons of complaint against the King's ministers in Guienne; and as there was no common nor equitable judge in that ftrange species of sovereignty, established by the feudal law, he feemed defirous to take advantage of Edward's weaknefs, and under that pretence, to confiscate all his foreign dominions +. After an embaffy by the earl of Kent, the King's brother, had been tried in vain, Queen Isabella obtained permission to go over to Paris, and endeavour to adjust, in an amicable manner, the difference with her brother ‡: But while the was making fome progrefs in this negotiation, Charles started a new pretention, the justice of which could not be difputed, that Edward himfelf should appear in his court, and do the homage of a vaffal for the fees which he held in France §. But there occurred many difficulties in complying with this demand. Young Spenfer, by whom the King was implicitly governed, had unavoidably been engaged in many quarrels with the Queen, who afpired to the fame authority; and tho' that artful princess, on her leaving England, had diffembled her animofity ||, Spenfer, well acquainted with her fecret fentiments, was unwilling to attend his mafter to Paris, and appear in a court, where her credit might expose him to infults, if not to danger. He hefitated no lefs on allowing the King to make the journey alone; both fearing, left that eafy prince should in his absence fall under some other influence, and forefeeing the perils, to which he himfelf fhould be exposed, if, without the protection of the royal authority, he remained in England, where he was fo generally hated. While these doubts bred delays and difficulties, Ifabella proposed, that Edward should refign the dominion of Guienne to his fon, now thir-

$325.

+ Rymer, vol. 4. p. 74, 98. 1 Rymer, vol. 4. p. 140. Murimuth, p. 63. § T. de la More, p. 596. Walfin. p. 1.17. Ypod. Neuft. p. 505. Murimuth, p. 60. || Rymer, vol. 4. p. 194.

teen

E D W A R D II.

teen years of age ; and that the prince fhould come to Paris, and do the homage Chip. XIV. which every vaffal owed to his fuperior lord *. This expedient, which feemed fo happily to remove all difficulties, was immediately complied with : Spenfer was charmed with the contrivance : Young Edward was fent to Paris : And the ruin, covered under this fatal fnare, was never perceived, nor fuspected by any of the English council.

THE Queen, on her arrival in France, had found there a great number of English fugitives, the remains of the Lancastrian faction; and their common hatred of Spenfer, soon bred a secret friendship and correspondence between them and that princefs. Among the reft was young Roger Mortimer, a potent baron in the Welfh marches, who had been obliged, with others, to make his fubmiffion to the King, had been condemned for high treason; but having received a pardon for his life, was afterwards detained in the Tower, with an intention of rendering his imprisonment perpetual. He was fo fortunate as to make his escape into France +; and being one of the most confiderable perfons now remaining of the party, as well as diffinguished by his violent animolity against Spenser, he was eafily admitted to pay his court to Queen Ifabella. The graces of his perfon and addrefs advanced him quickly in her affections : He became her confident and counfellor in all her measures : And gaining daily ground upon her heart, he engaged her to facrifice at last, to her passion, all the sentiments of honour and of fidelity to her husband ‡. Hating now the man, whom she had injured, and whom Compiracy athe never valued, the entered cordially into all Mortimer's confpiracies; and hav- gaint the ing artfully got into her hands the young prince, and heir of the monarchy, fhe refolved on the utter ruin of the King, as well as of his favourite. She engaged her brother to enter into this criminal purpole : Her court was daily full of the exiled barons: Mortimer lived in the most declared intimacy with her: A correspondence was fecretly carried on with the malecontent party in England : And when Edward, informed of these alarming circumstances, required her speedily to return with the prince, fhe publicly replied, that fhe never would fet foot in the kingdom, till Spenfer was forever removed from his prefence and councils : A declaration, which procured her great popularity in England, and threw a decent veil on all her treasonable enterprizes.

EDWARD endeavoured to put himfelf in a posture of defence §; but, besides the difficulties arifing from his own indolence and flender abilities, and the want of authority, which of confequence attended all his refolutions, it was not eafy 1324

143

King,

2

ly ere ch, tch

the hai

to 10-for me

725 ed

n.

n

12 y

1

for

^{*} Rymer, vol. 4. p. 163, 164, 165. Walfin. p. 120. T. de la More, p. 597. Murimuth, p. 64. + Rymer, vol. 4, p. 7, 8, 20. T. de la More, p. 596. Walfing. p. 120. Ypod. Neuft. p. 506. ‡ T. de la More, p. 598. Murimuth, p. 65. § Rymer, vol. 4. p. 184, 188, 225.

. 1325.

144

Chap. XIV. for him, in the prefent flate of the kingdom and revenue, to maintain a conftant force, ready to repell an invalion, which he knew not at what time or place he had reafon to expect. All his efforts were unequal to the traiterous and hoftile Infurrection. confpiracies, which both at home and abroad were forming against his authority, and which were daily penetrating farther even into his own family. His brother, the earl of Kent, a virtuous but weak prince, who was then at Paris, was unwarily engaged by his fifter-in law, and by the King of France, who was alfo his coufin german, to give countenance to the invafion, whofe fole object, he believed, was the expulsion of the Spenfers : He prevailed on his elder brother the earl of Norfolk, to enter fecretly into the fame defign : The brother and heir of the earl of Lancaster had too many reasons for his hatred of these ministers, to refuse his concurrence. Walter de Reynel, archbishop of Canterbury, and many of the prelates expressed their approbation of the Queen's measures : Several of the most potent barons, envying the exorbitant authority of the favourite, were ready to fly to arms: The minds of the people, by means of fome truths and many calumnies. were ftrongly difposed to the fame party: And there needed but the appearance of the Queen and Prince, with fuch a body of foreign troops, as might be fufficient to give her protection against immediate violence, to turn all this tempeft, fo artfully prepared, against the unhappy Edward.

E 326.

CHARLES, tho' he gave countenance and affiftance to the faction, was ashamed openly to fupport the Queen and prince, against the authority of a husband and father; and Ifabella was obliged to court the alliance of fome other foreign potentate, from whole dominions fhe might fet out on her intended enterprize. For this purpofe, the affianced young Edward, whofe tender age made him incapable to judge of the confequences, with Philippa, daughter of the count of Holland and Hainault *; and having by the open affiftance of this prince, and the fecret protection of her brother, inlifted in her fervice near 3000 men at arms, 24th Septem. fhe fet out from the harbour of Dort, and landed fafely, and without opposition, on the coaft of Suffolk. The earl of Kent was in her company: Two other princes of the blood, the earl of Norfolk, and the brother of the earl of Lancafter, joined her foon after her landing with all their followers : Three prelates, the bifhops of Ely, Lincoln, and Hereford, brought her both the force of their vaffals and the authority of their character +: Even Robert de Watteville, who had been fent by the King to oppose her progress in Suffolk, deferted to her with > * T. de la More, p. 508. 598. Murimuth, p. 66.

> > 4

+ Walfing. p. 123. Ypod. Neuft. p. 507. T. de la More, p.

all

EDWARD 11.

all his forces. To render her caufe more favourable, fhe renewed her decla- Chap. XIV. ration, that the fole purpose of her enterprize was to free the king and kingdom from the tyranny of the Spenfers, and of chancellor Baldoc, their creature +. The populace were allured by her specious pretences: The barons thought themselves secure against forfeitures by the appearance of the prince of Wales in her army: And a weak irrefolute King, fupported by ministers generally odious, was altogether unable to ftem this torrent, which bore with fuch irrefiftible violence against him.

EDWARD, after trying in vain to rouze the citizens of London to fome fense of loyalty ‡, departed for the weft, where he hoped to meet with a better reception; and he had no fooner difcovered his weaknefs by leaving the city, than the rage of the populace broke out without controul against him and his ministers. They first plundered and then murdered all those who were obnoxious to them : They feized the bishop of Exeter, a virtuous and loyal prelate, as he was passing through the ftreets; and having beheaded him, they threw his body into the river §. They made themselves master of the Tower by furprize; and then entered into a formal affociation to put to death without mercy every one who should dare to oppose the enterprize of queen Isabella, and of the prince ||. A like fpirit was foon communicated to all other parts of England; and threw the few fervants of the King, who still entertained thoughts of performing their duty, into terror and aftonishment.

EDWARD was hotly purfued to Briftol by the earl of Kent, feconded by the foreign forces under John de Hainault. He found himself disappointed in his expectations with regard to the loyalty of those parts; and he passed over to Wales, where he flattered himfelf his name was more popular, and which he hoped to find free from the contagion of general rage, which had feized the English 4. The elder Spenfer, lately created earl of Winchester, was left governor of the castle of Bristol; but the garrison mutinied against him, and he was delivered into the hands of his enemies. This venerable noble, who had nearly reached the ninetieth year of his age, was inftantly, without a trial, or witnefs, or accufation, or answer, condemned to death by the rebellious barons : He was hanged on a gibbet; his body was cut in pieces, and thrown to the dogs *; and his head was fent to Winchester, the place whose title he bore, and was there set on a pole, and exposed to the infults of the populace.

† Ypod. Neuft. p. 508. ‡ Walfin. p. 123. § Walfing. p. 124. T. de la More, p. 599. Murimuth, p. 66. Walfing. p. 124. 4 Murimuth, p. 67. * Leland's Coll. vol. 1. p. 673. T. de la More, p. 599. Walfing. p. 125. M. Froislard, vol. 1. chap. 13. U

VOL. II.

F nt

DC

ile ty, er,

Vai

ed,

10

172 his

the oft

Ay

es, 100

If.

ed

gn

e. 1.

of 1326.

145

THE

Chap. XIV. 1326. 146

THE King, difappointed anew in his expectations of fuccours from the Welfh, took fhipping for Ireland; but being drove back by contmary winds, he endeavoured to conceal himfelf in the mountains of Wales: He was foon difcovered, was put under the cuftody of the earl of Lancafter, and was confined in the caftle of Kenilworth. The younger Spenfer, his favourite, who alfo fell into the hands of his enemies, was executed, like his father, without any appearance of a legal trial \dagger : The earl of Arundel, almost the only man of his rank in England, who had maintained his loyalty, was alfo, without any trial, put to death at the infligation of Mortimer: Baldoc, the chancellor, being a prieft, could not with fafety be fo fuddenly difpatched; but being fent to the bifhop of Hereford's house in London, he was there, as his enemies probably forefaw, feized by the populace, thrown into Newgate, and foon after expired, from the cruel ufage which he had received \ddagger . Even the ufual reverence, paid the facerdotal character, gave way, with every other confideration, to the prefent rage of the people.

The King de-

1327.

THE queen, to avail herfelf of the prevailing delufion, fummoned, in the King's name, a parliament at Weftminfter, where, together with the power of her army, and the authority of her partizans among the barons, who were concerned to fecure their paft treafons by committing new acts of violence against their fovereign, she expected to be feconded by the fury of the populace, the most dangerous of all instruments, and the least answerable for their excesses. A charge

13th January. was drawn up againft the King, in which, even tho' it was framed by his inveterate enemies, nothing but his narrow genius, or his misfortunes, were objected to him: For the greateft malice found no particular crime with which it could reproach this unhappy prince. He was accufed of incapacity for go remment, of wafting his time in idle amufements, of neglecting public bufinefs, of being fwayed by evil counfellors, of having loft, by his mifconduct, the kingdom of Scotland, and part of Guienne; and to fwell the charge, even the death of fome barons, and the imprifonment of fome prelates, convicted of treafon, were laid to his account §. It was in vain, amidft the violence of arms and tumult of the people, to appeal either to law or reafon: The deposition of the King, without any appearing opposition, was voted by parliament: The prince, already declared regent by his party *, was placed on the throne : And a deputation was fent to Edward at Kenilworth, to require his refignation, which menaces and terror foon extorted from him.

> † Walfing. p. 125. Ypod. Neuft. p. 508. ton, p. 2765, 2766. Brady's App. Nº. 72.

‡ Walfing. p. 126. Murimuth, p. 68. § Knygh-* Rymer, vol. 4. p. 137. Walfing. p. 125.

BUT

E D W A R D H.211

But it was impossible, that the people, however corrupted by the barbarity of. Chap. XIV. the times, still farther enflamed by faction, could forever remain infenfible to the voice of nature. A wife, who had first deserted, next invaded, and then dethroned her hufband : Who had made her infant fon an inftrument in this unnatural treatment of his father: Who had by lying pretences feduced the nation into rebellion against their fovereign : Who had pushed them into violences and cruelties, that had dishonoured them : All those circumstances were fo odious in themfelves, and formed fuch a complicated fcene of guilt, that the leaft reflection fufficed to open mens eyes, and make them deteft this flagrant infringement of every public and private duty. The fufpicions which foon arofe of Ifabella's criminal commerce with Mortimer, the proofs which daily broke out of this part of her guilt, encreased the general abhorrence against her; and her impudent hypocrify, in publicly bewailing with tears the King's unhappy fate +, was not able to deceive even the most stupid and most prejudiced of her adherents. In proportion as the Queen became the object of public hatred, the dethroned monarch, who had been the victim of her crimes and her ambition, was regarded with pity, with friendship, with veneration; and men became fensible, that all his misconduct, which faction had fo much exaggerated, had been owing to the unavoidable weaknefs, not to any voluntary depravity of his character. The new earl of Lancaster, to whose custody he had been committed, was soon touched with these generous fentiments; and befides using his prifoner with gentlenefs and humanity, he was fufpected to have entertained still more honourable intentions in his favour. The King, therefore, was taken out of his hands, and delivered over to the lord Betkeley, and Mautravers, and Gournay, who were entrusted alternately, each for a month, with the charge of guarding him. While he was in Berkeley's cuftody, he was still used with the gentleness due to his rank and his misfortunes; but when Mautravers' and Gournay's turn came, every fpecies of indignity was practifed against him, as if their intention had been to break entirely the prince's fpirit, and to employ his forrows and afflictions, inflead of more violent and more dangerous expedients, for the inftruments of his murder 1. It is reported, that one day, when Edward was to be shaved, they ordered cold and dirty water to be brought from the ditch for that purpose; and when he defired it to be changed, and was still denied his request, he burst out into tears, which bedewed his cheeks; and he exclaimed, that, in fpite of their infolence, he should be shaved with clean and warm water *. But as this means for laying Edward in his grave appeared still too flow to the impatient Mortimer, he fecretly fent orders to the + Walfing. p. 126.

102-

R

th

) (H

6 0

ng.

ath

d's

the age

ter, g's

11.

d

9 1-

ze

.6.

to е-

of nf

1 Anonymi Hift. p. 838.

U 2

* T. de la More, p. 602.

two

147

1327.

Chep. XIV. two keepers, who were at his devotion, inftantly to difpatch him; and these 1327. ruffians contrived to make the manner of his death as cruel and barbarous as pof-

21ft Septr.

The King murdered.

fible. Taking advantage of Berkeley's fickness, in whose custody he then was, and who was thereby incapacitated from attending his charge +; they came to Berkeley-caftle, and put themfelves in possession of the King's perfon. They threw him on the bed; held him down violently with a table, which they flung over him; thurst into his fundament a red hot iron, which they inferted thro' a horn: and tho' the outward marks of violence upon his perfon were prevented by this expedient, the horrid deed was discovered to all the guards and attendants. by the fcreams, with which the agonizing King filled the cafile, while his bowels were confuming 1.

GOURNEY and Mautravers were held in deteftation by all mankind; and when the enfuing revolution in England threw their protectors from power, they found it neceffary to provide for their fafety by flying the kingdom. Gournay was afterwards seized at Marseilles, delivered over to the Seneschal of Guienne, put on board a ship with a view of carrying him over to England; but was beheaded at fea, by fecret orders, as was fuppofed, from fome nobles and prelates in England, anxious to prevent any difcovery, which he might make of his accomplices |. Mautravers concealed himfelf for feveral years in Germany; but having found means of rendering fome fervice to Edward III. he ventured to approach his perfon, threw himfelf on his knees before him, fubmitted to his mercy, and received a pardon 4.

A

Wis character. It is not eafy to imagine a man more innocent and inoffenfive than the unhappy King, whofe tragical death we have related; nor a prince lefs fitted for governing that fierce and turbulent people, subjected to his authority. He was obliged to devolve on others the weight of government, which he had neither ability nor inclination to bear : The fame indolence and want of penetration led him to make choice of ministers and favourites, who were not always the best qualified for the truft committed to them : The feditious grandees, pleafed with his weaknefs, yet complaining of it, under pretence of attacking his minifters, infulted his perfon and invaded his authority: And the impatient populace, ignorant of the fource of their grievances, threw all the blame upon the King, and encreafed the public diforders by their faction and violence. It was in vain to look for protection from the laws, whofe voice, always feeble in those times, was not Chap. XIV. heard amidst the din of arms : What could not defend the King was lefs able to give shelter to any of the people: The whole machine of government was torne in pieces with fury and violence : And men, inftead of complaining against the manners of their age, and the form of their conftitution, which required the mole fteady and most skilful hand to conduct them, imputed all errors to the perfon, who had the misfortune to be entrusted with the reins of empire.

> + Cotton's Ehrid: p. 8. ‡ Walfing: p. 127. Ypod. Neuft. p. 509. Heming, p. 268. T. de la More, p. 603. || Walfing. p. 128. Anon. Hift. p. 390. P. 66, 81. Rymer, vol. 5. p. 600. 4. Cotton's abridg.

E D W A R D II.

Vas,

Bet.

191

DVE

[1]

by nts

·WC

hen

Ind

af.

on led

g-

.

Ig

ch

p.

)-

25

ĉ'

But tho' fuch miftakes be natural and unavoidable while the events are recent, it is a fhameful delution in modern historians, to imagine, that all the antient princes, who were unfortunate in their government, were also tyrannical in their conduct, and that the feditions of the people proceeded always from fome invalion of their liberties and privileges by the monarch. Even a great and a good King was not in that age fecure against faction and rebellion, as appears in the case of Henry II. but a great King had the best chance, as we learn from the history of the same period, for quelling and fubduing them. Compare the reigns and characters of Edward I. and II. The father made feveral violent attempts against the liberties of the people : His barons opposed him : He was obliged, at least found it prudent, to fubmit : But as they dreaded his valour and abilities, they were contented with reasonable fatisfaction, and pushed no farther their advantages against him. The facility and weakness of the fon, not his violence, threw every thing into confusion: The laws and government were overturned: An attempt to reinstate them was an unpardonable crime : And no atonement, but the deposition and tragical death of the King himfelf, could give thefe barons contentment. It is eafy to fee, that a conftitution, which depended fo much on the perfonal character of the fovereign, must necessarily, in many of its parts, be a government of will, not of laws. But always to throw, without diffinction, the blame of all diforders upon the prince, would introduce a fatal error in politics, and ferve as a perpetual apology for treason and rebellion : As if the turbulency of the great, and madnefs of the people, were not, equally with the tyranny of princes, an evil incident to human fociety, and no lefs carefully to be guarded against in every

WHILE these abominable scenes passed in England, the theatre of France was Miscellaneous ftained with a wickedness equally barbarous, and ftill more public and deliberate. transactions The order of knights templars had arifen during the first fervour of the Croi- during thisfades; and uniting the two qualities the most popular in that age, devotion and reign. valour, and exercifing both in the most popular of all enterprizes, the defence of the Holy Land, they had made rapid advances to credit and authority, and had 1327.

150

Chap. XIV. had acquired, from the piety of the faithful, very ample possessions in every coun-1327. try of Europe, especially in France. Their great riches, joined to the course of time, had, by degrees, relaxed the feverity of thefe virtues ; and the temp ars had in a great measure loft that popularity, which first raised them to honour and diffinction. Acquainted from experience with the fatigues and dangers of those fruitless expeditions to the East, they chose rather to enjoy in ease their opulent revenues in Europe : And being all of them men of birth, educated, according to the cuftom of that age, without any tincture of letters, they fcorned the ignoble occupations of a monastic life, and passed their time wholly in the fashionable amusements of hunting, gallantry, and the pleasures of the table. Their rival order, that of St. John of Jerusalem, whose poverty had as yet preferved them from like corruptions, still distinguished themselves by their enterprizes against the infidels, and fucceeded to all the popularity, which was loft by the indolence and luxury of the templars. But the' thefe caufes had weakened the foundations of this order, once fo celebrated and revered, the immediate fource of their defruction proceeded from the cruel and vindictive spirit of Philip the Fair, who having entertained a private difgust against some eminent templars, determined to gratify at once his avidity and revenge, by involving the whole order in one undistinguished ruin. On no better information, than that of two knights, condemned by their fuperiors to perpetual imprisonment for their vices and profligacy; he ordered on one day all the templars of France to be committed to prifon, and imputed to them fuch enormous and abfurd crimes, as are fufficient of themfelves to deftroy all the credit of the accufation. Befides their being univerfally charged with murder, robbery, and vices the most flocking to nature; every one, it was pretended, whom they received into their order, was obliged to renounce our Saviour, to fpit upon the crofs *, and to join to this impiety the fuperflition of worfhiping a gilded head, which was fecretly kept in one of their houses at Marseilles. They also initiated, it was faid, every candidate by fuch infamous rites, as could ferve to no other purpofe, than to degrade the order in his eyes, and deftroy for ever the authority of all his fuperiors over him +. Above an hundred of these unhappy gentlemen were put to the question in order to extort from them a confession of their guilt : The more obstinate perished in the hands of their tormentors : Several, to procure themfelves immediate ease in the violence of their agonies, acknowledged whatever was required of them: Forged confessions were imputed to others ‡ : And Philip, as if their guilt were now cer-

* Rymer, vol. 3. p. 31, 101. ed him on the mouth, navel and breech. de Chev. de Malte, yol. 2. p. 127, 130, &c. + It was pretended, that he kiffed the knights who receiv-Dupuy, p. 15, 16. Walf. p. 99. ‡ Vertot, hift.

tain,

EDWARD II.

COL rlei

it at fthe

pula

)rdi

Ign

nab

riv

the gain olen

tion

d

wh

inec

one

:01

200 itte

fuß ein ire

Itt

th

the

fut

211

11 di

i

1327.

tain, proceeded to a confifcation of all their treasures: But no fooner had the Chap. XIV. templars recovered from their tortures, than, preferring the most cruel execution to a life with infamy, they difavowed their confessions, exclaimed against the forgeries, justified the innocence of their order, and appealed to all the gallant actions, performed by them in antient or latter times, as a full apology for their conduct. The barbarous tyrant, enraged at this difappointment, and thinking himfelf now engaged in honour to proceed to extremities, ordered fifty four of them, whom he branded as relapfed heretics, to perifh by the punifhment of fire in his capital *: Great numbers expired after a like manner in other parts of the kingdom : And when he found, that the perfeverance of these unhappy victims, in justifying to the last their innocence, had made deep impression on the fpectators, he endeavoured to overcome the conftancy of the templars by new inhumanities. The grand mafter of the order John de Molay, and another great officer, brother to the sovereign of Dauphine, were conducted to a scaffold. erected before the church of Notredame, at Paris : A full pardon was offered them on the one hand : The fire, deftined for their execution, was shown to them on the other : These gallant nobles still persisted in the protestations of their own innocence and that of their order; and were instantly hurried into the flames by the executioner +.

In all this barbarous injustice, Clement V. who was the creature of Philip, and then refided in France, fully concurred ; and without examining a witness, or making any enquiry into the truth of facts, he fummarily, by the plenitude of his apostolic power, abolished the whole order. The templars all over Europe were thrown into prifon ; their conduct underwent a strict forutiny ; the power of their enemies still purfued and oppreffed them; but no where, except in France, were the smallest traces of their guilt pretended to be found. England fent back an ample teftimony of their piety and morals; but as the order was now annihilated, the knights were diffributed into feveral convents, and their poffeffions were, by command of the Pope, transferred to the order of St. John ‡. We now proceed to relate fome other detached transactions of the prefent period.

THE kingdom of England was afflicted with a grievous famine during feveral years of this reign. Perpetual rains and cold weather, not only deftroyed the harveft, but bred a mortality among the cattle, and raifed every kind of food to an enormous price §. The parliament, in 1315, endeavoured to fix more moderate rates on commodities, not fenfible, that fuch an attempt was impracticable, and that, were it possible to reduce the price of food by any other expedient

* Vertot, vol. 2 p. 132. Trevet, cont. p. 8. + Vertot, vol. 2. p. 142. ‡ Rymer, vol. 3. p. 323, 956. vol. 4. p. 47. Ypod. Neuft. p. 506. § Trevet, cont. p. 17, 18. than 1327.

ISI

152

Chap. XIV. than introducing plenty, nothing could be more pernicious and deftructive to the public. Where the produce of a year, for inftance, falls fo far fhort, as to afford full fubfiltance only for nine months, the only expedient for making it laft the whole twelve, is to raife the prices, to put the people by that means on fhort allowance, and oblige them to spare their food, till a more plentiful year. But in reality, the encrease of prices is a neceffary consequence of fcarcity; and laws, inftead of preventing it, only encreafe the evil, by cramping and reftraining commerce. The parliament accordingly, in the enfuing year, repealed their ordinance, which they had found useless and burdenfome *.

THE prices affixed by the parliament are somewhat remarkable : Two pounds eight shillings of our present money for the best ox, not fed with corn: If fed with corn, three pounds twelve shillings : A fat hog of two years old, ten shillings: A fat weather unfhorn, a crown: If shorn, three shillings and fix pence : A fat goole, seven pence halfpenny : A fat capon, fixpence : A fat hen, three pence : Two chickens, three pence: Four pigeons, three pence: Two dozen of eggs, three pence +. If we confider these prices, we shall find, that butcher's meat, in this time of great scarcity, must still have been fold by the parliamentary ordinance, three times cheaper than our middling prices at prefent: Poultry fomewhat lower; because, being now confidered as a delicacy, it has risen beyond its proportion: In the country places of Ireland and Scotland, where delicacies bear no price, poultry is at prefent as cheap, if not cheaper, than butcher's meat. But the inference I would draw from the comparison of prices is still more confiderable : I suppose that the rates, affixed by parliament were inferior to the usual market prices in those years of famine and mortality of cattle; and that these commodities, instead of a third, had really rifen to a half of the prefent value. But the famine at that time was fo confuming, that wheat was fometimes fold for above four pounds ten shillings a quarter 1, usually for three pounds §; that is, confiderably above twice our middling prices. A certain proof of the wretched flate of tillage in those ages. We formerly found, that the middling price of corn in that period was a half of the prefent value; while the middling price of cattle was only an eighth part: We here find the fame immense disproportion in years of scarcity. It may thence be inferred with certainty, that the raifing of corn was a fpecies of manufactory, which few in that age could practife with advantage : And there is reason to think, that other manufactures more refined, were sold even beyond their present prices : At least there is a demonstration for it in the reign of Henry VII. from the prices affixed to fcarlet and other broad cloaths by act of par- Chap. XIV. liament. During all those times, it was usual for the princes and great nobility to make fettlements of their velvet beds and filken robes, in the fame manner as of their eftates and manors *. In the lift of jewels and plate, which had belonged to the oftentatious Gavafton, and which the King recovered from the earl of Lancaster after the murder of that favourite, we find some embroidered girdles, flowered shirts, and filk waistcoats +. It was afterwards one article of acculation against that potent and opulent earl, when tried for his life, that he had purloined some of these effects of Gavaston. The ignorance of those ages in manufactures, and especially in tillage, is a clear proof that they were far from being populous.

* Walf. p. 107. + Rot. Parl. 7. Edw. II. n. 35, 36. Ypod. Neuft. p. 502. 1 Murimuth, p. 48. Walfingham, p. 108, fays it role to fix pounds. § Ypod. Neuft. p. 502. Trivet, cont p. 18. and they there ?? &

E D W A R D II.

铜

OM

100 fei

Igi

fr

ce

00

, R

ce,

1; )11;

Cê

næ

0

ALL trade and manufactures indeed were then at a very low ebb. The only country in the northern parts of Europe, where they feem to have rifen to any tolerable degree of improvement, was Flanders. When Robert, earl of that country, was applied to by Edward, and was defired to break off commerce with the Scots, whom Edward called his rebels, and reprefented as excommunicated on that account by the church, the earl replied, that Flanders was always confidered as common and free and open to all nations 1.

THE petition of the elder Spenser to parliament, complaining of the devastation committed on his lands by the barons, contains feveral particulars, which are curious, and discover the manners of the age §. He affirms, that they had ravaged fixty three manors belonging to him, and he makes his loffes amount to 46,000 pounds; that is, to 138,000 of our prefent money. Among other particulars, he enumerates 28,000 fheep, 1000 oxen and heifers, 1200 cows with their breed for two years, 560 cart horfes, 2000 hogs, together with 600 bacons, 80 carcaffes of beef, and 600 muttons in the larder; ten tuns of cyder, arms for 200 men and other warlike engines and provisions. The plain inference is, that the greatest part of Spenser's vast estate, as well as that of the other nobility, was farmed by the landlord himfelf, managed by his flewards or bailiffs, and cultivated by his villains. Little or none of it was let on leafe to hufbandmen: Its produce was confumed in ruftic hospitality by the baron or his officers: A great number of idle retainers, ready for any diforder or mifchief, were maintained by him : All who lived upon his eftate were abfolutely at his difpofal: Instead of applying to courts of justice, he usually fought redress by open force and violence : The great nobility were a kind of independant potentates, who, if they fubmitted to any regulations at all, were lefs governed by the municipal

* Dugdale, paffim. + Rymer, vol. 3. p. 388. ‡ Rymer, vol. 3. p. 770. § Brady's hift. vol. 2. p. 143, from Clauf. 15. Edw. IV. M. 14. Dors. in cedula. VOL. II. X 1327.

1,53

1327.

154

Chap. XIV. nicipal law, than by a rude species of the laws of nations. The method in which we find they treated the King's favourites, and minifters, is a proof of their ufual way of dealing with each other. A party, which complains of the arbitrary conduct of ministers, ought naturally to affect a great regard for the laws and conflitution, and maintain at least the appearance of justice in their proceedings : Yet these barons, when discontented, came to parliament with an armed force, conftrained the King to affent to their meafures, and without any trial or witnefs or conviction, paffed, from the pretended notoriety of facts, an act of banifhment or attainder against the minister, which, on the first revolution of fortune, was reverfed by like expedients. The parliament, during factious times, was nothing but the organ of prefent power. Tho' the perfons of whom it was chiefly composed, feemed to enjoy great independance, they really possefied no true liberty; and the fecurity of each individual among them, was not fo much derived from the general protection of law, as from his own private power and that of his confederates. The authority of the monarch, tho' far from abfolute, was very irregular, and might often reach him : The current of a faction might eafily overwhelm him: A hundred confiderations, of benefits and injuries, friendships and animolities, hopes and fears, were able to influence his conduct; and amidft thefe motives a regard to equity and law and juffice was commonly, in those rude ages, of little moment: Nor did any man entertain thoughts of oppoling prefent power, who did not deem himfelf ftrong enough to difpute the field with it by force, and was not prepared to give battle to the fovereign or the ruling party.

> BEFORE I conclude this reign, I cannot forbear making another remark drawn from the detail of loffes given in by the elder Spenfer; particularly the great quantity of falt meat which he had in his larder, 600 bacons, 80 carcaffes of beef, 600 muttons. We may observe that the outrage, of which he complains, began after the third of May, as we learn from the fame paper. It is eafy therefore to conjecture what a vaft ftore of the fame kind he must have laid up at the beginning of winter; and we may draw a new conclusion with regard to the wretched state of the antient husbandry, which could not provide any subfissance for the cattle during winter, even in fuch a temperate climate as the fouth of England : For Spenfer had but one manor fo far north as Yorkshire. There being few or no enclosures, except perhaps for deer, no fown grafs, little hay, and no other refources for feeding cattle ; the barons, as well as the people, were obliged to kill and falt their oxen and sheep at the beginning of winter, before they became lean upon the common pafture : A precaution still practifed with regard to oxen in the leaft cultivated parts of this ifland. The falting of mutton is

EDWARD II.

is a miserable expedient which has every where been long difused. From this cir- Chap. XIV. cumstance, however trivial in appearance, may be drawn very important inferences, 1327. with regard to the domeftic oeconomy and manner of life in those ages.

THE diforders of the times, from foreign wars and inteffine diffentions, but above all, the cruel famine, which obliged the nobility to difmifs many of their retainers, encreafed the number of robbers in the kingdom; and no place was fecure from their incurfions*. They met in troops like armies, and over-ran the country. Two cardinals, themfelves, the Pope's legates, notwithstanding the numerous train, which attended them, were robbed, and defpoiled of all their goods and equipage, when they traveled on the road +.

AMONG the other wild fancies of the age, it was imagined, that the perfons affected with leprofy, a difease at that time very common, had confpired with the Saracens to poifon all the fprings and fountains; and men being glad of any pretence to get rid of those who were a burthen to them, many of those unhappy people were burnt alive for this chimerical imputation. Several Jews alfo were punished in their perfons, and their goods confiscated on the fame account 1.

THIS King left four children, two fons and two daughters : Edward, his eldeft fon and fucceffor; John, created afterwards earl of Cornwal, who died young at Perth; Jane, afterwards married to David Bruce, King of Scotland; and Eleanor married to Reginald, count of Gueldres.

Trevet, cont. p. 22. Murimuth, p. 51. 1 Ypod. Neuft. p. 504.

ių,

6 fa

ma

17 nuc

21 ene

an

i

90

出

11 :e 51

1

* Ypod. Neuft. p. 502. Walf. p. 107. + Ypod. Neuftr. p. 503. T. de la More, p. 594.

CHAP. the fairly warman and the states his 155

The target and an interest and at the X 2

CHAP. XV.

EDWARD III.

War with Scotland-Execution of the earl of Kent-Execution of Mortimer, earl of March___State of Scotland_War with that kingdom King's claim to the crown of France Preparations for war with France-War-Naval victory-Domestic disturbances-Affairs of Britanny-Renewal of the war with France-Invasion of France-Battle of Crecy-War with Scotland-Captivity of the King of Scots-Calais taken.

1327 20th Jan.

Chap. XV. THE violent party, which had taken arms against Edward II. and finally deposed that unhappy monarch, deemed it requilite for their future fecurity to pay fo far an exterior obeifance to the law, as to demand a parliamentary indemnity for all their illegal proceedings; on account of the neceffity, which, it was pretended, they lay under, of employing force against the Spenfers and other evil counfellors, the enemies of the kingdom. All the attainders alfo, which had passed against the earl of Lancaster and his adherents, when the chance of war turned against them, were eafily reverfed during the triumph of their party *; and the Spenfers, whofe former attainder had been reverfed by parliament, were now again, in this change of fortune, condemned by the votes of their enemies. A council of regency was likewife appointed by parliament, confifting of twelve perfons; five prelates, the archbishops of Canterbury and York, the bifhops of Winchefter, Worcefter, and Hereford; and feven lay peers, the earls of Norfolk, Kent and Surrey, and the lords Wake, Ingham, Piercy, and Rofs. The earl of Lancaster was appointed guardian and protector of the King's perfon. But tho' it was reafonable to expect, that, as the weakness of the former King had given reins to the licentiousness of the barons, great tranquillity would? not prevail during the prefent minority; the first disturbance arose from the invalion of foreign enemies.

War with Scotland,

THE King of Scots, declining in years and health, but retaining ftill that martial spirit, which had raifed his nation from the lowest ebb of fortune, deemed

8

the

* Rymer, vol. 4. p. 245, 257, 258, &c.

EDWARD IH:

the prefent opportunity favourable for infefting England : He first made an at- Chap. XV. tempt on the caftle of Norham, in which he was difappointed; he then collected an army of 25,000 men on the frontiers, and having appointed the earl of Murray and lord Douglas generals, threatened an incursion into the northern counties. The English regency, after trying in vain every expedient to reftore peace with Scotland, made vigorous preparations for war; and befides affembling an English army of near fixty thousand men, they invited back John de Hainault, and fome foreign cavalry, whom they had difmiffed, and whole difcipline and arms had appeared fuperior to those of their own country. Young Edward himfelf, burning with a paffion for military fame, appeared at the head of thefe numerous forces; and marched from Durham, the appointed place of rendevous, in queft of the enemy, who had already broke into the frontiers, and were laying every thing wafte around him with fire and fword.

p-

MURRAY and Douglas were the two most celebrated warriors, bred in the long hoftilities between the Scots and English; and their forces, trained in the fame school, and enured to hardships, fatigues, and dangers, were perfectly qualified, by their habits and manner of life, for that defultory and deftructive war, which they carried on against the English. Except a body of about 4000 cavalry, well armed, and fit to make a fleddy impression in battle, the rest of the army were mounted on fmall horfes, which found fubfiftance every where, and carried them with rapid and unexpected marches, whether they meant to commit depredations on the peaceable inhabitants, or to attack an armed enemy, or to retreat into their own country. The whole equipage of the troops confifted of a bag of oat meal, which, as a fupply in cafe of neceffity, each foldier carried behind him; together with a light plate of iron, on which he inftantly baked the oat meal into a cake, in the open fields. But his chief fubfistance was the cattle which he feized ; and his cookery was as expeditious as all his other operations. After fleaing the animal, he placed the fkin, loofe and hanging in the form of a bag, upon fome flakes; he poured water into it, kindled a fire below, and thus made it ferve as a cauldron for the boiling of his victuals *.

THE chief difficulty, which Edward met with, after composing fome dangerous frays, which broke out between his foreign forces and the English +, was to come up with an enemy, fo rapid in their marches, and fo little encumbered in their motions. Tho' the flame and fmoke of burning villages directed him fufficiently to the place of their encampment, he found upon hurrying thither, that they were already departed, and he foon difcovered, by new marks of devastation, that they had removed to fome diftant quarter. After harraffing his army during,

* Froiffard, liv. 4, chap. 18. + Froiffard, liv. 1. chap 17.

1327.

157

fome-

1327.

158

Chap. XV. fome time in this fruitless chace, he advanced northwards, and croffed the Tyne, with a refolution of awaiting them on their return homewards, and taking vengeance on them for all their depredations *. But that whole country was already fo much wasted by their frequent incursions, that it could not afford sublistance. to his army; and he was obliged again to return fouthwards, and change his plan of operations. He had now loft all tract of the enemy; and tho' he promiled the reward of a hundred pounds a year to any one who should bring him an account of their motions, he remained unactive some days, before he received any intelligence of them +. He found at last, that they had fixed their camp on the fouthern banks of the Were, as if they intended to await a battle; but their prudent leaders had chosen the ground with fuch judgment, that the English, on their approach, found it impracticable, without temerity, to cross the river in their face, and attack them in their prefent fituation. Edward, impatient for revenge and glory, here fent them a defiance, and challenged them, if they dared, to meet him in an equal field, and try the fortune of arms. The bold spirit of Douglas could ill brook this bravado, and he advifed the acceptance of the challenge; but he was over-ruled by Murray, who replied to Edward, that he never took the council of an enemy in any of his operations. The King, therefore, kept still his polition oppolite to them; and expected daily, that necessity would oblige them to change their quarters, and give him an opportunity of overwhelming them with his fuperior forces. After a few days, they fuddenly decamped, and marched farther up the river ; but ftill posted themselves in such a manner, as to preferve the advantage of the ground, if the enemy should venture to attack them 1. Edward infifted, that all hazards should be run, rather than allow these ravagers to escape with impunity; but Mortimer's authority prevented the affault, and opposed itself to the valour of the young monarch. While the armies lay in this polition, an incident happened which had well nigh proved fatal to the English. Douglas, having got the word, and surveyed exactly the fituation of the English camp, entered it fecretly in the night time, with a body of two hundred determined foldiers, and advanced to the royal tent, with a view of killing or carrying off the prince, in the midft of his whole army. But fome of Edward's attendants, awaking in that critical moment, made refiftance; his chaplain and chamberlain facrificed their lives for his fafety; the King himfelf, after making a valiant defence, escaped in the dark : And Douglas, having loft the greatest part of his followers, was glad to make a hasty retreat with the remainder §. Soon after, the Scottish army decamped without noise in the dead of > * Froiffart, liv. 4. chap. 19. + Rymer, vol. 4. p. 312. Froiffart, liv. 4. chap. 19. + Froiffart, liv. 4 chap. 19. § Froiffart, liv. 4. chap. 19. Hemingford, p. 268. Ypod. Neuft. p. 509. Knyghton, p. 2552.

night;

E D W A R D III.

night; and having thus got the flart of the English, arrived without farther loss Chap. XV. in their own country. Edward, on entering the place of the Scottifh encampment, found only fix Englishmen, whom the enemy, after breaking their legs, had tied to trees, in order to prevent their carrying any intelligence to their countrymen *.

THE King was highly incenfed at the difappointment, which he had met with, in his first enterprize, and at the head of so gallant an army. The symptoms, which he had difcovered of bravery and fpirit, gave extreme fatisfaction, and were regarded as fure prognoftics of an illustrious reign : But the general difpleafure fell violently on Mortimer, who was already the object of public odium : And every measure which he purfued, tended to aggravate, beyond all bounds, the hatred of the nation both against him and Queen Isabella.

0.

In

ed

on

Ut

Ver

for al.

er

2,

21-20.

er

e-

E

WHEN the council of regency was formed, Mortimer, tho' in the plenitude of his power, had taken no care to enfure a place in it; but this femblance of moderation was only a cover to the most exorbitant and most ambitious projects. He rendered that council entirely useless by usurping to himself the whole fovereign power; he fettled on the Queen-dowager the greater part of the royal revenues; he never confulted either the princes of the blood or the other noblemen in any public measure; the King himself was so besieged by his creatures, that no access could be procured to him; and all the envy, which had attended Gavafton and Spenfer, fell much more defervedly on this new favourite.

MORTIMER, fenfible of the growing hatred of the people, thought it requilite, on any terms, to fecure peace abroad; and he entered into a negociation with Robert Bruce for that purpofe. As the claim of fuperiority in England, more than any other cause, had tended to inflame the animofities between the two nations, Mortimer confented to refign abfolutely this pretention, to give up all the homages done by the Scottifh parliament and nobility, and to acknowledge Robert as fovereign of Scotland +. In return for thefe mighty advantages, Robert only flipulated the payment of 30,000 marks to England. This treaty was ratified by parliament 1; but was nevertheless the source of great discontent among the people, who, having entered zealoufly into the pretentions of Edward I. and deeming themfelves difgraced by the fuccefsful refiftance of fo inferior a a nation, were disappointed by this treaty, in all future hopes both of conquest and of vengeance.

THE princes of the blood, Kent, Norfolk, and Lancafter, were very much united in their councils; and Mortimer entertained great sufpicions of their de-

* Froifiart, liv. 4. chap. 19. + Rymer, p. 337. Heming. p. 270. Anon. Hift. p. 392. 1 Ypod. Neaft. p. 510.

1327.

1328.

159

g. auderal sorrad bol boy' figns

1327.

160

Chap. XV. figns against him. In fummoning them to parliament, he ftrictly prohibited them, in the King's name, from being attended with an armed force, an illegal but usual practice in that age. The three earls, as they approached to Salifbury, the place appointed for the meeting of parliament; found, that, tho' they themfelves, in obedience to the King's command, had brought only their ufual retinue along with them, Mortimer and his party were attended with all their followers in arms; and they began with some reason to apprehend a dangerous defign against their persons. They therefore retreated, affembled their retainers, and were returning with an army to take vengeance on Mortimer, when the weakness of Kent and Norfolk, who deferted the common cause, obliged Lancafter also to make his fubmiffions *. The quarrel, by the interpolition of the prelates, seemed for the present to be appealed.

Bur Mortimer, in order to intimidate the princes, determined to have a vic-

1329.

1330.

oth March

the earl of

Kent.

tim; and the fimplicity, with the good intentions of the earl of Kent, afforded him foon after an opportunity of practifing upon him. By himfelf and his emiffaries, he endeavoured to perfuade that prince, that his brother, King Edward, was still alive, and concealed in fome fecret prifon in England. The earl, whofe remorfes for the part which he had acted against the late King, probably inclined him to give credit to this intelligence, entered into a defign of reftoring him to liberty, of re-inftating him on the throne, and thereby of making fome compenfation for the injuries, which he had unwarily done him +. After this innocent contrivance had been allowed to proceed a certain length, the earl was feized by Mortimer, was accused before the parliament, and condemned by these flavifh, tho' turbulent barons, to lofe his life and fortune. The queen and Mortimer, apprehensive of young Edward's lenity towards his uncle, hurried on the Execution of execution, and the prifoner was beheaded next day : But fo general was the affection borne the earl, and fuch pity prevailed for his hard fate, that, tho' peers had been eafily found, to condemn him, it was evening before his enemies could find an executioner to perform the office t.

> THE earl of Lancaster, on pretence of his affent to this conspiracy, was foon after thrown into prifon : Many others of the prelates and nobility were profecuted : Mortimer employed this engine to crush all his enemies, and enrich himfelf and his family by the forfeitures. The eftate of the earl of Kent was feized for his younger fon, Geoffrey : The immenfe fortunes of the Spenfers and their adherents were mostly converted to his own use : He affected a state and dignity > * Knyghton, p. 2554. + Avesbury, p. 8. Anon. Hift. p. 395. 1 Heming. p. 271. Ypod. Neuft. p. 510. Knyghton, p. 2555.

equal

E D W A R D III.

equal or superior to the royal : His power became formidable to every one : His illegal practices were daily complained of: And all parties, forgetting former animolities, conspired in their hatred against Mortimer.

IT was impossible, that these abuses could long escape the observation of a prince, endowed with fo much fpirit and judgment as young Edward, who being now in his eighteenth year, and feeling himfelf capable of government, repined at being held in fetters by this infolent minister. But fo much was he furrounded with the emiffaries of Mortimer, that it behoved him to conduct the project for fubverting him, with the fame fecrecy and precaution, as if he had been forming a confpiracy against his fovereign. He communicated his intentions to the lord Mountacute, who engaged the lords Molins and Clifford, fir John Nevil of Hornby, fir Edward Bohun Ufford, and others, to enter into their views; and the caftle of Nottingham was chosen for the scene of the enterprize. The Queen-dowager and Mortimer lodged in that fortrefs: The King also was admitted, tho' with a few only of his attendants: And as the caftle was ftrictly guarded, the gates locked every evening, and the keys carried to the Queen, it became necessary to communicate the defign to fir William Eland, the governor, who entered zealoufly into it. By his direction the King's affociates were admitted thro' a fubterraneous paffage, which had been formerly contrived for a fecret outlet to the cafile, but was now buried in rubbish; and Mortimer, without having it in his power to make resistance, was fuddenly feized in an apartment adjoining to the Queen's *. A parliament was immediately called for his trial. He was accused before that affembly of having usurped regal power from the council of regency, appointed by parliament; of having procured the death of the late King; of having deceived the earl of Kent into a confpiracy to reftore that prince; of having folicited and obtained exorbitant grants of the royal demefnes; of having diffipated the public treafure; of fecreting for his own use 20,000 marks of the money paid by the King of Scotland; and of other crimes and mildemeanours +. The parliament condemned him, from the fuppofed notoriety of the facts, without trial, or hearing his anfwer, Execution of Mortimer. or examining a witnefs; and he was hanged on a gibbet at the Elmes, in the 29th Novem. neighbourhood of London. It is remarkable, that this fentence was near twenty years after reverfed by parliament, in favour of Mortimer's fon; and the reafon affigned was the illegal form of the proceedings ‡. The principles of law and justice were established in England, not in such a degree as to prevent any iniquitous fentence against a person obnoxious to the ruling party; but sufficient, on * Avefbury, p. q. + Brady's App. Nº. 83. Anon. Hift. p. 397, 398. Knyghton, p. 2556. ‡ Cotton's Abridg. p. 85, 86.

Y

VOL. II.

bited

bury,

them.

12/18

ir fol

is de ners,

the

-uer-

f the

VIC.

ded

mil-ard, ole

In-im

m

100

V.

j.

he af.

eers

e-

1.

ec

el

Chap. XV. 1330.

the 162

Chap. XV. the return of his credit, or that of his friends, to ferve as a reafon or pretence for its reverfal.

1331.

JUSTICE was also executed by a fentence of the house of peers, on some of the inferior criminals, particularly on Simon de Bereford : But the barons, in that cafe, entered a proteft, that, tho' they had tried Bereford, who was none of their peers, they should not for the future be obliged to receive any fuch accusation. The Queen was confined to her own house at Risings near London : Her revenue was reduced to 4000 pounds a year * : And tho' the King, during the remainder of her life, paid her a decent vifit once or twice a year, fhe never was able to reinftate herfelf in any credit or authority.

EDWARD, having now taken the reins of government into his own hands, applied himfelf, with industry and judgment, to redrefs all those grievances, which had either proceeded from want of authority in the crown, or from the late abuses of it. He issued writs to the judges, enjoining them to administer justice, without paying any regard to arbitrary orders from the ministers: And as the robbers, thieves, murderers, and criminals of all kinds, had, during the courfe of public convultions, multiplied to an enormous degree, and were openly protected by the great barons, who made use of them against their enemies, the King, after exacting from the peers a folemn promise in parliament, that they would break off all connexion with fuch malefactors +, fet himfelf in earnest to remedy the evil. Many of these gangs had become fo numerous, as to require his own prefence to diffipate them; and he exerted both courage and industry in executing this falutary office. The minifters of juffice, from his example, employed the utmost diligence in discovering, purfuing, and punishing the criminals; and this diforder was by degrees corrected, or at left palliated; the utmost that could be expected with regard to a difease, inherent in the conftitution.

State of Scotland.

In proportion as the government acquired authority at home, it became formidable to the neighbouring nations; and the ambitious fpirit of Edward fought, and foon found, an opportunity of exerting itfelf. The wife and valiant Robert Bruce, who had recovered by arms the independancy of his country, and had fixed it by the last treaty of peace with England, foon after died, and left David his fon, a minor, under the guardianship of Randolf, earl of Murray, the companion of all his victories. It had been flipulated in this treaty, that both the Scottifh nobility, who, before the commencement of the wars, enjoyed lands in England, and the English who inherited estates in Scotland, should be restored to their several

+ Cotton's Abridg.

* Cotton's Abridg. p. 10.

E D W A R D III.

veral poffeffions * : But the' this article had been executed pretty regularly on Chap. XV. the part of Edward, Robert, who faw the effates claimed by Englishmen much more numerous and valuable than the other, either effeemed it dangerous to admit fo many fecret enemies into the kingdom, or found it difficult to wreft from his own followers the possessions bestowed on them as the reward of their fatigues and dangers : And he had protracted the performance of his part of the ftipulation. The English nobles, disappointed in their expectations, began to think of a remedy; and as their influence was great in the north, their enmity alone, even tho' unfupported by the King of England, became dangerous to the minor prince, who fucceeded to the Scottifh throne.

EDWARD BALIOL, the fon of that John, who was crowned King of Scotland, had been detained fome time a prisoner in England after his father was releafed; but having alfo obtained his liberty, he went over to France, and lived in Normandy, on his patrimonial effate in that country, without any thoughts of reviving the claims of his family upon the crown of Scotland. His pretentions, however plaufible, had been to ftrenuoufly abjured by the Scots, and rejectd by the English, that he was entirely regarded as a private perfon; and he had been thrown into prilon on account of fome private offence against the laws, of which he was accufed. The lord Beaumont, a great English baron, who in the right of his wife claimed the earldom of Buchan in Scotland +, found him in this fituation; and deeming him a proper inftrument for his purpole, made fuch interest with the King of France, who was not aware of the confequences, that he recovered him his liberty, and brought him over with him into England.

THE injured nobles, poffeffed of fuch a head, began now to think of vindicating their rights by force of arms; and they applied to Edward for his concurrence and affiftance. But there were feveral reafons, which deterred the King from openly avowing their enterprize. In his treaty with Scotland, he had entered into a bond of 20,000 pounds, payable to the Pope, if within four years he violated the peace; and as the term was not yet elapsed, he dreaded the exacting of that penalty, by the fovereign pontiff, who poffeffed fo many means of forcing him to make payment. He was also afraid, that violence and injuffice would every where be imputed to him, if he attacked with fuch fuperior force a minor King, and a brother-in-law, whofe independant title had fo lately been acknowledged by a folemn treaty. And as the regent of Scotland, on every demand which had been made, of reftitution to the English barons, had always confessed

> * Rymer, vol. 4. p. 384. + Rymer, vol. 4. p. 251.

1331.

163

the 1332.

1332.

164

Chap. XV. the juffice of their claim, and had only given an evalive answer, grounded on plaufible pretences, Edward refolved not to proceed to open violence, but to employ like artifices against him. He fecretly encouraged Baliol in his enterprize; connived at his affembling forces in the north; and gave countenance to the nobles, who were disposed to join in the attempt. A force of near 2500 men was inlifted under Baliol, by Umfreville earl of Angus, the lords Beaumont, Ferrars, Fitz-warin, Wake, Stafford, Talbot, and Moubray. And as thefe adventurers apprehended that the frontiers would be ftrongly armed and guarded, they refolved to make their attack by fea; and having embarked at Ravenfpur, they reached in a few days the coaft of Fife.

SCOTLAND was at prefent in a very different fituation from that in which it had appeared under the victorious Robert. Befides the loss of that great monarch, whofe genius and authority preferved entire the whole political fabric, and maintained an union among the unruly barons, lord Douglas, impatient of reft, had gone over to Spain in a croifade against the Moors, and had there perished in battle*: The earl of Murray, who had been long declining in age and infirmities, had lately died, and had been fucceeded in the regency by Donald earl of Marre, a man of much inferior talents : The military fpirit of the Scots, tho' ftill unbroken, was left without a proper guidance and direction : And a minor King feemed ill qualified to defend an inheritance, which it had required all the confummate valour and abilities of his father to acquire and maintain. But as the Scots were apprized of the intended invalion, great numbers, on the appearance of the English fleet, immediately ran to the shore, in order to prevent the landing of the enemy. Baliol had valour and activity, and he repulfed the Scots with a confiderable lofs +. He marched weftward into the heart of the country ; flattering himfelf that the antient partizans of his family would declare for him. But the fierce animofity, which had been kindled between the two nations, infpiring the Scots with a ftrong prejudice against a prince who was supported by the English, he was regarded as a common enemy; and the regent found no difficulty in affembling a great army to oppose him. It is pretended, that Marre had no lefs than 40,000 men under his flandard ; but the fame hurry and impatience, that made him collect a force, which from its greatnefs was fo difproportioned to the occafion, rendered all his motions unfkilful and imprudent. The river Erne ran between the two armies; and the Scots, confiding in that fecurity, as well as in their great superiority of numbers, kept no order in their en-11th August. campment. Baliol passed the river in the night time ; attacked the unguarded > Froisfart, liv. 1. chap. 21. + Heming. p. 272. Walfing. p. 131. Knyghton, p. 2560.

> > 8

and

E D W A R D III.

and undifciplined Scots; threw them into confusion, which was encreased by Chap XV. the darkness and by their very numbers to which they trufted; and he beat them off the field with great flaughter *. But in the morning, the Scots were at some distance, they were ashamed of having yielded the victory to so weak a foe, and they hurried back to recover the honour of the day. Their eager paffions carried them precipitately to battle, without regard to fome broken ground, which lay between them and the enemy, and which difordered and confounded their ranks. Baliol feized the favourable opportunity, advanced his troops upon them, prevented them from rallying, and chaced them anew off the field with redoubled flaughter. There fell above 12,000 Scots in this action ; and among these the flower of their nobility; the regent himself, the earl of Carric, a natural fon of their late King, the earls of Athole and Monteith, the lord Hay of Errol, conftable, and the lords Keith and Lindfey. The loss of the English fcarce exceeded thirty men; a ftrong proof, among many others, of the miferable ftate of military discipline in those ages +.

BALIOL foon after made himfelf master of Perth; but still was not able to bring over any of the Scots to his party. Patric Dunbar, earl of Marche, and Sir Archibald Douglas, brother to the lord of that name, appeared at the head of the Scottish armies, which amounted still to near 40,000 men; and they proposed to reduce Baliol and the English by famine. They invested Perth by land; they collected fome veffels with which they blockaded it by water: But Baliol's fhips attacking the Scottifh fleet, gained a compleat victory over them; and opened the communication to Perth by fea 1. It then behoved the Scottifh armies to difperfe themfelves for want of pay and fubliftance : The nation was in effect fubdued by a handful of men : Each nobleman, who found himfelf most exposed to danger, fucceffively fubmitted to Baliol : That prince was crown- 27th Septre ed King at Scone: David, his competitor, was fent over to France with his betrothed wife, Jane, fifter to Edward : And the heads of his party fued to Baliol for a truce, which he granted them, in order to affemble a parliament in tranquillity, and have his title recognized by the whole Scottish nation.

BUT Baliol's imprudence or his neceffities making him difmifs the greateft part of his English followers, he was, notwithstanding the truce, attacked of a fudden near Annan by Sir Archibald Douglas, and other chieftains of that party; he was routed; his brother John Baliol was flain; he himfelf was chaced into England in a mi-

* Knyghton, p. 2561. + Heming p. 273. Walfingham, p. 131. Knyghton, p. 2561. 1 Heming. p. 273. Knyghton, p. 2561. ferable

1333-

1332.

Chap. XV. 1333. 166

ferable condition ; and thus loft his kingdom by a revolution as quick as that by which he had acquired it.

WHILE Baliol enjoyed his fhort-liv'd and precarious royalty, he had been fenfible, that without the protection of England, it would be impoffible for him to maintain poffeffion of the throne; and he had fecretly fent a meffage to Edward, offering to acknowlege his fuperiority, to renew the homage for his crown, and to espouse the princess Jane, if the Pope's confent could be obtained, for dissolving her former marriage, which was not yet consummated. Edward, ambitious of recovering that important facrifice, made by Mortimer during his minority, threw off all fcruples, and willingly accepted the offer; but as the dethronement of Baliol had rendered this conceffion of no effect, the King prepared to re-inftate him in posseffion of the crown; an enterprize, which appeared from late experience fo eafy and fo little hazardous. As he poffeffed many popular arts, he confulted his parliament on this occasion; but that affembly, finding the refolution already taken, declined giving any opinion, and only fupplied him, in order to support the enterprize, with an aid of a fifteenth, from the perfonal eftates of the nobility and gentry, and a tenth of the moveables of boroughs. And they added a petition, that the King would thenceforth live of his own, without grieving his fubjects by illegal taxes, or by the outrageous feizure of their goods in the shape of purveyance*.

As the Scots expected, that the chief brunt of the war would fall upon Berwic, Douglas, the regent, threw a ftrong garrifon into that place under the command of Sir William Keith, and he himfelf affembled a great army on the frontiers, ready to penetrate into England, fo foon as Edward should have invested that fortrefs. The English army was lefs numerous; but better fupplied with arms and provisions, and retained in stricter discipline; and the King, notwithftanding the valiant defence of Keith, had in two months time reduced the garrifon to extremity, and had obliged them to capitulate. They engaged to furrender the place, if they were not relieved within a few days by their countrymen +. This intelligence being conveyed to the Scottifh army, which was preparing to invade Northumberland, changed their whole plan of operations, and engaged them to advance towards Berwic, and attempt the relief of that important place. Douglas, who had ever proposed to decline a pitched battle, in which he was fenfible of the enemy's fuperiority, and who intended to have drawn out the war by fmall fkirmishes, and by mutually ravaging each others country, was forced, by the impatience of his troops, to put the whole fate of the kingdom upon the " Cotton's Abridgm.

+ Rymer, vol. 4. p. 564, 565, 566.

event

War with Scotland.

event of one day. He attacked the English at Halidown-hill, a little north of Chap. XV. Berwic; and tho' the Scottish Gens d'armes dismounted from their horses, in order to render the action more fleddy and desperate, they were received with such valour by Edward, and were so galled by the English archers, that they were foon thrown into diforder, and on the fall of Douglas, their general, were put to absolute rout. The whole army fled in confusion, and the English, but much more the Irish, gave little quarter in the pursuit: All the nobles of chief diftinction were either flain or taken prisoners: Near thirty thousand of the Scots fell in the action: While the loss of the English amounted only to one knight, one efquire, and thirteen private foldiers: An inequality almost incredible *.

AFTER this fatal blow, the Scottifh nobles had no other refource but inftant fubmiffion; and Edward, leaving a confiderable body with Baliol to compleat the conqueft of the kingdom, returned with the remainder of his army into England. Baliol was acknowledged King by a parliament affembled at Edinburgh \ddagger ; the fuperiority of England was again recognized; many of the Scottifh nobility fwore fealty to him; and to compleat the misfortunes of that nation, Baliol ceded to Edward Berwic, Dunbar, Roxborough, Edinburgh, and all the fouth eaft counties of Scotland, which were declared to be for ever annexed to the Englifh monarchy \ddagger .

IF Baliol, on his first appearance, was dreaded by the Scots, as an inftrument employed by England for the fubjection of the kingdom, this deed confirmed all their fufpicions, and rendered him the object of univerfal hatred. Whatever fubmiffions they might be obliged to make, they confidered him, not as their prince, but as the delegate and confederate of their determined enemy; and neither the manners of the age, nor the ftate of Edward's revenue permitting him to maintain a conftant ftanding army in Scotland, the English forces were no fooner withdrawn, than the Scots revolted against Baliol, and returned to their former allegiance under Bruce. Sir Andrew Murray, appointed regent by the party of this latter prince, employed with fuccefs his valour and activity in many fmall but decifive actions against Baliol; and in a fhort time had almost wholly expelled him the kingdom. Edward was obliged again to affemble an army and to march into Scotland: The Scots, taught by experience, withdrew into their hills and fastnesses: He destroyed the houses, and ravaged the estates of those whom he called rebels: But this confirmed them still farther in their obstinate anti-

* Heming. p. 275, 276, 277. Knyghton', p. 2559. Otterborne, p. 115. † Rymer, vol. 4. p. 590. ‡ Rymer, vol. 4. p. 614. 1334

1335.

pathy

167

Chap. XV. 1336. 168

pathy to England and to Baliol; and being now rendered defperate, they were ready to take advantage, on the first opportunity, of the retreat of their enemy, and they foon re-conquered their country from the English. Edward made anew his appearance in Scotland with like fucces: He found every thing hostile in the kingdom, except the fpot on which he was encamped: And tho' he marched uncontrouled over all the low countries, the nation itself was farther than ever from being broken and fubdued. Besides being supported by their pride and anger, passions difficult to tame, they were encouraged, amidst all their calamities, by daily promises of relief from France; and as a war was now likely to break out between that kingdom and England, they had reason to expect from this incident a great diversion of that force, which had so long oppressed and overwhelmed them.

King's claim to the crown of France.

WE now come to a transaction, on which depended the most memorable events, not only of this long and active reign, but of the whole English and French history, during more than a century; and it will therefore be neceffary to give a particular account of the fprings and caufes of it. It had long been a prevailing opinion, that the crown of France could never defcend to females; and as nations, in accounting for principles, which they regard as fundamental and as peculiar to themfelves, are fond of grounding them rather on primary laws, than on blind cuftom, it had been ufual to derive this maxim from a claufe in the Salian Code, the law of an antient tribe among the Franks; tho' that claufe, when frictly examined, carries only the appearance of favouring this principle, and does not really, by the confession of the best critics, bear the fense commonly imposed upon it. But tho' positive law feems wanting among the French for the exclusion of females, the practice had prevailed; and the rule was established beyond controverfy on fome antient as well as fome modern precedents. During the first race of the monarchy, the Franks were fo rude and barbarous a people, that they were incapable of fubmitting to a female reign; and in that period of hiftory, there were frequent inftances of kings advanced to royalty in prejudice of females, who were related to the crown by nearer degrees of confanguinity. These precedents, joined to like causes, had also established the male succession in the fecond race; and tho' the inftances were neither fo frequent nor fo certain during that period, the principle of excluding the female line feems still to have prevailed, and to have directed the conduct of the nation. During the third race, the crown had defcended from father to fon for eleven generations, from Hugh Capet to Lewis Hutin; and thus, in fact, during the course of nine hundred years, the French monarchy had always been governed by males, and no

no female and none descended of females had ever mounted the throne. Philip Chap. XV. the Fair, father of Lewis Hutin, left three fons, this Lewis, Philip the Long, and Charles the Fair, and one daughter, Ifabella, queen of England. Lewis Hutin, the eldeft, left at his death one daughter, by Margaret fifter to Eudes, duke of Burgundy; and as his queen was then pregnant, Philip, his younger brother, was appointed regent, till it fhould appear whether fhe was delivered of a fon or daughter. Her iffue proved male, but lived only a few days : Philip was proclaimed King : And as the duke of Burgundy made fome opposition, and afferted the right of his niece, the flates of the kingdom, by a folemn and deliberate decree, gave her the exclusion, and declared all females for ever incapable of fucceeding to the crown of France. Philip died after a fhort reign, leaving three daughters; and his brother, Charles, without difpute or controverfy, then fucceeded to the crown. The reign of Charles was also fhort : He left one daughter; but as his queen was pregnant, the next male heir was appointed regent, with a declared right of fucceffion, if the iffue fhould prove female. This prince was Philip de Valois, coufin german to the deceafed King; being the fon of Charles de Valois, brother of Philip the Fair. The queen of France was delivered of a daughter : The regency ended; and Philip de Valois was unanimoufly placed on the throne of France.

THE King of England, who was at that time a youth of fifteen years of age, embraced a notion, that he was intitled, in right of his mother, to the fucceffion of the kingdom, and that the claim of the nephew was preferable to that of the coufin german. There could not well be conceived a notion weaker or worfe grounded. The principle of excluding females was of old an eftablished opinion in France, and had acquired equal authority with the most express and politive law: It was supported by antient precedents: It was confirmed by recent inftances, folemnly and deliberately decided : And what placed it fill farther beyond controverfy; if Edward was difpofed to queftion its validity, he thereby cut off his own pretentions; fince the three laft Kings had all left daughters, who were fill alive, and who flood before him in the order of fucceffion. He was therefore reduced to affert, that, tho' his mother, Isabella, was, on account of her lex, incapable of fucceffion, he himfelf, who inherited thro' her, was liable to no fuch objection, and might claim by the right of propinquity. But, befides that this pretension was more favourable to Charles, King of Navarre, descended from the daughter of Lewis Hutin, it was fo contrary to the effablished principles of fuccesfion in every country of Europe*, was fo repugnant to the practice both in private and public inheritances, that no body in France thought of Edward's right: Phi-

* Froisfart, lib. 1. chap. 4.

Z

1337.

169

VOL. II.

lip's

1337.

170

Chap. XV. lip's title was univerfally recognized and acknowledged *: And he never imagined. that he had a competitor ; much lefs, fo formidable a one as the King of England.

> BUT tho' the youthful and ambitious mind of Edward had rafhly entertained. this notion, he did not think proper to infift on his pretentions, which must have immediately involved him, on very unequal terms, in a dangerous and implacable war with fo powerful a monarch. Philip was a prince of mature years, of great experience, and at that time of an established character both for prudenceand valour; and by these circumstances, as well as by the union of his people, and their acquiefcence in his undoubted right, he poffeffed every advantage over a raw youth, newly raifed, by injustice and violence, to the government of the most intractable and most turbulent fubjects in Europe. But there immediately occurred an incident, which required, that Edward should either openly declare his pretensions, or for ever renounce and abjure them. He was fummoned to do homage for Guienne : Philip was preparing to compel him by force of arms : That country was in a very bad flate of defence : And the forfeiture of fo rick an inheritance was, by the feudal law, the immediate confequence of his refufing: or declining to perform the duty of a vaffal. Edward therefore thought it prudent to fubmit to prefent neceffity : He went over to Amiens : Did homage to Philip: And as there had arifen fome controverfy concerning the terms of this fubmiffion, he afterwards fent over a formal deed, in which he acknowledged that he owed liege homage to the crown of France +; which was in effect ratifying, and that in the strongest terms, Philip's title to the crown of that kingdom. His own claim indeed was fo unreafonable, and fo thoroughly difavowed by the whole French nation, that to infift on it was no better than to pretend to the entire conquest of the kingdom; and it is probable that he would never have farther thought of it, had it not been for fome incidents, which excited an animofity between the two monarchs.

> ROBERT D'ARTOIS was descended of the royal blood of France, was a man of great character and authority, had espoused Philip's fifter, and by his birth, talents, and credit was entitled to make the highest figure, and to fill the most important offices, in the monarchy. This prince had loft the county of Artois, which he claimed as his birthright, by a fentence, commonly deemed iniquitous, of Philip the Fair; and he was feduced to attempt the recovering pofferfion by an action, fo unworthy of his rank and character as a forgery 1. The detection of this crime covered him with fhame and confusion : His brother in law not > > only

> * Froiffart, lib. 1. chap. 22. + Rymer, vol. 4. p. 477, 481. Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 25. Anon. Hift. p. 394. Walfingham, p. 130. Murimuth, p. 73. 1 Froisfart, liv. 1. chap. 29.

E DWARD III.

only abandoned him, but profecuted him with violence : Robert, incapable of Chap. XV. bearing difgrace, left the kingdom, and hid himfelf in the Low Countries : Being chaced from that retreat, by the authority and menaces of Philip, he came over to England, was favourably received by Edward*, and was foon admitted into the councils and fhared the confidence of that monarch. Abandoning himfelf to all the movements of rage and despair, he endeavoured to revive the prepoffeffions entertained by Edward in favour of his title to the crown of France, and even flattered him, that it was not impossible for a prince of his valour and abilities, to render his claim effectual. The King was the more difposed to hearken. to fuggestions of this nature, because he had, in feveral particulars, complaints against Philip's conduct with regard to Guienne, and because that prince had both given protection to the exiled David Bruce, and supported, or at least encouraged the Scots in their ftruggles for independancy. Thus refentment gradually filled the breafts of the two monarchs, and made them incapable of hearkening to any terms of accommodation, proposed by the Pope, who never ceased interposing his good offices between them. Philip thought, that he would be wanting to the first principles of policy, if he abandoned Scotland: Edward pretended, that he must relinquish all pretensions to generofity, if he withdrew his protection from Robert d'Artois. The former, informed of fome preparations for hostilities, which had been made by his rival, iffued a fentence of felony and forfeiture against Robert d'Artois, and declared, that every valial of the crown, whether within or without the kingdom, who gave countenance to that traitor was involved in the fame fentence; a menace eafy to be underftood : The latter, refolute not to yield, endeavoured to form alliances in the Low Countries and on the frontiers of Germany, the only places from which he either could make an effectual attack upon France, or produce fuch a diversion as might fave the province of Guienne, which lay fo much exposed to the power of Philip.

THE King began with opening his intentions to the count of Hainault, his fa- Preparatinos ther in law; and having engaged him in his interests, he employed the good offi- for war with ces and councils of that prince in drawing into his alliance the other fovereigns of France. that neighbourhood. The duke of Brabant was induced, by his mediation, and by large remittances of money from England, to promife his concurrence + : The archbishop of Cologn, the duke of Guelders, the marquis of Juliers, the count of Namur, the lords of Fauquemont and Baquen, were engaged by like motives to embrace the English alliance 1. These fovereigns could supply, either from their own states or from the bordering countries, great numbers of war-

Z 2

* Rymer, vol. 4. p. 747. Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 27.

1 Froiffart, liv. 4. chap. 29, 33, 36.

1337.

ETE

like

+ Rymer, vol. 4. p. 777.

1337.

172

Chap XV. like troops; and nought was wanting to make the force on that quarter very formidable but the acceffion of Flanders; which Edward procured by means fomewhat extraordinary and unufual.

> As the Flemings were the first people in the northern parts of Europe, who cultivated arts and manufactures, the lower ranks of men in that province had risen to a degree of riches unknown elsewhere to those of their station in that barbarous age, had acquired privileges and independance, and began to emerge from that ftate of vaffalage, or rather of flavery, into which the common people had been univerfally thrown by the feudal inflitutions. It was probably difficult for them to bring their fovereign and their nobility to conform themselves to the principles of law and civil government, fo much neglected in every other country : It was impoffible for them to confine themfelves within the proper bounds in their oppofition and refentment : They had rifen in tumults : Had infulted the nobles : Had chaced their earl into France : And delivering themselves over to the guidance of a feditious leader, had practiced all those infolences and diforders, which the thoughtlefs and enraged populace are fo much inclined to commit, wherever they are fo unfortunate as to be their own mafters *.

> THEIR present leader was James d'Arteville, a brewer in Ghent, who governed them with a more absolute fway than ever had been affumed by any of their lawful fovereigns : He placed and difplaced the magistrates at his pleasure : He was accompanied with a guard, who on the leaft fignal from him, inftantly affaffinated any man who happened to fall under his difpleafure : All the cities of Flanders were full of his fpies; and it was immediate death to give him the fmalleft umbrage : The few nobles, who remained in the country, lived in continual terror of his violence : He feized the eftates of all those whom he had either banished or murdered; and bestowing a part on their wives and children, converted the remainder to his own use +. Such were the first effects, which Europe faw, of popular violence; after having groaned, during fo many centuries, under monarchical and ariftocratical tyranny.

> JAMES D'ARTEVILLE was the man, to whom Edward applied himfelf for bringing over the Flemings to his intereft; and that prince, the most haughty and most aspiring of his age, never courted any ally with so much affiduity and so many fubmiffions, as he employed towards this feditious and criminal mechanic. D'Arteville, proud of these advances from the King of England, and sensible, that the Flemings were naturally inclined to maintain connexions with the English, who furnished them the materials of their woollen manufactures, the chief

* Froisfart, liv. 1. chap. 30. Meyerus. + Froiffart, liv. 1, chap. 30.

fource

fource of their opulence, readily embraced the interefts of Edward, and invited him over into the Low Countries. Edward, before he entered on this great enterprize, affected to confult his parliament, afked their advice, and obtained their confent *. And the more to ftrengthen his hands, he obtained from them a grant of 20,000 facks of wool; which might amount to above a hundred thousand pounds: This wool was a good inftrument to employ with the Flemings; and the price of it with his German allies. He compleated the other neceffary fums by loans, by pawning the crown jewels, by conficating or rather robbing at once all the Lombards, who now exercised the invidious trade, formerly monopolized by the Jews, of lending on intereft †; and being attended with a body of English forces, and with feveral of his nobility, he failed over into Flanders.

THE German princes, in order to justify their unprovoked hostilities against France, had required the fanction of fome legal authority; and Edward, that he might give them fatisfaction on this head, had applied to Lewis of Bavaria, then emperor, and had been created by him vicar of the empire ; an empty title, but which feemed to give him a right of commanding the fervice of the princes of Germany t. The Flemings, who were vaffals of France, pretending like fcruples with regard to the invafion of their liege lord; Edward, by the advice of d'Arteville, affumed, in his commiffions, the title of King of France, and, by virtue of this right, challenged their affiftance for dethroning Philip de Valois, the ufurper of his kingdom §. This flep, which, he feared, would deftroy all future amity between the kingdoms, and beget endless and implacable jealoufies in France, was not taken by him without much reluctance and hefitation : And as it was not in itfelf very justifiable, it was in the iffue attended with many miferies to both nations. From this period we may date the commencement of that great animolity, which the English have ever since borne to the French, which has fo yifible an influence on all future transactions, and which has been, and continues to be the fpring of many rafh and precipitate refolutions among them. In all the preceding reigns fince the conquest, the hostilities between the two crowns had been only cafual and temporary; and never being attended with any bloody or dangerous events, the traces of them were eafily obliterated by the first treaty of pacification. The English nobility and gentry valued themselves on their French or Norman extraction : They affected to employ the language of that country in all public transactions, and even in familiar converfation : And as both the English court and camp were always full of nobility, who came from some province or other of France, the two people were during * Cotton's Abridg. + Dugd. Baron, vol. 2. p. 146. § Heming. p. 303. Walfingham, p. 143. ‡ Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 35.

feveral

Chap. XV. 1337.

13:3.

173

2:

1338.

1339.

174

Chap. XV. feveral centuries more intermingled together than any two diffinct nations, whom we meet with in hiftory. But the fatal pretentions of Edward III. diffolved all thefe connexions, and left the feeds of great animolity in both countries, especially among the English. For it is remarkable, that this latter nation, tho' they were commonly the aggreffors, and by their fuccefs and fituation were enabled to commit the most cruel injuries on the other, have always retained a stronger tincture of national antipathy; nor is their hatred retaliated on them to an equal degree by the French. That country lies in the middle of Europe, has been fucceffively engaged in hoftilities with all its neighbours, the popular prejudices have been diverted into many channels, and, among a people of fofter manners, they never role to a great height against any particular nation.

> PHILIP made great preparations against the attack of the English, and fuch as feemed more than fufficient to fecure him from the danger. Befides the concurrence of all the nobility in his own populous and warlike kingdom, his foreign alliances were both more cordial and powerful than those which were formed by his antagonist. The Pope, who, at this time, lived in Avignon, was dependant on France, and being difgusted at the connexions between Edward and Lewis of Bavaria, whom he had excommunicated, he embraced with zeal and fincerity the caufe of the French monarch. The King of Navarre, the duke of Britanny, the count de Bar were in the fame interefts; and on the fide of Germany, the King of Bohemia, the palatine, the dukes of Lorraine and Auftria, the bishop of Liege, the counts de Deuxpont, Vaudemont, and Geneva. The allies of Edward were in themfelves weaker; and having no other object, but his money, which began to be exhausted, they were very flow in their motions and very irrefolute in their meafures. The duke of Brabant, the most powerful among them, feemed even inclined to withdraw himfelf wholly from the alliance; and the King was neceffitated, both to give the Brabanters new privileges in trade, and to contract his fon Edward with the daughter of that prince, ere he could bring him to fulfill his engagements. The fummer was wafted in conferences and negotiations before Edward could lead his armies into the field; and he was obliged, in order to allure his German allies into his measures, to pretend that the first attack should be made upon Cambray, a city of the empire which had been garrifoned by Philip*. But finding by a nearer infpection the difficulty of the enterprize upon this place, he conducted them towards the frontiers of France; and he there found, by a fenfible proof, the vanity of his expectations : The count de Namur, and even the count de Hainault, his brother-in-law (for the old count was dead) refused to commence hostilities against their liege lord, and retired with all their Chap. XV. troops *. So little account did they make of Edward's pretensions to the crown ^{1339.} of France!

> > * Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 39. Heming. p. :05.

fufed

THE King however entered the enemy's country, and encamped on the fields War with of Vironfoffe near Capelle, with an army of near 50,000 men, composed almost France. entirely of foreigners: Philip came within fight of him with an army of near double his force, composed chiefly of native fubjects; and it was daily expected that a battle would have enfued. But the English monarch was averse to engage against fo great an inequality: The French thought it fufficient if he eluded the attacks of his enemy, without running any unnecessfary hazard. The two armies faced one another for fome days: Mutual defiances were fent: And Edward, at laft, retired backwards into Flanders, and disperfed his army +.

SUCH was the fruitlefs and almost ridiculous conclusion of all Edward's mighty preparations; and as his measures were the most prudent, that could be embraced in his fituation, he might learn from experience in what a hopelefs enterprize he was engaged. His expences, tho' they had led to no end, had been confuming and deftructive : He had contracted near 300,000 pounds of debt \ddagger ; he had anticipated all his revenue; he had pawned every thing of value, which belonged either to himfelf or his queen; he was obliged in fome measure even to pawn himfelf to his creditors, by defiring their permiffion to go over to England, in order to procure fupply, and by promifing on his word of honour to return in perfon, if he did not remit them their money.

But he was a prince of too much fpirit to be difcouraged by the firft difficulties of an undertaking; and he was anxious to retrieve his honour by more fuccefsful and more gallant enterprizes. For this purpofe, he had, during the courfe of the campaign, fent orders to fummon a parliament by his fon Edward, whom he had left with the title of guardian, and to demand of them fome fupply in his urgent neceffities. The barons feemed inclined to grant his requeft; but the knights, who often, at this time, acted as a feparate body from the burgeffes, made fome foruple of taxing their conflituents, without afking their confent; and they defired the guardian to fummon a new parliament, who might be properly empowered for that purpofe. The fituation of the King and parliament was, for the time, nearly fimilar to that which they conftantly fell into about the beginning of the laft century; and fimilar confequences began vifibly to appear. The King, fenfible of the frequent demands which he would be obliged to make on his people, had been anxious to enfure to his friends a feat in the houfe of commons,.

and 1339.

176

Chap. XV. and at his infligation, the fheriffs and other placemen had made intereft to be elected into that affembly; an abuse which the knights defired the King to correct by the tenor of his writ of fummons, and which was accordingly remedied. On the other hand, the knights profefiedly annexed conditions to their intended grant, and required a confiderable retrenchment of the royal prerogatives, particularly with regard to purveyance, and the levying the antient feudal aids for knighting the King's eldeft fon, and marrying his eldeft daughter. The new parliament, called by the Guardian, retained the fame free fpirit; and tho' they offered a large fupply of 30,000 facks of wool, no business was concluded; because the conditions, which they annexed appeared too high to be compensated by a temporary concession. But when Edward himfelf came over to England, he fummoned another parliament, and he had the intereft to procure a fupply on more moderate terms. A confirmation of the two charters and of the privileges of boroughs, a pardon for old debts and trespaffes, and a remedy for some abuses in the execution of common law, were the chief conditions infifted on; and the King in return for his conceffions on these heads, obtained from the barons and knights an unufual grant for two years of the ninth fheaf, lamb, and fleece on their eftates, and from the burgefles, a ninth of their moveables at their true value. The whole parliament alfo granted a duty of forty shillings on each fack of wool exported, on each three hundred wool-fells, and on each last of leather for the fame term of years; but dreading the arbitrary spirit of the crown, they expressly declared, that this grant was to continue no longer, and was not to be drawn into precedent. Being foon after fenfible, that this fupply, tho' confiderable and very unufual in that age, would come in flowly, and would not anfwer the King's urgent neceffities, both from his past debts, and his preparations for war; they agreed, that 20,000 facks of wool should immediately be granted him, and their value be deducted from the ninths, which were afterwards to be levied.

> But there appeared, at this time, another jealoufy in the parliament, which was very reafonable, and was founded on a fentiment that ought to have engaged them rather to check than fupport the King in all those ambitious projects, fo little likely to prove fuccefsful, and fo dangerous to the nation, if they did. Edward, who, before the commencement of the former campaign, had, in feveral commissions, affumed the title of King of France, now more openly, in all public deeds, gave himfelf that appellation, and always quartered the arms of France with those of England in all his feals and enfigns. The parliament thought proper to obviate the confequences of this measure, and to declare, that they owed him no obedience as King of France, and that the two kingdoms must forever remain remain diftinct and independant *. They undoubtedly forefaw, that France, if Chap. XV. fubdued, would in the end prove the feat of government; and they deemed this previous protestation neceffary, in order to prevent their becoming a province under that monarchy. A very frail fecurity, if the event had really taken place !

EDWARD III.

As Philip was apprized, from the preparations, which were making both in England and the low countries, that he must expect another invasion from Edward, he fitted out a great fleet of 400 veffels, manned with 40,000 men; and Naval victory he stationed them off Sluife, with a view of intercepting the King in his passage. The English navy was much inferior in number, confisting only of 240 ships; but whether it was by the fuperior abilities of Edward, or the greater dexterity of his feamen, they gained the wind of the enemy, and had the fun in their backs; and with these advantages began the action. The battle was fierce and bloody : The English archers, whose force and address, were now much celebrated, galled the French on their approach : And when the ships grappled together, and the contest became more steady and furious, the example of the King, and of fo many gallant nobles, who accompanied him, animated to fuch a degree the feamen and foldiery, that they maintained every where a fuperiority over the enemy. The French alfo had been guilty of fome imprudence in ftationing themfelves fo near the coaft of Flanders, and choosing that place for the fcene of action. The Flemings, descrying the battle, hurried out of their ports, and brought a re-inforcement to the English; which, coming unexpectedly, had a greater effect than in proportion to its power and numbers. Two hundred and thirty French fhips were taken : Thirty thousand Frenchmen were killed, with two of their admirals : The loss of the English was inconfiderable, compared to the greatness and importance of the victory +. None of Philip's courtiers, it is faid, dared to inform him of the event; till his fool or jefter gave him a hint, by which he discovered the loss that he had fustained ‡.

THE luftre of this great fuccefs added to the King's authority among his allies, who affembled their forces with expedition, and joined the English army. Edward marched to the frontiers of France at the head of 100,000 men, confifting chiefly of foreigners, a more numerous army than, either before or fince, has ever been commanded by any King of England §. At the fame time, the Flemings, to the amount of 50,000 men, marched out under the command of Robert d'Artois, and laid fiege to St. Omer; but this tumultuous force, composed en-

* 14 Edward III. + Froislart, liv. 1. chap. 51. Avelbury, p. 56. Heming. p. 321. t Walfing. p. 148. § Rýmer, vol. 5. p. 197. VOL. II. Aa tirely 1340.

13th June.

177

1340.

178

Chap. XV. tirely of tradefmen, unexperienced in war, was routed by a fally of the garrifon, and notwithstanding the abilities of their leader, was thrown into fuch a panic, that they were inftantly difperfed, and never after appeared in the field. The enterprizes of Edward, tho' not attended with fo inglorious an iffue, proved equally vain and fruitlefs. The King of France had affembled an army more numerous than the English; was accompanied with all the chief nobility of his kingdom; was attended by many foreign princes, and even by three monarchs, the Kings of Bohemia, Scotland and Navarre * : Yet he ftill adhered to the prudent refolution of putting nothing to hazard, and after throwing ftrong garrifons into all the frontier towns, he retired backwards, perfuaded, that the enemy, having wafted their force in fome tedious and unfuccefsful enterprize, would afford him an eafy victory.

> TOURNAY was at that time one of the most confiderable cities of Flanders, containing above 60,000 inhabitants of all ages, who were affectionate to the French government; and as the fecret of Edward's defigns had not been flrictly kept, Philip learned, that the English, in order to gratify their Flemish allies, had intended to open the campaign with the fiege of this place: He took care therefore to fupply it with a garrifon of 14,000 men, commanded by the braveft nobility of France; and he reafonably expected, that these forces, joined to the inhabitants, would be able to defend the city against all the efforts of the enemy. Accordingly, Edward, when he commenced the fiege, about the end of July, found every where an obstinate resistance : The valour of the one fide was encountered with equal valour by the other : Every affault was repulfed and proved unfuccessful : And the King was at last obliged to turn the fiege into a blockade, in hopes, that the great numbers of the garrifon and inhabitants, which had enabled them to defend themselves against his attacks, would but expose them to be the more eafily reduced by famine +. The count d'Eu, the governor, as foon as he perceived that the English had formed this plan of operations, endeavoured to spare his provisions, by expelling all the useles mouths; and the duke of Brabant, who wished no success to Edward's enterprize, gave every one a free paffage thro' his quarters,

> AFTER the fiege had continued ten weeks, the city was reduced to diftrefs; and Philip, recalling all his fcattered garrifons, advanced at the head of a mighty army, within three leagues of the English camp, with an intention of still avoiding any decifive action, but of feeking fome opportunity to throw relief into the place. Here, Edward, irritated with the finall progrefs which he had hitherto made,

and ^{*} Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 57.

⁺ Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 54. 3

and with the difagreeable prospect that lay before him, fent Philip a defiance by a herald; and challenged him to decide their claims for the crown of France, either by fingle combat, or by an action of a hundred against a hundred, or by a general engagement. But Philip replied, that Edward having done homage to him for his dutchy of Guienne, and having folemnly acknowledged his fuperiority, it by no means became him to fend a defiance to his liege lord and fovereign : That he was confident, notwithstanding all his preparations, and his conjunction with the rebellious Flemings, to be able foon to chace him from the frontiers of France : That as Edward's hoftilities had prevented him from executing his purposed croifade against the infidels, he trufted in the affiftance of the Almighty, who would reward his pious intentions, and punith the aggreffor, whofe ill grounded claims had rendered them ineffectual : That Edward proposed a duel on very unequal terms, and offered to hazard only his own perfon, against both the kingdom of France, and the perfon of the King : But that if he would encrease the flake, and put also the kingdom of England on the iffue of the duel, he would, notwithstanding that the terms would still be unequal, very willingly accept of his challenge *. It was eafy to fee that thefe mutual bravadoes were intended only to dazle the populace, and that the two kings were too wife to think of executing their pretended purpose.

WHILE the French and English armies lay in this situation, and a general action was every day expected, Jane counters dowager of Hainault interposed with her good offices, and endeavoured to conciliate peace between the contending monarchs, and to prevent any farther effusion of blood. This princefs was mother in law to Edward, and fifter to Philip; and tho' she had taken the vows in a convent, and had abandoned the world, fhe left her retreat on this occasion, and employed all her pious efforts to allay those animofities, which had taken place between perfons fo nearly related to her, and to each other. As Philip had no material claims upon his antagonist, she found him to hearken very willingly to the propofals; and even the haughty and ambitious mind of Edward, convinced of his fruitless attempt, was not averse to her negociation. He was fensible from experience, that he had engaged in an enterprize which far exceeded his force; and that the power of England was never likely to prevail over that of a fuperior kingdom, firmly united under an able and prudent monarch. He difcovered, that all the allies, whom he could gain by negotiation, were at bottom averfe to his enterprize; and they might fecond it to a certain length, would immediately detach. themfelves, and oppose its final accomplishment, if ever they could be brought to think,

* Du Tillet, Recueil de Traitez, &c. Heming. p. 325, 326. Walfing. p. 149.

Chap. XV. 1340.

179

Chap. XV. 1340.

3d Septr.

think, that there was ferioufly any danger of it. He even faw, that their chief purpofe was to obtain money from him; and as his fupplies from England came in very flowly, and had much difappointed his expectations, he was convinced of their growing indifference in his caufe, and of their zeal to embrace all plaufible terms of accommodation. Convinced at laft, that an undertaking muft be imprudent, which could only be fupported by means fo unequal to the end, he concluded a truce, which left both parties in poffeffion of their prefent acquifitions, and flopped all farther hoffilities on the fide of the low countries, Guienne and Scotland, till Midfummer next *. A negotiation was foon after opened at Arras, under the mediation of the Pope's legates, and the truce was attempted to be converted into a folid peace. Edward here required that Philip fhould free Guienne from all claims of fuperiority, and entirely abandon the protection of Scotland : But as he feemed not any wife entitled to make fuch exorbitant demandss from either his paft fucceffes or future profpects, they were totally rejected by Philip, who agreed only to a prolongation of the truce.

THE King of France foor after detached the emperor Lewis from the alliance of England, and engaged him to revoke the title of imperial vicar, which he had conferred on Edward +. The King's other allies on the frontiers of France, difappointed in their hopes, gradually withdrew from the confederacy. And Edward himfelf, harraffed by his numerous and impatient creditors, was obliged to make his efcape by flealth irto England.

Domeffic difaurbances.

The unufual imposition of a ninth sheaf, lamb and fleece, laid on by the parliament, together with the great want of money, and still more, of credit in England, had rendered the remttances to Flanders fo backward; nor could it be expected, that any expeditious methods of collecting a tax, which was fo new in itfelf, and which yielded only a gradual produce, could possibly be contrived by the King or his ministers. And tho' the parliament, forefeeing the inconvenience, had granted, as a prefent reburce, 20,000 facks of wool, the only English goods which bore a certain price in foreign markets, and were the next to ready money; it was impossible, but the feizing of fuch a bulky commodity, the gathering of it from different parts of the kingdom, and the disposing of it abroad, must take up much more time than the urgency of the King's affairs would permit, and occasion all the disappointments complained of, during the course of the campaign. But tho' nothing had happened, which Edward might not reasonably have foreseen, he was so irritated with the unfortunate issue of his military operations, and fo much

* Froisfart, liv. 1. chap. 64. Av: sbury, p. 65. * Heming. p. 352. Ypod. Neuft. p. 514.

vexed

180

vexed and affronted by his foreign creditors, that he was determined to throw Chap. XV. the blame fomewhere off himfelf, and he came in very bad humour into England. He discovered his present disposition by the first act which he performed after his arrival : As he landed unexpectedly, he found the Tower fomewhat unguarded; and he immediately committed to prion the conftable and all others who had the charge of that fortrefs; and he treated them with unufual rigour *. His vengeance fell next on the officers of the revenue, the sheriffs, the collectors of taxes, the undertakers of all kinds; and beides turning all of them out of their offices, he appointed commissioners to enquire into their conduct; and these men, in order to gratify the King's humour, were fure not to find any perfon innocent, who came before them +. Sir John St. Paul, keeper of the privy feal, Sir John Stonore, lord chief juffice, Andrew Aubrey, mayor of London, were difplaced and imprisoned; as were also the bifhop of Chichefter, chancellor, and the bishop of Lichfield, treasurer. Stratford, archbishop of Canterbury, on whom the charge of collecting the new taxes hid been chiefly laid, fell likewife under the King's displeasure; but being absent it the time of Edward's first arrival, he escaped feeling the immediate effects of it.

THERE were strong reasons, which might discourage the Kings of England, in those ages, from bestowing the chief offices of the crown on prelates and other ecclefiastical perfons. These men had so entrenched themselves in privileges and immunities, and pretended fo openly to be exempt from all fecular jurifdiction, that no civil penalty could be inflicted on them for any malverfation in office; and as even treason itself was declared to be no canonical offence, nor was allowed to be a sufficient reason for deprivation or other spiritual censures, that order of men had enfured to themfelves almost a total impunity, and were not bound by any political laws or flatutes. But, on the other hand, there were many peculiar caufes which favoured their promotion. Befides that they poffeffed almost all the learning of the age, and were best qualified for civil employments; the prelates enjoyed equal dignity with the greatest larons, and gave weight, by their perfonal authority, to the powers entrusted with them : While, at the fame time, they endangered not the crown by accumulating wealth or influence in their families, and were reftrained, by the decency of their character, from that open rapine and violence, fo often practifed by the ncbles. These motives had induced Edward, as well as many of his predeceffors, to entrust the chief parts of his government in the hands of ecclefiaftics; at the hazard of feeing them difown his authority fo foon as it was turned against them.

* Ypod, Neuft. p. 513.

me

DAK,

15, be ot.

5%

1

+ Avesbury, p. 70. Heming. p. 326. Walfingham, p. 150.

THIS

181

1340.

Chap. XV. 1341. W

182

THIS was the cafe with archbishop Stratford. That prelate, informed of Edward's indignation against him, prepared himself for the ftorm; and not content with standing upon the defensive, he resolved, by beginning the attack, to show the King, that he knew the privileges of his character, and had courage to maintain them. He issued a general sentence of excommunication against all, who, on any pretext, exercifed violence on the perfon or goods of clergymen; who infringed those privileges fecured by the great charter, and by the ecclefiaftical canons; or who accufed a prelate of treason or any other crime, in order to bring him under the King's difpleafure *. Even Edward had reafon to think himfelf ftruck at by this fentence; both on account of the imprisonment of the two bishops and that of other clergymen concerned in levying the taxes, and on account of his feizing their lands and moveables, that he might make them answerable for any ballance, which remained in their hands. The clergy, with the primate at their head, were now formed into a regular combination against the King; and many calumnies were fpread against him, in order to deprive him of the confidence and affections of his people; that he intended to recal the general pardon, and the remiffion of old debts which he had granted, and to impofe new and arbitrary taxes without confent of parliament. The archbishop went fo far, in a letter to the King himfelf, as to tell him, that there were two powers, by which the world was governed, the holy pontifical apoftolic dignity, and the royal fubordinate authority : That of thefe two powers, the clerical was evidently the fupreme, fince the priefts were to answer, at the tribunal of the divine judgment, for the conduct of kings themfelves : That the clergy were the spiritual fathers of all the faithful, and amongst others of kings and princes; and were intitled, by a heavenly charter, to direct their wills and actions, and to cenfure their tranfgreffions: And that prelates had heretofore cited emperors before their tribunal, had tried their life and behaviour, and had anathematized them for their obstinate offences +. These topics were not well calculated to appeafe Edward's indignation; and when he called a parliament, he fent not to the primate, as to the other peers, a fummons to appear in it. Stratford was not difcouraged with this mark of neglect or anger : He appeared before the gates, arrayed in his pontifical robes, holding the crofier in his hand, and attended with a pompous train of priefts and prelates; and he required admittance to his feat as the first and highest peer of the realm. For two days, the King denied him entrance : But either sensible, that this affair might be attended with dangerous confequences, or that in his impatience he had groundlefsly accufed the primate

* Heming. p. 339. Ang. Sacra, vol. 1. p. 21, 22. Walfingham, p. 153. + Anglia Sacra, vol. 1. p. 27.

Ì

e

k

lę

nl

m n

e.

of malverfation in his office, which feems really to have been the cafe; he at laft Chap. XV. permitted him to take his feat, and was reconciled to him *. 1341.

EDWARD now found himfelf in a very bad fituation both with his own people and with foreign flates; and it required all his genius and capacity to extricate himfelf from fuch multiplied difficulties and embarraffments. His unjust and exorbitant claims on France and Scotland had engaged him in an implacable war with these two kingdoms, his nearest neighbours : He had lost almost all his foreign alliances by his irregular payments : He was deeply involved in debts, for which he owed a confuming intereft : His military operations had vanished into fmoke; and except his naval victory, none of them had been attended even with glory or renown, either to himfelf or to the nation : The animofity between him and the clergy was open and declared : The people were difcontented on account of many arbitrary measures, in which he had been engaged : And what was more dangerous, the nobility, taking advantage of his present necessities, were determined to retrench his power, and by encroaching on the antient prerogatives of the crown, to acquire to themfelves independance and authority. But the afpiring genius of Edward, which had fo far transported him beyond the bounds of diferetion, proved at last sufficient to re-instate him in his former authority, and finally to render his reign the most triumphant which is to be met with in Englifh ftory : Tho' for the prefent he was obliged, with fome lofs of honour, to yield to the current, which bore fo ftrongly against him.

The parliament framed an act, which was likely to produce confiderable innovations in the government. They premifed, that, whereas the great charter had, to the manifeft peril and flander of the King and damage of his people, been violated in many points, particularly by the imprifonment of free men and the feizure of their goods, without fuit, indictment or trial, it was neceffary to confirm it anew, and to oblige all the chief officers of the law, together with the fleward and chamberlain of the houfhold, the keeper of the privy feal, the controller and treasurer of the wardrobe, and those who were entrusted with the education of the young prince, to sear to the regular observance of it. They also remarked, that the peers of the realm had formerly been arrested and imprisoned, and dispossible of their temporalities and lands, and even some of them put to death, without judgment of their peers; and they therefore enacted that such violences should henceforth cease, and no peer be punished but by the award of his peers in parliament. They required, that, whenever any of the great offices abovementioned should become vacant, the King should fill it by the advice of

* Anglia Sacra, vol. 1. p. 38, 39, 40, 41.

183

his

Chap. XV. 1341. 184

his council, and the confent of other great men, who fhould at that time be found to refide in the neighbourhood of the court. And they enacted, that on the third day of every feffion, the King fhould refume into his own hands all thefe offices, except those of juftices of the two benches and the barons of exchequer; that these ministers fhould for the time be reduced to private perfons; that they fhould in that condition answer before the parliament to any accusations brought against them; and that, if they were found any wife guilty, they should finally be disposfessed of their offices, and more sufficient perfons be substituted in their place *. By these last regulations, the barons approached as near as they dared to those reftrictions, which had formerly been imposed on Henry III. and Edward II. and which, from the dangerous confequences attending them, had become so generally odious, that they neither expected to have the concurrence of the people in demanding them, nor the affent of the prefent King in granting them.

In return for these important concessions, the parliament profered the King a grant of 20,000 facks of wool; and his wants were fo urgent from the clamours of his creditors, and the demands of his foreign allies, that he was obliged to accept of the fupply on these hard conditions. He ratified this statute in full parliament; but he fecretly entered a proteft of fuch a nature as was fufficient, one should imagine, to deftroy for the future all trust and confidence with his people: He declared, that, fo foon as his convenience permitted, he would, from his own authority, revoke what had been extorted from him +. Accordingly, he was no fooner poffessed of the parliamentary fupply, than he issued an edict, which contains many extraordinary politions and pretentions. He first afferts, that that statute had been enacted contrary to the law; as if a free legislative body could ever do any thing illegal. He next affirms, that, as it was hurtful to the prerogatives of the crown which he was fworn to defend, he had only diffembled, when he feemed to ratify it, but that he had never in his own breaft given his affent to it. He does not pretend, that either he or the parliament lay under any force; but only that fome inconvenience would have enfued had he not feemingly given his affent to that pretended statute. He therefore, with the advice of his council and of fome earls and barons, abrogates and annulls it; and tho' he professes himself willing and determined to observe such articles of it as were formerly law, he declares it to have thenceforth no force or authority ‡. The parliaments, who were afterwards affembled, took no notice of this arbitrary ex-

* 15 Edw. III. + Statutes at large: 15 Edw. III. That this proteft of the King's was fecret appears evidently, fince otherwife it would have been ridiculous in the parliament to have accept ed of his affent: Befides the King owns that he diffembled, which would not have been the cafe, had his proteft been public. ‡ Statutes at large, 15 Edw. IIF.

ertion

ertion of royal power, which by a parity of reafon left all their laws at the mercy Chap. XV. of the King; and during the courfe of two years, Edward had fo far re-eftablished his influence, and freed himself from his present necessities, that he then obtained from his parliament a legal repeal of the obnoxious statute *. This transaction certainly contains remarkable circumstances, which discover the manners and fentiments of the age, and may prove what inaccurate work might be expected from fuch rude hands, when employed in legislation, and in rearing the delicate fabric of laws and a conflitution.

But the' Edward had happily recovered his authority at home, which had been impaired by the events of the French war, he had undergone fo many mortifications from that attempt, and faw fo little prospect of fuccess, that he would probably have dropt his claim, had not a revolution in Brittany opened to him more promifing views, and given his enterprizing genius a full opportunity of displaying itself.

JOHN III. duke of Brittany, had, fome years before his death, found himfelf Affairs of declining thro' age and infirmities; and having no iffue, he was folicitous to pre-Brittany. vent those diforders, to which, on the event of his decease, a disputed succession might expose his subjects. His younger brother, the count de Penthievre, had left only one daughter, whom the duke deemed his heir ; and as his family had inherited the dutchy by a female fucceffion, he thought her title preferable to that of the count de Mountfort, who, being his brother by a fecond marriage, was the male heir of that principality +. He accordingly proposed to bestow her in marriage on fome perfon, who might be able to defend her rights; and he caft his eye on Charles de Blois, nephew of the King of France, by his mother, Margaret de Valois, fifter to that monarch. But as he both loved his fubjects and was beloved by them, he determined not to take this important flep without their approbation; and having affembled the flates of Brittany, he reprefented to them the advantages of that alliance, and the profpect, which it gave, of an entire fettlement of his fucceffion. The Bretons willingly concurred in his choice : The marriage was concluded: All his vaffals, and among the reft, the count de Mountfort, fwore fealty to Charles and to his fpouse as to their future fovereigns: And every danger of civil commotions feemed to be obviated, as far as human prudence could provide a remedy against them.

But on the death of this good prince, the ambition of the count de Mountfort broke thro' all these regulations, and kindled a war, not only dangerous to Brittany, but to a great part of Europe. While Charles de Blois was folliciting at * Cotton's Abridgm. p. 38, 39. VOL. II.

(8)

御 pol et re.

ent

¢I

or of

U full

It,

his 011 dj

+ Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 64. Bb

1341.

185

the 1341.

186

Chap. XV. the court of France the inveftiture of the dutchy, Mountfort was active in acquiring immediate poffession of it, and by force or intrigue he made himself master of Rennes, Nantz, Breft, Hennebonne, and all the most important fortreffes, and engaged many confiderable barons to acknowledge his authority *. Senfible, that he could expect no favour from Philip, he made a voyage to England, on pretence of folliciting his claim to the earldom of Richmond, which had devolved to him by his brother's death ; and offering to do homage to Edward, as King of France, for the dutchy of Brittany, he proposed a strict alliance for the fupport of each other's pretenfions. Edward faw immediately the advantages attending this treaty: Mountfort, an active and valiant prince, closely united to him by intereft, opened at once an entrance into the heart of France, and afforded him much more flattering views, than his allies on the fide of Germany and the Low Countries, who had no fincere attachment to his caufe, and whofe progrefs was also obstructed by those numerous fortifications, which had been raifed on that frontier. Robert d'Artois was zealous in inforcing these confiderations : The ambitious fpirit of Edward was little difpofed to fit down under those repulfes, which he had received, and which, he thought, had fo much injured his reputation : And it required a very fhort negotiation to conclude a treaty of alliance between two men; who, tho' their pleas with regard to the preference of male or female fucceffion were directly opposite, were intimately connected by their common interefts +.

As this treaty was still a fecret, Mountfort, on his return, ventured to appear at Paris, in order to defend his caufe before the court of peers; but observing Philip and his judges to be prepoffeffed against his title, and dreading their intentions of arrefting him, till he fhould reftore what he had feized by violence, he fuddenly made his escape; and war immediately broke out between him and Charles de Blois t. Philip fent his eldeft fon, the duke of Normandy, with a powerful army to the affiftance of the latter ; and Mountfort, unable to keep the field against his rival, remained in the city of Nantz, where he was belieged. The city was taken by the treachery of the inhabitants : Mountfort fell into the hands of his enemies; was conducted as a prifoner to Paris; and was shut up in the tower of the Louvre §.

1342.

Renewal of the war with France.

This event seemed to put an end to the pretensions of the count de Mountfort ; but his affairs were immediately retrieved by an unexpected incident, which infpired new life and vigour into his party. Jane of Flanders, countefs of Mountfort, the

* Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 65, 66, 67, 68. 1 Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 70, 71.

+ Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 69. § Froiffart, liv. chap. 73.

moft

most extraordinary woman of that age, was rouzed, by the captivity of her huf- Chap. XV. band, from those domestic cares, to which she had hitherto limited her genius; and the courageoufly undertook to fupport the falling fortunes of her family. No fooner did she receive the fatal intelligence, than she assembled the inhabitants of Rennes, where she then refided ; and carrying her infant son in her arms, deplored to them the calamity of their fovereign, and recommended to their care the illustrious orphan, the fole male remaining of their antient princes, who had governed them with fuch indulgence and lenity, and to whom they had ever profeffed fuch a zealous attachment. She declared herfelf willing to run all hazards with them in fo just a cause; discovered the resources which still remained in the alliance of England; and entreated them to make one effort against an usurper, who, being imposed on them by the arms of France, would in return make a facrifice to his protector of the antient liberties of Brittany. The audience, moved by the affecting appearance, and infpirited by the noble conduct of the princefs, vowed to live and die with her in defending the rights of her family : All the other fortreffes of Brittany embraced the fame refolution: The countefs went from place to place, encouraging the garrifons, providing them with every neceffary for fubliftance, concerting their plans of defence; and after the had put the whole province in a proper posture, she shut herself up in Hennebonne, where fhe waited with impatience the arrival of those fuccours, which Edward had promifed her. Mean while, the fent over her fon to England, both that the might put him in a place of fafety, and engage the King more ftrongly, by fuch a pledge, to embrace with zeal the interefts of her family.

n ţ.

to

M

CHARLES DE BLOIS, anxious to make himfelf master of fo important a fortrefs as Hennebonne, and still more to take the countefs prifoner, from whose vigour and capacity all the difficulties to his fucceffion in Brittany now proceeded, fat down before the place with a great army, composed of French, Spaniards, Genoefe, and fome Bretons; and he conducted the attack with indefatigable induftry*. The defence was no lefs vigorous: The befiegers were repulfed in every affault: Frequent fallies were made with fuccefs by the garrifon: And the countefs herfelf being the most forward in all military operations, every one was ashamed not to do his duty to the utmost in this desperate situation. One day the perceived, that the beliegers, entirely employed in an attack, had neglected a diftant quarter of their camp; and the immediately fallied forth at the head of a body of 200 cavalry, threw them into confusion, committed great flaughter upon them, and fet fire to their tents, baggage and magazines : But when the was about to return, the found that the was intercepted, and that a great body of the ene-

> * Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 81. Bb 2

187

1342.

Chap. XV. 1342. 188

enemy had thrown themfelves between her and the gates. She inftantly took her refolution; fhe ordered her men to difband, and to make the beft of their way by flight to Breft. She met them at the appointed place of rendezvous, collected another body of 500 horfe, returned to Hennebonne, broke unexpectedly thro' the enemies camp, and was received with fhouts and acclamations by the garrifon, who, encouraged by this reinforcement, and by fo rare an example of female valour, determined to defend themfelves to the laft extremity.

The reiterated attacks, however, of the befiegers, had at length made feveral breaches in the walls; and it was apprehended, that a general affault, which was every hour expected, would overpower the garrifon, diminifhed in their numbers, and extremely weakened with watching and fatigue. It became neceffary to treat of a capitulation; and the bifhop of Leon was already engaged, for that purpofe, in a conference with Charles de Blois, when the countefs, who had mounted on a high tower, and was looking towards the fea with great impatience, deferied fome fails at a diftance. She immediately exclaimed : Bebold the fuccours ! the Englifh fuccours ! No capitulation*! This fleet carried a body of Englifh genfdarmes, and fix thoufand archers, whom Edward had prepared for the relief of Hennebonne, but who had been long detained by contrary winds. They entered the harbour under the command of Sir Walter Manny, one of the braveft captains of England; and having infpired frefh courage into the garrifon, immediately fallied forth, beat the befiegers from all their pofts, and obliged them to decamp.

But notwithstanding this fuccefs, the countefs of Mountfort found that her party, overpowered by fuperior numbers, were declining in every quarter; and the went over to follicit more effectual fuccours from the King of England. Edward granted her a confiderable reinforcement under Robert d'Artois; who embarked his troops on board a fleet of forty five fhips and failed to Brittany. He was met in his paffage by the enemy; an action enfued, where the countefs behaved with her wonted valour, and charged the enemy fword in hand; but the fleets, after a fharp action, were feparated by a florm, and the Englifh arrived fafely in Brittany. The first exploit of Robert d'Artois was the taking of Vannes, which he mastered by conduct and addrefs \dagger : But he furvived a very little time this prosperity. The Breton noblemen of the party of Charles affembled fecretly in arms, attacked Vannes of a fudden, and carried the place; chiefly by reason of an wound received by Robert d'Artois, of which he foon after died at fea on his return to England \ddagger .

I

AFTER

AFTER the death of this unfortunate prince, the chief author of all the ca- Chap. XV. lamities, with which his country was overwhelmed for above a century, Edward undertook in perfon the defence of the countefs of Mountfort; and as the laft truce with Ffance was now expired, the war, which the English and French had hitherto carried on as allies to the competitors for Brittany, is thenceforth conducted in the name and under the ftandard of the two monarchs. The King landed at Morbian near Vannes, with an army of 12,000 men; and being mafter of the field, where no enemy dared to appear against him, he endeavoured to give a luftre to his arms, by commencing at once three important fieges, that of Vannes, of Rennes, and of Nantz. But by undertaking too much, he failed of fuccefs in all his enterprizes. Even the fiege of Vannes, which Edward in perfon conducted with vigour, advanced but flowly *; and the French had all the leifure requifite for making preparations against him. The duke of Normandy, eldeft fon of Philip, appeared in Brittany at the head of an army of 30,000 infantry and 4000 cavalry; and Edward was now obliged to draw together all his forces, and to entrench himfelf ftrongly before Vannes, where the duke of Normandy foon after arrived, and in a manner invefted the beliegers. The garrifon and the French camp were plentifully fupplied with provisions; while the English, who dared to make no attempt upon the place in the prefence of a fuperior army, drew all their fubfistance from England, exposed to the hazards of the fea, and fometimes to those arising from the fleet of the enemy. In this dangerous fituation, Edward very willingly hearkened to the mediation of the Pope's legates, the cardinals of Palestrine and Frescati, who endeavoured to negotiate, if not a peace, at least a truce between the two kingdoms. A treaty was concluded for a ceffation of arms during three years +; and Edward had the ability, notwithstanding his prefent dangerous fituation, to procure to himfelf very equal and honourable terms. It was agreed, that Vannes should be fequestered, during the truce, in the hands of the legates, to be disposed of afterwards as they pleafed; and tho' Edward knew the partiality of the court of Rome towards his antagonist, he faved himself by this devise from the dishonour of having undertaken a fruitless enterprize. It was also flipulated, that all prisoners should be released, that the places in Brittany should remain in the hands of the prefent poffeffors, and that the allies on both fides should be comprehended in the truce 1. Edward, foon after concluding this treaty, embarked with his army for England.

* Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 95. † Froisfart, liv. 1. chap. 99. Avesbury, p. 102. 1 Heming. p. 359.

1343.

THE 189

1342.

1343.

190

Chap. XV. THE truce, tho' calculated for a long time, was of very fhort duration; and each monarch endeavoured to throw on the other the blame of its infraction. Of courfe, the historians of the two countries differ in their account of the matter. It feems probable, however, as is affirmed by the French writers, that Edward, in confenting to the truce, had no other purpole than to extricate himfelf from a perilous fituation, into which he had fallen, and was afterwards very carelefs of its observance. In all the memorials which remain on this subject, he complains chiefly of the punishment inflicted on Oliver de Cliffon, Henry de Leon, and other Breton noblemen, who, he fays, were partizans of the family of Mountfort, and confequently under the protection of England *. But it appears from the history, that at the conclusion of the truce, those noblemen had openly, by their declarations and actions, embraced the caufe of Charles de Blois +; and if they had entered into any fecret correspondence and engagements with Edward, they were traitors to their party, and were justly punishable by Philip and Charles, for their breach of faith; nor had Edward any just ground of complaint against France for fuch feverities. But when he laid these pretended injuries before the parliament, whom he affected to confult on all occasions, that affembly entered into the quarrel, advifed the King not to be amufed by a fraudulent truce, and granted him fupplies for the renewal of the war : The counties were charged with a fifteenth for two years, and the boroughs with a tenth. The clergy confented to give a tenth for three years.

THESE fupplies enabled the King to complete his military preparations; and he fent his coufin, Henry earl of Derby, fon of the earl of Lancaster, into Guienne, for the defence of that province ‡. This prince, the most accomplished of the English court, possessed in a high degree, the virtue of humanity as well as those of valour and conduct §, and not content with protecting and cherishing the province committed to his charge, he made a very fuccessful invasion on the enemy. He attacked the count de Laille, the French general at Bergerac, beat him from his entrenchments, and took the place. He reduced a great part of Perigord, and continually advanced in his conquests, till the count de Laille, having collected an army of ten or twelve thousand men, sat down before Auberoche, in hopes * Rymer, vol. 5. p. 453, 454, 459, 466, 496. Heming. p. 376. + Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 96. p. 100. 1 Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 103. Avesbury, p. 121.

§ It is reported of this prince, that, having once, before the attack of a town, promifed the foldiers the plunder, one private man happened to fall upon a great cheft full of money, which he immediately brought to the earl, as thinking it too great for himfelf to keep pofferfion of it. But Derby told him, that his promife did not depend on the greatness or smallness of the fum; and bid him keep it all for his own use.

1344.

of

of recovering that place, which had fallen into the hands of the English. The Chap. XV. earl of Derby came upon him by furprize with only a thousand cavalry, threw the French into diforder, pushed his advantages, and obtained a complete victory. De Laille himfelf, with many confiderable nobles, was taken prifoner *. After this important advantage, Derby made a rapid progrefs in fubduing the French provinces. He took Monfegur, Monpefat, Villefranche, Miremont, and Tonnins, with the fortress of Damassen. Aiguillon, a fortress deemed impregnable, fell into his hands from the cowardice of the governor. Angouleme was furrendered after a fhort fiege. The only place, where he met with a confiderable refiftance, was Reole, which, however, was at last reduced after a fiege of above nine weeks +. Having made an attempt on Blaye, he thought it more prudent to raife the fiege, rather than wafte his time, before a place of fmall importance ‡.

1

2

THE reason why Derby was permitted without opposition to make such progrefs on the fide of Guienne, was the difficulties under which the French finances then laboured, and which had obliged Philip to lay on new impolitions, particularly the duty on falt, to the great difcontent, and almost mutiny of his fubjects. But after the court of France was fupplied with money, great preparations were made; and the duke of Normandy, attended by the duke of Burgundy, and other great nobility, led towards Guienne a powerful army, which the English could not think of refifting in the open field. The earl of Derby flood on the defensive, and allowed the French to carry on at leisure the fiege of Angouleme, which was their first enterprize. John lord Norwich, the governor, after a brave and vigorous defence, found himfelf reduced to extremities ; and he was obliged to employ a ftratagem, in order to fave his garrifon, and to prevent his being reduced to furrender at diferetion. He appeared on the walls, and defired to fpeak with the duke of Normandy. The prince, when he came, told Norwich, that he fupposed he intended to capitulate. " Not at all," replied the governor : " But as to-morrow is the feaft of the Virgin, to whom, I know, that you, fir, as " well as myself, bear a great devotion, I defire a ceffation of arms for that day." The proposals were agreed to; and Norwich, having ordered his forces to prepare all their baggage, marched out, and advanced towards the French camp. The beliegers, imagining they were to be attacked, ran to their arms; but Norwich fent a meffenger to the duke, reminding him of his engagement. The duke, who piqued himself on the faithful observance of his word, exclaimed, I see the governor has outwitted me: But let us be contented with gaining the place : And the Englifh were allowed to pais thro' the camp unmolefted §. After fome other fuccef-

* Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 104. + Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 110. 112. § Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 120.

1 Froiffart, liv. 1. chap.

fes.

1346.

1345.

191

1346.

192

Chap. XV. fes, the duke of Normandy laid fiege to Aiguillon; and as the natural ftrength of the fortrefs, together with a brave garrifon under the command of the earl of Pembroke, and fir Walter Manny, rendered it impoffible to take the place by affault, he proposed, after making feveral fruitless attacks *, to reduce it by famine : But before he could finish his enterprize, he was called to another part of the kingdom, by one of the greatest difasters, that ever befel the French monarchy +.

> EDWARD, informed by the earl of Derby of the great danger, to which Guienne was exposed, had prepared a fleet and army, with which he intended in perfon to bring it relief. He embarked at Southampton on board a fleet of near a thoufand fail of all dimensions; and carried with him, befides all the chief nobility of England, his eldeft fon the prince of Wales, now fifteen years of age. The winds proved long contrary ‡; and the King, in defpair of arriving in time at Guienne, was at last perfuaded by Geoffrey d'Harcourt, to change the destination of his enterprize. This nobleman was a Norman by birth, had long made a confiderable figure in the court of France, and was generally efteemed for his perfonal merit and valour; but being difobliged and perfecuted by Philip, he had fled over to England; had recommended himfelf to Edward, who was an excellent judge of men; and had fucceeded to Robert d'Artois in the invidious office of exciting and affifting the King in every enterprize against his native country. He had long infifted, that an expedition to Normandy promifed, in the prefent circumftances, much more favourable fuccefs, than one to Guienne; that Edward would find the northern provinces much unfurnished of military force, which had been drawn to the fouth; that they were full of flourishing cities, whose plunder would enrich the English; that their cultivated fields, as yet unspoiled by war, would supply them with plenty of provisions; and that the neighbourhood of the capital rendered every event of importance in those quarters §. These reasons, which had not before been duly weighed by Edward, began to make more impression after the disappointments, which he had met with in his voyage to Guienne : He ordered his fleet to fail to Normandy, and fafely difembarked his army at la Hogue.

12th July.

Invation of France.

THIS army, which was, during the course of the ensuing campaign, crowned with the most splendid fuccess, that ever attended the enterprize of any English monarch, confifted of four thousand men at arms, ten thousand archers, ten thousand Welsh infantry, and fix thousand Irish. The Welsh and the Irish were light, diforderly troops, fitter for doing execution in a purfuit, or fcouring the country, than for any stable action. The bow was always esteemed a frivolous weapon, where true military difcipline was known, and regular bodies of well armed foot maintained. The only folid force in this army were the men at arms, and even thefe, being cavalry, were, on that account, much inferior, in the fhock of battle, to good infantry : And as the whole were new levied troops, we are led to entertain a very mean idea of the military force of those ages, which, being ignorant in every other art, had not properly cultivated the art of war itfelf, the fole object of their attention.

* Froiffart, liv. chap. 121. § Froisfart, liv. 1. chap. 121. + Froisfart, liv. 1. chap. 134.

† Avesbury, p. 123.

THE King created the earl of Arundel conflable of his army, and the earls of Warwic and Harcourt, marefchals: He beftowed the honour of knighthood on the prince of Wales, and feveral of the young nobility, immediately upon his landing. After deftroying all the fhips in la Hogue, Barfleur, and Cherbourg, he fpread his army over the whole country, and gave them an unbounded licence of burning, fpoiling, and plundering every place, of which they became mafters. The loofe difcipline then practifed, could not be much hurt by thefe diforderly practices; and Edward took care to prevent any furprize, by giving orders to his troops, however they might difperfe themfelves in the day time, always to quarter themfelves at night near the main body. In this manner, Montebourg, Carentan, St. Lo, Valognes, and other places in the Cotentin were pillaged without refiftance; and an univerfal confternation was fpread over the whole province *.

THE intelligence of this unexpected invafion foon reached Paris; and threw Philip into great perplexity. He iffued orders, however, for levying forces in all quarters, and difpatched the count d'Eu, constable of France, and the count de Tancarville, with a body of troops, to the defence of Caen, a populous and commercial but open city, which lay in the neighbourhood of the English army. The temptation of fo rich a prize, foon allured Edward to approach it; and the inhabitants, encouraged by their numbers, and by the re-inforcements which they daily received from the country, ventured, against the advice of the constable, to meet him in the field. But their courage failed them on the first shock: They fled with precipitation : The counts d'Eu and Tancarville were taken prifoners : The victors entered the city along with the vanquished, and a furious maffacre commenced, without distinction of age, fex, or condition. The citizens, in defpair, barricaded their houses, and affaulted the English with stones, bricks, and every missile weapon: The English made way by fire to the destruction of the citizens : Till Edward, anxious to fave both his fpoil and his foldiers, ftopped the maffacre; and having obliged the inhabitants to lay down their arms, gave his troops licence to begin a more regular and lefs hazardous plunder of the city. The pillage continued for three days : The King referved for his own fhare the

VOL. II.

1gth earl place

r pat

m

Gui

Der.

ar a 10.

age

efti

ong met ilip,

Vas

VI-

na.

nne;

ci.

ret

the 121

h

ne

* Froisfart, liv. 1. chap. 122. C c Chap. XV. 1346.

193

和新月-333万0

jewels,

1346.

1.194

Chap. XV. jewels, plate, filks, fine cloth, and fine linen; and he beftowed all the remainder of the spoil on his army. The whole was embarked on board the ships, and fent over to England; together with three hundred of the richeft citizens of Caen, whofe ranfom was an additional profit, which he expected afterwards to levy *. This difmal fcene paffed in the prefence of two cardinal legates, who had come to negociate a peace between the kingdoms.

THE King moved next to Rouen in hopes of treating that city in the fame manner; but found, that the bridge was already broken down, and that the King of France himfelf was arrived there with his army. He marched along the banks of the Seine towards Paris, defiroying the whole country, and every town and village, which he met with on his road +. Some of his light troops carried their ravages even to the gates of Paris; and the royal palace of St. Germans, together with Nanterre, Ruelle, and other villages, was reduced to ashes within fight of that capital. The English proposed to pass the river at Poiffy, but found the French army encamped on the opposite banks, and the bridge at that place, as well as all others upon the Seine, broken down by orders from Philip. Edward now faw, that the French intended to enclose him in their country, in hopes of attacking him with advantage on all fides : But he faved himfelf by a stratagem from this perilous fituation. He gave his army orders to diflodge, and to advance farther up the Seine; but immediately returning by the fame route, arrived at Poiffy, which the enemy had already quitted, in order to attend his motions. He repaired the bridge with incredible celerity, paffed over his army, and having thus difengaged himfelf from the enemy, advanced by quick marches towards Flanders. His vanguard, commanded by Harcourt, met with the townfmen of Amiens, who were haftening to reinforce their King, and defeated them with great flaughter ‡: He paffed by Beauvais, and burned the fuburbs of that city: But as he approached the Somme, he found himself in the fame difficulty as before : All the bridges on that river were either broken down, or ftrongly guarded: An army, under the command of Godemar de Faye, was stationed on the opposite banks : Philip was advancing on him from the other quarter, with an army of an hundred thousand men: And he was thus exposed to the danger of being enclosed, and of ftarving in an enemy's country. In this extremity, he published a reward to any one, that could bring him intelligence of a paffage over the Somme. A peafant, called Gobin Agace, whofe name has been preferved by the fhare which he had in thefe important transactions, was tempted on this occasion to betray the interests of his country; and he informed Edward of a ford below Abbeville, which had a

* Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 124. + Froisfart, liv. 1. chap. 125. 1 Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 125. found

than 1

100

Gato

即

OTH

ing

KS O

lage

翻總 Ne

Cap

renc

252 n fa

ck thi irthe oilin,

lent

加 ders

vho

1

the

the

nanc

200

101

18

10

101

found bottom, and might be passed without difficulty at low water *. The King Chap XV. haftened thither, but found Godemar de Faye on the oppofite banks. Being urged by neceffity, he deliberated not a moment; but threw himfelf into the river, fword in hand, at the head of his troops; drove the enemy from their flation; and purfued them to a diffance on the plain +. The French army under Philip, arrived at the ford, when the rear guard of the English were passing. So narrow was the efcape, which Edward, by his prudence and celerity, made from this danger! The rifing of the tide prevented the French King from following him over the ford, and obliged that prince to take his road over the bridge at Abbeville; by which fome time was loft.

IT is natural to think, that Philip, at the head of fo vaft an army, was impatient to take revenge of the English, and to prevent the difgrace to which he must be exposed, if an inferior enemy should be allowed, after ravaging fo great a part of his kingdom, to escape with impunity. Edward alfo was fenfible, that fuch must be the object of the French monarch; and as he had advanced but a little way before his enemy, he faw the danger of precipitating his march over the plains of Picardy, and of exposing his rear to the infults of the numerous cavalry, in which the French camp abounded. He took therefore a very prudent re-Battle of folution : He chofe his ground with advantage near the village of Crecy ; he dif- zoth August. pofed his army in excellent order; he determined to await in tranquility the arrival of the enemy; and he hoped, that their eagerness to engage, and to prevent his retreat, after all their past disappointments, would hurry them on to some rash and ill-concerted action. He drew up his army on a gentle ascent, and divided them into three lines : The first was commanded by the prince of Wales, and under him, by the earls of Warwic and Oxford, by Harcourt, and by the lords Chandos, Holland, and other noblemen : The earls of Arundel and Northampton, with the lords Willoughby, Baffet, Roos, and fir Lewis Tufton, were at the head of the fecond line : He took on himfelf the command of the third division, by which he proposed either to bring fuccour to the two first lines, or to fecure a retreat in case of any misfortunes, or to push his advantages against his enemy. He had likewife the precaution to throw up trenches on his flank, in order to fecure himfelf from the numerous bodies of the French, who might affail him from that quarter; and he placed all his baggage behind him in a wood, which he alfo fecured by an intrenchment 1.

THE skill and order of this disposition, with the tranquility, in which it was made, ferved extremely to compose the minds of the foldiers; and the King, that

* Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 126, 127. + Froisfart, liv. 1. chap: 127. ‡ Froiffart, liv. I. chap. 128. Cc2

he 195

1346.

1346.

196

Chap. XV. he might farther inspirit them, rode thro' their ranks with such an air of cheerfulnefs and alacrity in his countenance, as conveyed the higheft confidence intoevery beholder. He pointed out to them the neceffity, to which they were at prefent reduced, and the certain and inevitable destruction which awaited them, if, in their prefent fituation, enclofed on all hands in an enemy's country, they trufted to any thing but their own valour, or gave that enemy an opportunity of taking revenge for the many infults and indignities, which they had of late put upon him. He reminded them of the apparent fuperiority which they had hitherto maintained over all the bodies of French troops who had fallen in their way; and affured them, that the greater numbers of the army, which at prefent hovered over them, gave them not greater force, but was an advantage eafily compensated by the order, in which he had placed his own army, and the refolution which he expected from them. He demanded nothing, he faid, but that they would imitate his own example, and that of the prince of Wales; and as the honour, the lives, the liberties of all, were now exposed to the fame danger, he was confident, that they would make one common effort to extricate themfelves from the prefent difficulties, and that their united courage would give them the victory over all their enemies.

IT is related by some historians *, that Edward, befides the resources, which he found in his own genius and prefence of mind, employed alfo a new invention against the enemy, and placed in his front fome pieces of artillery, the first which had yet been made use of on any remarkable occasion in Europe. This is the epoch of one of the moft fingular difcoveries, which has been made among men ;and which changed by degrees the whole art of war, and by confequence many circumstances in the political government of Europe. But the ignorance of that age, in the mechanical arts, rendered the progress very flow of this new invention. The artillery first framed, were fo clumfy and of fuch difficult management, that men were not immediately fenfible of their ufe and efficacy : And even to the prefent times, improvements have been continually making on this furious engine, which, tho' it feemed contrived for the destruction of mankind, and the overthrow of empires, has in the iffue rendered war much lefs bloody, and has given greater stability to civil focieties. Nations, by its means, have been brought more to a level : Conquests have become less frequent and rapid : Success in war has been reduced nearly to be a matter of calculation : And any nation, overmatched by its enemy, either yields to their demands, or fecures itfelf by alliances. against their violence and invasion.

* Jean Villani, lib. 12. cap. 66.

THE

EDWARD III. 81H

heer.

into 12 513

then,

, 曲

ity

pu, ther.

ay;

fated itate

ves, dif-

heir ich enfirft

en;

ny

en.

ge.

101

The invention of artillery was at this time known in France as well as in Eng- Chap. XV., land *; but Philip, in his hurry to overtake the enemy, had probably left his cannon behind him, which he regarded as an ufelefs incumbrance. All his other movements difcovered the fame imprudence and precipitation. Impelled by anger, a dangerous counfellor, and trufting to the great fuperiority of his numbers, he thought that all depended on forcing an engagement with the English, and that, if he could once reach the enemy in their retreat, the victory on his fide was certain and inevitable. He made a hafty march in great diforder from Abbeville; but after he had advanced above two leagues, fome gentlemen, whom he had fent before to take a view of the enemy, returned to him, and brought him intelligence, that they had feen the English drawn up in excellent order, and awaiting his arrival. They therefore advised him to defer the combat till the enfuing. day, when his army would have recovered from their fatigue, and might be difpofed into better order, than their prefent hurry had permitted them to obferve. Philip affented to this council; but the former precipitation of his march, and the impatience of the French nobility, made it impracticable for him to put it in execution. One division preffed upon another : Orders to stop were not feafonably conveyed to all of them : This immense body was not governed by fufficient difcipline to be manageable : And the French army, very imperfectly formed into three lines, arrived, already fatigued and difordered, in prefence of the enemy. The first line, confisting of 15,000 Genoese cross-bow men, were commanded by Anthony Doria, and Charles Grimaldi: The fecond was led by the count d'Alençon, brother to the King : The King himfelf was at the head of the third. Befides the French monarch, there were no lefs than three crowned heads in this engagement : The King of Bohemia, the King of the Romans, his fon, and the King of Majorca; with all the nobility and great vaffals of the crown of France. The army now confifted of above 120,000 men, near four times the number of the enemy. But the prudence of one man was fuperior to the advantage of all this force and fplendor.

The English, on the approach of the enemy, kept their ranks firm and immoveable; and the Genoele first began the attack. There had happened, a little before the engagement, a thunder shower, which had moistened and relaxed the ftrings of the Genoefe crofs-bows; and their arrows for this reafon fell thort of the enemy. The English archers, taking their bows out of their cafes, poured in a shower of arrows upon this multitude who were opposed to them ; and foon threw them into diforder. The Genoefe fell back upon the Genfdar-

* Du Cange Gloff. in verb. Bombarda.

197

Mes

1340.

1346.

1981

Chap. XV. mes of the count d'Alençon *; who, enraged at their cowardice, ordered his troops to put them to the fword. The artillery fired amidft the crowd; the English archers still continued to fend in their arrows among them; and nothing was to be feen in that vaft body but hurry and confusion, terror and difmay. The young prince of Wales had the prefence of mind to take advantage of thisfituation, and to lead on his line to the charge. The French cavalry, however, recovering somewhat their order, and encouraged by the example of their leader, made ftout refiftance; and having at last cleared themfelves of the Genoese runaways, advanced upon their adversaries, and by their superior numbers began to hem them round. The earls of Arundel and Northampton advanced their line to fustain the prince, who, ardent in his first feats of arms, fet an example of valour, which was imitated by all his followers. The battle became for fome time hot and dangerous, and the earl of Warwic, apprehenfive of the event from the fuperior numbers of the French, dispatched an officer to the King, and defired him to fend fuccours to the relief of the prince. Edward had chofen his ftation on the top of the hill; and he furveyed in tranquillity the fcene of action, when the meffenger accosted him. His first question was, whether the prince was flain or wounded. On receiving an answer in the negative, Return, faid he, to my fon, and tell bim that I referve the bonour of this day to bim : I am confident that he will show himself worthy of the honour of knighthood, which I so lately conferred upon him : He will be able without my affiftance to repel the enemy +. This fpeech, being reported to the prince and his attendants, infpired them with new courage : They made an attack with redoubled vigour on the French, in which the count d'Alençon was flain: That whole line of cavalry was thrown into diforder : The riders were killed or difmounted : The Welsh infantry rushed into the throng, and with their long knives cut the throats of all who had fallen; nor was any quarter given that day by the conquerors ‡.

> THE King of France advanced in vain with the rear to fuftain the line commanded by his brother : He found them already difcomfited ; and the example of their rout encreased the confusion, which was before but too prevalent in his own body. He had himfelf a horfe killed under him : He was remounted; and, tho' left almost alone, he feemed still determined to maintain the combat ; when John de Hainault seized the reins of his bridle, turned about his horse, and carried him off the field of battle. The whole French army took to flight, and were followed and put to the fword without mercy by the victors; till the darknefs of night put an end to the purfuit. The King, on his return to the camp, flew into the arms of the prince of Wales, and exclaimed : My brave fon : Perfe-

* Froisfart, liv. 1. chap. 130. + Froisfart, liv. 1. chap. 130. 1 Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 130.

vere

ED WARDO THE

more in your bonourable course : You are my fon; for valiantly have you acquitted Chap. XV. your felf to day : You have shown your felf worthy of empire *.

12

Ing

朝 er,

er,

n•

00

29

of me re.

27

11

00

5 11+

W

h ŵ

e ŝ

9

THIS battle, which is known by the name of the battle of Crecy, began after three o'clock in the afternoon, and continued till evening. The fublequent morning was foggy; and as the English observed, that many of the enemy had loft their way in the night and in the mift, they employed a ftratagem to bring them into their power : They erected on the eminences fome French standards which they had taken in battle; and all, who were allured by this falle fignal, were put to the fword, and no quarter given them. In excuse for this inhumanity, it was alledged that the French King had given out like orders to his troops; but the real reason probably was, that the English, in their present fituation, did not care to be encumbered with prifoners. On the day of battle and on the enfuing, there fell, by a moderate computation, 1200 knights, 1400 gentlemen, 4000 men at arms, befides about 30,000 men of inferior rank +. Many of the principal nobility of France, the dukes of Lorraine and Bourbon, the earls of Flanders, Blois, Harcourt, Vaudemont, Aumale, were left on the field of battle. The Kings also of Bohemia and Majorca were flain : The fate of the former was remarkable : He was blind from age ; but being refolved to hazard his perfon, and fet an example to others, he ordered the reins of his bridle to be tied on each fide to the horfes of two gentlemen of his train; and his dead body, and those of his attendants, were afterwards found among the flain, with their horses ftanding by them in that fituation ‡. His creft was three offrich feathers; and his motto these German words, Ich dien, I ferve: Which the prince of Wales and his fucceffors adopted in memorial of this great victory. The action may feem no lefs remarkable for the fmall lofs of the English than for the great slaughter of the French: There were killed in it only one equire and three knights §, and very few of inferior rank; a demonstration, that the prudent disposition made by Edward, and the diforderly attack of the French, had rendered the whole rather a rout than a battle, which was indeed the common cafe with engagements in those times.

THE great prudence of Edward appeared not only in obtaining this memorable victory, but in the measures, which he purfued after it. Not elated by his present prosperity fo far as to expect the total conquest of France or of any confiderable provinces; he proposed only to fecure an easy entrance into that kingdom, which might afterwards open the way to more moderate advantages. He knew the extreme diftance of Guienne: He had experienced the difficulty and · Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 131. + Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 131. Knyghton, p. 2588. ‡ Froiflart, liv. 1. chap. 130. Walfingham, p. 166. § Knyghton, p. 2588.

199

1346.

uncer-

1346.

200

Chap. XV. uncertainty of penetrating on the fide of the low countries, and had already loft much of his authority over Flanders by the death of Arteville, who had been murdered by the populace themfelves, his former partizans, on his attempting to transfer the fovereignty of that province to the prince of Wales *. The King, therefore, limited his ambition to the conquest of Calais; and after the interval of a few days, which he employed in interring the flain, he marched with his victorious army, and prefented himfelf before that place.

JOHN DE VIENNE, a valiant knight of Burgundy, was governor of Calais, and being supplied with every necessary for defence, he encouraged the townsmen to perform to the utmost their duty to their King and country. Edward therefore, fenfible from the beginning, that it was in vain to attempt the place by force, proposed only to reduce it by famine : He chose a fecure station for his camp; drew entrenchments around the whole city; raifed huts for his foldiers, which he covered with ftraw or broom; and provided his army with all conveniencies, to make them endure the winter feafon, which was approaching. As the governor foon perceived his intention, he put out all the ufelefs mouths, which might confume his provisions; and the King had the generofity to allow these unhappy people to pass thro' his camp, and he even supplied them with money for their journey +.

WHILE Edward was employed in this fiege, which continued near a twelvemonth, there passed in different places many other events; and all to the honour of the English arms.

THE retreat of the duke of Normandy from Guienne left the earl of Derby master of the field; and he was not negligent in making his advantage of the fuperiority. He took Mirebeau by affault : He made himself master of Lusignan in the fame manner : Taillebourg and St. Jean d'Angeli fell into his hands: Poictiers opened its gates to him ; and Derby having thus broke down all the frontiers on that quarter, carried his incursions to the banks of the Loire, and filled that quarter of France with horrour and devastation ‡.

THE flames of war were at the fame time kindled in Brittany. Charles de Blois invaded that province with a confiderable army, and invefted the fortrefs of Roche de Rien; but the countels of Mountfort, reinforced by some English troops under Sir Thomas Dagworth, attacked him during the night in his entrenchments, dispersed his army, and took himself prisoner §. His wife, by whom he enjoyed his pretensions to Brittany, compelled by the prefent necessity, † Froiffart, liv. I. + Froisfart, liv. 1. chap. 133. * Froisfart, liv. 1. chap. 116. § Froistart, liv. 1, chap. 143. Walfingham, p. 168. Ypod Neuft. p. 517, 518. chap. 136. took loft

DWARD III. E

leen

King,

terra

h and 1 to

,910

OTCE

mp thick

cies

ver

nigh

PP

ieir

lve.

10. nan

101 illed

s di trel

en

took on her the government of the party, and proved herfelf a rival in every Chap. XV. shape and an antagonist to the counters of Mountfort, both in the field and in the cabinet. And while these heroic dames presented this extraordinary scene to the world, another princess in England, of still higher rank, showed herself no less capable of exerting every manly virtue.

THE Scottish nation, after fupporting with incredible perfeverance, their liber-War with ties against the superior force of the English, recalled their King, David Bruce, in Scotland. 1342. Tho' that prince, neither by his age nor capacity, could bring them great affiftance, he gave them the countenance of fovereign authority; and as Edward's wars with France proved a great diversion to his forces, they rendered the ballance more equal between the two kingdoms. In all the truces, which Edward concluded with Philip, the King of Scotland was comprehended; and when Edward made his last invasion upon France, David was strongly follicited by his ally to break also the truce, and to invade the northern counties of England. The nobility of his nation being always forward in fuch incursions, David foon mustered a great army, entered Northumberland at the head of above 50,000 men, and carried his ravages and devastations to the gates of Durham *. But queen Phillippa, affembling a body of little more than 12,000 men +, which fhe entrusted to the command of lord Piercy, ventured to approach him at Neville's Crofs near that city; and riding thro' the ranks of the army, exhorted every man to do his duty, and to take revenge on these barbarous ravagers 1: Nor could she be persuaded to leave the field, till the armies were on the point 17th Octr. of engaging. The Scots have been often unfortunate in the great pitched battles, which they fought with the English; and that tho' they commonly declined , fuch engagements where the fuperiority of numbers was not on their fide: But never did they receive a more fatal blow than the prefent. They were broke and chaced off the field : Fifteen thousand of them, fome historians fay twenty thoufand, were flain; among whom were Edward Keith, earl Marefchal, and Sir Thomas Charteris chancellor : And the King himfelf was taken prifoner, with Captivity of the earls of Southerland, Fife, Monteith, Carric, lord Douglas, and many other the King of noblemen §. Scots.

PHILLIPPA, having fecured her royal prifoner in the Tower ||, croffed the fea at Dover; and was received in the English camp before Calais with all the triumph, which was due to her rank, her merit, and her fuccefs. This age was the reign of chivalry and gallantry : Edward's court excelled in these accomplishments as much as in policy and arms : And if any thing could justify the obfe-

* Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 137. † Froisfart, liv. 1. chap. 138. 1 Froisfart, liv. 1. § Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 139. chap. 138. || Rymer, vol. 5. p. 537. VOL. II. Dd quious

1346.

201

1340.

1347.

202

Chap. XV. quious devotion then professed to the fair fex, it must be the appearance of such extraordinary women as fhone forth during that period.

THE town of Calais had been defended with remarkable vigilance, constancy Calais taken. and bravery by the townsmen, during a siege of unufual length : But Philip, informed of their diftreft condition, determined at laft to attempt their relief; and he approached the English with an immense army, which the writers of that age make amount to 200,000 men. But he found Edward fo furrounded with morafles, and fecured by entrenchments, that without running on inevitable destruction, he concluded it impossible to make an attempt on the English camp. He had no other refource than to fend his rival a vain challenge to meet him in the open field; which being refused, he was obliged to decamp with his army, and difperfe them into their feveral provinces *.

> JOHN DE VIENNE, the governor of Calais, now faw the necessity of furrendering his fortrefs, which was reduced to the last extremity by famine and the fatigue of the inhabitants. He appeared on the walls, and made a fignal to the Englifh fentinels that he defired a conference. Sir Walter Manny was fent to him by Edward. " Brave knight," cried the governor, " I have been entrufted by my 44 fovereign with the command of this town : It is almost a year fince you be-" fieged me; and I have endeavoured, as well as those under me, to do our " duty. But you are acquainted with our prefent condition : We have no hopes " of relief; we are perifhing with hunger; I am willing therefore to furrender, " and defire, as the fole condition, to enfure the lives and liberties of these brave " men, who have fo long fhared with me every danger and fatigue +.

MANNY replied, that he was well acquainted with the King of England's intentions; that that prince was incenfed against the townsmen of Calais for their pertinacious refistance, and for the evils which they had made him and his fubjects fuffer; that he was determined to take exemplary vengeance of them; and would not receive the town on any conditions which should confine him in the punishment of these offenders. " Consider," replied Vienne, " that this is not " the treatment to which brave men are intitled : If any English knight had been " in my fituation, your King would have expected the fame conduct from him. " The inhabitants of Calais have done for their fovereign what merits the effeem--" of every prince; much more of fo gallant a prince as Edward. But I inform " you, that, if we must perifh, we shall not perifh unrevenged; and that we " are not yet fo reduced, but we can fell our lives at a high price to the vic-

* Froisfart, liv. t. chap. 144, 145. Avosbury, p. 161, 162. + Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 146. ce tors. tors. It is the intereft of both fides to prevent these desperate extremities; Chap. XV. " and I expect, that you yourfelf, brave knight, will interpose your good offices " with your prince in our behalf."

MANNY was ftruck with the justness of these fentiments, and represented to the King the danger of reprizals, if he fhould give fuch treatment to the inhabitants of Calais. Edward was at last perfuaded to mitigate the rigor of the conditions demanded : He only infifted, that fix of the most confiderable citizens fhould be fent him to be disposed of as he thought proper ; that they should come to his camp carrying the keys of the city in their hand, bareheaded and barefooted, with ropes about their necks : And on these conditions, he promised to spare the lives of all the remainder *.

WHEN this intelligence was conveyed to Calais, it ftruck the inhabitants with new confternation. To facrifice fix of their fellow citizens to certain destruction, for fignalizing their valour in a common caufe, appeared to them even more fevere than that general punishment, with which they were before threatened; and they found themfelves incapable of coming to any refolution in fo cruel and diffrefsful a fituation. At last one of the principal inhabitants called Eustace de St. Pierre, whofe name deferves to be recorded, stept forth, and declared himself willing to encounter death for the fafety of his friends and companions : Another, animated by his example, made a like generous offer : A third and a fourth prefented themfelves to the fame fate; and the whole number required was foon compleated. These fix heroic burgefles appeared before Edward in the guise of malefactors, laid at his feet the keys of their city, and were ordered to be led to execution. It is furprizing, that fo generous a prince should ever have entertained fuch a barbarous purpose against fuch men; and still more that he should feriously perfift in the refolution of executing it +. But the entreaties of his queen faved his memory from that infamy : She threw herfelf on her knees before him, and with tears in her eyes begged the lives of these citizens. Having obtained her request, fhe carried them into her tent, ordered a repast to be set before them, and after making them a prefent of money and cloaths, difinified them in fafety ‡.

THE King took poffeffion of Calais; and immediately executed an act of rigor, more justifiable becaufe more neceffary, than that which he had before re-He knew, that, notwithstanding his pretended title to the crown folved on.

120.07

Air

elie

TS C able amp.

Imi

army,

ider:

e fa Eng.

n by my be.

OUI opel

idel,

ran

17-heir

12

出

11

r.

1 T

> + This flory of the fix burghers of Calais, like all other extraordinary flories, is fomewhat to be fulpected; and fo much the more as Avefbury, p. 167, who is particular in his narration of the furrender of Calais, fays nothing of it; and on the contrary extols in general the King's generofity and le-‡ Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 146. nity to the inhabitants.

> > Dd 2

4th Aug.

of 1347-

203

^{*} Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 146.

1347.

1348.

204

Chap. XV. of France, every Frenchman regarded him as a mortal enemy; and he therefore ordered all the inhabitants of Calais to evacuate the town, and he peopled it anew with English; a policy which probably preferved fo long to his fucceffors the dominion of that important fortrefs. He made it the ftaple of wool, leather, tin, and lead; the four chief, if not the fole commodities of the kingdom, for which there was any demand in foreign markets. All the English were obliged to bring thither these goods : Foreign merchants came to the same place in order to purchase them : And at a period, when posts were not established, and when the communication between flates was fo imperfect, this inflitution, tho' it hurt the navigation of England, was perhaps of advantage to the kingdom.

THRO' the mediation of the Pope's legates, Edward concluded a truce with France; but even during this ceffation of arms, he had very nearly loft Calais, the fole fruit of all his boafted victories. The King had entrusted that place to the command of Aimery de Pavie, an Italian, who had discovered bravery and conduct in the wars, but was utterly devoid of every principle of honour and fidelity. This man agreed to deliver up Calais for the fum of 20,000 crowns; and Geoffrey de Charni, who commanded the French forces in those quarters, and who knew, that, if he fucceeded in this fervice, he should not be difavowed, ventured, without confulting his mafter, to conclude the bargain with him. Edward, informed of this treachery, by means of Aimery's fecretary, fummoned him over to London on other pretences; and having charged him with the guilt, promised him his life, but on condition, that he would turn the contrivance to the deftruction of the enemy. The Italian eafily agreed to this double treachery. A day was appointed for the admiffion of the French; and Edward, having prepared a force of about a thousand men, under fir Walter Manny, fecretly departed from London, carrying with him the prince of Wales; and without being suspected, arrived the evening before at Calais. He made a proper disposition for the reception of the enemy; and kept all his forces and the garrifon under arms. On the appearance of Charni, a chosen troop of French foldiers was admitted at the postern, and Aimery, receiving the stipulated fum, promised, that with their assistance he would immediately open the great gate to the army, who were waiting with impatience for the fulfilling of his engagement. All the French, who entered, were immediately flain or taken prifoners : The great gate opened : Edward rushed forth with cries of battle and of victory : The French, tho' aftonished at this Af January. event, behaved with valour : A fierce and bloody engagement enfued. As the morning broke, the King, who was not diftinguished by his arms, and who fought as a private man under the standard of sir Walter Manny, remarked a 8 French 1349.

E D W A R D III.

efore

anen

1e dav

1 th

Whit

ed II

er to

the

the

WE

e to

and

and ns;

rs,

ed,

Ed,

ned

the

TIVe

ble

rd, fe.

100

1-re

Tobio

French gentleman, called Eustace de Ribaumont, who exerted himself with fingu- Chap. XV. lar vigour and bravery; and he was feized with a defire of trying a fingle combat with him. He stept forth from his troop, and challenging Ribaumont by name, (for he was known to him) began a fharp and dangerous encounter. He was twice beat to the ground by the valour of the Frenchman : He twice recovered himfelf : Blows were redoubled with equal force on both fides : The victory was long undecided : Till Ribaumont, perceiving himfelf to be left almost alone, called out to his antagonist, Sir knight, I yield myfelf your prisoner; and at the fame time delivered his fword to the King. Most of the French, being overpowered by numbers, and intercepted in their retreat, were either flain or taken prisoners *.

THE French officers, who had fallen into the hands of the English, were conducted into Calais; where Edward discovered to them the antagonist with whom they had had the honour to be engaged, and treated them with great regard and courtefy. They were admitted to fup with the prince of Wales, and the English nobility; and after fupper, the King himfelf came into the apartment, and went about, conversing familiarly with one or other of his prisoners. He even addreffed himfelf in an obliging manner to Charni, and avoided reproaching him with the treacherous attempt, which he had made upon Calais during the truce : But he openly beftowed the higheft encomiums on Ribaumont; called him the most valorous knight whom he had ever been acquainted with; and confessed, that he had at no time been in fo great danger as when engaged in combat with him. He then took a ftring of pearl, which he wore about his own head, and throwing it over the head of Ribaumont, he faid to him, "Sir Euftace, I beftow " this prefent upon you, as a teftimony of my effeem for your bravery : And I " defire you to wear it a year for my fake : I know you to be gay and amorous; " and to take delight in the company of ladies and damfels : Let them all know " from what hand you had the prefent : You are no longer a prifoner ; I acquit " you of your ranfom; and you are at liberty to morrow to difpofe of yourfelf " as you think proper."

NOTHING can more evidently prove the vaft fuperiority of the nobility and gentry above all the other orders of men during those ages, than the extreme difference which Edward made in his treatment of these French knights, and that of the fix citizens of Calais, who had exerted much more fignal bravery in a caufe. much more juftifiable and more honourable.

* Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 140, 141, 142.

1349.

205

CHAP.

CHAP. XVI.

E D W A R D III.

Institution of the garter—State of France—Battle of Poictiers— Captivity of the King of France—State of that kingdom—Invafion of France—Peace of Bretigni—State of France—Expedition into Castile—Rupture with France—Ill success of the English—Death of the prince of Wales—Death—and character of the King—Miscellaneous transactions in this reign.

HE prudent conduct and great success of Edward in his foreign wars had excited a ftrong emulation and a military genius among the English nobility; and thefe turbulent barons, over-awed by the crown, gave now a more ufeful direction to their ambition, and attached themfelves to a prince, who led them to the acquifition of glory and of riches. That he might further promote the fpirit of emulation and obedience, the King inftituted the order of the garter, in imitation of fome orders of a like nature, religious as well as military, which had been eftablished in different countries of Europe. The number received into this order confifted of twenty-four perfons, befides the fovereign; and as it has never been enlarged, this badge of diffinction continues as honourable as at its first institution, and is still a valuable, tho' a cheap, prefent, which the prince can confer on his greatest subjects. A vulgar story prevails, but is not supported by any antient authority, that, at a court-ball, Edward's miftrefs, commonly fuppofed to be the countefs of Salifbury, dropt her garter; and the King, taking it up, obferved fome of the courtiers to fmile, as if he had not obtained this favour merely by accident : Upon which he called out, Honi foit qui mal y penfe, Evil to him that evil thinks; and as every incident of gallantry among thefe antient warriors was magnified into a matter of great importance *, he inflituted the

* There was a fingular inflance about this time of the prevalence of chivalry and gallanty in the nations of Europe. A folemn duel of thirty knights against thirty was fought between Bembrough, an Englishman, and Beaumanoir, a Breton, of the party of Charles de Blois. The knights of the two nations came into the field; and before the combat began, Beaumanoir called out, that it would be seen that day who had the fairess missing fress. After a bloody combat the Bretons prevailed; and gained for their prize, full liberty to boast of their missing beauty. It is remarkable, that two fuch famous generals as fir Robert Knolles, and fir Hugh Calverley, drew their fwords in this ridiculous contest. See Pere Daniel, vol. 2. p. 536, 537, &c. The women not only infligated the champions to these rough, if not bloody frays of tournament; but also frequented the tournaments during all the reign of Edward, whose fpirit of gallantry encouraged this practice. See Knyghton, p. 2597.

$349.

206

Inftitution of the garter.

order

EDWARD III.

order of the garter in memorial of this event, and gave these words as the motto Chap. XVI. of the order. This origin, tho' frivolous, is not unfuitable to the manners of the times; and it is indeed difficult by any other means to account either for the feemingly unmeaning terms of the motto, or for the peculiar badge of the garter, which feems to have no reference to any purpole either of military ule or ornament.

5-

Inn

Expe

Eng.

er of irs ha

nobi

e ule-

them

he for-T, IA

hich

linto

it has atili

e cai

d by lup.

1g Il

YOU

Enl

tien

th

inth

gh, a

OD 1

山

問制

病 ef

Bur a sudden damp was thrown over this feftivity and triumph of the court of England, by a deftructive peftilence, which invaded that kingdom as well as the reft of Europe; and is computed to have fwept away above a fourth of the inhabitants in every country, which it attacked. It was probably more fatal in great cities than in the country ; and above fifty thousand fouls are faid to have perished by it in London alone *. This malady difcovered itfelf first in the north of Afia, was fpread over all that country, made a progress from one end of Europe to another, and fenfibly depopulated every state thro' which it passed. So grievous a calamity, more than any cordiality among the princes, ferved to maintain and prolong the truce between France and England.

DURING this truce, Philip de Valois died, without being able to re-establish the affairs of France, which his bad fuccefs against England had thrown into the most extreme diforder. This monarch, during the first years of his reign, had obtained the appellation of Fortunate, and acquired the character of prudent; but he ill maintained either the one or the other; lefs from his own fault, than because he was over-matched by the superior fortune and superior genius of Edward. But the incidents in the reign of his fon, John, gave the French nation reason to regret even the calamitous times of his predecessor. John was distinguished by many virtues, particularly a scrupulous honour and fidelity : He was not deficient in perfonal courage : But as he wanted that mafterly prudence and forefight, which his difficult fituation required, his kingdom was at the fame time torn in pieces by inteftine commotions, and opprefied with foreign wars. The chief source of all its calamities, was Charles King of Navarre, who received the State of epithet of the bad or wicked, and whole actions fully entitled him to that appella-France. tion. This prince was defcended of the blood royal of France; his mother was a daughter of Lewis Hutin; he had himfelf espoused a daughter of King John: But all thefe ties, which ought to have connected him with the throne, gave him only greater ability to shake and over throw it. In his personal qualities, he was * Stow's Survey, p. 478. There were buried 50,000 bodies in one church-yard, which fir Walter. Manny had bought for the use of the poor. The fame author says, that there died above 50,000 perfons of the plague in Norwich, which is quite incredible.

207

1349.

13500

1354

courteous

1854.

208

Chap. XVI. courteous, affable, engaging, eloquent; full of infinuation and addrefs; inexhauftible in his refources; active and enterprizing. But thefe fplendid accomplifhments were at the fame time attended with fuch defects, as rendered them pernicious to his country, and even ruinous to himfelf : He was fickle, inconftant, faithlefs, revengeful, malicious : Reftrained by no principle or duty : Infatiable in his pretenfions : And whether fuccessful or unfortunate in one enterprize, he immediately undertook another, in which he was never deterred from employing the most criminal and most dishonourable expedients.

> THE conftable, d'Eu, who had been taken prisoner by Edward at Caen, recovered his liberty, on the promife of delivering to that prince, as his ranfom, the town of Ghisnes, near Calais, of which he was superior lord : But as John was offended at this stipulation, which, if fulfilled, opened still farther that frontier to the enemy, and as he fuspected the constable of more dangerous connexions with the King of England, he ordered him to be feized, and without any legal or formal trial, put him to death in prifon. Charles de la Cerda was appointed conftable in his place; and had a like fatal end: The King of Navarre ordered him to be affaffinated; and fuch was the weaknefs of the crown, that this prince, inftead of dreading punifhment, would not fo much as agree to alk pardon for his offence, but on condition, that he received an acceffion of territory, and had John's fecond fon put into his hands, as a fecurity for his perfon, when he came to court, and performed this act of mock penitence and humiliation before King John *.

1355.

THE two French princes feemed entirely reconciled; but this diffimulation, to which John fubmitted from necessity, and Charles from habit, did not long continue; and the King of Navarre knew, that he had reafon to apprehend the moft fevere vengeance for the many crimes and treafons which he had already committed, and the still greater, which he intended to commit. To enfure himself of protection, he entered into a fecret correspondence with England, by means of Henry earl of Derby, now earl of Lancaster, who at that time was employed in fruitless negotiations for peace in Avignon, under the mediation of the Pope. John discovered this correspondence; and to prevent the fatal effects of it, he fent down forces into Normandy, the chief feat of the King of Navarre's power, and attacked his caftles and fortreffes. But hearing that Edward had prepared an army to fupport his ally, he had the weakness to propose an accommodation with Charles, and even to give this traiterous subject the sum of an hundred thousand crowns, as the purchase of a seigned reconcilement, which rendered him still more dangerous. The

* Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 144.

King

EDWARD III.

King of Navarre, infolent from past impunity, and desperate from the dangers, Chap. XVI. which he apprehended, continued still his intrigues; and affociating himself with Geoffrey de Harcourt, who had received his pardon from Philip de Valois, but perfevered still in his factious dispositions, he encreased the number of his partizans in every part of the kingdom. He even feduced by his addrefs, Charles, the King of France's eldeft fon, a youth of feventeen years of age, who was the first that bore the appellation of Dauphin, by the re-union of the province of Dauphiny to the crown. But this prince, being made fenfible of the danger and folly of these connexions, promifed to make atonement for the offence by the facrifice of his affociates; and in concert with his father, he invited the King of Navarre, and other noblemen of the party, to a feast at Rouen, where they were betrayed into the hands of John. Some of the most obnoxious were immediately led to execution; the King of Navarre was thrown into prifon *: But this ftroke of feverity in the King, and of treachery in the Dauphin, was far from proving decifive in maintaining the royal authority. Philip of Navarre, brother to Charles, and Geoffrey d'Harcourt, put all the towns and caftles belonging to that prince in a posture of defence; and had immediate recourse to the protection of England in this desperate extremity.

THE truce between the two kingdoms, which had always been very ill observed on both fides, was now expired; and Edward was entirely free to fupport the French malecontents. Well pleafed, that the factions in France had at last gained him fome partizans in that kingdom, which his pretenfions to the crown had never been able to procure him, he proposed to attack his enemy both on the fide of Guienne, under the command of the prince of Wales, and on that of Calais, in his own person.

Young Edward arrived in the Garonne with his army, on board a fleet of three hundred fail, attended by the earls of Warwic, Salifbury, Oxford, Suffolk, and other English noblemen. Being joined by the vassals of Gascony, he took the field; and as the prefent diforders in John's affairs prevented every proper plan of defence, he carried on with impunity his ravages and devastations, according to the mode of war in that age. He reduced all the villages and feveral towns in Languedoc to ashes : He presented himself before Tholouse; passed the Garronne, and burned the fuburbs of Carcaffonne; advanced even to Narbonne, laying every thing wafte around him: And after an incursion of fix weeks, returned with a vast booty and many prisoners to Guienne, where he took up his winter quarters +. The constable of Bourbon, who commanded in those provinces, received orders,

* Froisfart, liv. 1. chap. 146. Avesbury, p. 243. + Froisfart, liv. 1. chap, 144, 146. VOL. II. Ee though 1355.

209

1355.

210

Chap. XVI. though at the head of a superior army, on no account to run the hazard of a battle.

> THE King of England's incursion from Calais was of the fame nature, and attended with the fame iffue. He broke into France at the head of a numerous army ; to whom he gave a full licence of plundering and ravaging the open country. He advanced to St. Omer, where the King of France was posted; and on the retreat of that prince, followed him to Hefdin *. John still kept at a diftance, and declined an engagement: But in order to fave his reputation, he fent Edward a challenge to fight a pitched battle with him; an usual bravado in that age, derived from the practice of fingle combat, and ridiculous in the art of war. The King, finding no fincerity in this defiance, retired to Calais, and thence went over to England, in order to defend that kingdom against a threatened invafion of the Scots.

> THE Scots, taking advantage of the King's abfence, and that of the military power of England, had furprized Berwic; and had collected an army with a view of entering and committing ravages upon the northern provinces : But on the approach of Edward, they abandoned that place, which was not tenable, while the caftle was in the hands of the English; and retiring to their mountains, gave the enemy a full liberty of burning and deftroying the whole country from Berwic to Edinburgh +: Baliol attended Edward on this expedition; but finding, that his conftant adherence to the English had given his countrymen an unconquerable averfion to his title, and that he himfelf was declining through age and infirmities, he finally refigned into the King's hands his pretenfions to the crown of Scotland ‡, and received in lieu of them, an annual pension of 2000 pounds, with which he paffed the remainder of his life in privacy and retirement.

> DURING these military operations, Edward received information of the encreasing diforders in France, arifing from the feizure of the King of Navarre; and he fent Lancaster at the head of a small army, to support his partizans in Normandy. The war was conducted with various fuccefs; but chiefly to the difadvantage of the French malecontents; till an important event happened in the other quarter of the kingdom, which had well nigh proved fatal to the monarchy of France, and threw every thing into the utmost confusion.

$356.

THE prince of Wales, encouraged by the fuccefs of the preceding campaign, took the field with an army, which no hiftorian makes amount to above 12,000 men,

* Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 144. Avesbury, p. 206. Walfing. p. 171. + Walfing. p. 171. ‡ Rymer, vol. 5. p. 823. Ypod Neuft. p. 521.

E D W A R D III.

men, and of which not a third were English ; and with this small body, he ven- Chap. XVI. tured to penetrate into the heart of France. After ravaging the Agenois, Quercy, and the Limoufin, he entered the province of Berry ; and made fome attacks, tho' without fuccefs, on the towns of Bourges and Iffoudun. It appeared, that his intentions were to march into Normandy, and join his forces to those of the duke of Lancaster, and the partizans of the King of Navarre; but finding all the bridges on the Loire broke down, and every pafs carefully guarded, he was obliged to think of making his retreat into Guienne *. He found this refolution the more neceffary, from the intelligence which he received of the King of France's motions. That monarch, provoked at the infult offered him by this incursion, and entertaining hopes of fuccess from the young prince's temerity, collected a great army of above 60,000 men, and advanced with hafty marches to intercept his enemy. The prince, not aware of John's near approach, loft fome days, on his retreat, before the caftle of Remorantin +; and thereby gave the French an opportunity of overtaking him. They came within fight at Mau- Battle of Poicpertuis near Poictiers; and Edward, fenfible that his retreat was now become im- tiers. practicable, prepared for battle with all the courage of a young hero, and with all the prudence of the oldeft and most experienced commander.

But the utmost prudence and courage would have proved infufficient to fave him in this extremity, had the King of France known how to make use of his prefent advantages. His vaft fuperiority in numbers enabled him to furround the enemy; and by intercepting all their provisions, which were already become fcarce in the English camp, to reduce this small army, without a blow, to the necessity of furrendering at difcretion. But fuch was the impatient ardour of the French nobility, and fo much had their thoughts been bent on overtaking the English as their fole object, that this idea never ftruck any of the commanders ; and they immediately prepared themfelves for the affault, as for a certain victory. While the French army was drawn up in order of battle, they were flopped by the appearance of the cardinal of Perigord ; who, having learned the approach of the two armies to each other, had haftened, by interpoling his good offices, to prevent any farther effusion of Christian blood. By John's permission, he carried propofals to the prince of Wales; and found him fo fenfible of the bad pofture of his affairs, that an accommodation feemed not impracticable. Edward told him, that he would agree to any terms confiftent with his own honour and that of England; and he offered to purchase a retreat by refigning all the conquests, which he had made during this and the former campaign, and by ftipulating not to ferve against France during the courfe of feven years. But John, imagining that he had

* Walfing. p. 171.

+ Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 158. Walfing. p. 171. Ec2

211

1356.

now

212

Chap. XVI. now got into his hands a fufficient pledge for the reftitution of Calais, required that Edward should surrender himself prisoner with an hundred of his attendants ; and offered on these terms a safe retreat to the English army. The prince rejected the propolal with dildain; and declared, that whatever fortune should attend him, England should never be obliged to pay the price of his ransom. This refolute answer cut off all hopes of accommodation; but as the day was already spent in negociating, the battle was delayed till the next morning *.

igth Sept.

THE cardinal of Perigord, as all the prelates of the court of Rome, was extremely attached to the French caufe; but the most determined enemy could not have contrived a greater prejudice to John's affairs, than he did them by this delay. The prince of Wales had leifure, during the night, to ftrengthen, by new entrenchments, the post which he had before so judiciously chosen; and he contrived an ambush of 300 men at arms, and as many archers, whom he put under the command of the Captal de Buche, and ordered to make a circuit, that they might fall on the flank or rear of the French army during the engagement. The van of his army was commanded by the earl of Warwic, the rear by the earls of Salifbury and Suffolk, the main body by the prince himfelf. The lords Chandos, Audeley, and many other brave and experienced commanders, were at the head of different corps of his army.

JOHN also arranged his forces in three divisions, nearly equal: The first was commanded by the duke of Orleans, the King's brother ; the fecond by the Dauphin attended with his two younger brothers; the third by the King himfelf, who had by his fide Philip his fourth fon and favourite, then about fourteen years of age. There was no reaching the English army but thro' a narrow lane, covered on each fide by hedges; and in order to open this paffage, the mareschals, Andrehen and Clermont, were ordered to advance with a separate detachment of men at arms. While they marched along the lane, a body of Englifh archers, who lined the hedges, plyed them on each fide with their arrows ; and being very near them, yet placed in perfect fafety, they coolly took their aim. against the enemy, and massacred them with impunity. The French detachment, much difcouraged with the unequal fight, and diminished in their number, arrived at the end of the lane, where they met on the open grounds the prince of Wales himfelf, at the head of a chosen body, ready for their reception. They were difcomfited and overthrown : One of the marefchals was flain ; another taken prifoner : And the remainder of the detachment, who were still in the lane, and exposed to the shot of the enemy, without being able to make resistance,

* Froisfart, liv. 1. chap. 161.

2

EDWARD III.

ance, recoiled upon their own army, and put every thing into diforder *. In Chap. XVI. that critical moment, the Captal de Buche unexpectedly appeared, and attacked in flank the Dauphin's line, which fell into fome confusion. Landas, Bodenai and St. Venant, to whom the care of that young prince and his brothers had been committed, too anxious for their charge or for their own fafety, carried them off the field to Chauvigny, and fet the example of flight, which was followed, by that whole division. The duke of Orleans, feized with a like panic, and imagining all was loft, thought no longer of fighting, but carried off his division by a retreat, which foon turned alfo into a flight. The lord Chandos called out to the prince, that the day was won; and encouraged him to attack the division, under King John, which, tho' more numerous than the whole English army, were somewhat dismayed with the precipitate flight of their companions. John here made the utmost efforts to retrieve by his valour, what his imprudence had betrayed; and the only refiftance made that day was by his line of battle. The prince of Wales fell with impetuofity on fome German cavalry placed in the front, and commanded by the counts of Sallebruche, Nydo, and Nofto : A fierce battle enfued : The one fide were encouraged by the near profpect of fo great a victory : The other fide were retained by the fhame of quitting the field to an enemy fo much inferior : But the three German generals, together with the duke of Athens, conftable of France, falling in battle, that body of cavalry gave way, and left the King himfelf exposed to the whole fury of the enemy. The ranks were every moment thinned around him : The nobles, fell by his fide, one after another : His fon, scarce fourteen years of age, received a wound, while he was fighting valiantly in defence of his father : The King himfelf, fpent with fatigue, and overwhelmed by numbers, might eafily have been difpatched; but every English gentleman, ambitious of taking alive the royal prisoner, spared him in the action, called to him to furrender himfelf, and offered him quarter : Several, who attempted to feize him, fuffered for their temerity. He still cried out, Where is my coufin, the prince of Wales; and feemed unwilling to become prifoner to any perfon of inferior rank. But being told, that the prince was at a Captivity of great diftance on the field, he threw down his gauntlet, and yielded himfelf to the King of Dennis de Morbec, a knight of Arras, who had been obliged to fly his country for murder. His fon was taken with him +.

France.

THE prince of Wales, who had been carried away in purfuit of the flying enemy, finding the field entirely clear, had ordered a tent to be pitched, and was reposing himself after the toils of battle; enquiring still with great anxiety concerning the fate of the French monarch. He dispatched the earl of Warwic to

* Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 162. + Rymer, vol. 6. p. 72, 154. Froisfart, liv. 1. chap. 164. bring 213

13,56.

1356.

214

Chap. XVI. bring him intelligence, and that nobleman came happily in time to fave the life of the captive prince, which was exposed to greater danger than it had been during the heat of action. The English had taken him by violence from Morbec : The Gafcons claimed the honour of detaining the prisoner : And some brutal foldiers, rather than yield the prize to their rivals, had threatened to put him to death *. Warwic overawed both parties, and approaching the King with great demonstrations of respect, offered to conduct him to the prince's tent.

HERE commences the real and truly admirable heroifm of Edward : For victories are vulgar things in comparison of that moderation and humanity discovered by a young prince of twenty feven years of age, not yet cooled from the fury of battle, and elated by as extraordinary and as unexpected fuccefs as had ever crowned the arms of any general. He came forth to meet the captive King with all the figns of regard and fympathy; administered comfort to him amidst his misfortunes; paid him the tribute of praise due to his valour; and ascribed his own victory merely to the blind chance of war or to a fuperior providence, which controuls all the efforts of human force and prudence +. The behaviour of John fhowed him not unworthy of this courteous treatment : His prefent abject fortune never made him forget a moment that he was a King : More fenfible to Edward's generofity than to his own calamities, he confessed, that, notwithftanding his defeat and captivity, his honour was still unimpaired; and that, if he yielded the victory, it was at least gained by a prince of fuch confummate valour and humanity.

EDWARD ordered a magnificent repart to be prepared in his tent for the prifoners; and he himfelf ferved the royal captive's table, as if he had been one of his retinue : He flood at the King's back during the meal ; conftantly refufed to take a place at table; and declared, that, being a fubject, he was too well acquainted with the diftance between his own rank, and that of royal majefty, to affume fuch freedom. All his father's pretenfions to the crown of France were now buried in oblivion : John in captivity received the honours of a King, which were refused him, when feated on the throne : His misfortunes, not his title, were refpected: And the French prisoners, conquered by this elevation of mind, more than by their late discomfiture, burst out into tears of joy and admiration; which were only checked by the reflection, that fuch genuine and unaltered heroifm in an enemy must certainly in the iffue prove but the more dangerous to their native country 1.

* Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 164. + Paull. Œmil. p. 197. ‡ Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 168.

ALL

E D W A R D III.

ALL the English and Gascon knights imitated the generous example set them Chap. XVI. by their prince. The captives were every where treated with humanity, and were foon after difmiffed on paying moderate ranfoms to the perfons into whofe hands they had fallen. The extent of their fortunes was confidered, and no more was exacted of them than what would still leave them fufficient to enable them, for the future, to perform their military fervice in a manner fuitable to their rank and quality. Yet fo numerous were the noble prisoners, that these ransons, joined to the spoils of the field, were sufficient to enrich the prince's army; and as they had fuffered very little in the action, their joy and exultation was compleat.

h

TE

lie

er.

ry

W

DÊ

Ŵ

00

)/-

1.

THE prince of Wales conducted his prisoner to Bourdeaux ; and not being provided of forces fo numerous as might enable him to push his prefent advantages, he concluded a two years truce with France *, which was also become requilite, that he might conduct the captive King with fafety into England. He landed 24th May. at Southwark, and was met by a prodigious concourse of people, of all ranks and stations. The prisoner was clad in royal apparel, and mounted on a white fteed, diffinguished by its fize and beauty, and by the richness of its furniture. The conqueror rode by his fide in a meaner attire, and carried by a black palfry. In this fituation, much more glorious than all the infolent parade of a Roman triumph, he paffed thro' the ftreets of London, and prefented the King of France to his father, who advanced to meet him, and received him with the fame courtefy, as if he had been a neighbouring potentate, who had voluntarily come to pay him a friendly vifit +. It is impossible, in reflecting on this noble conduct, not to perceive the advantages which refulted from the otherwife whimfical principles of chivalry, and which gave men in those rude times fome fuperiority even over people of a more cultivated age and nation.

THE King of France, befides the generous treatment which he met with in England, had the melancholy confolation of the wretched, to fee their companions in affliction. The King of Scots had been eleven years a captive in Edward's hands; and the good fortune of this monarch had reduced at once the two neighbouring potentates, with whom he was engaged in war, to be prifoners in his capital. But Edward, finding that the conquest of Scotland was no wife advanced by the captivity of its fovereign, and that the government, conducted by Robert Stuart, his heir and nephew, was still able to defend itself, confented to reftore David Bruce to his liberty, for the ranfom of 100,000 marks fterling ; and that prince delivered the fons of all his principal nobility, as hoftages for the payment 1.

* Rymer, vol. 6. p. 3. + Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 173. 46, 52, 56. Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 174. Walfingham, p. 173.

‡ Rymer, vol. 6. p. 45, MEANWHILE 1356.

215

Chap. XVI. 1358. State of France. 216

MEANWHILE, the captivity of John, joined to the preceding diforders of the French government, had produced in that country a diffolution, almost total, of civil authority, and had occafioned confusions, the most horrible and destructive, which had ever been experienced in any age or in any nation. The Dauphin, now about eighteen years of age, naturally affumed the royal power during his father's captivity; but tho' endowed with excellent abilities, even in fuch early years, he possessed neither the experience nor authority requisite to defend a state, affailed at once by foreign power and shaken by internal factions. In order to obtain supply, he affembled the states of the kingdom : That affembly, instead of fupporting his administration, were themselves seized with the spirit of confufion, and laid hold of the prefent opportunity to demand limitations of the prince's power, the punishment of past malversations, and the liberty of the King of Navarre. Marcel, provost of the merchants and first magistrate of Paris, put himfelf at the head of the unruly populace ; and from the violence and temerity of his character, pushed them to commit the most criminal outrages against the royal authority. They detained the Dauphin in a fort of captivity; they murdered in his presence Robert de Clermont and John de Conflans, mareschals of France ; they threatened all the other ministers with a like fate ; and when Charles, who was obliged to temporize and diffemble, made his escape from their hands, they levied war against him, and openly crected the standard of rebellion. The other cities of the kingdom, in imitation of the capital, shook off the Dauphin's authority; took the government into their own hands; and fpread the diforder into every province. The nobles, whole inclinations led them to adhere to the crown, and were naturally disposed to check these tumults, had lost all their influence; and being reproached with cowardice on account of the base defertion of their fovereign in the battle of Poictiers, were treated with univerfal contempt by the inferior orders. The troops, who, from the deficiency of pay, were no longer retained in discipline, threw off all regard to their officers, sought the means of subsistance by pillage and robbery, and affociating to them all the diforderly people, with which that age abounded, formed numerous bands, which infefted all quarters of the kingdom. They laid the open country defolate; burned and plundered the villages; and by cutting off all means of communication or fubfiftence, reduced even the inhabitants of the walled towns to the most extreme necessity. The peafants, formerly oppressed, and now left unprotected, by their masters, became defperate from their prefent mifery; and rifing every where in arms, carried to the last extremity those disorders, which were derived from the sedition of the citizens and difbanded foldiers *. The gentry, hated for their tyranny, were every where

* Froiffart, liv, 1. chap. 182, 183, 184.

exposed

DWARD III. E

exposed to the violence of popular rage; and instead of meeting with regard for Chap. XVI. their paft dignity, became only, on that account, the object of more wanton infult to the mutinous peafants. They were hunted like wild beafts, and put to the fword without mercy : Their castles were confumed with fire, and levelled to the ground : Their wives and daughters were first ravished, and then murdered : The favages proceeded fo far as to impale fome gentlemen, and roaft them alive before a flow fire : A body of nine thousand of them broke into Meaux, where the wife of the Dauphin with above 300 ladies had taken shelter: The most brutal treatment and most atrocious cruelty were justly dreaded by this helpless company : But the Captal de Buche, tho' in the fervice of Edward, yet moved by generofity and by the gallantry of a true knight, flew to their relief, and beat off the pealants with great flaughter. In other civil wars, the oppofite factions, falling under the government of their feveral leaders, commonly preferve still the veftige of fome rule and order : But here the wild ftate of nature feemed to be renewed: Every man was thrown loofe and independant from his fellows: And the great multitude of people, which had arifen from the preceding police of civil fociety; ferved only to encrease the horrour and confusion of the scene.

AMIDST these diforders, the King of Navarre made his escape from prison, and prefented a dangerous leader to the furious malecontents *. But the fplendiditalents of this prince qualified him only to do mifchief, and to encreafe the public confusions : He wanted the steddiness and prudence requisite for making his intrigues subservient to his ambition, and forming his numerous partizans into a regular faction. He revived his pretensions, somewhat obsolete, to the crown of France; and indeed, if female fucceffion was to be admitted, his mother, the daughter of Lewis Hutin, brought him undoubtedly the only lawful title, and ftood before Habella, the mother of Edward, in the course of defcent. But while he advanced this claim, he relied entirely on his alliance with the English, who were concerned in interest to disappoint his pretensions, and who, being public and inveterate enemies to the flate, ferved only, by the friendship which they seemingly bore him, to render his caufe the more odious. And in all his operations, he acted more like a leader of banditti, than one who aspired to be the head of a regular government, and who was engaged by his flation to endeavour the re-eftablifhment of order in the community.

THE eyes, therefore, of all the French, who wished to reftore peace to their miferable and defolated country, were turned towards the Dauphin; and that

VOL. IL.

the

ingli

Aa

er

Atea

Infi

ince

ing 5. P ity

加 rle

180

T

10

h

* Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 181. Ff young 1358.

217

1358.

218

Chap. XVI. young prince, tho' not remarkable for his military talents, poffeffed fo much prudence and fpirit, that he gained daily the afcendant over all his enemies. Marcel, the feditious provoft, was flain, while he was attempting to deliver the city to the King of Navarre and the English; and the capital immediately returned to its duty *. The most confiderable bodies of the mutinous peafants were diffipated, and put to the fword : Some bands of military robbers underwent the fame fate: And tho' many grievous diforders still remained, France began gradually to affume the face of a regular civil government, and to form fome plan for its defence and fecurity.

> DURING the confusion in the Dauphin's affairs, Edward seemed to have a favourable opportunity of pushing his conquests : But besides that his hands were tied by the truce, and he could only affift underhand the faction of Navarre; the ftate of the English finances and military power during those ages rendered the kingdom incapable of making any regular or fleddy effort, and obliged it to exert its force at very diftant intervals, by which all the projected ends were commonly difappointed. Edward employed himfelf, during a conjuncture fo inviting, chiefly in negotiations with his prifoner; and John had the weaknefs to fign terms of peace, which, had they taken effect, must have totally ruined and difmembered his kingdom. He agreed to reftore all the provinces, which had been poffeffed by Henry II. and his two fons, and to annex them for ever to England without any obligation of homage or fealty on the part of the Englifh monarch. But the Dauphin and the flates of France rejected this treaty, fo diffionourable and pernicious to the kingdom +; and Edward, on the expiration of the truce, having now, by fublidies and frugality, collected fome treafure, prepared himfelf for a new invalion of France.

> THE great authority and renown of the King and the prince of Wales, the fplendid fuccefs of their former enterprizes, and the certain profpect of plunder from the defenceless provinces of France, soon brought together all the military power of England; and the fame motives invited to Edward's standard all the hardy adventurers of the different countries of Europe t. He paffed over to Calais with an army of 100,000 men; a force, which the Dauphin could not pretend to withstand in the open field: And he therefore prepared himself to elude a blow, which it was impossible for him to refist. He put all the confiderable towns in a pofture of defence; ordered them to be fupplied with magazines and provisions; diffributed proper garrifons in all places; fecured every thing

* Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 187. + Froisfart, liv. 1. chap. 201. 1 Froisfart, liv. 1. chap. 205. valuable

EDWARD IM.

CC

m

k

valuable in the fortified cities : and chofe his own flation at Paris, with a view of Chap. XVI. allowing the enemy to wafte their fury on the open country.

THE King, aware of this plan of defence, was obliged to carry along with him 1359. fix thousand waggons loaded with the provisions necessary for the subsistance of 4th Novr. his army. After ravaging the province of Picardy, he advanced into Cham-France. pagne; and having a ftrong defire of being crowned King of France at Rheims, the ufual place in which that ceremony is performed, he laid fiege to the city, and carried on his attacks, tho' without fuccefs, for the fpace of feven weeks *. The place was bravely defended by the inhabitants, encouraged by the exhortations of the archbishop, John de Craon; till the advanced feason (for this expedition was en-1360. tered upon in the beginning of winter) obliged the King to raife the fiege. The province of Champagne, meanwhile, was laid defolate by his incurfions; and he thence conducted his army, with a like intent into Burgundy. He took and pillaged Tonnerre, Gaillon, Avalon, and other fmall places; but the duke of Burgundy, that he might preferve his country from farther ravages, confented to pay him the fum of 100,000 nobles +. Edward then bent his march towards the Nivernois, which faved itfelf by a like composition : He laid wafte the Brie and the Gatinois; and after a long march, very deftructive to France, and fomewhat ruinous to his own troops, he appeared before the gates of Paris, and taking up his quarters at Bourg-la-Reine, extended his army to Long-jumeau, Mont-rouge and Vaugirard. He tried to provoke the Dauphin to hazard a battle, by fending him a defiance; but could not make that prudent prince change his plan of operations. Paris was fafe from the danger of an affault by its numerous garrifon; from that of a blockade by its well supplied magazines; and as Edward could not subfift his own army in a country, wasted by foreign and domestic enemies, and left alfo empty by the precaution of the Dauphin, he was obliged to remove his quarters, and he fpread his army into the provinces of Maine, Beauffe, and the Chartraine, which were abandoned to the fury of their devastations ‡. The only repofe which France experienced was during the feftival of Eafter, when the King ftopped the courfe of his ravages. For superfition can sometimes restrain the rage of man, which neither justice nor humanity is able to controul.

WHILE the war was carried on in this ruinous manner, the negotiations for peace were never interrupted: But as the King still infissed on the full execution of the treaty, which he had made with his prisoner at London, and which was strenuously rejected by the Dauphin, there appeared no likelihood of an accom-

* Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 208. Walfingham, p. 174. † Rymer, vol. 6. p. 161. Walfingham, p. 174. ‡ Walfingham, p. 175.

Ff2

moda-

219

1360.

220

Chap. XVI. modation. The earl, now duke of Lancaster (for this title was introduced into England during the prefent reign) endeavoured to foften the rigor of these terms, and to terminate the war on more equal and reasonable conditions. He infifted with Edward, that, notwithstanding his great and furprizing fucceffes, the object of the war, if fuch was to be efteemed the acquilition of the crown of France, was not become any nearer than at the commencement of it; or rather, was fet at a greater diftance by those very victories and advantages, which feemed to lead to it. That his claim of fucceffion had not from the first procured him one partizan in the kingdom; and the continuance of these destructive hostilities had united every Frenchman in the most implacable animofity against him. That tho' inteffine faction had crept into the government of France, it was abating every moment; and no party, even during the greatest heat of the contest, when fubjection under a foreign enemy ufually appears preferable to the dominion of fellow citizens, had ever adopted the pretentions of the King of England. That the King of Navarre himfelf, who alone was allied with the English, instead of being a cordial friend, was Edward's most dangerous rival, and in the opinion of his partizans appeared to poffefs a much preferable title to the crown of France. That the prolongation of the war, however it might enrich the English foldiers, was ruinous to the King himself, who bore all the charges of the armament, without reaping any folid or durable advantage from thence. That if the prefent diforders of France continued, that kingdom would foon be reduced to fuch defolation as to afford no fpoils to its ravagers; if it could establish a more steady government, it might turn the chance of war in its favour, and by its fuperior force and advantages be able to repel the prefent victors. That the Dauphin, even during his greatest distresses, had yet conducted himself with fo much prudence as to prevent the English from acquiring one foot of land in the kingdom; and it were better for the King to accept by a peace what he had in vain attempted to acquire by hostilities, which, however hitherto fuccessful, had been extremely expensive, and might prove very dangerous. And that Edward having acquired fo much glory by his arms, the praife of moderation was the only honour, which he could now afpire to; an honour fo much the greater, that it was durable, was united with that of prudence, and might be attended with the most real advantages +.

Peace of Brengni.

4

THESE reafons induced Edward to accept of more equitable terms of peace; and it is probable, that, in order to palliate this change of refolution, he afcribed it to a vow, made during a terrible tempest which attacked his army on their march, and which the antient hiftorians represent as the cause of this fudden ac-

* Froisfart, liv. 1. chap. 211.

com-

EDWARD III.

Inte

T

0 ance

s le lead

ar.

ad

at

at.

eft,

10

Id,

20 0

lat

25

commodation *. The conferences between the English and French commissioners Chap. XVI. were carried on during a few days at Bretigni in the Chartraine, and the peace was at laft concluded on the following conditions +: It was flipulated, that King John fhould be reftored to his liberty, and fhould pay as his ranfom three millions of crowns of gold, about 1,500,000 pounds of our prefent money 1; which was to be discharged at different payments : That Edward should for ever renounce all claim to the crown of France, and to the provinces of Normandy, Maine, Touraine, and Anjou, poffeffed by his anceftors; and fhould receive in exchange the provinces of Poictou, Xaintonge, l'Agenois, Perigort, the Limoufin, Quercy, Rovergue, l'Angoumois, and other districts in that quarter, together with Calais, Guisnes, Montreuil, and the county of Ponthieu, on the other fide of France : That the full fovereignty of all these provinces, as well as that of Guienne, should be vefted in the crown of England, and that France should renounce all title to feudal jurisdiction, homage, or appeal from them : That the King of Navarre fhould be reftored to all his honours and poffeffions: That Edward should renounce his confederacy with the Flemish, John his connexions with the Scots : That the difputes concerning the fucceffion of Brittany, between the families of Blois and Mountfort, should be decided by arbiters, appointed by the two Kings, and if the competitors refufed to fubmit to the fentence, the difpute should no longer be a ground of war between the kingdoms : And that forty hoftages, fuch as fhould be agreed on, should be fent to England as a fecurity for the execution of all these conditions §.

In confequence of this treaty of peace, the King of France was brought over to Calais; whither Edward alfo foon after arrived : And both princes there folemnly

* Froiffart, liv. r. chap. 211. + Rymer, vol. 6. p. 178. Froisfart, liv. 1. chap. 212.

‡ This is a prodigious fum, and probably near the half of what the King received from the parliament during the whole course of his reign. It must be remarked, that a tenth and fifteenth (which was always thought a high grant) were, in the eighth year of his reign, fixed at about 29,000 pounds : There were about 30,000 facks of wool exported every year : A fack of wool was at a medium fold for five pounds. Upon these suppositions it would be easy to compute all the parliamentary grants, taking the lift as they fland in Tyrrel, vol. 3. p. 780 : Tho' much must fill be left to conjecture. This King levied more money from his fubjects than any of his predecessors; and the parliament frequently complain of the poverty of the people, and the oppreffions under which they laboured. But it is to be remarked, that the half of the French King's ranfom was not paid before the war broke out between the two crowns : His fon chose rather to employ the money in combating the English, than in enriching them. See Rymer, vol. 8. p. 315.

§ The hoftages were the two fons of the French King, John and Lewis; his brother Philip duke of Orleans, the duke of Bourbon, James de Bourbon count de Ponthieu, the counts d'Eu, de Longueville, de St. Pol, de Harcourt, de Vendome, de Couci, de Craon, de Montmorenci, and many of the chief nobility of France. The princes were mostly released on the fulfilling of certain articles : Others of the hoftages, and the duke of Berry among the reft, were permitted to return upon their parole, which they did not keep. Rymer, vol. 6. p. 278, 285, 287.

1360.

221

Sth May.

8th July.

ratified

Chap: XVI. 1360.

1363.

1364.

8th April.

222 ratified the treaty. John was fent to Boulogne; the King accompanied him a mile in his journey; and the two monarchs parted, with many professions, probably cordial and fincere, of mutual friendship and amity *. The good disposition of John made him fully fenfible of the generous treatment which he had met with in England, and obliterated all memory of the afcendant gained over him by his rival. There feldom has been a treaty of fo great importance fo faithfully executed by both parties. Edward had fcarcely from the beginning entertained any hopes of acquiring the crown of France : By reftoring John to his liberty, and making peace at a juncture fo favourable to his arms, he had now plainly renounced all pretenfions of this nature: He had fold at a very high price that chimerical claim : And had at prefent no other interest than to retain those acquifitions which he had made with fuch fingular prudence and good fortune. John, on the other hand, tho' the terms were fevere and rigorous upon him, poffeffed fuch fidelity and honour, that he was determined at all hazards to execute them; and to use every expedient for fatisfying a monarch, who had indeed been his greatest political enemy, but had treated him perfonally with fingular humanity and regard. But, notwithstanding all his endeavours, there occurred many difficulties in fulfilling his purpose; chiefly from the extreme reluctance, which many towns and vaffals in the neighbourhood of Guienne, expressed against fubmitting to the English dominion +; and John, in order to adjust these differences, took a resolution of coming over himfelf into England. His council endeavoured to diffuade him from this rafh defign ; and probably would have been pleafed to fee him employ more chicanery, for eluding the execution of fo difadvantageous a treaty : But John replied to them, that, tho' good faith were banished from the rest of the earth, she ought still to retain her habitation in the breasts of princes. Some historians would detract from the merit of this honourable behaviour, by reprefenting John as enamoured of an English lady, to whom he was glad, on this pretence, to pay a visit: But befides, that this furmize is not founded on any good authority, it appears very unlikely on account of the advanced age of that prince, who was now in his fifty-fixth year. He was lodged in the Savoy; the palace where he had refided during his captivity, and where he foon after fickened and died. Nothing can be a ftronger proof of the great dominion of fortune over men, than the calamities which purfued a monarch of fuch eminent valour, goodnefs and honour, and which he incurred merely by reafon of fome flight imprudences, which, in other fituations, would have been of no importance. But tho' both his reign and that of his father, proved extremely unfortunate to their kingdom, the French crown acquired, during their time, very confiderable acceffions, those of * Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 213. + Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 214.

Dauphiny

EDWARD III.

Dauphiny and Burgundy. This latter province, however, John had the impru- Chap. XVI. dence again to difmember from the crown, by beftowing it on Philip his fourth fon, and chief favourite *; a deed, which was afterwards the fource of many calamities to his kingdom.

JOHN was fucceeded in the throne by Charles, the Dauphin, a prince educated in the fchool of adverfity, and well qualified, by his confummate prudence and experience, to repair all the loffes, which the kingdom had fuffered from the errors of his two predeceffors. Contrary to the practice of all the great princes of those times, which held nothing in effimation but military courage, he feems to have fixed it as a maxim never to appear at the head of his armies; and he was the first King in Europe, who showed the advantages of policy, forefight and judgment, above a rash and precipitate valour. The events of his reign, compared with those of the preceding, are a proof, how little reason kingdoms have to value themfelves on their victories, or to be humbled by their defeats, which in reality ought to be afcribed entirely to the good or bad conduct of their rulers, and go a very little way towards determining national characters and manners.

BEFORE Charles could think of counter-ballancing fo great a power as England, State of it was neceffary for him to remedy the many diforders, to which his own king- France. dom was exposed. He turned his arms against the King of Navarre, the great difturber of France during that age : He defeated that prince by the conduct of Bertrand du Guesclin, a gentleman of Brittany, one of the most accomplished characters of the age, whom he had the difcernment to choose as the inftrument of all his victories +: And he obliged his enemy to accept of moderate terms of peace. Du Guesclin was less fortunate in the wars of Brittany, which still continued, notwithstanding the mediation of France and England: He was defeated and taken prisoner at Auray by Chandos : Charles de Blois, was there flain, and the young count de Mountfort soon after got entire possession of that dutchy 1. But the prudence of Charles broke the force of this blow: He fubmitted to the decifion of fortune : He acknowledged the title of Mountfort, tho' a zealous partizan of England; and received the profered homage for his dominions. But the chief obstacle which the French King met with in the settlement of the state, proceeded from obscure enemies, whom their crimes alone rendered eminent, and their number dangerous.

ON the conclusion of the treaty of Bretigni, the many military adventurers, who had followed the fortunes of Edward; being difperfed into the feveral pro-

* Rymer, vol. 6. p. 421. + Froisfart, liv. 1. chap. 119, 120, 122. ‡ Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 227, 228, &c. Walfing. p. 180.

1364.

223

Vinces,

1364.

224

Chap. XVI. vinces, and poffeffed of ftrong holds, refused to lay down their arms, or relinquifh a courfe of life, to which they were now accuftomed, and by which alone they could gain a fubfiftance *. They affociated themfelves with the banditti, who were already enured to the habits of rapine and violence; and under the name of the companies and companions, became a terror to all the peaceable inhabitants. Some English and Gascon gentlemen of character, particularly fir Matthew Gournay, fir Hugh Calverley, the chevalier Verte, and others, were not ashamed to take the command of these ruffians, whose numbers amounted on the whole to near 40,000, and who bore the appearance of regular armies, rather than bands of robbers. These leaders fought pitched battles with the troops of France, and gained victories; in one of which Jaques de Bourbon, a prince of the blood, was flain + : And they proceeded to fuch a height, that they wanted little but regular eftablishments to become princes, and thereby fanctify, by the maxims of the world, their infamous profession. The greater spoil they committed on the country, the more easy they found it to recruit their number : All those, who were reduced to mifery and defpair, flocked to their flandard : The evil was every day encreasing : And tho' the Pope declared them excommunicate, these military plunderers, however deeply affected with this fentence, to which they paid a much greater regard than to any maxims of juffice or humanity, could not be induced by it to betake themfelves to any peaceable or lawful profession.

1366.

As Charles was not able by power to redrefs fo enormous a grievance, he was led, both by neceffity, and by the turn of his character, to correct it by policy, and to contrive fome method of difcharging into foreign countries this dangerous and inteftine evil.

PETER, King of Castile, stigmatized by his contemporaries and by posterity, with the epithet of Cruel, had filled with blood and murder his kingdom and his own family; and having incurred the universal hatred of his subjects, he kept only from prefent terror an anxious and precarious possession of the throne. His nobles fell every day the victims of his feverity : He put to death feveral of his natural brothers from groundless jealousy : Each murder, by multiplying his enemies, became the occasion of fresh barbarities : And as he was not destitute of talents, his neighbours, no lefs than his own fubjects, were alarmed by the progrefs of his violence and injuffice. The ferocity of his temper, inftead of being foftened by his firong propenfity to love, was rather enflamed by that paffion, and took thence new occasion to exert itself. Inftigated by Mary de Padilla, who had acquired the ascendant over him, he threw into prifon Blanche de Bour> > bon.

> * Froisfart, liv. 1. chap. 214. + Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 214, 215.

E D W A R D III.

bon, his wife, fifter to the Queen of France; and foon after made way by poifon Chap. XVI. for the espousing of his mistrefs.

HENRY, count de Transtamare, his natural brother, seeing the fate of every one who had become obnoxious to this tyrant, took arms against him; but being foiled in the attempt, he fought for refuge in France, where he found the minds of every one extremely enflamed against Peter, on account of his murder of the French princefs. He proposed to Charles the enlifting of the companies into his fervice, and leading them into Caftile; where, from the concurrence of his own friends, and the enemies of his brother, he had the profpect of certain and immediate fuccefs. The French King, charmed with the project, employed Du Guesclin in negotiating with the leaders of these banditti. The treaty was soon concluded. The high character of honour, which that general poffeffed, made every one truft to his promifes : Tho' the intended expedition was kept a fecret, the companies implicitly inlifted under his ftandard : And they required no other condition before their engagement, than an affurance, that they were not to be led against the prince of Wales in Guienne. But that prince was fo little averse to the enterprize, that he allowed fome gentlemen of his retinue to enter into the fervice under du Guesclin.

Du GUESCLIN, having compleated his levies, led the army first to Avignon, where the Pope then refided, and demanded, fword in hand, an abfolution for his foldiers, and the fum of 200,000 livres. The first was very readily promifed him; fome more difficulty was made with regard to the fecond. " I believe " my fellows," replied du Guesclin, " may make a shift to do without your " abfolution ; but the money is abfolutely neceffary." The Pope then extorted from the inhabitants in the city and neighbourhood the fum of an hundred thoufand livres, and offered it to Du Guesclin. " It is not my purpose," cried that generous warrior, " to oppress the innocent people. The Pope and his cardi-" nals themfelves can eafily fpare me that fum from their own pockets. This " money, I infift, must be reftored to the owners. And should they be de-" frauded of it, I shall myself return from the other fide of the Pyrenees, and " oblige you to make them reftitution." The Pope found the necessity of fubmission, and paid him, from his own treasury, the fum demanded *. The army hallowed by the bleffings, and enriched by the spoils of the church, proceeded on their expedition.

THESE experienced and hardy foldiers, conducted by fo able a general, eafily prevailed over the King of Caftile, whole subjects, instead of supporting their oppressor, were ready to join the enemy against him +. Peter fled from his dominions, took shelter in Guienne, and craved the protection of the prince of

> * Hift. de Du Guesclin. + Froisfart, liv. 1. chap. 230. Gg

Wales,

VOL. II.

225

1366.

Chap. XVI. 1366. 226

Wales, whom his father had invefted with the fovereignty of these conquered provinces, under the title of the principality of Aquitaine *. The prince feemed now to have entirely changed his fentiments with regard to the Spanish transactions : Whether that he was moved by the generofity of supporting a distrest prince, and thought, as is but too ufual among fovereigns, that the rights of the people were a matter of much less confideration; or dreaded the acquisition of fo powerful a confederate to France as the new King of Caftile; or what is most probable, was impatient of reft and eafe, and fought only an opportunity of exerting his military talents, by which he had already acquired fo much renown. He promifed his affiftance to the dethroned monarch; and having obtained the confent of his father, he levied a great army, and fet out upon his enterprize. He was accompanied by his younger brother, John of Gaunt, created duke of Lancafter, in the place of the good prince of that name, who had died without any male iffue, and whofe daughter he had espoused. Chandos also, who bore among the English the fame character, which Du Guesclin had acquired among the French, commanded under him in this expedition.

THE first blow which the prince of Wales gave to Henry de Transtamare, was the recalling all the companies from his fervice; and fo much reverence did they bear to the name of Edward, that great numbers of them immediately withdrew from Spain, and inlifted under his ftandard. Henry however, beloved by his new fubjects, and fupported by the King of Arragon and others of his neighbours, was able to meet the enemy with an army of 100,000 men; forces three times more numerous than those commanded by Edward. Du Gueselin and all his experienced officers advised him to delay any decifive action, to cut off the prince of Wales's provisions, and to avoid every engagement with a general, whose enterprizes had hitherto been always conducted with prudence, and crowned with fuccefs. Henry trufted too much to his numbers; and ventured to encounter the English prince at Najara +. Hiftorians of that age are commonly very copious in defcribing the fhock of armies in battle, the valour of the combatants, the flaughter and various fucceffes of the day: But tho' fmall rencounters in those times were often well disputed, the military discipline was always too imperfect to preferve order in great armies; and fuch actions deferve more the name of routs than of battles-Henry was chaced off the field with the loss of above 20,000 men : There perifhed only four knights and forty private men on the fide of the English.

PETER, who fo well merited the infamous epithet which he bore, proposed to murder all his prifoners in cold blood; but was reftrained from this barbarity by the remonstrances of the prince of Wales. All Castile now submitted to the

* Rymer, vol. 6. p. 384. Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 231. † Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 241. 5

1 367. Expedition into Caftile.

3d April.

EDWARD III.

victor : Peter was reftored to the throne : And Edward finished this perilous en- Chap. XVI. terprize with his ufual glory. But he had foon reafon to repent the affociating himfelf with a man like Peter, abandoned to all fenfe of virtue and honour. The ungrateful tyrant refused the ftipulated pay to the English forces; and Edward, finding his foldiers daily perifh by ficknefs, and even his own health impaired by the climate, was obliged, without receiving any fatisfaction on this head, to return into Guienne *.

THE monstrous cruelties, exercised by Peter over his helpless fubjects, whom he now regarded as vanquished rebels, revived all the animofity of the Castilians against him; and on the return of Henry de Transtamare, together with Du Guefclin, and fome forces levied anew in France, the tyrant was again dethroned, and was taken prisoner. His brother, in resentment of his cruelties, murdered him with his own hand; and was placed on the throne of Caftile, which he transmitted to his posterity. The duke of Lancaster, who espoused in second marriage the eldeft daughter of Peter, inherited only the empty title of that fovereignty, and encreafed the animofity of the new King of Castile against England.

But the prejudice, which the affairs of prince Edward received from this fplen-did, tho' imprudent expedition, ended not with it. He had involved himfelf in Rupture with France. fo much debt by his preparations and the pay of his troops, that he found it neceffary, on his return, to impose on his principality a new tax, which fome of the nobility fubmitted to with extreme reluctance, and to which others abfolutely refused compliance +. This incident revived the animofity which the inhabitants bore to the English, and which all the amiable qualities of the prince of Wales were not able to mitigate or affuage. They complained, that they were confidered as a conquered people, that their privileges were difregarded, that all truft was given to the English alone, that every office of honour and profit was conferred on these foreigners, and that the extreme reluctance, which most of them had expressed, to receive this new yoke, was likely to be long remembered against them. They cast, therefore, their eyes towards their antient fovereign,

* Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 242, 243. Walfingham. p. 182.

+ This tax was a livre upon a hearth ; and it was imagined, that this imposition would have yielded 1200,000 livres a year, which supposes to many hearths in the provinces possessed by the English. But fuch loofe conjectures have no manner of authority, much lefs, in fuch ignorant times. - There was a flrong inflance of it in the prefent reign. The houfe of commons granted the King a tax of twenty two shillings on each parish, supposing that the amount of the whole would be 50,000 pounds. But they were found to be in a miltake of near fix to one. Cotton, p. 3. And the privy council assumed the power of augmenting the tax, fo as to make it answer the fums proposed to be levied by it ; which was certainly a very irregular practice.

1367.

227

Gg2

whofe

228

Chap. XVI. whose prudence, they found, had now brought the affairs of his kingdom into excellent order; and the counts of Armagnac, Comminge, and Perigord, the lord 1368. d'Albert, with other nobles, went to Paris, and were encouraged to carry their complaints to Charles, as to their lord Paramount, against these oppressions of the English government *.

> In the treaty of Bretigni it had been agreed, that the two Kings should make renounciations; Edward of his claim to the crown of France and to the provinces of Normandy, Maine, and Anjou; John of the homage and fealty due for Guienne and the other provinces ceded to the English. But when that treaty was confirmed and renewed at Calais, it was found neceffary, on account of fome formalities peculiar to the feudal law, that the mutual renounciations should for fome time be deferred; and it was agreed, that the parties, mean-while, should make no use of these claims against each other +. Tho' the failure in exchanging these renounciations had still proceeded from France 1, Edward appears to have taken no umbrage at it; both because this clause feemed to give him entire fecurity, and becaufe fome reafonable apology had probably been made to him for each delay. It was, however, on this pretence, groß and iniquitous as it was, that Charles refolved to ground his claim, of confidering himfelf still as fuperior lord of these provinces, and of receiving the appeals of his sub-vassals §.

1369.

BUT as the views of policy, more than those of justice, enter into the deliberations of princes; and as the mortal injuries received from the English, the pride of their triumphs, the fevere terms imposed by the treaty of Peace, feemed to render every prudent means of revenge honourable against them; Charles was determined to take this measure, lefs by the reasonings of his civilians and lawyers, than by the prefent fituation of the two monarchies. He confidered the declining years of Edward, the languishing ftate of the prince of Wales's health, the affection which the inhabitants of all these provinces bore to their antient master, their diffance from England, their contiguity to France, the extreme animofity expressed by his own fubjects against these invaders, and their ardent thirst of vengeance; and having made filently all the preparations requifite, he fent to the prince of Wales a fummons to appear in his court at Paris, and there to juftify his conduct towards his vaffals. The prince replied, that he would come to Paris; but it should be at the head of fixty thousand men ||. The unwarlike character of Charles kept Edward, even yet, from thinking, that that monarch was in earnest, in this bold and hazardous attempt.

* Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 244. † Rymer, vol. 6. p. 219, 230, 237. † Rot. Franc. 35 Edw. III. m. 3. from Tyrrel, vol. 3. p. 643. § Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 245. | Freisfart, liv. 1. chap. 247, 248.

E D W A R D III.

IT foon appeared what a poor return the King received from his diftant conquefts Chap. XVI. for all the blood and treasure expended in the quarrel, and how impossible it was to retain acquifitions, in an age when no regular force could be maintained fufficient to defend them against the revolt of the inhabitants, much lefs, if that danger was conjoined with the invalion of a foreign enemy. Charles fell first upon Ponthieu, which gave the English an inlet into the heart of France : The citizens of Abbeville opened their gates to him * : Those of St. Valori, Rue, and Crotoy imi-1370. tated the example, and the whole country was in a little time reduced to fubmif- Ill fuccefs fion. The dukes of Berri and Anjou, brothers to Charles, being affifted by Du of the Eng-Guefclin, who was recalled from Spain, invaded the fouthern provinces; and by lith. means of their good conduct, the favourable inclinations of the people, and the ardor of the French nobility, made every day confiderable progrefs against the English. The state of the prince of Wales's health did not permit him to mount on horfeback, or exert his ufual activity : Chandos, the conftable of Guienne, was flain in one action + : The Captal de Buche, who fucceeded him in that office, was taken prisoner in another ‡: And when young Edward himself was obliged by his increasing infirmities to throw up the command, and return to his native country, the English affairs in the fouth of France seemed to be menaced with a total ruin.

EDWARD, incenfed at thefe injuries, threatned to put to death all the French hoftages, who remained in his hands; but on reflection abftained from that ungenerous revenge. After refuming, by advice of parliament, the vain title of King of France ||, he endeavoured to fend fuccours into Gafcony; but all his attempts, both by fea and land, proved unfuccefsful. The earl of Pembroke was intercepted at fea and taken prifoner with his whole army near Rochelle by a fleet, which Henry, King of Caftile, had fitted out for that purpofe §: Edward himfelf embarked for Bourdeaux with another army; but was fo long detained by contrary winds, that he was obliged to lay afide the enterprize 4. Sir Robert Knolles, at the head of 30,000 men, marched out of Calais, and continued his ravages to the gates of Paris, without being able to provoke the enemy to an engagement : He proceeded on his march to the provinces of Maine and Anjou, which he laid wafte; but part of his army being there defeated by the conduct of Du Guefclin, who was now created conftable of France, and who feems to have been the firft confummate general, that had yet appeared in Europe, the reft

were

229

[‡] Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 310. || Rymer, vol. 6. p. 621. Cotton's Abridg. p. 108.

[§] Froiffart, liv. 1. chap. 302, 303, 304. Walfingham, p. 186.

⁺ Froiffart, liv. 1. cap. 311. Walfingham, p. 187.

1370.

230

Chap. XVI. were fcattered and dispersed, and the small remains of it, instead of reaching Guienne, took shelter in Brittany, whose sovereign had embraced the alliance of England *. The duke of Lancaster, some time after, made a like attempt with an army of 25,000 men ; and marched the whole length of France from Calais to Bourdeaux; but was fo much haraffed by the flying parties which attended him. that he brought not the half of his army to the place of their defination. Edward, from the neceffity of his affairs, was at laft obliged to conclude a truce with the enemy +; after almost all his antient possefilions in France had been ravished from him, except Bourdeaux and Bayonne, and all his conquefts, except Calais.

> THE decline of the King's life 'was exposed to many mortifications, and correfponded not to the fplendid and noify fcenes, which had filled the beginning and the middle of it. Befides feeing the loss of his foreign dominions, and being baffled in every attempt to defend them; he felt the decay of his authority at home, and experienced, from the fharpnels of fome parliamentary remonstrances, the great inconftancy of the people, and the influence of prefent fortune over all their judgments 1. This prince, who, during the vigor of his age, had been chiefly occupied in the purfuits of war and ambition, began, at an unfeafonable period, to indulge himfelf in pleafure; and being now a widower, he attached himfelf to a lady of fenfe and fpirit, one Alice Pierce, who acquired a great afcendant over him, and by her influence gave fo much difguft to his people, that, in order to fatisfy the parliament, he was obliged to remove her from court ||. The indolence alfo, naturally attending old age and infirmities, had made him, in a great measure, refign the administration into the hands of his fon, the duke of Lancaster, who, as he was far from being popular, weakened extremely the affection, born by the English to the perfon and government of the King. Men carried their jealoufies very far against the duke; and as they faw, with infinite regret, the death of the prince of Wales every day approaching, they apprehended, left the fucceffion of his fon, Richard, now a minor, should be defeated by the intrigues of Lancaster, and by the weak indulgence of the old King. But Edward, in order to fatisfy both the people and the prince on this head, declared in parliament his grandfon heir and fucceffor to the crown; and thereby cut off all the hopes of the duke of Lancaster, if he ever had the temerity to entertain any.

1376. 8th June. prince of Wales.

THE prince of Wales, after a lingering illnefs, died in the forty-fixth year of Death of the his age; and left a character, illustrated by every eminent virtue, and from > * Froisfart, liv. 1. chap. 291. Walfingham, p. 185. + Froisfart, liv. 1. chap. 321. Walfingham, p. 187. ‡ Walfingham, p. 189. Ypod Neuft. 530. || Walfingham, p. 189.

> > his

E D W A R D III.

his earlieft youth till the hour he expired, unftained by any blemish. His valor Chap. XVI. and military talents formed the fmallest part of his merit : His generofity, humanity, affability, moderation, gained him the affections of all the world; and he was qualified to throw a luftre, not only on that rude age, in which he lived, and which nowife infected him with its vices, but on the most shining period of antient or modern hiftory. The King furvived about a year this me- 21st June. lancholy incident : England was deprived at once of both of thefe princes, its Death chief ornament and fupport: He expired in the fixty fifth year of his age and the fifty-first of his reign; and the people were sensible, tho' too late, of the irreparable lofs, which they had fuftained.

THE English are apt to confider with peculiar fondness the history of Ed- and character ward III. and to effeem his reign, as it was one of the longeft, the most of the King. glorious alfo, which occurs in the annals of their nation. The afcendant which they then began to acquire over France, their rival and national enemy, makes them caft their eyes on this period with great complacency, and fanctifies every measure, which Edward embraced for that end. But the domestic government of this prince is really more admirable than his foreign victories; and England enjoyed, by the prudence and vigor of his administration, a longer interval of domeftic peace and tranquillity than the had been bleft with in any former period, or than fhe experienced for many ages after. He gained the affections of the great, yet curbed their licentiousness: He made them feel his power, without their daring, or even being inclined, to murmur at it : His affable and obliging behaviour, his munificence and generofity, made them fubmit with pleafure to his dominion; his valor and conduct made them fuccefsful in most of their enterprizes ; and their unquiet spirits, directed against a public enemy, had no leifure to breed those diffurbances, to which they were naturally fo much inclined, and which the frame of the government feemed fo much to authorize. This was the chief benefit, which refulted from Edward's victories and conquefts. His foreign wars were, in other respects, neither founded in justice, nor directed to any very falutary purpofe. His attempt against the King of Scotland, a minor and a brother-in-law, and the revival of his grandfather's claim of fuperiority over that kingdom, were both unreafonable and ungenerous; and he allowed himfelf to be too foon feduced, by the glaring profpect of French conquefts, from the acquifition of a point, which was practicable, and which might really, if attained, have been of lafting utility to his country and his fucceffors. The fuccefs, which he met with in France, tho' chiefly owing to his eminent talents, was unexpected ; and yet, from the very nature of things, not from any unforefeen accident, was found, even during his own life-time, to have procured him no folid advantages. But 1376.

1376.

231

1377.

232

Chap. XVI. But the glory of a Conqueror is fo dazling to the vulgar, the animofity of nations is fo extreme, that the fruitless defolation of fo fine a part of Europe, as France, is totally difregarded by us, and is never confidered as a blemish in the character or conduct of this prince : And indeed, from the unfortunate state of human nature, it will commonly happen that a fovereign of great genius, fuch as Edward, who ufually finds every thing eafy in his domeftic government, will turn himfelf towards military enterprizes, where alone he meets with opposition, and where he has full exercise for his industry and capacity.

> EDWARD had a numerous posterity by his Queen, Philippa of Hainault. His eldeft fon was the heroic Edward, commonly called the Black Prince, from the colour of his armour. This prince espoused his cousin Joan, commonly called the fair maid of Kent, daughter and heir of his uncle, the earl of Kent, who was beheaded in the beginning of this reign. She was first married to Sir Thomas Holland, by whom the had children. She had a fon, Richard, by the prince of Wales, who alone furvived his father.

> THE fecond fon of King Edward (for we pass by fuch as died in their childhood) was Lionel duke of Clarence, who was first married to Elizabeth de Burgh, daughter and heir of the earl of Ulfter, by whom he left only one daughter, married to Edmund Mortimer, earl of Marche. Lionel espoufed in fecond marriage, Violante, the daughter of the duke of Milan *, and died in Italy foon after the confummation of his nuptials, without leaving any posterity by that princess. Of all the family, he refembled most his father and eldest brother in his noble qualities.

> EDWARD's third fon was John of Gaunt, fo called from the place of his birth : He was created duke of Lancaster; and from him sprung that branch, which afterwards poffeffed the crown. The fourth fon of this royal family was Edmund. created earl of Cambridge by his father, and duke of York by his nephew. The fifth fon was Thomas, who received the title of earl of Buckingham from his father, and that of duke of Glocefter from his nephew. In order to prevent confusion, we shall always diffinguish these two princes by the titles of York and Glocefter, even before they were advanced to them.

> THERE were also feveral princeffes born to Edward by Philippa, viz. Ifabella, Joan, Mary and Margaret, who efpoused, in the order of their names, Ingelram de Coucy earl of Bedford, Alphonfo King of Caftile, John de Mountfort duke of Brittany, and John Haftings earl of Pembroke. The princefs Joan died at Bourdeaux before the confummation of her marriage.

It is remarked by an elegant hiftorian +, that Conquerors, tho' ufually the Miscellaneous transactions in bane of human kind, proved often in those feudal times, the most indulgent of this reign. + Dr. Robert fon's history of Scotland, book 1. * Rymer, vol. 6. p. 564.

fovereigns :

EDWARD IH.

fovereigns : They flood moft in need of supplies from their people ; and not be- Chap. XVI. ing able to compel them by force to fubmit to the neceffary impofitions, they were obliged to make them fome compensation, by equitable laws and popular conceffions. This remark is, in fome measure, tho' imperfectly, justified by the conduct of Edward III. He took no fteps of moment without confulting his parliament, and obtaining their approbation, which he afterwards pleaded as a reason for their supporting his measures *. The parliament therefore role into greater confideration during his reign, and acquired a more regular authority than in any former times, and even the house of commons, which, during turbulent and factious periods, was naturally oppreffed by the greater power of the crown and barons, began to appear of fome weight in the conflitution. In the latter years of Edward, the King's ministers were impeached in parliament, particularly lord Latimer, who fell a facrifice to their authority +; and they even obliged him to banish his mistress by their remonstrances. Some attention was alfo paid to the elections of their members; and lawyers, in particular, who were, at that time, men of very inferior character, were totally excluded the house during several parliaments 1.

ONE of the most popular laws, enacted by any prince, was the statute, which paffed in the twenty-fifth of this reign |, and which limited the cafes of high treason, before vague and uncertain, to three principal heads, the confpiring the death of the King, the levying war against him, and the adhering to his enemies; and the judges were prohibited, if any other cafes should occur, from in-Ricting the penalty of treason, without an application to parliament. The bounds of treason were indeed to much limited by this statute, which still remains in force without any alteration, that the lawyers were obliged to enlarge them, and to explain a confpiracy for levying war against the King to be equivalent to a confpiracy against his life; and this interpretation, feemingly forced, has, from the neceffity of the cafe, been tacitly acquiefced in. It was also ordained, that a parliament should be held once a year or oftner, if need be: A law which, like many others, was never observed, and lost its authority by difuse §.

EDWARD granted above twenty parliamentary confirmations of the great charter; and these concessions are commonly appealed to as proofs of his great indulgence to the people, and his tender regard to their liberties. But the contrary prefumption is much more natural. If the maxims of Edward's reign had not been in general somewhat arbitrary, and if the great charter had not been frequently violated, the parliament would never have applied for these frequent

Abridg. p. 18. Chap 2.	† Cotton's Abridg. p. 122. § 4 Edw. III. cap. 14.	‡ Cotton's
Vol. II.	H h	confirmations,

233

.1.327.

1377.

• .

234

Chap XVI. confirmations, which could add no force to a deed regularly observed, and which could ferve to no other purpofe, than to prevent the contrary precedents from turning into a rule, and acquiring authority. It was indeed the effect of the irregular government during those ages, that a statute, which had been enacted fome years, inftead of acquiring, was imagined to lofe force by time, and needed to be often renewed by recent flatutes of the fame fenfe and tenor. Hence likewife that general claufe, fo frequent in old acts of parliament, that the flatutes, enacted by the King's progenitors, shall be observed * ; a precaution, which, if we do not confider the circumftances, might appear abfurd and ridicubus. The frequent confirmations in general terms of the church's privileges proceeded from the fame caule.

> IT is a clause in one of Edward's statutes, that no man, of what estate or condition foever, shall be put out of land or tenement, nor taken nor imprifoned, nor difberited, nor put to death, without being brought in anfwer by due process of the law +. This privilege was fufficiently fecured by a claufe of the great charter, which had received a general confirmation in the first chapter of the lame statute. Why then is this claufe to anxioufly, and, as we may think, fo fuperfluoufly repeated? Plainly, becaufe there had been fome late infringements of it, which gave umbrage to the commons 1.

> But there is no article, in which the laws are more frequertly repeated during this reign, almost in the fame terms, than that of purveyance, which the parliament always calls an outrageous and intolerable grievance, and the fource of infinite damage to the people ||. The parliament tried to abolifh this prerogative altogether, by prohibiting any one to take goods without the confint of the owners §, and by changing the heinous name of purveyors, as they call it, into that of buyers \perp : But the arbitrary conduct of Edward ftill brought back the grievance upon them; tho' contrary both to the Great Charter, and to many flatutes. This diforder was in a good measure derived from the tate of the public finances and of the kingdom; and could therefore the left admit of any remedy. The prince frequently wanted ready money; yet his family must be provided for : And he was obliged to employ force and violence for that purpofe, and to give tallies, at what rate he pleafed, to the owners of the goods which he laid hold of. The kingdom also abounded fo little in commodities, that, had the owners been firicity protected by law, they could eafily have exacted

* 36 Edw. III. cap. 1. 37 Edw. III. cap. 1, &c. + 28 Edw. III. cap. 3.

t They plainly affert, in the 15th of this reign, that there had been fuch inftances, Cotton's Abridg. p. 31. They repeat the fame in the 21st Year. See p. 59. # 36 Edw. 111. &c. § 14 Edw. III. cap. 19. 4~36 Edw. III. cap. 2.

any

EDWARD III.

any price from the King ; efpecially in his frequent progrefies, when he came Chap. XVI. to diftant and poor places, where the court did not ufually refide, and where a regular plan for fipplying it could not eafily be eftablished.

THE magnificent caftle of Windfor was built by Edward III. and his method of conducting that work may ferve as a specimen of the condition of the people in that age. Inftead of alluring workmen by contracts and wages, he affeffed every county in England to fend him fo many masons, tilers, and carpenters, as if he had been levying an army *.

THEY miftake, indeed, very much the genius of this reign, who imagine that it was not very arbitrary. All the high prerogatives of the crown were to the full exerted init; but what was fome confolation, and promifed in time fome relief to the people, they were always complained of by the commons : Such as the difpenfing power +, the extension of the forests ‡; the erecting monopolies ||, the first of the kird which we read of ; the exacting of loans §; the stopping of juffice by particular warrants +; the renewal of the commiffions of trail-baton *; the preffing of men and ships into the public fervice +; the levying of arbitrary and exorbitant fines ‡; the extending the authority of the privy council or ftarchamber to the cecilion of private caufes ||; the enlarging the power of the mareschal's and other arbitrary courts §; the imprisoning members for freedom of speech in parliament 4; the obliging people without any rule to fend recruits of men at arms, archers, and hoblers, to the army *.

BUT there was 10 act of arbitrary power more frequently repeated in this reign, than that of the imposition of taxes without confent of parliament. Tho' that affembly granted the King more fupplies than ever had been obtained by any of his predeceffors, his great undertakings and the neceffity of his affairs obliged him still to levy nore; and after his great fuccess against France had added weight to his authority, these impositions became almost annual and perpetual. Cotton's Abridgement of the records affords numerous inftances of this kind, in the first + year of his reign, in the thirteenth year ‡, in the fourteenth ||, in the the twentieth §, in the twenty-first 4, in the twenty-fecond *, in the twentyfifth +, in the thirly-eighth ‡, in the fiftieth ||, and in the fifty-first §.

* Afhmole's hift. of he garter, p. 129.	+ Cotton's Abridg, p. 148.	Cotton.
P. /1. Cetton's Abridg. p. 50, 61,	122. 6 Rymer. vol. c. p. 40	01. 574.
- Cotton's Bullug. p. 50. + Cotton, p. 114	* Cotton, n. 67. +	Cotton's
Toring. p. 47. 79. 113 I Cotton's Abi	ridg, p. 22. Cotton's Abridg.	p. 74.
y 1010. + Walling, p. 189, 190.	* Tyrrel's Hift. vol. 3. p 5	54. from the records. + Rymer, vol. 4. p. 363.	t P. 17, 18. P. 20.
§ P. 47. + P. 52, 53, 57, 58.	* P. 69. † P. 76. ‡	P. 101:
P. 138. § P. 152.
Hh 2		THE

235

THE 1377-

Chap. XVI. 1377. 226

THE King openly avowed and maintained this power of levying taxes at pleafure. At one time, he replied to the remonftrance of the commons, that the impolitions had been exacted from great neceffity, and had been affented to by the prelates, counts, barons, and fome of the commons *; at another, that he would advife with his council +. When the parliament defired, that a law might be enacted for the punifhment of fuch as levied thele arbitrary impolitions; he refuled compliance ‡. In the fublequent year, they defired that the King might renounce this pretended prerogative; but his anfwer was, that he would levy no taxes without neceffity, for the defence of the realm, and where he reafonably might use that authority §. This incident passed a very few days before his death ; and these were, in a manner, his last words to his people. It would feem, that the famous charter or flatute of Edward 1. de tallagio non concedendo, tho² never' repealed, was supposed to have already lost by age all its authority.

THESE facts can only flow the practice of the times: For as to the right, the continual remonftrances of the commons may feem to prove that it rather was on their fide: At leaft, thefe remonftrances ferved to prevent the arbitrary practices of the court from becoming an eftablished part of the confliction. In fo much a better condition were the privileges of the people even during the arbitrary reign of Edward III. than during fome fubfequent ones, particularly those of the Tu-dors, where no tyranay or abule of power ever met with any check or opposition, or fo much as a remonstrance, from parliament.

It is easy to imagine, that a prince of so much fense and spirit as Edward, would be no flave to the court of Rome. The' the old tribute was paid during fome years of his minority ||, he afterwards withheld it; and when the Pope in 1367 threatened to cite him to the court of Rome, for default of payment, he laid the matter before his parliament. That affembly unanimously declared, that King John could not without a national confent, subject his kingdom to a foreign power: And they were therefore determined to support their fovereign against this exorbitant pretension 1.

DURING this reign, the flatute of provifors was enacted, rendering it penal to procure any prefentations to benefices from the court of Rome, and fecuring the rights of all patrons and electors, which had been extremely encroached on by the Pope *. By a fubfequent flatute, every perfor was out-lawed who carried, any caufe or appeal to the court of Rome †.

* Cotton, p. 53. He repeats the fame anfwer in p. 60. Some of the commons were fuch as he was pleafed to confult with. + Cotton, p. 57. ‡ Cotton, p. 138. p. 152. || Rymer, vol. 4. p. 434. + Cotton. Abridg. p. 110. * 25. Edw. III. 27 Edw. III. 33 Edw. III.

THE

E D W A R D III.

THE laity at this time feem to have been extremely prejudiced against the pa- Chap XVM pail power, and even fomewhat against their own clergy, because of their connexions with the Roman pontiff. They pretended that the usurpations of the Pope were the caule of all the plagues, injuries, famine, and poverty of the realm; was more deftructive to it than all the wars ; and was the caufe why it contaked not a third of the inhabitants and commodities, which it formerly poffers fed : That the taxes, levied by him, exceeded five times those paid to the King a That every thing was venal in that finful city of Rome; and that even the patrons in England had thence learned to practice fimony without remorfe or fcruple*. At another time, they petition the King to employ no churchman in any office of flate +; and they even fpeak, in plain terms, of expelling by force the papal authority, and thereby providing a remedy against oppressions, which they neither could nor would any longer endure 1. Men who talked in this ftyle, were not far from the reformation : But Edward did not think proper to fecond all this zeal. Tho' he passed the statute of provisors, he took little care of its execution; and the parliament made continual complaints of his negligence on this head §. He was content with having reduced fuch of the Romish ecclesiaftics, as possefied revenues in England, to depend entirely upon him by means of that statute.

As to the police of the kingdom during this period, it was certainly better than during times of faction, civil wars, and diforder, to which England was fo often exposed : Yet were there feveral vices in the conftitution, the bad confequences of which all the power and vigilance of the King could not prevent. The barons, by their confederacies with those of their own order, and by supporting and defending their retainers in every iniquity ||, were the chief abettors of robbers, murderers, and ruffians of all kinds ; and no law could be executed against these criminals. The nobility were brought to give their promise in parliament, that they would not avow, retain, or support any felon or breaker of the law 4; yet this engagement, which we may wonder to fee exacted from men of their rank, was never regarded by them. The commons make continual complaints of the multitude of robberies, murders, ravishment of women, and other diforders, which, they fay, were become numberlefs in every part of the kingdom, and which they always afcribe to the protection which the criminals received from the great *. The King of Cyprus, who paid a vifit to England during this reign, was robbed and ftript on the high-way with his whole retinue +.

* Cotton p. 74, 128, 129. p. 119, 128, 129, 130, 148. chap 4 Cotton, p. 10.

+ Cotton, p. 11:2. ‡ Cotton, p. 41. S. Cotton, || 11 Edw. III. chap. 14. 4 Edw. III. chap. z. 15 Edw. III. * Cotton, p. 51, 62, 64, 70, 160. + Walfing: p. 179. 2 Edward .

237

1377.

1377.

238

Chap. XVI. Edward himfelf contributed to this diffolution of law, by his facility in granting pardons to felons from the follicitation of his courtiers. Laws were made to retrench this prerogative *, and remonstrances of the commons were prefented against the abuse of it +: But to no purpose: The gratifying a nobleman of power and interest continued still to be of more importance than the protection of the people. The King also granted many franchises, which interrupted the course of justice and the execution of the laws 1.

> COMMERCE and industry were certainly at a very low ebb during this period. The bad police of the country alone affords a fufficient reason. The only exports were wool, skins, hydes, leather, butter, tin, lead, and fuch unmanufactured goods, of which wool was by far the most confiderable. Knyghton has afferted, that 100,000 facks of wool were annually exported, and fold at twenty pounds a fack, money of that age. But he is widely miftaken both in the quantity exported and the value. In 1349, the parliamennt remonstrate, that the King, by an illegal imposition of forty shillings on each fack exported, had levied 60,000 pounds a year §: Which reduces the annual exports to 30,000 facks. A fack contained twenty fix ftone, and each ftone fourteen pounds ||; and at a medium was not valued at above five pounds a fack +, that is, fourteen or fifteen pounds of our prefent money. Knyghton's computation raifes it to fixty pounds, which is near four times the prefent price of wool in England. According to this reduced computation, the export of wool returned about 450,000 pounds of our prefent money, inftead of fix millions, which is an extravagant fum.

> EDWARD endeavoured to introduce and promote the woollen manufacture by giving protection and encouragement to foreign weavers *, and by enacting a law, prohibiting every one to wear any cloth but of English make +. The parliament prohibited the exportation of woollen goods, which was not fo well judged, especially while the exportation of unwrought wool was so much allowed and encouraged. A like injudicious law was made against the exportation of manufactured iron 1.

> In the first of Richard II. the parliament complains extremely of the decay of shipping during the preceding reign, and affert, that one fea port formerly contained more veffels than were then to be found in the whole kingdom. This ca> > lamity,

> * 10 Edw. III. cap. 2. 27 Edw. III. cap. 2. + Cotton, p. 75. 1 Cotton, p. 54. § Cotton, p. 48, 69. || 34 Edw. III. cap. 5. 4 Cotton, p. 29. * 11 Edw. III. cap. 5. Rymer, vol. 4. p. 723. Murimuth, p. 88. + 11 Edw. III. cap. 2. 1 28 Edw. cap. 5.

EDWARD III.

lamity, they afcribe to the arbitrary feizure of fhips by Edward, for the fervice of Chap. XVI. his frequent expeditions *.

THE parliament attempted the impracticable fcheme of reducing the price of labour after the pestilence, and also that of poultry +. A reaper, in the first week of August, was not allowed to take above two pence a day, or near fixpence of our present money; in the second week, a third more. A master carpenter was limited thro' the whole year to three pence a day, a common carpenter to two pence, money of that age 1. It is remarkable, that in the fame reign, the pay of a common foldier, an archer, was fix pence a day; which, by the change, both in denomination and value, would be equivalent to four or five shillings of our prefent money §. Soldiers were then inlifted only for a very fhort time: They lived idle all the reft of the year, and commonly all the reft of their lives : One fuccefsful campaign, by pay and plunder, and the ranfom of prifoners, was fuppofed to be a fmall fortune to a man; which was a great allurement to enter into the fervice.

THE ftaple of wool, wool-fells, leather, and lead, was fixed by act of parliament in particular towns of England #. Afterwards it was removed by law to Calais: But Edward, who commonly deemed his prerogative fuperior to law, paid little regard to these flatutes; and when the parliament remonstrated with him on account of fuch acts of power, he told them plainly, that he would proceed in that matter as he thought proper 4. It is not eafy to perceive any advantages, which arofe from this great anxiety of fixing a ftaple ; unlefs perhaps it invited foreigners to a market, when they knew beforehand, that they would meet there with great choice of any particular fpecies of commodity. This policy of inviting foreigners to Calais was carried fo far, that all English merchants were prohibited by law from exporting any English goods from the staple; which was in a manner the total abandoning all navigation, except that to Calais *. A contrivance feemingly very abfurd and extraordinary.

LUXURY was complained of in that age, as well as in others of more refinement; and attempts were made by parliament to reftrain it, particularly on the head of apparel, where furely it is the most obviously innocent and inoffensive. No man under an hundred a year was allowed to wear gold, filver, or filk in his cloaths: Servants also were prohibited from eating flesh meat, or fish, above once

* Cotton, p. 155, 164. + 37 Edw. III. cap. 3. ‡ 25 Edw. III. cap. 1, 3.

§ Dugdale's baronage, vol. 1. p. 784. Brady's hift. vol. 2. App. No. 92. The pay of a man at arms was quadruple. We may therefore conclude, that the numerous armies, mentioned by historians in those times confisted chiefly of ragamuffins, who followed the camp, and lived by plunder. Edward's army before Calais confifted of 31094 men; yet its pay for fixteen months was only 127201 pounds. Brady, ibid. || 27 Edw. III. 4 Cotton, p. 117. * 27 Edw. III. cap. 7.

239

1377-

1377.

240

Chap. XVI. a day *. It was eafy to forefee that fuch ridiculous laws must prove ineffectual. and could never be executed.

> THE use of the French language, in pleadings and public deeds, was abolished +. It may appear strange, that the nation should fo long have worn this badge of conqueft. But the King and nobility feem never to have become thoroughly English, till Edward's wars with France gave them an antipathy to that nation. Yet still, it was long before the use of the English tongue came into fashion. The first English paper which we meet with in Rymer is in the year 1386, during the reign of Richard II. There are Spanish papers in that collection more antients: And the use of the Latin and French still continued.

> IN 1364, the commons petitioned, that in confideration of the preceding peftilence, fuch perfons as poffeffed manors holding of the King in chief, and had let liferent leafes without obtaining licences, might continue to exercife the fame power, till the country was become more populous ||. The commons were fenfible, that this fecurity of poffeffion was a good means for rendering the kingdom prosperous and flourishing; yet durft not apply, all at once, for a greater relaxation of their chains.

> THERE is not a reign among those of the antient English monarchs, which deferves more to be fludied than that of Edward III. nor one where the domeflie transactions will better discover the true genius of that kind of mixed government, which was then established in England. The struggles, with regard to the validity and authority of the great charter, were now over: The King was acknowledged to lie under fome limitations: Edward himfelf was a prince of great capacity, not governed by favourites, not led aftray by any unruly paffion; fenfible that nothing could be more effential to his interefts than to keep on good terms with his people : Yet on the whole it appears, that the government, at beft, was only a barbarous monarchy, not regulated by any fixed maxims, nor bounded by any certain undifputed rights, which were in practice regularly observed. The King conducted himfelf by one fet of principles; the barons by another; the commons by a third ; the clergy by a fourth. All these fystems of government were contrary and incompatible : Each of them prevailed according as incidents were favourable to it : A great prince rendered the monarchical power predominant : The weakness of a King gave reins to the ariftocracy : A superstitious age faw the clergy triumphant: The people, for whom alone government was inflituted, and who alone deferve confideration, were commonly the weakeft of the > * 37 Edw. III. cap. 8, 9, 10, &c. + 36 Edward III. cap. 15. ‡ Rymer, vol. 7. b. 526. This paper, by the file, feems to have been drawn by the Scots, and was figned only by the wardens of the marches. § Rymer, vol. 6. p. 554. || Cotton, p. 97.

whole

R I R D C H A II.

whole. But the commons, little obnoxious to any other order ; tho' they funk Chap. XIV. under the violence of tempests, filently reared their head in more peaceable times; and while the form was brewing, were courted by all fides, and thus received flill fome acceffion to their privileges, or, at worft, fome confirmation of them.

C H A P. XVII.

R I C H A R D II.

Government during the minority ---- Infurrection of the common people ---- Discontent of the barons-Civil commotions-Expulsion or execution of the King's ministers-Cabals of the duke of Glocester ---- Murder of the duke of Glocester-Banishment of Henry duke of Hereford-___Return of Henry-___General infurrection-___Depofition of the King-His murder-His character-Miscellaneous transactions during this reign.

THE parliament, which was fummoned foon after the King's acceffion, was Chap. XVII. both elected and affembled in tranquility; and the great change, from a fovereign of confummate wifdom and experience, to a boy of eleven years of age, Government was not immediately perceived by the people. The habits of order and obedience, nority. which the barons had been taught during the long reign of Edward, still influenced them ; and the authority of the King's three uncles, the dukes of Lancaster, York, and Glocester, fufficed to repress, for a time, the turbulent spirit, to which that order, in a weak reign, was fo often subject. The dangerous ambition too of these princes themselves was checked, by the plain and undeniable title of Richard, by the declaration of it made by his grandfather in parliament, and by the affectionate regard, which the people bore to the memory of his father, and which was naturally transferred to the young prince upon the throne. The different characters of these three dukes, rendered them also a counterpoize to each other; and it was natural to expect, that any dangerous defigns, which might be formed by one brother, would meet with opposition from the others. Lancafter, whofe age and experience and authority under the late King, gave him the alcendant among them; tho' his integrity feemed not proof against great Vol. II. Ii temp-

1377.

during the mi-

1376.

1377.

242

Chap. XVII. temptations, was neither of an enterprizing fpirit, nor of a popular and engaging temper. York was indolent, unactive, and of a flender capacity. Glocefter was turbulent, bold, and popular; but being the youngeft of the family, was reftrained by the power and authority of his elder brothers. There appeared, therefore, no circumstance in the domestic situation of England, which might endanger the public peace, or give any immediate apprehenfions to the lovers of their country.

> Bur as Edward, tho' he had fixed the fuccession to the crown, had taken no care to establish a plan of government during the minority of his grandson; it behoved the parliament to fupply this defect : And the house of commons diftinguished themselves, by taking the lead on that occasion. This house, which had been rifing to confideration during the whole courfe of the late reign, naturally received an acceffion of power during the minority; and as it was now becoming a fcene of bufinefs, the commons chofe for the first time a fpeaker, who might preferve order in their debates, and maintain those forms, which are requisite in all numerous affemblies. Peter de la Mare was the man pitched on; the fame perfon who had been imprifoned and detained in cuftody by the late King for his freedom of fpeech in attacking the miftres and the minifters of that prince. But tho' this election difcovered a fpirit of liberty in the commons, and was followed by farther attacks both on thefe minifters, and on Alice Pierce*, they were still too much fensible of their great inferiority, to affume at first any immediate share in the administration of government, or the care of the King's perfon. They were contented to apply by petition to the lords for that purpofe, and defire them both to appoint a council of nine, who might direct the public bufinefs, and to choose men of a virtuous life and conversation, who might infpect the conduct and education of the young prince. The lords complied with the first part of this request, and elected the bishops of London, Carlifle, and Salifbury, the earls of Marche and Stafford, fir Richard de Stafford, fir Henry le Scrope, fir John Devereux, and fir Hugh Segrave, to whom they gave authority for a year to conduct the ordinary course of business +. But as to the regulation of the King's household, they declined interposing in an office, which, they faid, was both fo invidious in itfelf, and might prove fo difagreeable to his majesty.

> The commons, as they acquired more courage, ventured to proceed a ftep farther in their applications. They prefented a petition, in which they prayed the King to check the prevailing cuftom among the barons, of forming illegal confe-

> > + Rymer, vol. 7. p. 161.

* Walfing. p. 150.

deracies

ICH R A R D II.

deracies together, and fupporting each other, as well as men of inferior rank, in Chap. XVII. the violations of law and justice. They received from the throne a general and an obliging answer to this petition : But another part of their application, that all the great officers should, during the King's minority, be appointed by parliament, which feemed to require the concurrence of the commons, as well as that of the upper house, in the nomination, was not complied with : The lords alone affumed the power of appointing these officers: The commons tacitly acquiesced in their choice; and thought, that, for the present, they had proceeded a sufficient length, if they but advanced their pretenfions, tho' rejected, of interpoling in these more important matters of state.

On this footing then the government flood. The administration was conducted entirely in the King's name : No regency was expressly appointed : The council and the great officers, named by the peers, did their duty, each in his separate department : And the whole fyftem was for fome years kept together, by the fecret authority of the King's uncles, especially of the duke of Lancaster, who was in reality the regent.

THE parliament was diffolved, after the commons had reprefented the neceffity of their being re-affembled once every year, as appointed by law; and after having elected two citizens as their treasurers, to receive and difburse the produce of two fifteens and tenths, which they voted to the crown. In the other parliaments called during the minority, the commons still difcover a strong spirit of freedom and fense of their own authority, which, without breeding any diffurbance, tended to fecure their independance and that of the people *.

EDWARD had left his grandfon involved in many dangerous wars. The pretenfions of the duke of Lancaster to the crown of Castile, made that kingdom

*' In the fifth year of the King, the commons comp'ained of the government about the King's perfon, his court, the exceffive number of his fervants, of the abufes in the Chancery, King's Bench, Common P eas, Exchequer, and of grievous oppressions in the country, by the great multitudes of maintainers of quarrels, (men linked in confederacies together) who behaved themselves like kings in the country, fo as there was very little law or right, and of other things which they faid were the caufe of the late commotions under Wat Tyler. Parl. Hift. vol. 1. p. 365. This irregular government, which no king and no house of commons had been able to remedy, was the fource of the licentiousness of the great, and turbulency of the people, as well as tyranny of the princes. If fubjects would enjoy liberty, and Kings fecurity, the laws must be executed.

In the ninth of this reign, the commons also discovered an accuracy and a jealoufy of liberty, which we should little expect in these rude times. " It was agreed by parliament," fays Cotton, p. 309, " that the fubfidy of wools, wool-fells, and fkins, granted to the King until the time of Mid-fummer " then enfuing, fhould ceafe from the fame time unto the feaft of St. Peter ad vincula; for that thereby " the King fhould be interrupted for claiming fuch grant as due." See also Cotton, p. 198.

fill

243

1377-

Chap. XVII. ftill perfevere in hoftilities against England. Scotland, whose throne was now 1377. filled by Robert Stewart, nephew to David Bruce, and the first prince of that family, maintained fuch clofe connexions with France, that war with the one crown almost necessarily produced hostilities with the other. The French monarch, whose prudent conduct had acquired him the firname of wife, as he had already baffled all the experience and valour of the two Edwards, was likely to prove a dangerous enemy to a minor King; but his genius, which was not naturally enterprizing, led him not, at present, to give any great disturbance to his neighbours; and he laboured, befides, under many difficulties at home, which it was neceffary for him to furmount, before he could think of making conquefts in an enemy's country. England was master of Calais, Bourdeaux, and Bayonne; had lately acquired poffeffion of Cherbourg, from the ceffion of the King of Navarre, and of Breft from that of the duke of Brittany *; and having thus access into France from every quarter, was able, even in its present situation, to give annoyance to his government. Before Charles could remove them from these important posts, he died in the flower of his age, and left his kingdom to a minor fon, who bore the name of Charles VI.

1378.

1380.

MEAN-WHILE the war with France was carried on in a manner fomewhat languid, and produced no enterprize of great luftre or renown. Sir Hugh Calverley, who had formerly headed a company of banditti in France, (for he, as well as fir Robert Knolles, and many of the most renowned commanders of Edward, had once followed that difhonourable profession,) was governor of Calais; and making an inroad into Picardy, with a detachment of the garrifon, he fet fire to Boulogne +. The duke of Lancaster conducted an army into Brittany, but returned without being able to perform any memorable action. In a fubfequent year, the duke of Glocester marched out of Calais with a body of 2000 cavalry, and 8000 infantry; and fcrupled not, with this fmall army, to enter into the heart of France, and to continue his ravages, thro' Picardy, Champaigne, the Brie, the Beauffe, the Gatinois, the Orleanois, till he reached his allies in the province of Brittany ‡. The duke of Burgundy, at the head of a more confiderable army, came within fight of him; but the French were fo over-awed by the former fucceffes of the English, that no superiority of numbers could tempt them to venture a pitched battle with the troops of that nation. As the duke of Brittany, foon after the arrival of these fuccours, formed an accommodation with the court of France; this enterprize also proved in the iffue unfuccessful, and made no durable impreffion upon the enemy.

* Rymer, vol. 7. p. 190. † Walfing. p. 209. ‡ Froisfart, liv. 2. chap. 50, 51. Walfin. p. 239.

THE

I CHAR D II. R

THE expences of these armaments, and the usual want of oeconomy attending Chap. XVII. a minority, much exhausted the English treasury, and obliged the parliament, in order to fupply it, to impose a new and extraordinary tax of three groats on every person, male and female, above fifteen years of age; and they ordained that, in levying that tax, the opulent should relieve the poor by an equitable compensation. This imposition excited a mutiny, which was very fingular in its circumftances. All hiftory abounds with examples, where the great tyrannize over the meaner fort : But here the loweft populace role against their rulers, exercifed the most cruel ravages upon them, and took vengeance for all their former oppreffions.

THE faint dawning of the arts and of good government in that age, had excited the minds of the populace, in different flates of Europe, to with for a better condition, and to murmur against those chains, which the laws, enacted by the haughty nobility and gentry, had fo long impofed upon them. The commotions of the people in Flanders, the mutiny of the peafants in France, were the natural effects of this growing fpirit of independance; and the report of these events, being brought into England, where perfonal flavery was more general than in any other country of Europe *, had prepared the minds of the multitude for an infurrection. One John Ball alfo, a feditious preacher, who affected low popularity, went about the country, and inculcated on his audience the principles of the first origin of mankind from one common stock, their equal right to liberty and to all the goods of nature, the tyranny of artificial diffinctions, and the abufes which had arifen from the degradation of the more confiderable part of the species, and the aggrandizement of a few infolent rulers +. These doctrines, fo agreeable to the populace and fo conformable to the ideas of primitive equality, which are engraven in the hearts of all men, were greedily received by the multitude; and had fcattered the fparks of that fedition, which the present tax raised into a conflagration.

THE impolition of three groats a head had been farmed out to tax-gatherers Infurrection in each county, who levied the money with rigor on the people ; and the claufe, of the comof making the rich eafe their poorer neighbours of some share of the burden, being mon people. fo vague and undetermined, had doubtlefs occafioned many partialities, and made the people more fenfible of the unequal lot, which fortune had affigned them in the diffribution of her favours. The first diforder arose from a black-smith in a village of Effex. The tax-gatherers came to this man's fhop, while he was at work, and demanded payment for his daughter, whom he afferted to be

* Froisfart, liv. 2. chap. 74.

+ Froisfart, liv. 2. chap. 74. Walfingham, p. 275. below 1381.

1380.

1381.

246

Chap. XVII. below the age affigned by the flatute. One of these fellows offered to produce a very indecent proof to the contrary, and at the fame time laid hold of the maid : Which the father refenting, immediately knocked out the ruffian's brains with his hammer. The byftanders applauded the action, and exclaimed, that it was full time for the people to take vengeance of their tyrants, and to vindicate their native liberty. They immediately flew to arms : The whole neighbourhood joined in the fedition : The flame fpread in an inftant over the whole county : It foon propagated itfelf into that of Kent, of Hertford, Surrey, Suffex, Suffolk, Norfolk, Cambridge, and Lincoln. Before the government had the leaft warning of the danger, the diforder had rifen beyond controul or opposition: The populace had fhaken off all regard to their former mafters : And being headed by the most audacious and criminal of their associates, who assumed the feigned names of Wat Tyler, Jack Straw, Hob Carter, and Tom Millar, by which they were fond of denoting their mean origin, they committed every where the most outrageous violences on fuch of the gentry or nobility as had the misfortune to fall into their hands.

Izth June.

THE infurgents, amounting to an hundred thousand men, affembled on Blackheath, under their leaders, Tyler and Straw; and as the princefs of Wales, the King's mother, returning from a pilgrimage to Canterbury, paffed thro' the midft of them, they attacked her company, and fome of the moft infolent among them, to fhow their purpose of levelling all mankind, forced kiffes from her; but they allowed her to continue her journey, without attempting any farther injury *. They fent a meffage to the King, who had taken shelter in the Tower ; and defired a conference with him. Richard failed down the river in his barge ; but on approaching the fhore, he faw fuch fymptoms of tumult and infolence, that he put back and returned to that fortrefs +. The mutinous peafants, mean while, favoured by the city rabble, had broke into London ; had burnt the duke of Lancafter's palace of the Savoy ; cut off the heads of all the gentlemen whom they laid hold of ; expressed a particular animofity against the lawyers and attornies; and pillaged the warehouses of the rich merchants ‡. A great body of them quartered themfelves at Mile end; and the King, finding no defence in the Tower, which was weakly garifoned, and ill fupplied with provisions, was obliged to go out to them, and afk their demands. They required a general pardon, the abolition of flavery, freedom of commerce in market-towns without tolls or imposts, and a fixed rent on lands instead of the fervices due by villenage. These requests, which, tho' extremely reasonable in themselves, the nation was not

* Froiffart, liv. 2. chap. 74. + Froiffart, liv. 2. chap. 75.

[‡] Froiffart, liv. 2. chap. 76. Walfingham, p. 248, 249.

RICHARD II.

not fufficiently prepared to receive, and which it was dangerous to have extorted Chap. XVII. by violence, were however complied with; charters to that purpose were granted them; and this body immediately difperfed and returned to their feveral homes *.

DURING this transaction, another body of the rebels had broke into the Tower; had murdered Simon Sudbury, the primate, and chancellor, with Sir Robert Hales, the treasurer, and fome other perfons of diffinction ; and continued their ravages in the city +. The King passing along Smithfield, very slenderly guarded, met with Wat Tyler, at the head of these rioters, and entered into a conference with him. Tyler, having ordered his companions to retire till he should give them a fignal, after which they were to murder all the company except the King himfelf, whom they were to detain prifoner, feared not to come into the midst of the royal retinue. He there behaved himself in such a manner, that Walworth, the mayor of London, not able to bear his infolence, drew his fword, and ftruck him fo violent a blow as brought him to the ground, where he was inftantly difpatched by others of the King's train. The mutineers feeing their leader fall, prepared themfelves for revenge; and this whole company with the King himfelf, had undoubtedly perished on the spot, had it not been for an extraordinary prefence of mind which Richard difcovered on this occafion. He ordered his company to ftop; he advanced alone towards the enraged multitude; and accofting them with an affable and intrepid countenance, he afked them, " What is the meaning of this diforder, my good people? Are you angry that " you have loft your leader ? I am your King : I will be your leader." The populace, over-awed by his prefence, implicitly followed him : He led them out into the fields, to prevent any diforder which might have arifen by their continuing in the city : Being there joined by Sir Robert Knolles and a body of well armed veteran foldiers, who had been fecretly drawn together, he ftrictly prohibited that officer from falling on the rioters, and committing an undiftinguished flaughter upon them; and he peaceably difmiffed them with the fame charters, which had been granted to their companions ‡. Soon after, the nobility and gentry, hearing of the King's danger, in which they were all involved, flocked to London with their adherents and retainers; and Richard took the field at the head of an army 40,000 ftrong §. It then behoved all the other rebels to fubmit : The charters of enfranchifement and pardon were revoked by parliament; the low people were reduced to the fame flavish condition as before, and feveral of the ringleaders were feverely punished for the late diforders. It was pretended, that the intentions of the infurgents had been to feize the King's perfon, to carry him

* Froiffart, lib. 2. chap. 77. + Walfingham, p. 250, 251. ‡ Froiffart, vol. 2. chap. 77. Walfingham, p. 253. Knyghton, p. 2637. § Walfingham, p. 267.

247

1381.

248

Chap. XVII. him thro' England at their head, to murder all the nobility, gentry, and lawyers, and even all the bishops and priefts, except the mendicant friars; to dispatch afterwards the King himfelf; and having thus reduced all the people to a level, to order the kingdom at their pleasure *. It is not impossible, that many of them, in the delirium of their first fucces, might have formed such projects : But of all the evils attending human fociety, the infurrections of the populace, when not raifed and supported by perfons of higher quality, is the least to be dreaded: The mischiefs, consequent on an abolition of all rank and distinction, become so great, that they are immediately felt, and foon bring back affairs to their former order and arrangement.

> A youth of fixteen (which was at this time the King's age) that had difcovered fo much courage, prefence of mind, and addrefs, and had fo dextroufly eluded the violence of this tumult, gave great hopes to the nation; and it was natural to expect, that he would, in the course of his life, equal all the glories, which had to uniformly attended his father and his grandfather, in all their undertakings. But in proportion as Richard advanced in years, these hopes were blasted; and his want of capacity, at least of solid judgment, appeared in every enterprize, which he attempted. The Scots, fenfible of their own deficiency in cavalry, had applied to the regency of Charles VI. and John de Vienne, admiral of France, had been fent over with a body of 1500 men at arms, to fupport them in their incursions against the English. The danger was now deemed by the King's uncles fomewhat ferious; and a great army of 60,000 men was levied and conducted against Scotland, with Richard himself at the head of it. The Scots pretended not to make refiftance to fo great a force : They abandoned without fcruple their country to be pillaged and deftroyed by the enemy: And when de Vienne expressed his furprize at this plan of operations, they told him, that all their cattle was driven into the forefts and faftneffes; that their houfes and other goods were of no value; and that they well knew how to compenfate themfelves for any loffes, which they might fuftain in that refpect, by making an invation on the English. Accordingly, when Richard entered Scotland by Berwic and the eaft coaft, the Scots and French, to the number of 30,000 men, paffed the borders of England by the weft, and carrying on their ravages thro Cumberland, Westmoreland, and Lancashire, collected a rich booty, and then returned in tranquillity to their own country. Richard mean while advanced towards Edinburgh, and deftroyed in his way all the towns and villages on each fide of him : He reduced that city to ashes : He treated in the same manner Perth, Dundee, and other places in the Low Countries; but when he was ad-

> > * Walfingham, p. 265.

I

vifed

RICHARD II.

vifed to march towards the weft coaft, to await there the return of the enemy, and Chap. XVII. to take revenge on them for their devastations, his impatience to be in England, and enjoy his usual pleasures and amusements, was more prevalent; and he carried back his army, without effecting any thing by all thefe mighty preparations. The Scots, foon after, finding the folid bodies of French cavalry very ufeles in that defultory kind of war, to which they confined themfelves, treated their allies fo ill, that the French returned home ; very much difgufted with the country, and the mannets of its inhabitants *. The English, tho' they regretted the indolence and diffolute manners of their King, faw themfelves for the future fecured against any dangerous invalion from that quarter.

and his creative on the one hand

But it was fo material an intereft of the French court to wreft the fea port towns from the hands of their enemy, that they refolved to attempt it by fome other expedient, and found no means fo likely as by an invation of England itfelf. They collected an immense fleet and army at Sluife; for the Flemings were now in alliance with them: All the nobility of France were engaged in this enterprize : The English were kept in alarm : Great preparations were made for the reception of the invaders: And tho' the dispersion of the French ships by a storm, and the taking of many of them by the English, before the embarkation of the troops, freed the kingdom from the prefent danger, they were fully fenfible, that this perilous fituation might every moment return upon them +.

THERE were two circumftances chiefly, which engaged the French at this time to think of fuch attempts. The one was the ablence of the duke of Lancaster, who had carried into Spain all the flower of the English military force, in profecution of his vain claim to the crown of Castile; an enterprize, in which, after some promising success, he was finally disappointed : The other was, the violent dissenfions and diforders, which had taken place in the English government.

THE fubjection, in which Richard was held by his uncles, particularly by the duke of Glocester, a prince of enterprize and genius, tho' it was not unfuitable to his years and flender capacity, was extremely difagreeable to his violent temper; and he began to rebel against the yoke imposed upon him. Robert de Vere, earl of Oxford, a young man of a noble family, of an agreeable figure, but of diffolute manners, had acquired an entire afcendant over him; and ruled him with the most absolute authority. The King knew fo little bounds to his affection, that he first created his favourite marquis of Dublin, a title before unknown in England, and then duke of Ireland; and transferred to him by patent, which was 1386.

VOL. II.

^{*} Froiffart, liv. 2. chap. 149, 150, &c. liv. 3. chap. 52. Walfingham, p. 316, 317. + Froiffart, liv. 3. chap. 41, 53. Walfingham, p. 322, 323.

1386.

250

Chap. XVII. was confirmed in parliament, the entire fovereignty for life of that ifland *. He gave him in marriage his coufin german, the daughter of Ingelram de Gouci, earl of Bedford ; but foon after permitted him to repudiate that lady, tho' of an unexceptionable character, and to marry a foreigner, a Bohemian, with whom he had become enamoured +. These public declarations of attachment turned the whole court towards the favourite : All graces paffed thro' his hands : Accels to the King could only be obtained thro' his mediation : And Richard feemed to take no pleasure in royal authority, but fo far as it enabled him to load with favours and titles and dignities this object of his affections o morning staldelib bea Discontent of the barons.

THE jealoufy of power immediately produced an animofity between the minion and his creatures on the one hand, and the princes of the blood and chief nobility on the other; and the ufual complaints against the infolence of favourites were loudly echoed and greedily received, in every part of the kingdom. Mowbray, earl of Nottingham, the marefchal, Fitz-Alan earl of Arundel, Piercy earl of Northumberland, Montacute earl of Salifbury, Beauchamp earl of Warwic, were all connected with each other, and with the princes, by friendship or alliances, and ftill more by their antipathy to those who had eclipfed them in the King's favour and confidence. No longer kept in awe by the perfonal character of the prince, they formed to fubmit to his ministers; and the methods, which they took to redrefs the grievance complained of, well fuited the violence of that age, and the defperate extremities, to which every opposition was fure to be instantly carried.

MICHAEL DE LA POLE, the present chancellor, and lately created earl of Suffolk, was the fon of an eminent merchant; but had rifen by his abilities and valour during the wars of Edward III, had acquired the friendship of that monarch, and was effeemed the perfon of greateft experience and capacity among those who were attached to the duke of Ireland and the King's fecret council-The duke of Glocefter, who had the house of commons at his devotion, impelled them to exercise that power which they feem first to have affumed against lord Latimer during the declining years of the late King ; and an impeachment against the chancellor was carried up by them to the house of peers, which was no lefs at his devotion. The King forefaw the tempest preparing against him and his ministers. After attempting in vain to rouse the Londoners to his defence, he withdrew from parliament, and retired with his court to Eltham. The parliament fent a deputation, inviting him to return, and threatening, that, if he continued to abfent himfelf, they would immediately diffolve, and leave the nation,

3

* Cotton, p. 310, 311. Cox's hift. of Ireland, p. 129. Walfingham, p. 324.

† Walfingham, p. 328.

tho'

R I C H A R D II.

tho' at that time in imminent danger of a French invalion, without any fupport Chap XVII. or fupply for its defence. At the fame time, a member was encouraged to call ^{1386.} for the record, containing the parliamentary deposition of Edward II.; a plain intimation of the fate, which Richard, if he continued refractory, had reason to expect from them. The King, finding himfelf unable to refist, was contented to flipulate, that, except finishing the prefent impeachment against Suffolk, no attack should be made against any other of his ministers; and on that condition, he returned to the parliament *.

NOTHING can prove more fully the innocence of Suffolk, than the frivoloufnels of the articles, which his enemies, in the prefent plenitude of their power, thought proper to object against him +. It was alleged, that being chancellor, and obliged by his oath to confult the King's profit, he had purchased lands of the crown below their true value; that he had exchanged with the King a perpetual annuity of 400 marks a year, which he enjoyed from his father, and which was affigned upon the cuftoms of the port of Hull, for lands of an equal income; that having obtained for his fon the priory of St. Anthony, which was formerly poffeffed by a Frenchman, an enemy and a fchifmatic, and a new prior being at the fame time named by the Pope, he had refufed to admit this perfon, till he made a composition with his fon, and agreed to pay him an hundred pounds a year from the benefice ; that he had purchased, from one Tydeman of Limborch, an old and forfeited annuity of fifty pounds a year upon the crown, and had engaged the King to admit that bad debt upon his revenues; and that, when created earl of Suffolk, he had obtained a grant of 500 pounds a year, to support the dignity of that title ‡. Even the proof of these articles, frivolous as they

* Knyghton, p. 2715, &c. The fame author, p. 2680, tells us, that the King, in return to the meffage, faid, that he would not for their defire remove the meaneff fcullion from his kitchen. This author alfo tells us, that the King faid to the commiffioners, when they harangued him, that he faw his fubjects were rebellious, and his beff way would be to call in the King of France to his aid. But it is plain, that all thefe fpeeches were either intended by Knyghton merely as an ornament to his hiftory, or are falfe. For (1) when the five lords accufe the King's minifters in the next parliament, and impute to them every rafh action of the King, they fpeak nothing of thefe replies which are fo obnoxious, were fo recent, and are pretended to have been fo public. (2) The King, fo far from having any connexions at that time with France, was threatened with a dangerous invafion from that kingdom. This fory feems to have been taken from the reproaches afterwards thrown out againft him, and to have been transferred by the hiftorian to this time, to which they cannot be applied.

+ Cotton; p. 315. Knyghton, p. 2683.

[‡] It is probable that the earl of Suffolk was not rich, nor able to fupport the dignity without the bounty of the crown: For his father Michael de la Pole, tho' a great merchant, had been ruined by lending money to the late King. See Cotton, p. 194. We may remark that the dukes of Glocefler and York, tho' vaftly rich, received at the fame time each of them a thoufand pounds a year, to fupport their dignity. Rymer, vol. 7. p. 481. Cotton, p. 310.

Kk 2

1386.

Chap. XVII. are, was found very defective upon the trial : It appeared, that Suffolk had made no purchafes of the crown while he was chancellor, and that all his bargains of that kind were made before he was advanced to that dignity *. It is almost needlefs to add, that he was condemned, notwithstanding his defence; and that he was deprived of his office.

> GLOCESTER and his affociates observed their flipulation with the King, and attacked no more of his ministers : But they immediately attacked himself and his royal dignity, and framed a commission after the model of those, which had been attempted almost in every reign fince that of Richard I. and which had always been attended with the most extreme confusion +. By this commission a council of fourteen perfons were appointed, all of Glocefter's faction, except Nevil, archbifhop of York: The fovereign power was transferred to thefe men for a twelvemonth : The King, who had now reached the twenty first year of his age, was in reality dethroned: The ariflocracy was rendered fupreme: And tho' the term of the commission was limited to a twelvemonth, it was easy to forefce, that the intentions of the party were to render it perpetual, and that power would with great difficulty be wrefted from those grasping hands, to which it was once committed. Richard, however, was obliged to fubmit : He figned the commiffion ; he took an oath never to infringe it; and tho' at the end of the feffion, he publick'y entered a proteft, that the prerogatives of his crown, notwithftanding his late conceffion, fhould ftill be deemed entire and unimpaired 1, the new commiffioners, without regarding it, proceeded to the exercise of their authority.

1387. tions.

THE King, thus difpoffelt of royal power, was foon fenfible of the contempt Civil commo- into which he was fallen. His favourites and ministers, who were as yet allowed to remain about his perfon, failed not to aggravate the injury, which, without any demerit on his part, had been offered to him. And his eager temper was of itfelf fufficiently inclined to feek the means both of recovering his authority and of revenging himfelf on those who had invaded it. As the house of commons appeared now of fome weight in the conftitution, he tried fecretly fome expedients for procuring a favourable election : He founded fome of the fheriffs, who being at that time both the returning officers, and magiftrates of great power in the counties, would naturally have confiderable influence in elections: But as moft of them had been appointed by his uncles, either during his minority, or during the courfe of the prefent commission, he found them in general averse to his enterprize. The fentiments and inclinations of the judges were more favourable to him. He met at Nottingham fir Robert Trefilian, chief justice of the Chap. XVII. King's Bench, fir Robert Belknappe, chief justice of the Common Pleas, fir John Cary, chief baron of the Exchequer, Holt, Fulthorpe, and Bourg, inferior juffices, and Lokton, ferjeant at law; and he proposed to them some queries, which thefe lawyers, either from the influence of his authority or of reafon, made no fcruple of answering in the way he defired. They declared, that the late commiffion was derogatory to the royalty and prerogative of the King; that those who procured it, or advised the King to confent to it, were punishable with death; that those who necessitated and compelled him were guilty of treason; that those were equally criminal who should perfevere in maintaining it; that the King has the right of diffolving parliaments when he pleafes; that the parliament, while it fits, must proceed first upon the King's business; and that that affembly cannot without the King's confent impeach any of his minifters and judges *. Even according to our prefent first maxims with regard to law and the royal prerogative, all these determinations, except the two last, were entirely justifiable : And as the great privileges of the commons, particularly that of impeachment, were hitherto very new, and supported by few precedents, there want not reasons of apology for these opinions of the judges. They figned, therefore, their answer to the King's queries before the archbishops of York and Dublin, the bishops of Durham, Chichefter, and Bangor, the duke of Ireland, the earl of Suffolk, and two other counfellors of inferior quality.

> + Knyghton, p. 2686. Statutes at large, 10 Rich. II. chap. 1. * Cotton, p. 315. ‡ Cotton, p. 318.

R I C H A R D - II.

THE duke of Glocefter, and his adherents, foon got intelligence of this fecret confultation; and were naturally much alarmed at it. They faw the King's intention, not only of recovering his authority, but of punishing them for invading it; and they determined to prevent the execution of his purpose. As foon as he came to London, which, they knew, was well disposed to their party, they fecretly affembled their forces, and appeared in arms at Haringay-park, near Highgate, with a power, which Richard and his ministers were not able to refift. They fent him a meffage by the archbishop of Canterbury, and the lords Lovel, Cobham, and Devereux, and demanded, that the perfons who had feduced him by their pernicious council, and were traitors both to him and to the kingdom, should be delivered to them. A few days after, they appeared in his prefence, armed and attended with armed followers; and they accused by name the archbishop of York, the duke of Ireland, the earl of Suffolk, fir Robert Trefilian, and fir Nicholas Brembre, as publick and dangerous enemies to the flate. They threw down their gauntlets before the King, and fiercely offered to maintain

* Knyghton, p. 2694. Ypod Neuft. p, 541.

253

Chap XVII. the truth of their charge by duel. The perfons accused, and all the other obnoxious ministers, had withdrawn or concealed themfelves.

THE duke of Ireland fled to Cheshire, and levied fome forces, with which he advanced to relieve the King from the violence of the nobles. Glocefler encountered him, in Oxfordshire with much superior forces; routed him, dispersed his followers, and obliged him to fly into the Low-Countries, where he died in exile a few years after. The lords then appeared at London with an army of 40,000 men; 3d February. and having obliged the King to fummon a parliament, which was entirely at their devotion, they had full power, by observing a few legal forms, to take vengeance on all their enemies. Five great peers, men whole combined power was able at any time to shake the throne, Thomas duke of Glocester, the King's uncle ; Henry earl of Derby, fon of the duke of Lancaster; Richard earl of Arundel and Surrey; Thomas earl of Warwic, and Thomas earl of Nottingham, and marefchal of England, entered before the parliament an accusation or appeal, as it was called, against the five counfellors, whom they had already accused before the King. The parliament, who ought to have been judges, were not ashamed to impose an oath on all their members, by which they bound themselves to live and die with the lords appellants, and to defend them against all their enemies with their lives and fortunes *.

THE other proceedings were well fuited to the violence and iniquity of the times. A charge, confifting of thirty-nine articles, was delivered in by the appellants; and as none of the accused counsellors, except fir Nicholas Brembre, was in cultody, the reft were cited to anfwer; and upon their non-appearance, after a very fort interval, without hearing a witnefs, without examining a fact, or deliberating on one point of law, the house of peers declared them guilty of high treason. Sir Nicholas Brembre, who was produced in court, had the appearance, and probably no more than the appearance, of a trial : The peers, tho' they were not by law his proper judges, pronounced, in a very fummary manner, fentence of death upon him; and he was executed, together with Sir Robert Trefilian, who had been difcovered and taken in the interval.

IT would be tedious to recite the whole charge delivered in against the five counfellors; which is to be met with in feveral collections +. It is fufficient to observe in general, that if we reason upon the supposition, which is the true one, that the royal prerogative was invaded by the commission given to the duke of Glocefter and his affociates, and that the King's perfon was afterwards detained

* Cotton, p. 322. + Knyghton, p. 2715. Tyrrel, vol. 3. part 2. p. 919, from the records. Parliamentary Hiftory, vol. 1. p. 414.

Expulsion or execution of the King's ministers.

1388.

RAILCH H A R D H.

in cuftody by rebels, many of the articles will appear, not only to imply no crime Chap. XVII; in the duke of Ireland and the ministers, but to impute to them actions, which were laudable, and which they were bound by their allegiance to perform. The few articles, respecting the conduct of thefe ministers before that commission, which fubverted the conflicution, and annihilated all juffice and legal authority, are vague and general; fuch as their engroffing the King's favour, keeping the grandees at a diftance from nim, obtaining unreasonable grants for themselves or Itheir creatures, and diffipating the public treafure by ufeless expences. No vio-Jence is objected to them; no particular illegal act *; no breach of any flatute; and their administration may therefore be concluded to have been fo far innocent and inoffenfive. All the diforders indeed feem to have proceeded, not from any infringement of the laws attempted by the ministers, but merely from a rivalship of power, which the duke of Glocester, and the great nobility, agreeable to the genius of the times, carried to the utmost extremity against their opponents, without any regard to reason, justice or humanity.

Bur these were not the only acts of violence committed during the triumph of the party. All the other judges, who had figned the extrajudicial opinions at Nottingham, were condemned to death, and were, as a grace or favour, banished to Ireland; tho' they pleaded the fear of their lives, and the menaces of the King's ministers as their excuse. The lord Beauchamp of Holt, fir James Berners, and fir John Salifbury, were also tried and condemned for high treason ; merely because they had attempted to defeat the late commission : But the life of the latter was spared. The fate of fir Simon Burley was more fevere: This gentleman was much beloved for his perfonal merit, had diffinguished himfelf by many honourable actions +, was created knight of the garter, and had been appointed governor to Richard, by the choice of the late King and the Black prince : He

* We must except the 12th article, which accuses Erembre of having cut off the heads of twentytwo prifoners, confined for felony or debt, without warrant or process of law: But as it is not conceivable what interest Brembre could have to treat these felons and debtors in such a manner ; we may prefume that the fact is either false or misrepresented. It was in these mens power to fay any thing against the perfons accufed : No defence or apology was admitted: All was lawlefs will and pleafure.

They are also accused of defigns to murder the lords ; but these accusations either are general, or deftroy one another. Sometimes, as in article 15th, they intend to murder them by means of the mayor and city of London : Sometimes, as in article 28th, by trial and false inquests : Sometimes, as in article 28th, by means of the King of France, who was to receive Calais for his pains.

+ At least, this is the character given of him by Froiffart, liv. 2. who knew him perfonally : Walfing. p. 334, gives a very different character of him; but he is a writer fomewhat paffionate and partial; and the choice made of this gentleman by Edward III. and the Black prince for the education of Richard, makes the character given of him by Froiffart, much more probable.

1388.

255

had 1388.

Chap. XVII. had attended his mafter from the earlieft infancy of that prince, and had ever remained extremely attached to him : Yet all these confiderations could not fave him from falling a victim to Glocester's vengeance. This execution, more than all the others, made a deep impression on Richard's mind : His Queen too (for he was already married to the fifter of the Emperor Wincheslaus, King of Bohemia) interested herself extremely in behalf of Burley : She remained three hours on her knees before the earl of Glocefter, pleading for that gentleman's life ; but tho' The was become extremely popular by her amiable qualities, which had acquired her the appellation of the good Queen Ann; her petition was sternly rejected by that inexorable tyrant. and their administration may t

THE parliament concluded this violent scene by a declaration, that none of the articles, decided on these trials to be treason, should ever afterwards be drawn into precedent by the judges, who were still to confider the statute of the twentyfifth of Edward as the rule of their conduct. The house of lords feem not at that time to have known or acknowledged the principle, that they themfelves were bound, in their judicial capacity, to follow the rules, which they had established in their legislative *. I: was also enacted, that every one should fwear to the perpetual maintenance and fupport of the forfeitures and attainders, and of all the other acts paffed during this parliament. The archbishop of Canterbury added the penalty of excommunication, as a farther fecurity of these deeds of violence, 1389.

IT might naturally be expected, that the King, being reduced to fuch flavery by the combination of the princes of the blood and the chief nobility, and having appeared fo unable to defend his fervants from the most cruel effects of their refentment, would long remain in subjection to them; and never would recover

* In general, the parliament in those days never paid a proper regard to Edward's statute of treafons, tho' one of the most advantageous laws for the subject that has ever been enacted. In the 17th of the King, the dukes of Lancester and Glocester complain to Richard that Sir Thomas Talbot, with others of his adherents conspired the death of the Said dukes in divers parts of Cheshire, as the Same was confessed and well known; and praying that the parliament may judge of the fault. Whereupon the King and the lords in the parliament judged the Jame fact to be open and high treaf n: And hereupon they asward two swrits, the one to the fleriff of York, and the other to the fleriffs of Derby, to take the body of the Jaid Sir Thomas returnable in the King's bench in the month of Easter then ensuing. And open proclamation was made in Westminster-ball, that upon the sheriff's return, and at the next coming in of the faid Sir Thomas, the faid Thomas should be convicted of treason, and incur the loss and pain of the same : And all fuch as should receive him after the proclamation should incur the same loss and pain. Cotton, p. 354. It is to be observed, that this extraordinary judgment was passed in a time of tranquillity. Tho' the statute itself of Edward III. referves a power to the parliament to declare any new species of treason, it is not to be supposed that this power was referved to the house of lords alone, or that men were to be judged by a law ex post fatto. At least, if such be the meaning of the clause; it may be affirmed, that men were at that time very ignorant of the first principles of law and justice.

R ICHARD II.

the royal power, without the most violent ftruggles and convulsions : But the Chap. XVII. event proved otherwife. In lefs than a twelvemonth, Richard, who was in his twenty-third year, declared in council, that as he had now attained the full age, which intitled him to govern by his own authority his kingdom and houfehold, he refolved to exercife his right of fovereignty; and when no one ventured to contradict fo reafonable an intention, he deprived Fitz Alan archbishop of Canterbury of the dignity of chancellor, and beftowed that high office on William of Wickham, bishop of Winchester ; the bishop of Hereford was displaced from the office of treasurer, the earl of Arundel from that of admiral; even the duke of Glocefter and the earl of Warwic were removed for a time from the council-board : And no opposition was made to these great changes. The history of this reign is very imperfect, and very little to be depended on ; except where it is supported by the public records : And it is not easy for us to affign the reason of this unexpected event. Perhaps, some fecret animolities, naturally to be expected in that fituation, had crept in among the great men, and enabled the King to recover his authority. Perhaps, the violence of their former proceedings had loft them the affections of the people, who foon repent of any cruel extremities, to which they are carried by their leaders. However this may be, Richard exercifed with moderation the authority which he had refumed. He feemed to be entirely reconciled to his uncles * and the other great men, of whom he had fo much reason to complain : He never attempted to recal from banishment the duke of Ireland, whom he found fo obnoxious to them: He confirmed by proclamation the general pardon, which the parliament had passed for all offences: And he courted the affections of the people, by voluntarily remitting fome fubfidies, which had been granted him; a remarkable, and almost a fingular instance of fuch generofity.

AFTER this composure of domestic differences, and reftoration of the government to its natural state, there passes an interval of eight years, which affords not many remarkable events. The duke of Lancaster returned from Spain; having refigned to his rival all pretentions to the crown of Caftile upon payment of a large fum of money+, and having married his daughter, Philippe, to the King of Portugal. The authority of this prince ferved to counterbalance that of the duke of Glocefter. and fecured the power of Richard, who paid great court to his eldest uncle, by whom he had never been offended, and whom he found more moderate in his temper than the younger. He made a ceffion to him for life of the dutchy of Guienne ||, which the inclinations and changeable humour of the Gascons had

* Dugdale, vol. 2. p. 170.

+ Knyghton, p. 2677. Walfingham, p. 342.

* Rymer, vol. 7. p. 659. VOL. II.

LI

reftored

257

1389.

258

Chap. XVII reftored to the English government; but as they remonstrated loudly against this deed, it was finally, with the duke's confent, revoked by Richard *. There happened an incident, which produced a diffention between Lancaster and his two brothers. After the death of the Spanish princess, he espoused Catharine Swineford, daughter of a private knight of Hainault, by whofe alliance, York and Glocefter thought the dignity of their family much injured : But the King gratified his uncle by paffing in parliament a charter of legitimation to the children, whom that lady had born him before marriage, and by creating the eldeft, earl of Somerfet +.

> THE wars, mean while, which Richard had inherited with his crown, ftill continued; tho' interrupted by frequent truces according to the practice of that age, and conducted with little vigor, by reason of the weakness of all parties. The French war was fcarce heard of; the tranquillity of the northern borders was only interrupted by one inroad of the Scots, which proceeded more from a rivalship between the two martial families of Piercy and Douglas, than from any national quarrel : A fierce battle or fkirmish was fought at Otterborne 1, in which young Piercy, firnamed Hotfpur, from his impetuous valor, was taken prifoner, and Douglas flain ; and the victory remained undecided ||. Some infurrections of the Irish obliged the King to make an expedition into that country, which he reduced to obedience; and he recovered, in fome degree, by this enterprize, his character of courage, which had fuffered a little by the inactivity of his reign. At laft, the English and French courts began to think in earnest of a lafting peace; but found it fo difficult to adjust their opposite pretensions, that they were contented to effablish a truce of twenty-five years §: Breft and Cherbourg were reftored, the former to the duke of Brittany, the latter to the King of Navarre : Both parties were left in poffeffion of all the other places which they held at prefent: And to render the amity between the two crowns more durable, Richard, who was now a widower, was affianced to Ifabella, the daughter of Charles 4. This princefs was only feven years of age; but the King agreed to fo unequal a match, chiefly that he might fortify himfelf, by this alliance, againft the enterprizes of his uncles and the incurable turbulency as well as inconftancy of his barons.

> THE administration of the King, tho' it was not, in this interval, fullied by any unpopular act, except the feizure of the charter of London *, which was

* Rymer, vol. 7. p. 687.

‡ 15th August, 1388.

§ Rymer, vol. 7. p. 820.

Walfingham, p. 347.

| Froiffart, lib. 3. chap. 124, 125, 126. Walfingham, p. 355. 4 Bymer, vol. 7. p. 811. * Rymer, vol. 7. p. 727.

foon

1394.

⁺ Cotton, p. 365. Walfingham, p. 352.

RICHARDH.

foon after reftored, had not tended much to fortify his authority; and his per-Chap. XVII. fonal character brought him into contempt, even while his public government appeared in a good measure unexceptionable. Indolent, expensive, addicted to low pleafures; he fpent his whole time in feafting and jollity, and diffipated in idle fhow, or in bounty to favourites of no reputation, that revenue which the people expected to fee him employ in enterprizes directed to public honour and advantage. He forgot his rank by admitting all men to his familiarity ; and he was not fenfible, that their acquaintance with the qualities of his mind was not able to imprefs them with the refpect which he neglected to preferve from his birth and station. The earls of Kent and Huntington, his half brothers, were his chief confidents and favourites; and tho' he never devoted himfelf to them with fo profuse an affection as that with which he had been attached to the duke of Ireland, it was easy for men to fee that every grace passed thro' their hands, and that the King had rendered himfelf a mere cypher in the government. The fmall regard, which the public bore to his perfon, difpofed them to murmur against his administration, and to receive with greedy ears every complaint, which the difcontented or ambitious grandees fuggefted to them.

GLOCESTER foon perceived all the advantages, which this diffolute conduct 1397. gave him; and finding, that both refentment and jealoufy on the fide of his Cabals of the nephew still prevented him from acquiring any afcendant over that prince, he de- duke of Glotermined to cultivate his popularity with the nation, and to revenge himfelf on those who eclipsed him in favour and authority. He feldom appeared at court or in council : He never declared his opinion, but in order to difapprove of the measures embraced by the King and his favourites : And he courted the friendship of every man, whom disappointments or private resentment had rendered an enemy to the administration. The long truce with France was very unpopular with the English, who breathed nothing but war against that hostile nation; and Glocefter took care to encourage all the vulgar prejudices, which prevailed on this fubject. Forgetting the misfortunes, which attended the English arms during the latter years of Edward ; he made an invidious comparison between the glories of that reign and the inactivity of the prefent, and he lamented that Richard should have degenerated fo far from the heroic virtues, by which his father and his grand-father were diffinguished. The military men were inflamed with a defire of war, when they heard him talk of the fignal victories formerly obtained, and of the easy prey which might be made of the French riches by the fuperior valor of the English : The populace readily embraced the fame fentiments : And all men exclaimed, that this prince, whole councils were fo much neglected, was the true support of English honour, and alone able to L12 raife 1390.

 Chap. XVII raife the nation to its former height of power and fplendor. His great abilities, 1397. his popular manners, his princely extraction, his immense riches, his high office of constable *; all these advantages, not a little affisted by his want of courtfavour, gave him a mighty authority in the kingdom, and rendered him extremely formidable to Richard and his ministers.

FROISSART +, a contemporary author and very impartial, but whofe credit is fomewhat impaired by his want of exactness in material facts, afcribes to the duke of Glocefter more defperate views, and fuch as were totally incompatible with the government and domeftic tranquillity of the nation. According to that historian, he proposed to his nephew, Roger Mortimer, earl of Marche, whom Richard had declared his fucceffor, to give him immediate poffeffion of the throne, by the deposition of a prince, fo unworthy of government and authority : And when Mortimer declined this project, he refolved to make a partition of the kingdom between himfelf, his two brothers, and the earl of Arundel; and to difpoffefs Richard entirely of the crown. The King, it is faid, being informed of these designs, faw, that either his own ruin or that of Glocester was inevitable; and he refolved, by a hafty blow, to prevent the execution of fuch destructive projects. This is certain, that Glocester, by his own confession, had often affected to speak contemptuously of the King's perfon and government ; had deliberated concerning the lawfulnefs of throwing off allegiance to him; and had even born part in a fecret conference, where his deposition was proposed and talked of, and determined 1 : But it is reafonable to think, that his fchemes were not fo far advanced as to make him think of their immediate execution. The danger, probably, was still too distant to render a desperate remedy entirely neceffary for the fecurity of the government.

But whatever opinion we may form of Glocefter's confpiracies, his averfion to the French truce and alliance was public and avowed; and that court, which had now a great influence over the King, pufhed him to provide for his own fafety, by taking revenge of the dangerous defigns of his uncle. The refentment of his former violences revived; the fenfe of his refractory and uncompliant behaviour was ftill recent; and a man, whofe ambition had once ufurped royal authority, and murdered all the faithful fervants of the King, was thought ca-

* Rymer, vol. 7. p. 152. † Liv. 4. Chap. 86.

¹ Cotton, p. 378. Tyrrel, vol. 3. part 2. p. 972, from the records. Parliamentary Hiftory, vol. 1. p. 473. That this confession was genuine, and obtained without violence, may be entirely depended on. Judge Rickhill, who brought it over from Calais, was tried on that account, and acquitted in the first parliament of Henry IV when Glocester's party was prevalent. His acquittal, notwithstanding his innocence, may even appear marvellous, confidering the times. See Cotton, p. 393.

260

RICHA R D II.

pable, on a favourable opportunity, of renewing the fame treafonable enterprizes. Chap. XVII. The King's precipitant temper admitted of no deliberation : He ordered Glocefter to be unexpectedly arrefted; to be hurried into a ship which was lying in the river; and to be carried over to Calais, where alone, he thought, that, by reafon of his numerous partizans, he could fafely be detained in cuftody *. The earls of Arundel and Warwic, were feized at the fame time : The malecontents, fo fuddenly deprived of their leaders, were aftonifhed, and over-awed : And the concurrence of the dukes of Lancaster and York, in those measures, with that of the earls of Derby and Rutland, the fons of thefe princes +, bereaved them of all poffibility of refiftance.

A PARLIAMENT was immediately furmoned at Westminster; and the King 17th Sept. doubted not to find the peers, and ftill more the commons, very compliant with his will. This houfe had in a former parliament given him very fenfible proofs of their obedience ±; and the prefent fuppreffion of Glocefter's party made him ftill more affured of a favourable election. As a farther expedient for that purpofe, he is also faid to have employed the influence of the fheriffs; a practice which, as it was then fomewhat new, gave great umbrage, but which the eftablifhed authority of that affembly rendered afterwards more familiar to the nation. Accordingly, the parliament paffed whatever acts the King was pleafed to dictate to them §: They annulled forever the commission which usurped upon the royal authority, and declared it treasonable to attempt, in any future period, the revival of any fimilar commission ||: They abrogated all the acts, which * Froiffart, liv. 4. chap. 90. Walfing. p. 354. + Rymer, vol. 8. p. 7.

1 In the former parliament, the commons had fhewn themfelves in a difpolition to be very complaifant to the King ; yet there happened an incident in their proceedings, which is very curious, and fnews us the ftate of the house in that period. The members were either country gentlemen, or merchants, who were affembled for a few days, and were entirely unacquainted with bufinefs; fo that it was eafy to lead them aftray, and draw them into votes and refolutions very different from their fettled. purpofe. A member had propofed fome petitions concerning the flate of the nation; in which, among other things, the houfe recommended frugality to the King, and for that purpofe, defired, that the court should not be fo much frequented as formerly with bishops and ladies. The King was difpleafed with this freedom : The commons very humbly craved pardon : He was not fatisfied unlefs they would name the mover of that petition. It happened to be one Haxey, whom the parliament, in order to make attonement, condemned for this offence to die the death of a traitor. But the King, at the defire of the archbishop of Canterbury, and the prelates, pardoned him. When a parliament in those times, not agitated by any faction, and being at entire freedom, could be guilty of fuch monftrous extravagance, it is eafy to judge what might be expected from them in more trying fituations. See Cotton's abridg. p. 361, 362.

§ The nobles brought numerous retainers with them to give them fecurity, as we are told by Walfingham, p. 354. The King had a few Cheshire men for his guard.

|| Statutes at large, 21. Richard II.

attainted

1397.

1397.

262

Chap. XVII. attainted the King's ministers, and which that parliament who passed them, and the whole nation, had fworn inviolably to maintain: And they declared the general pardon then granted to be invalid, as extorted by force, and never ratified by the free confent of the King. Tho' Richard, after he refumed the government, and lay no longer under confirmint, had voluntarily, by proclamation, confirmed that general indemnity; this circumstance feemed not, in their eyes, to merit the leaft confideration. Even a particular pardon granted fix years after to the earl of Arundel, was annulled by parliament ; upon pretence, that it was procured by furprize, and that the King was not then acquainted with the degree of guilt incurred by that nobleman.

> The commons then entered an impeachment against Fitz-Alan, archbishop of Canterbury, and brother to Arundel, and accufed him of his concurrence in procuring the illegal commission, and in attainting the King's ministers. The primate pleaded guilty; but as he was protected by the ecclefiaftical privileges, the King was fatisfied with a fentence, which banifhed him the kingdom, and fequeftered his temporalities *. An appeal or acculation was prefented against the duke of Glocester, and the earls of Arundel and Warwic, by the earls of Rutland, Kent, Huntington, Somerfet, Salifbury, and Notringham, together with the lords Spencer and Scrope, and they were accused of the fame crimes which had been imputed to the archbishop, as well as of their appearance against the King in a hostile manner at Haringay-park. The earl of Arundel, who was brought to the bar, very wifely confined all his defence to the pleading both the general and particular pardon of the King; but was over-ruled, condemned and executed +. The earl of Warwic, who was also convicted of high treason, was, on account of his fubmiffive behaviour, pardoned as to his life, but doomed to perpetual banifhment in the Isle of Man. No new acts of treason were imputed to either of these noblemen. The only crimes, for which they were condemned, were the old attempts against the crown, which feemed to be obliterated, both by the diffance of time, and by repeated pardons ‡. The reasons of this method of proceeding, it is difficult to conjecture. The recent confpiracies of Glocester seem certain from his own confession: But perhaps, the King and ministry had not, at that time, in their hands, any fatisfactory proof of their reality; perhaps it was difficult to convict Arundel and Warwic, of any concurrence in them; perhaps, an enquiry into these conspiracies would have involved in the guilt some of those great noblemen, who now concurred with the crown, and whom it was necessary to cover from all imputation; or perhaps, the King, according to the genius of * Cotton, p. 368. + Cotton, p. 377. Froisfart, liv. 4. chap. 90. Walfing. p. 354. 1 Tyrrel, vol. 3. part 2. p. 968. from the records.

R I C H A R D II.

that age, was very indifferent about faving even the appearances of juffice and Chap. XVII. equity, and was only folicitous by any means to enfure fuccefs in these profecutions. This point, like many others in antient hiftory, we are obliged to leave altogether undetermined.

A WARRANT was iffued to the earl Mareschal, governor of Calais, to bring Murder of the over the duke of Glocester, in order to his trial; but the governor returned for duke of Gloanswer, that the duke had died suddenly of an apoplexy in that fortress. Nothing could be more fufpicious than the time of that prince's death: It became immediately the general opinion, that he was murdered by orders from his nephew: In the fubfequent reign undoubted proofs were produced to parliament, that he had been fuffocated with pillows by his keepers *: And it appeared, that the King, apprehenfive left the public trial and execution of fo popular a prince, and fo near a relation, might prove both dangerous and invidious, had taken this bafe method of gratifying, and as he fancied, concealing his revenge upon him. Both parties, in their fucceffive triumphs, feem to have had no farther concern than that of retaliating upon their adversaries; and neither of them were aware, that, in imitating, they indirectly juftified, asfar as it lay in their power, all the illegal violences of the opposite party.

THIS feffion concluded with the creation or advancement of feveral peers; the earl of Derby was made duke of Hereford; the earl of Rutland, duke of Albemarle; the earl of Kent, duke of Surrey; the earl of Huntington duke of Exeter; the earl of Nottingham, duke of Norfolk; the earl of Somerfet, marquis of Dorfet; lord Spencer, earl of Glocefter; Ralph Nevil, earl of Westmoreland; Thomas Piercy, earl of Worcefter; William Scrope, earl of Wiltshire +. The parliament, after a fession of twelve days, was then adjourned to Shrewsbury. The King, before the departure of the members, exacted of them an oath for the perpetual maintainance and establishment of their acts, fimilar to that which had formerly been required by the duke of Glocefter and his party, and which had already proved fo vain and fruitlefs.

BOTH King and parliament met in the same dispositions at Shrewsbury. So 1208. anxious was Richard for the fecurity of thefe acts, that he obliged the lords and 28th January. commons to fwear anew to them on the crofs of Canterbury ‡; and he foon after procured a bull from the Pope, by which they were, as he imagined, perpetually fecured and eftablished §. The parliament, on the other hand, conferred on him for life the duties on wool, wool-fells, and leather, and granted him belides,

* Cotton, p. 399, 400. Dugdale, vol. 2. p. 171. t Cotton, p. 371. § Walfingham, p. 355.

+ Cotton, p. 370, 371.

263

1398.

Chap. XVII, a fublidy of one whole tenth and fiftcenth and of a half tenth and fiftcenth. They also reversed the attainder of Trefilian and the other judges; and with the approbation of the prefent judges, declared the answers, for which these magistrates had been impeached, to be just and legal *: And they carried to far their retrospect as to reverfe, on the petition of the lord Spencer, earl of Glocester, the attainder pronounced against the two Spencers in the reign of Edward II +. The antient hiftory of England is nothing but a catalogue of reverfals: Every thing is in fluctuation and movement : One faction is continually undoing what was eftablished by another : And the multiplied oaths, which each party requires for the fecurity of the prefent acts, betray a perpetual confcioufness of their instability.

> THE parliament, before they were diffolved, elected a committee of twelve lords and fix commoners ‡, whom they vefted with the whole power both of lords and commons, and endowed with full authority to finish all business, which had been laid before the houfes, and which they had not had leifure to bring to a conclufion §. This was a very unufual conceffion; and tho' it was limited in the object, might, either immediately or as a precedent, have proved dangerous to the conflitution : But the caufe of that extraordinary measure was an event very fingular and unexpected, which engaged the attention of the parliament.

> AFTER the deftruction of the duke of Glocester and the heads of that party, a mifunderstanding broke out among those noblemen, who had joined in the profecution; and the King wanted either authority fufficient to appeale it, or forefight to prevent it. The duke of Hereford appeared in parliament, and accused the duke of Norfolk of having fpoke to him, in private, many flanderous words of the King, and of having imputed to his majefty an intention of fubverting and deftroying many of his principal nobility ||. Norfolk denied the charge, gave Hereford the lie, and offered to prove his innocence by duel. The challenge was accepted: The time and place of combat were appointed: And as the event of this important trial by arms might require the interpolition of legislative authority, the parliament thought it more fuitable to delegate their power to a + Cotton, p. 372. * Statutes at large. 21 Rich. II.

1 The names of the commiffioners were the dukes of Lancafter, York, Albemarle, Surrey, and Exeter, the marquis of Dorfet, the earls of March, Salifbury, Northumberland, Glocefter, Winchefter, and Wiltshire, John Bussiey, Henry Green, John Russel, Robert Teye, Henry Chelmeswike, and John Golofre. It is to be remarked, that the duke of Lancaster always concurred with the rest in all their proceedings, even in the banishment of his fon, which was afterwards fo much complained of.

|| Cotton, p. 372. Parliamentary history, § Cotton, p. 372. Walfingham, p. 355. vol. 1. p. 490. com-

RICHARD II.

committee, than to prolong the feffion beyond the ufual time, which cuftom Chap. XVII. and general convenience had prefcribed to it *.

THE duke of Hereford was certainly very little delicate in point of honour, to betray a private converfation to the ruin of the perfon who entrufted him; and we may thence be more inclined to believe the duke of Norfolk's denial, than the other's affeveration. But Norfolk had in thefe tranfactions betrayed an equal neglect of honour, which brings him entirely to a level with his antagonift. Tho' he had publickly joined with the duke of Glocefter and that party in all the former violences put upon the King; and his name ftands among the appellants who accufed the duke of Ireland and the other minifters : Yet was he not afhamed publickly to impeach his former affociates for the very crimes, which he had concurred with them in committing, and his name encreafes the lift of thofe appellants who brought them to a trial. Such were the principles and practices of thofe antient knights and barons during the prevalence of the feudal government, and the reign of chivalry.

THE lifts for this decifion of truth and right were appointed at Coventry before the King: All the nobility of England bandied into parties, and adhered either to the one duke or the other: The whole nation was held in fufpence with regard to the event: But when the two champions appeared in the field, accoutered for the combat, the King interpofed to prevent, both the prefent effufion of fuch noble blood, and the future confequences of the quarrel. By the advice and authority of the parliamentary commiffioners, he ftopped the duel; and to fhow his impartiality, he ordered, by the fame authority, both the combatants to leave the kingdom †, affigning one country for the place of Norfolk's exile, which he declared perpetual, and another for that of Hereford, which he limited to ten years.

HEREFORD was a man of great prudence and command of temper; and he behaved kimfelf with fo much fubmiffion in these delicate circumstances, that the King, before his departure, promised to shorten the term of his exile four years; and he also granted him letters patent, by which he was empowered, in case any inheritance should in the mean time fall to him, to enter immediately in possififion, and to postpone the doing homage till his return.

THE weakness and fluctuation of Richard's councils appear no where more evident than in the conduct of this affair. No fooner had Henry left the kingdom, of Henry

* In the full year of Henry VI. when the authority of parliament was great, and when that af reford. fembly could leaft be fulpected of lying under violence, a like concession was made to the council from like motives of convenience. See Cotton, p. 564.

+ Cotton, p. 380. Walfingham, p. 356.

Vol. II.

Mm

than

Chap. XVII. render, he yielded to the cries of the populace, and without giving them a trial, ordered the earl of Wiltshire, Sir John Buffy, and Sir Henry Green, whom he 1399. there took prisoners, to be led out to immediate execution.

> THE King, receiving intelligence of this invalion and infurrection, haftened over from Ireland, and landed in Milford Haven with a body of 20,000 men: But even this army, fo much inferior to the enemy, were either overawed by the general combination of the kingdom, or feized with the fame fpirit of rebellion; and they gradually deferted him, till he found that he had not above 6000 men, who followed his standard. It appeared, therefore, necessary to retire fecretly from this fmall body, which ferved only to expose him to danger; and he fled to the isle of Anglesea, where he purposed to embark either for Ireland or France, and there await the favourable opportunities, which the return of his fubjects to a fense of duty, or their future discontents against the duke of Lancaster, would probably afford him. Henry, fenfible of this danger, sent to him the earl of Northumberland with the ftrongeft professions of loyalty and fubmiffion ; and that nobleman, by treachery and falfe oaths, made himfelf mafter of the King's perfon, and carried him to his enemy at Flint caftle. Richard was conducted to London, by the duke of Lancaster, who was there received with the acclamations of the mutinous populace. It is pretended, that the Recorder met him on the road; and in the name of the city, entreated him, for the public fafety, to put Richard to death, with all his adherents who were prifoners *; but the duke very prudently determined to make many others participate of his guilt, before he would proceed to those extremities. For this purpose, he iffued writs of election in the King's name, and appointed the immediate meeting of a parliament at Westminster.

SUCH of the peers, as were the most devoted to the King, were either fled or imprisoned; and no opponents, even among the barons, dared to appear against Henry amid that fcene of outrage and violence, which commonly attends revolutions, more especially in England during those turbulent ages : And it is also easy to imagine. that a house of commons, elected during this universal ferment, and this triumph of the Lancastrian party, would be extremely attached to that cause, and ready to second every fuggestion of their leader. That order, being as yet of too little weight to flem the torrent, was always carried along with it, and ferved only to encrease the violence, which the public interest required it should endeavour to Deposition of controul. The duke of Lancaster, therefore, fensible that he would be entirely mafter, began to carry his views to the crown itfelf; and he deliberated with his

the King.

partizans concerning the most proper means of effecting his violent purpose. He Walfinghami di uwene bad eredion

1ft Septr.

RICHARD II,

first extorted a refignation from Richard *; but as he knew, that that deed would Chap. XVII. plainly appear the refult of force and fear, he also proposed, notwithstanding the 1399. danger of the precedent to himself and his posterity, to have him solemnly deposed in parliament for his pretended tyranny and misconduct. A charge, consisting of thirty-three articles, was accordingly drawn up against him, and prefented to that assembly \dagger .

Is we examine these articles, which are expressed with extreme acrimony against Richard, we shall find, that, except fome rash speeches, which are imputed to him ±, and of whose reality, as they are faid to have passed in private conversation, we may very reasonably entertain some doubt ; the chief amount of the charge is contained in his violent conduct during the laft years of his reign, and naturally divides itself into two principal heads. The first and most confiderable is the revenge, which he took on the princes and great barons, who had formerly ufurped, and ftill perfevered in controuling and threatning his authority; the fecond is the violation of the laws and general privileges of his people. But the former, however irregular in many of its circumftances, was fully fupported by authority of parliament, and was but a copy of the violence, which the princes and barons themfelves, during their former triumph, had exercifed against him and his party. The detention of Lancaster's estate was, properly speaking, a revocation, by the appearance at least of parliamentary authority, of a grace, which the King himfelf had formerly granted him. The murder of Glocefler (for the fecret execution, however merited, of that prince, certainly deferves this appellation) was a private deed, formed not any precedent, and implied not any affumed or arbitrary power of the crown, which could juftly give umbrage to the people. It was really the effect of the King's weakness, rather than ambition ; and proves, that, inftead of being dangerous to the conftitution, he poffeffed not even the authority requisite for the execution of the laws.

THE fecond head of accufation, as it confifts moftly of general facts, and was framed by Richard's inveterate enemies, and was never allowed to be answered by him or his friends; it is more difficult to form a judgment of. The greateft part of these grievances, objected to Richard, seems to be the exertion of arbitrary prerogatives; fuch as the dispensing power [], levying purveyance §, employing the marfhal's court 4, extorting loans *, granting protections from law-fuits †; prerogatives, which, tho' often complained of, had often been exercised by his predecessors, and ftill continued to be so by his fuccessors. But whether his ir-

* Knyghton, p. 2744. Otterbourne, p. 212.
† Tyrrel, vol. 3. part 2. p. 1008 from the records. Knyghton, p. 2746. Otterbourne, p. 214.
‡ Art. 16, 26. # Art. 13, 17, 18.
§ Art. 22.
‡ Art. 27.
Art. 14.
† Art. 16. regular 1399.

270

Chap. XVII. regular acts of this kind were more frequent and injudicious and violent than ufual, or were only laid hold of and more exaggerated, by the factions, to which the weakness of his reign had given birth, we are not able at this distance to determine with certainty. There is however one circumstance, in which his conduct is vifibly different from that of his grandfather : He is not accused of having imposed one arbitrary tax, without confent of parliament, during his whole reign * : Scarce a year paffed during the reign of Edward, which was free from complaints with regard to this grievous and dangerous exertion of authority. But, perhaps, the great afcendant, which Edward had acquired over his people, together with his great prudence, enabled him to make a ufe very advantageous to his fubjects of this and other arbitrary prerogatives, and rendered them a fmaller grievance in his hands, than a lefs abfolute authority in those of his grandson. This is a point, which it would be rash for us to decide positively on either fide; but it is certain, that a charge drawn up by the duke of Lancaster, and affented to by a parliament, fituated in these circumstances, forms no manner of presumption with regard to the unufual irregularity or violence of the King's conduct in this particular +.

> WHEN the charge against Richard was prefented to the parliament, tho' it was liable, almost in every article, to objections, it was not canvassed, nor examined, nor difputed in either houfe, and feemed to be received with unanimous approbation. One man alone, the bishop of Carlisse, had the courage, amidst

> * We learn from Cotton, p. 362, that the King, by his chancellor, told the commons, that they were funderly bound to him, and namely in forbearing to charge them with difmes and fifteens, the which he meant no more to charge them in his own perfon. These words, no more, allude to the practice of his predecessiors : He had not himfelf imposed any arbitrary taxes : Even the parliament, in the articles of his deposition, the' they complain of heavy taxes, affirm not, that they were imposed illegally or by arbitrary will.

> + To fhow how little credit is to be given to this charge against Richard, we may observe, that a law in the 13 Edw. III, had been made against the continuance of sheriffs for more than one year : But the inconvenience of changes having afterwards appeared from experience, the commons in the twentieth of this King, applied by petition that the fheriffs might be continued ; tho' that petition had not been enacted into a flatute, by reafon of other difagreeable circumflances, which attended it. See Cotton, p. 361. It was certainly a very moderate exercise of the dispensing power for the King to continue the fheriffs, after he found that that practice would be acceptable to his fubjects, and had been applied for by one houfe of parliament: Yet is this made an article of charge against him by the prefent parliament. See art. 18. Walfingham speaking of a period early in Richard's minority, fays, But what do acts of parliament figuify, when, after they are made, they take no effect; fince the King, by the advice of the privy-council, takes upon him to alter, or wholly fet afide, all those things, which by general confent had been ordained in parliament ? If Richard, therefore, exercised the dispensing power, he was warranted by the examples of his uncles and grandfather, and indeed of all his predeceffors from Henry III.

> > this

RICHARDII;

this univerfal difloyalty and violence, to appear in defence of his unhappy mafter, Chap. XVII. and to plead his caufe against all the power of the prevailing party. Tho' fome topics, employed by that virtuous prelate, may feem to favour too much the doctrine of paffive obedience, and to make too large a facrifice of the rights of mankind; he was naturally pufhed into that extreme by his abhorrence of the present licentious factions; and fuch intrepidity, as well as difinterestedness of behaviour, proves, that, whatever his speculative principles were, his heart was: elevated far above the meannefs and abject fubmission of a flave. He reprefented to the parliament, that all the abuses of government, which could juftly be imputed to Richard, far from amounting to tyranny, were merely the refult of error, youth, or mifguided council, and admitted of a remedy, more eafy and falutary, than a total fubverfion of the conftitution. That even had they been much more violent and dangerous than they really were, they had chiefly proceeded from former examples of refiftance, which, making the prince fenfible of his precarious fituation, had obliged him to establish his throne by irregular and arbitrary expedients. That a rebellious difposition in subjects was the principal cause of tyranny in Kings: Laws could never secure the subject, which did not give fecurity to the fovereign : And if the maxim of inviolable loyalty, which formed the basis of the English government, were once rejected, the privileges, belonging to the feveral orders of the flate, inftead of being fortified by that licentiousness, would thereby lose the furest foundation of their force and stability. That the parliamentary deposition of Edward II. far from making a precedent, which could controul this maxim, was only the example of fuccessful violence; and it was fufficiently to be lamented, that crimes were fo often committed in the world, without establishing principles which might justify and authorize them. That even that precedent, false and dangerous as it was, could never warrant the present excesses, which were so much greater, and which would entail distraction and mifery on the nation, to their lateft posterity. That the fuccession, at least, of the crown, was then preferved inviolate : The lineal heir was placed on the throne : And the people had an opportunity, by their legal obedience to him, of making atonement for the violences which they had committed against his predeceffor. That a defcendant of Lionel, duke of Clarence, the elder brother of the late duke of Lancaster, had been declared in parliament successor to the crown : He had left posterity : And their title, however it might be overpowered by prefent force and faction, could never be obliterated from the minds of the people : That if the turbulent disposition alone of the nation, had overturned the wellestablished throne of fo good a prince as Richard; what bloody commotions must enfue, when the fame cause was united to the motive of reftoring the legal 1399.

271.

and 1396.

272

Chap. XVII. and undoubted heir to his authority ? That the new government, intended to be established, would stand on no principles; and would scarce retain any pretence, by which it could challenge the obedience of men of fenfe or virtue. That the claim of lineal descent was fo gross as scarcely to deceive the most ignorant of the populace: Conquest could never be pleaded by a rebel against his fovereign : The confent of the people had no authority in a monarchy not derived from confent, but established by hereditary right; and however the nation might be justified, in depoling the mifguided Richard, it could never have any reafon for paffing by his lawful heir and fucceffor, who was plainly innocent. And that the duke of Lancaster would give them but a bad specimen of the legal moderation, which might be expected from his future government, if he added, to the crime of his patt rebellion, the guilt of excluding the family, which, both by right of blood, and by declaration of parliament, would, in cafe of Richard's decease, or voluntary refignation, have been received as the undoubted heirs of the monarchy *.

ALL the circumstances of this event, compared to those attending the late revolution in 1638, flow the difference between a great and a civilized nation, deliberately vindicating its established privileges, and a turbulent and barbarous ariftocracy, plunging headlong from the extremities of one faction into those of another. This noble freedom of the bishop of Carlisle, instead of being applauded was not fo much as to erated : He was immediately arrefted, by orders of the duke of Lancaster, and fent a prisoner to the abbey of St. Albans. No farther debate was attempted : Thirty-three long articles of charge were, in one meeting, voted against Richard ; and voted unanimously by the fame peers and prelates, who, a little before, had voluntarily and unanimoufly authorized those very acts of violence, of which they now complained. That prince was deposed by the fuffrages of both houses; and the throne being now vacant, the duke of Lancaster stepped forth, and having croffed himfelf on his forehead, and on his breaft, and called upon the name of Chrift +, he pronounced these words, which we shall give in the original language, because of their fingularity.

In the name of Fadhur, Son, and Holy Ghost, I Henry of Lancaster, challenge this recome of Ynglande, and the croun, with all the membres, and the appurtenances; als 1 that am d scendit by right line of the blode, coming fro the gude King Henry therde, and throge that right that God of his grace bath fent me, with helpe of kyn, and of my frendes to recover it; the which rewme was in poynt to be ondone by defaut of governance, and ondoying of the gude lawes 1.

In order to understand this speech, it must be observed, that there was a filly ftory, received among some of the lowest vulgar, that Edmond earl of Lancaster,

* Sir John Heywarde, p. 101.

† Cotton, p. 389. ‡ Knyghton, p. 2757.

fon

R. I Η C ARD II.

fon of Henry III. was really the elder brother of Edward I; but that, by reafon Chap. XVII. of fome deformities in his perfon, he had been postponed in the fucceffion, and his younger brother imposed on the nation in his stead. As the present duke of Lancaster inherited from Edmond by his mother, this genealogy made him the true heir of the monarchy; and it is therefore infiniated in Henry's speech: But the abfurdity was too gross to be openly avowed either by him, or by the parliament. The cafe is the fame with regard to his right of conquest : He was a fubject who rebelled against his fovereign : He entered the kingdom with a retinue of no more than fixty perfons: He could not therefore be the conqueror of England; and this right is accordingly infinuated, not avowed. Still there is a third claim, derived from his merits in faving the nation from tyranny and oppreffion; and this claim is also infinuated : But as it feemed, by its nature, better calculated as a reason for his being eletted King by a free choice, which he was determined never to avow, than for giving him an immediate right of poffeffion, he durft not fpeak openly even on this head; and to obviate any notion of election, he challenges the crown as his due, either by acquisition or inheritance. The whole forms fuch a piece of jargon and nonfenfe, as is almost without example: No objection however was made to it in the parliament : The unanimous voice of lords and commons placed Henry on the throne He became King, nobody could tell how or wherefore: The title of the houfs of Marche, formerly recognized by parliament, was neither invalidated nor repealed; but paffed over in total filence : And as a concern for the liberties of the people feems to have had no hand in this revolution, their right to dispose of the government, as well as all their other privileges, was left precifely on the fame footing as before. But Henry, having, when he claimed the crown, dropped fom: obscure hint concerning conqueft, which, it was thought, might endanger these privileges, he foon after made a public declaration, that he did not thereby intend to deprive any one of his franchifes or liberties *: Which was the only circumstance, that had common fense or meaning, in all these transactions.

THE subsequent events discover the same headlong viclence of conduct, and 6th October. the fame rude notions of civil government. The deposition of Richard diffolved. the parliament : It was neceffary to fummon a new one : And Henry, in fix days after, called together, without any new election, the fame members; and this affembly he denominated a new parliament. They were employed in the ufual task of reversing every deed of the opposite party. All the acts of the last parliament of Richard, which had been confirmed by their oaths, and by a papal bull, were abrogated : All the acts, which had paffed in the parliament where

* Knyghton, p. 2759. Otterborn, p. 220.

Nn

Glocefter

VOL. II.

273

1399.

274

Chap. XVII. Glocefter prevailed, and which had been abrogated by Richard, were again reestablished *: The answers of Trefillian, and the other judges, which a parliament had annulled, but which a new parliament and new judges had approved, here received a fecond condemnation. The peers, who had accufed Glocefter, Arundel and Warwic, and who had received higher titles for that piece of fervice, were all of them degraded from their new dignities : Even the practice of profecuting appeals in parliament was wholly abolifhed; and trials were reftored to the course of common law f. The natural effect of this conduct was to render the people giddy with fuch apid and perpetual changes, and to make them lofe all notions of right and wrong in the measures of government.

King.

23d October. THE earl of Northumterland made a motion, in the house of peers, with regard to the unhappy prince vhom they had depofed. He afked them, what advice they would give the King for the future treatment of him ; fince Henry was refolved to spare his life. They unanimously replied, that he should be imprisoned under a fecure guard, it fome fecret place, and fhould be deprived of all commerce with any of his friends or partizans. It was easy to fore ee, that he would not remain long alive in the hands of fuch barbarous and fanguinary enemies. Murder of the Hiftorians differ with regard to the manner, in which he was murdered. It was long the prevailing opinion, that fir Piers Exton, and others of his guards, fell upon him in the caftle of Pomfret, where he was confined, and dispatched him with their halberts. But it is more probable, that he was starved to death in prifon ; and after all fubfiftence was denied him, he prolonged his unhappy life, it is faid, for a fortnight, bebre he reached the end of his miferies. This account is more confiftent with the flory, that his body was exposed in public, and that no marks of violence were observed upon it. He died in the thirty fourth year of his age, and the twenty-hird of his reign. He left no posterity, either legitimate or illegitimate.

His character.

ALL the writers, who have transmitted to us the history of Richard, composed their works during the reigns of the Lancastrian princes; and candor requires, that we fhould not give entire credit to the reproaches which have been thrown upon his memory. But after making all proper abatements, he ftill appears to have been a weak prince, and unfit for government, lefs for want of natural parts and capacity, than of folid judgment and of a good education. He was violent in his temper, profuse in hs expences; fond of idle show and magnificence; devoted to favourites, and addicted to pleasure: Passions, all of them, the most inconfistent with a prudent economy, and confequently dangerous in a limited and mixed government. Had he poffeffed the talents of gaining, and ftill more > + Henry iv. cap. 14. * Catton, p. 390.

those

R ICHARD II.

these of over-awing, his great barons, he might have escaped all the misfortunes Chap. XVII. of his reign, and been allowed to carry much farther his oppreffions over the people, if he really was guilty of any, without their daring to rebel, or even to murmur against him. But when the grandees were tempted, by his want of prudence and of vigour, to refift his authority, and execute the most violent enterprizes upon him, he was naturally led to feek for an opporunity of retaliation; juffice was neglected; the lives of the chief nobility facrificed; and all thefe evils feem to have proceeded lefs from a fettled defign of eftablishing arbitrary power, than from the infolence of victory, and the necessities of the King's fituation. The manners indeed of the age were the chief fource of fuch violences : Laws, which were feebly observed in peaceable times, lost all their autiority during public convulfions : Both parties were alike guilty : Or if any difference may be remarked between them, we shall find, that the authority of the crown, being more legal, was commonly carried, when it prevailed, to lefs desperate extremities, than those of the ariftocracy.

ON comparing the conduct and events of this reign, with those of the preceding, we shall find equal reason to admire Edward, and to blame Richard; but the circumstance of opposition, furely, will not lie in the strict regard paid by the former to national privileges, and the neglect of them by the latter. On the contrary, the prince of fmall abilities, as he felt his want of power, feems to have been always more moderate in this refpect than the other. Every parliament, affembled during the reign of Edward, remonstrate against the exertion of some arbitrary prerogative or other: We hear not any complaints of that kind during the reign of Richard, till the affembling of his laft parliament, which was fummoned by his inveterate enemies, which dethroned him, which framed their complaints during the time of the most furious convulsions, and whose testimony can therefore have, on that account, much lefs authority with every equitable judge *. Both these princes experienced the encroachments of the Great upon their authority. Edward, reduced to neceffities, was obliged to make an express bargain with his parliament, and to fell fome of his prerogatives for prefent fupply; but as they were acquainted with his genius and capacity, they ventured not to demand any exorbitant conceffions, or fuch as were incompatible with regal and fovereign power: The weakness of Richard tempted the parliament to extort a commission, which in a manner dethroned the prince, and transferred the fceptre into the hands of the nobility. The events were alfo fuitable to the character of each. Edward had no fooner got the fupply, than he departed from the engagements, which had induced the parliament to grant it; he openly told

* Compare, in this view, the abridgement of the records, by fir Robert Cotton, during these two reigns.

Nn 2

275

Chap. XVII. told his people, that he had but diffembled with them when he feemed to make them these conceffions; and he refumed and retained all his prerogatives. But Richard, because he was detected in confulting and deliberating with the judges on the lawfulness of reftoring the conftitution, found his barons immediately in arms against him; was deprived of his hiberty; faw his favourites, his ministers, his tutor, butchered before his face, or banished and attainted; and was obliged to give way to all this violence. There cannot be a more remarkable opposition between the fortunes of two princes: It were happy for fociety; that this opposition depended always on the justice or injustice of the measures which men emtrace; and not rather on the different degrees of prudence and vigour, with which these measures are supported.

Mifcellaneous transactions during this reign.

There was a fentible decay of the authority of the ecclefiaftics during this period. The difguft, which the laity had received from the numerous ufurpations both of the court of Rome, and of their own clergy, had weaned the kingdom very much from fuperfition; and ftrong fymptoms appeared, from time to time, of a general defire to fhake off the bondage of the Romifh church. In the committee of eighteen, to whom Richard's laft parliament delegated their whole power, there is not the name of one ecclefiaftic to befound; a neglect which is almost without example, while the Catholic religion fubfifted in England *.

THE averfion entertained against the established church foon found principles and tenets, and reasonings, by which it could justify and support itself. John Wickliffe, a fecular prieft, educated at Oxford, began, in the latter end of Edward III. to spread the doctrines of reformation by his discourses, fermons, and writings; and he made many disciples among men of all ranks and stations. He feems to have been a man of parts and learning; and has the honour of being the first person in Europe, who publickly called in question those doctrines, which had universally passed for certain and undisputed during fo many ages.

* The following paffage in Cotton's abridgment, p. 196, fhows a ftrange prejudice against the church and churchmen. The commons afterwards coming into the parliament, and making their protestation, shewed, that for want of good redress about the King's perfon in his household, in all bis courts, touching maintainers in every county, and purveyors, the commons were daily pilled and nothing defended against the enemy, and that it should shortly deprive the King and undo the state. Wherefore in the same government, they entirely require redress. Whereupon the King appointed fundry bishops, lords and nobles, to st in privy council about these matters: Who fince that they must begin at the bead and go at the request of the commons, they in the prefence of the King charged his confessor to come into the court but upon the four principal festivals. We should little expect that a Popish privy council, in order to preferve the King's morals, should order his confessor to be kept at a distance from him. This incident happened in the minority of Richard. As the popes had for a long time resided at Avignon, and the majority of the facred college were Frenchmen, this circumstance naturally encreased the aversion of the nation to the papal power: But the prejudice against the English clergy cannot be accounted for from that cause.

Wick-

R I C HARD II.

Wickliffe himfelf, as well as his difciples, who received the name of Wicklif- Chap. XVII. fites or Lollards, was diffinguished by a remarkable aufterity of life and manners; a circumftance common to almost all those who dogmatize in any new way, both becaufe men, who draw to them the attention of the public, and expofe themfelves to the odium of great multitudes, are obliged to be very guarded in their conduct, and because few, who have a strong propensity to pleasure or business, will enter upon fo difficult and laborious an undertaking. The doctrines of Wickliffe, being derived from his fearch into the feriptures and into ecclefiaftical antiquity, were nearly the fame with those propagated by the reformers in the fixteenth century : He only carried fome of them farther than was done by the more fober part of these reformers. He denied the doctrine of the real prefence, the fupremacy of the church of Rome, the merit of monaftic vows : He maintained, that the scripture was the sole rule of faith ; that the church was dependant on the flate, and ought to be reformed by it; that the clergy ought to poffefs no eftates; that the begging friars were a general nuifance, and ought not to be fupported *; that the numerous ceremonies of the church were hurtful to true piety : He afferted, that oaths were unlawful, that dominion was founded in grace, that every thing was fubject to fate and deftiny, and that all men were predeftinated either to eternal falvation or reprobation +. From the whole of his doctrines, Wickliffe appears to have been ftrongly tinctured with enthulialm, and to have been thereby the better qualified to oppose a church, whose diftinguishing character was superfition.

THE propagation of these principles gave great alarm to the clergy; and a bull was iffued by Pope Gregory XI. for taking Wickliffe into cuftody, and examining into the scope of his opinions ‡. Courteney, bishop of London, cited him before his tribunal; but the reformer had now got very powerful protectors, who fcreened him from the ecclefiaftical jurifdiction. The duke of Lancafter, who then governed the kingdom, encouraged the principles of Wickliffe; and he made no fcruple, as well as lord Piercy, the marefchal, to appear openly in court with him, in order to give him countenance upon his trial : He even infifted, that Wickliffe fhould fit in the bishop's prefence, while his principles were examined : Courtney exclaimed against this infult : The mob of London, thinking their prelate affronted, attacked the duke and mareschal, who escaped from their hands with fome difficulty §. And the populace, foon after, broke into the houses

* Walfingham, p. 191, 208, 283, 284. Spelman concil. vol. 2. p. 630. Knyghton, p. 2657. + Harpsfield, p. 668, 673, 674. Waldenf. tom. 1. lib. 3. art. 1. cap. 8. ‡ Spelm. conc. vol. 2. p. 621. Walfingham, p. 201, 202, 203. § Harpsfield in Hift. Wickl. p. 683.

277

1399.

Chap. XVII. houfes of both these noblemen, threatned their perfons, and plundered their goods. 1399. The bilhop of London had the merit of appealing their fury and refentment.

278

THE duke of Lancaster, however, still continued his protection to Wickliffe, during the minority of Richard; and the principles of that reformer had fo far propagated themselves, that when the Pope sent to Oxford a new bull against these doctrines, the university deliberated for some time, whether they should receive the bull; and they never took any vigorous measures in confequence of the papal orders*. Even the populace of London were at length brought to entertain favourable sentiments of this reformer: When he was cited before a synod at Lambeth, the mob broke into the assembly, and so overawed the prelates, who found both the people and the court against them, that they difmissed him without any farther censures.

THE clergy, we may well believe, were more wanting in power than inclination to punish this new herefy, which ftruck at all their credit, possefions and authority. But there was hitherto no law in England, by which the fecular arm was empowered to fupport orthodoxy; and the ecclefiaftics endeavoured to fupply the defect by a very extraordinary and very unwarrantable artifice. In the year 1381, there was an act paffed, enjoining fheriffs to apprehend the preachers of herefy and their abettors; but this flatute had been furreptitioufly obtained by the clergy, and had the formality of an enrolment without the confent of the commons. In the subsequent feffion, the lower house complained of this fraud; affirmed, that they had no intention to bind themselves to the prelates farther than their anceftors had done before them ; and required that the pretended flatute should be repealed, which was done accordingly +. But it is remarkable, that, notwithftanding this vigilance of the commons, the clergy had fo much art and influence, that the repeal was fuppreffed, and the act, which never had any legal authority, remains to this day upon the statute book 1: Tho' the clergy still thought proper to keep it in referve, and not proceed to the immediate execution of it.

Bur befides the defect of power in the church, which faved Wickliffe, that reformer himfelf, notwithftanding his enthuliafm, feems not to have been actuated by the fpirit of martyrdom; and in all fubfequent trials before the prelates, he fo explained away his doctrine by tortured meanings, as to render it quite innocent and inoffenfive §. Most of his followers imitated his cautious difposition, and faved themfelves either by recantations or explanations. He died of a palfy in the year 1385 at his rectory of Lutterworth in the county of Leicefter; and the clergy, mortified that he should have escaped their vengeance, took care,

* Wood's Ant. Oxon lib. 1. p 191, &c. Walfingham, p. 201. † Cotton's abridgment, p. 285. ‡ 5 Rich. II. chap. 5. § Walfingham, p. 206. Knyghton, p. 2655, 2656. befides befides affuring people of his eternal damnation, to reprefent his laft diftemper as Chap. XVII. a vifible judgment of heaven upon him for his multiplied herefies and impieties *. 1399.

RICHARD II.

THE profelytes, however, of Wickliffe's opinions fiill encreafed in England +: Some monkifh writers reprefent the half of the kingdom as infected by them: They were carried over to Bohemia by fome youth of that nation, who fludied in Oxford: But tho' the age feemed ftrongly difpoled to receive them, affairs were not yet fully ripe for this great revolution; and the finishing blow to ecclesiaftical power was referved to a period of more curiofity, literature, and inclination for novelties.

MEANWHILE, the Englifh parliament continued to check the clergy and the court of Rome by more fober and more legal expedients. They enacted anew the ftatute of provifors, and affixed higher penalties to the tranfgreffion of it, which, in fome inftances, was even made capital ‡. The court of Rome had fallen upon a new device, which encreafed their authority over the prelates : The Pope, who found that the expedient of arbitrarily depriving them was violent and liable to oppofition, attained the fame end by transferring fuch of them, as were obnoxious, to poorer fees, and even to nominal fees, in partibus infidelium. It was thus that the archbifhop of York, and the bifhops of Durham and Chichefter, the King's minifters, had been treated after the prevalence of Glocefter's faction : The good bifhop of Carlifle met with the fame fate after the acceffion of Henry IV. For the Pope always joined with the prevailing powers when they did not thwart his pretenfions. The parliament, in the reign of Richard, enacted a law againft this abufe : And the King made a general remonftrance to the court of Rome againft all thofe impofitions, which he calls korrible exceffes of that court §.

It was ufual at this time for the church, that they might elude the mortmain act, to make their votaries leave lands in truft to certain perfons, under whofe name the clergy enjoyed the benefit of the bequeft : The parliament alfo ftopped the progrefs of this abufe ||. In the 17th of the King, the commons prayed, that remedy might be had against fuch religious perfons as caufe their villains to marry free women inheritable, whereby the estate comes to those religious hands by collusion 4. This was a new device of the clergy.

THE papacy was at this time fomewhat weakened by a fchifm, which lasted for forty years, and gave great scandal to the devoted partizans of the holy see. After the Popes had refided many years at Avignon, Gregory XI. was perfuaded to return to Rome; and upon his death, which happened in 1380, the Romans, * Walfingham, p. 312. Ypod. Neuft. p. 537. + Knyghton, p. 2663. ‡ 13 Rich. II. cap. 3. 16 Rich. II. cap. 4. § Rymer, vol. 7. p. 672. # Knyghton, p. 27, 38. Cotton, p. 355. + Cotton, p. 355.

3

279

refolute

Chap. XVII. refolute to fix, for the future, the feat of the papacy in Italy, belieged the 1399. cardinals in the conclave, and conftrained them, tho' they were moftly Frenchmen, to elect Urban VI. an Italian, into that high dignity. The French cardinals, fo foon as they recovered their liberty, fled from Rome, and protefting against the forced election, chose Robert, fon of the count of Geneva, who took the name of Clement VII. and refided at Avignon. All the kingdoms of Chriftendom, according to their feveral interefts and inclinations, were divided between these two pontiffs. The court of France adhered to Clement, and were followed by their allies, the King of Caftile, and King of Scotland : England of courfe was thrown into the other party, and declared for Urban. Thus the appellation of Clementines and Urbanists distracted Europe for feveral years; and each party damned the other as fchifmatics, and as rebels to the true vicar of Chrift. But this circumftance, tho' it weakened the papal authority, had not fo great an effect as might naturally be imagined. Tho' any King could eafily, at first, make his kingdom embrace the party of one Pope or the other, or even keep it fome time in fuspence between them, he could not fo eafily transfer his obedience at pleasure : The people attached themselves to their own party as to a religious opinion ; and conceived an extreme abhorrence to the oppofite party, whom they regarded at little better than Saracens or infidels. Croifades were even undertaken in this quarrel; and the zealous bishop of Norwich, in particular, led over, in 1382, near 60,000 bigots into Flanders against the Clementines : but after lofing a great part of his followers, he returned with difgrace into England *. Each Pope, fenfible, from this prevailing fpirit of the people, that the kingdom, which once embraced his caufe, would always adhere to him, boldly maintained all the pretensions of his fee, and stood not much more in awe of the fovereigns, than if his authority had not been endangered by a rival.

> WE meet with this preamble to a law enacted at the very beginning of this reign: "Whereas divers perfons of fmall garrifon of land or other poffeffions do "make great retinue of people, as well of equires as of others, in many parts of "the realm, giving to them hats and other livery of one fuit by year, taking "again towards them the value of the fame livery or percafe the double value, "by fuch covenant and affurance, that every of them fhall maintain other in all "quarrels, be they reafonable or unreafonable, to the great mifchief and oppreffion of the people, &c. +" This preamble contains a true picture of the flate of the kingdom. The laws were fo feebly executed, even during the long, active,

* Froislart, lib. 2. chap. 133, 134. Walsingham, p. 298, 299, 300, &c. Knyghton, p. 2671. † 1 Rich. II. chap. 7.

R I C H A R D II.

and vigilant reign of Edward III. that no fubject could truft to their protection, Chap. XVII. Men openly affociated themselves, under the patronage of fome great man, for their mutual defence. They had public badges by which their confederacy was diftinguished. They supported each other in all quarrels, iniquities, extortions, murders, robberies, and other crimes. Their chieftain was more their fovereign than the King himfelf; and their own band was more connected with them than their country. Hence the perpetual turbulence, diforders, factions, and civil wars of those times: Hence the small regard paid to a character or the opinion of the public : Hence the large difcretionary prerogatives of the crown, and the danger which might have enfued from the too great limitation of them. If the King had poffeffed no arbitrary powers, while all the nobles affumed and exercifed them, there must have enfued an absolute anarchy in the state.

ONE great mischief, attending these confederacies, was the extorting from the King pardons for the most enormous crimes. The parliament often endeavoured, in the last reign, to deprive the prince of this prerogative ; but in the prefent, they were contented with an abridgement of it. They enacted, that no pardon for rapes or murder from malice prepense should be valid, unless the crime was particularly specified in it ||. There were also some other circumstances required. for the patting any pardons of this kind : An excellent law; but ill obferved, like most laws, which thwart the manners of the people, and the prevailing cuftoms of the times.

It is eafy to observe, from these voluntary affociations among the people, that the whole force of the feudal fystem was in a manner diffolved, and that the English had nearly returned in that particular to the fame fituation in which they ftood before the Norman conqueft. It was indeed impoffible, that that fystem could long fubfift, under the conftant revolutions, to which landed property is every where subject. When the great feudal baronies were first erected, the lord lived in opulence in the midst of his vassals: He was in a situation to protect and cherish and defend them: The quality of patron naturally united itself to that of fuperior : And thefe two principles of authority mutually fupported each other. But when, by the various divisions and mixtures of property, a man's fuperior came to live at a diftance from him, and could no longer give him shelter or countenance ; the tie gradually became more fictitious than real : New connexions from neighbourhood or other caufes were formed : Protection was fought by voluntary fervices and attachment : The appearance of valor, fpirit, ability in any great man extended his interest very far : And if the fovereign was deficient in these qualities,

|| 13 Rich. II. Chap. 1. Vol. II. O o

281

1399.

Chap. XVII. qualities, he was equally, if not more exposed to the usurpations of the aristocracy than even during the vigor of the feudal fystem. 1399.

> The greatest novelty introduced into the civil government during this reign was the creation of peers by patent. The lord Beauchamp of Holt was the first peer, who was advanced to the house of lords in this manner. The practice of levying benevolences is also first mentioned in this reign.

C H A P. XVIII.

H E N R Y

Title of the King — An infurrection — An infurrection in Wales ____ The earl of Northumberland rebels-Battle of Shrewfbury-State of Scotland—Parliamentary transactions—Death—and character of the King.

IV.

by 1399. Title of the Ming.

HE English had to long been familiarized to the hereditary fuccession of their monarchy, the inftances of departure from it had always born fuch ftrong fymptoms of injuffice and violence, and fo little of a national choice or election, and the returns to the true line had ever been deemed fuch fortunate incidents in their hiftory, that Henry was afraid, left, in refting his title on the confent of the people, he fhould build on a foundation, to which the people themfelves were not accustomed, and whose folidity they would with difficulty be brought to recognize. The idea too of choice feemed always to imply that of conditions, and a liberty of recalling the confent upon any fuppofed violation of them; an idea which was not naturally agreeable to a fovereign, and might be dangerous to the people themfelves, who, lying fo much under the influence of turbulent nobles, had ever paid but a very imperfect obedience even to their hereditary princes. For these reasons Henry was determined never to have recourse to this claim; the only one, on which his authority could confiftently ftand : He chose rather to patch up his title in the best manner he could from other pretensions : And in the end, he left himself, in the eyes of men of sense, no foundation of right, but his prefent poffeffion; a very precarious claim, which, by its very nature, was liable to be overthrown by every faction of the great, or Chap. XVIII. prejudice of the people. He had indeed a prefent advantage over his competitor : The heir of the house of Mortimer, who had been declared in parliament the true heir of the crown, was a boy of feven years of age * : His friends confulted his fafety by keeping filence with regard to his title : Henry detained him and his younger brother in an honourable cuftody at Windfor caftle : But he had reason to dread, that, in proportion as that nobleman grew to man's estate, he would draw to him the attachment of the people, and make them reflect on the fraud, violence, and injuffice, by which he had been excluded from the throne. Many favourable topics would occur in his behalf : He was born in the country ; poffeffed an extensive interest from the greatness and alliances of his family; however criminal the deposed monarch might be, this youth was entirely innocent; he was of the fame religion, and educated in the fame manners with the people, and could not be governed by any feparate intereft : Thefe views would all concur to favour his claim ; and tho' the abilities of the prefent prince might ward off any dangerous revolution, it was juftly to be apprehended, that his authority could with difficulty be brought to equal that of his predeceffors.

NRY IV. H E

HENRY in his very first parliament had reason to see the danger attending that flation, which he had affumed, and the obftacles, which he would meet with, in governing an unruly ariftocracy, always divided by faction, and fill more inflamed with the refentments, confequent on fuch recent convultions. The peers on their affembling broke out into violent animofities; forty gauntlets, the gages of furious battle, were thrown on the floor of the houfe of lords by noblemen who gave mutual challenges to each other; and liar and traitor refounded from all quarters. The King had fo much authority with these doughty champions, as to prevent all the combats, which they threatened; but he was not able to bring them to a proper composure, or to an amicable disposition towards each other.

IT was not long before these passions broke out in action. The earls of Rutland, Kent, and Huntington and lord Spencer, who were now degraded from the titles of Albemarle, Surry, Exeter, and Glocefter, conferred on them by Richard, entered in- An infurrection. to a confpiracy, together with the earl of Salifbury and lord Lumley, for raifing an infurrection, and for feizing the King's perfon at Windfor +; but the treachery of Rutland gave him warning of the danger. He fuddenly withdrew to London ; and the confpirators, who came to Windfor with a body of 500 horfe, found that they had miffed this blow, on which all the fuccess of their enterprize depended. Hen-

* Dugdale, vol. i. p. 151.

+ Walfingham, p. 362. Otterbourne, p. 224. 002

1400.

ry

1400.

284

Chap. XVIII ry appeared, next day, at Kingfton upon Thames, at the head of 20,000 men, moftly drawn from the city; and his enemies, unable to refift his power, difperfed themfelves, with a view of raifing their followers in the feveral counties, which were the feat of their intereft. But the adherents of the King were hot in the purfuit, and every where opposed themfelves to their progress. The earls of Kent and Salifbury were feized at Cirencefter by the citizens; and were next day beheaded without farther ceremony, according to the cuftom of the times *. The citizens of Briftol treated Spencer and Lumley in the fame manner. The earl of Huntington, fir ThomasBlount, Sir Benedict Sely, who were also taken prifoners, fuffered death, with many others of the confpirators, by orders from Henry. And when the quarters of thefe unhappy men were brought to London, no lefs than eighteen bifhops and thirtyfour mitred abbots, joined the populace, and met them with the most indecent marks of joy and exultation.

> Bur the spectacle the most shocking to every one, who retained any fentiment either of honour or humanity, still remained. The earl of Rutland appeared, carrying on a pole the head of lord Spencer, his brother-in-law, which he prefented in triumph to Henry, as a teffimony of his loyalty. This infamous man, who was foon after duke of York by the death of his father, and first prince of the blood, had been inftrumental in the murder of his uncle, the duke of Glocefter +; had then deferted Richard, by whom he was trufted; had confpired against the life of Henry to whom he had fworn allegiance ; had betrayed his affociates, whom he had feduced into this enterprize; and now difplayed, in the face of the world, these badges of his multiplied dishonour.

1401.

HENRY was fenfible, that, tho' the execution of these conspirators might seem to give fecurity to his throne, the animolities, which remain after fuch bloody fcenes, are always dangerous to royal authority ; and he therefore determined not to encrease, by any hazardous enterprize, those numerous enemies, with whom he was every where furrounded. While he was only a fubject, he was believed to have ftrongly imbibed all the principles of his father, the duke of Lancaster, and to have adopted the prejudices which the Lollards infpired against the abufes of the eftablished church : But finding himself possessed of the throne by so precarious a title, he thought superstition a very necessary implement of public authority; and he refolved, by every expedient, to pay court to the clergy. There were hitherto no penal laws enacted against herefy; an indulgence which had nowife proceeded from a fpirit of toleration in the Romith church, but from the ignorance and * Walfingham, p. 363. Ypod. Neuft. p. 556.

1

+ Dugdale, vol. ii. p. 171.

fimplicity

HENRY JV.

1

81

rs

2

he

n

1

fimplicity of the people, which had rendered them unfit either for flarting or re- Chap. XVIII. ceiving any new or curious doctrines, and which needed not to be reftrained by any rigorous punifhments. But when the learning and genius of Wickliffe had once broke the fetters of prejudice, the ecclefiaftics called aloud for the punifhment of his difciples; and the King, who was very little fcrupulous in his conduct, was eafily induced to facrifice his principles to his intereft, and to acquire the favour of the church by that most effectual method, the gratifying their vengeance against all opponents. He engaged the parliament to pass a law for this purpose, and it was enacted, that when any heretic, who relapfed or refufed to abjure his opinions, was delivered over to the fecular arm by the bifhop or his commiffaries, he should be committed to the flames by the civil magistrate before the whole people *. This weapon did not remain long unemployed in the hands of the clergy : William Sautre, rector of St. Ofithes in London, had been condemned by the convocation of Canterbury; his fentence was ratified by the house of peers; the King iffued his writ for the execution +; and the unhappy man attoned for his erroneous opinions by the penalty of fire. This is the first inftance of that kind in England; and thus one horror more was added to those difmal fcenes, which at that time were already but too familiar to the people.

But the utmost precaution and prudence of Henry could not shield him from those numerous inquietudes, which assailed him from every quarter. The connexions of Richard with the royal family of France, made that court exert its activity to recover his authority, or revenge his death ‡; but tho' the confusions of England, tempted the French to undertake fome enterprize, by which they might diffress their antient enemy, the greater confusions, which they experienced at home, obliged them quickly to accommodate matters; and Charles, content with recovering his daughter from Henry's hands, laid afide his preparations, and renewed the truce between the two kingdoms ||. The attack of Guienne was also an inviting attempt, which the prefent factions, that prevailed among the French, obliged them to neglect. The Gafcons, affectionate to the memory of Richard, who had been born among them, refufed to fwear allegiance to a prince. that had usurped his throne, and murdered his perfon; and the appearance of a French army on their frontiers, would probably have tempted them to change mafters §. But the earl of Worcefter, arriving with fome English troops, gave countenance to the partizans of England, and over-awed their opponents. Religion too was here found a cement of their union with that kingdom. The Gafcons had been engaged by Richard's authority to acknowlege the Pope of Rome;

* 2 Hen. IV. chap. 7. + Rymer, vol. 8. p. 178. ‡ Rymer, vol. 8. p. 123. || Rymer, vol. 8. p. 142, 152, 219. § Rymer, vol. 8. 110, 111.

1401.

285

and 1401.

286

Chap. XVIII. and they were fenfible, that if they fubmitted to France, it would be neceffary for them to pay obedience to the Pope of Avignon, whom they had been taught to deteft as a schissmatic. Their principles on this head were too fast rooted to admit of any fudden or violent alteration.

Infurrection in Wales.

THE revolution in England proved likewife the occasion of an infurrection in Wales. Owen Glendour, or Glendourduy, descended from the antient princes of that country, had become obnoxious on account of his attachments to Riciard ; and Reginald, lord Gray of Ruthyn, who was closely connected with the new King, and who poffeffed a great fortune in the marches of Wales, thought the opportunity favourable for oppreffing his neighbour, and taking poffeffion of his eftate *. Glendour, provoked at the injuffice, and ftill more at the indignity, recovered poffession by the sword + : Henry sent affistance to Gray 1; the Welfh took party with Glendour: A troublefome and tedious war wis kindled, which Glendour long fustained by his valour and activity, aided by the natural strength of that country, and the untamed spirit of its inhabitants.

As Glendour committed devastations promiscuously on all the English, he infested the estate of the earl of Marche; and fir Edmund Mortimer, uncle to that nobleman, led out the retainers of the family, and gave battle to the Welsh chieftain. His troops were routed, and he himself was taken prifoner §: At the fame time, the earl himfelf, who had been allowed to retire to his caftle of Wigmore, and who, tho' a mere boy, took the field with his followers, fell alfo ino Glendour's hands, and was carried by him into Wales ||. As Henry hated mortaly all the family of Marche, he allowed the earl to remain in captivity; and tho' that young nobleman was nearly allied to the Piercies, to whole affiftance he himfelf had owed his crown, he refufed to the earl of Northumberland permission to treat of his ranfom with Glendour.

THE uncertainty in which Henry's affairs flood for a long time with Franc, as well as the confusion, incident to all great changes in government, tempted the Scots to make incursions into England; and Henry, defirous of taking revenge upon them, but afraid of rendering his new government unpopular ly requiring great fupplies from his fubjects, fummoned at Westminster a council of the peers, without the commons, and laid before them the ftate of his affairs ... The military part of the feudal conftitution was now entirely gone : There remained only fo much of that fabric as affected the civil rights and properties of mer: And the peers here voluntarily undertook to attend the King in an expedition againt

+ Walfing. p. 364. † Vita Ric. fec. 172, 171. * Vita Ric. fec. p. 171, 172. + Rymer, vol. 8. p. 125, 120. || Dudgale, vol. 1. p. 151. § Dudgale, vol. 1. p. 150. Scol-

HENRY IV.

Scotland, each of them at the head of a certain number of his retainers *. Henry Chap. XVIII. conducted this army to Edinburgh, of which he eafily took pofferfion; and he 1401. there fummoned Robert III. to do homage to him for his crown +. But finding, that the Scots would neither fubmit nor give him battle, he returned in three weeks, after making this useless bravado; and he dispersed his army.

to

ti

25

1-

In the fublequent feason, Archibald earl of Douglas, at the head of 12,000 men, and attended by many of the principal nobility, made an irruption into England, and committed devastations on the northern counties. On his return home, he was overtaken by the Piercies, at Homeldon on the borders of England, and a fierce battle enfued, where the Scots were totally routed. Douglas himfelf was taken prifoner; as was Mordac earl of Fife, fon of the duke of Albany, and nephew of the Scots King, with the earls of Angus, Murray, and Orkney, and many others of the Scots gentry and nobility ‡. When Henry received intelligence of this victory, he fent the earl of Northumberland onlers not to ranfom his prifoners, which that nobleman regarded as his right, by the laws of war, that prevailed in that age. The King intended to detain them, that he might be able by their means to make an advantageous peace with Scotland; but by this policy he gave a new caufe of difgust to the family of Piercy.

THE obligations, which Henry had owed to the earl of Northumberland, were of a kind the most likely to produce ingratitude on the one fide, and discontent on The earl of the other. The prince naturally became jealous of that power, which had ad-land rebels. Northumbervanced him to the throne; and the fubject was not eafily fatisfied in the returns, which he thought fo great a favour had merited. Tho' Henry, on his acceffion, had bestowed the office of constable on Northumberland for life §, and conferred other gifts on that family, thefe favours were regarded as their due; the refufal of any other request was deemed an injury. The impatient spirit of Harry Piercy, and the factious difpolition of the earl of Worcester, younger brother of Northumberland, inflamed the difcontents of that nobleman; and the precarious title of Henry tempted him to feek revenge, by overturning that throne, which he had at first established. He entered into a correspondence with Glendour : He gave liberty to the earl of Douglas, and mavle an alliance with that martial chieftain : He rouzed up all his partizans to arms; and fuch unlimited authority at that time belonged to the great families, that the fame men, whom, a few years before, he had conducted against Richard, now followed his standard in opposition

* Rymer, vol. 8. p. 125. + Rymer, vol. 8. p. 155, 156, &c. ‡ Walfing, p. 366. Vita Ric. fec. p. 180. Chron. Otterburne, p. 237. § Rymer, vol. 8. p. 89.

1403.

10

1402.

1403.

288

Chap. XVIII. to Henry. When the war was ready to break out, Northumberland was feized with a fudden illnefs at Berwic; and young Piercy, taking the command of the troops, marched towards Shrewfbury, in order to join his forces with those of Glendour. The King had happily a fmall army on foot, with which he had intended to act against the Scots; and knowing the importance of celerity in all civil wars, he inftantly hurried down, that he might give battle to the rebels. He approached Piercy near Shrewfbury, before that nobleman was joined by Glendour; and the policy of the one leader, and impatience of the other, foon brought on a general engagement.

> THE evening before the battle, Piercy fent a manifesto to Henry, in which he renounced his allegiance, fet that prince at defiance, and in the name of his father and uncle, as well as his own, enumerated all the grievances of which the nation had reason to complain. He represented the perjury, of which Henry had been guilty, when, on landing at Ravenspur, he had fworn upon the golpels, before the earl of Northumberland, that he had no other intention but to recover poffeffion of the dutchy of Lancafter, and that he would ever remain a faithful fubject to King Richard. He aggravated his guilt in first dethroning and then murdering that prince, and in usurping on the title of the house of Mortimer, to whom, both by lineal fucceffion, and by declarations of parliament, the throne, when vacant by Richard's death, did of right belong. He complained of the cruel policy, in allowing the young earl of Marche, whom he ought to regard as his fovereign, to remain a captive in the hands of his enemies, and in even refuling to all his friends permifion to treat of his ranfom. He charged him again with perjury in loading the nation with heavy taxes, after having fworn that, without the utmost necessity, he would neverlevy any impositions upon them. And he reproached him with the arts employed in procuring favourable elections into parliament; arts, which he himself had before imputed to Richard, and which he had made one chief reafon of that prince's arraignment and deposition *. This manifesto was very well calculated to inflame the quarrel between the parties : The bravery of the two leaders, promifed an obstinate engagement : And the equality of the armies, being each about 12,000 men, a number which rendered them not unmanageable by the commanders, gave reafon to expect a great effufion of blood on both fides, and a very doubtful iffue to the combat.

21ft July. Battle of Shrewfbury.

WE shall fcarcely find any battle in those ages, where the shock was more terrible and more conftant. Henry exposed his perfon in the thickeft of the fight: His gallant fon, whofe military feats became afterwards fo famous, and who here performed his apprenticeship in arms, fignalized himself on his father's footsteps,

* Hall, fol. 21, 22, &c.

and

HENRY IV.

kole

1at

x

Jez-

1001

2 80

201 tj.

he 1êd ti

110 m ni

and even an wound, which he received on the face with an arrow, could not Chap. XVHI. oblige him to quit the field *. Piercy supported that renown, which he had acquired in fo many bloody combats. And Douglas, his antient enemy and now his friend, still appeared his rival, amidst the horror and confusion of the day. This nobleman performed acts of valour, which are almost incredible: He seemed determined that the King of England should fall that day by his arm : He fought him all over the field of battle : And as Henry, either to elude the attacks of the enemy upon his perfon, or to encourage his own men by the belief of his prefence every where, had accoutered feveral captains in the royal garb, the fword of Douglas rendered this honour fatal to many +. But while the armies were contending in this furious manner, the death of Piercy, by an uncertain hand, decided the victory, and the royalists prevailed. There are faid to have fallen that day on both fides near two thousand three hundred gentlemen; but the perfons of greatest diffinction were on the King's; the earl of Stafford, Sir Hugh Shirley, Sir Nicholas Gaufel, Sir Hugh Mortimer, Sir John Maffey, Sir John Calverley. About fix thousand private men perished, of whom two thirds were of Piercy's army ‡. The earls of Worcefter and Douglas were taken prisoners : The former was beheaded at Shrewsbury ; the latter was treated with the courtefy, which was due to his rank and merit.

THE earl of Northumberland, having recovered his health, had levyed an army, and was on his march to join his fon; but being opposed by the earl of Westmoreland, and hearing of the event of the battle at Shrewsbury, he difmiffed his forces, and came with a fmall retinue to the King at York §. He pretended, that his fole intention in arming was to mediate between the two parties: Henry thought proper to accept the apology, and even granted him a pardon for his offence : All the other rebels were treated with equal lenity ; and except the earl of Worcefter and Sir Richard Vernon, who were regarded as the chief authors of the infurrection, no perfon, engaged in this dangerous defign, feems to have perifhed by the hands of the executioner ||.

Bur Northumberland, tho' he had been pardoned, knew, that he never should be trufted, and that he was too powerful to be cordially forgiven by a prince, whole fituation gave him fuch reasonable grounds of jealousy. It was the effect either of Henry's vigilance or good fortune, or of the narrow genius of his enemies, that no proper concert was ever formed among them : They role in rebellion one after another; and thereby afforded him an opportunity of suppref-

* T. Livii, p. 3. + Walfingham, p. 366, 367. Hall. fol. 22. ‡ Chron. Otterb. p. 224. Ypod Neuft. p. 560. § Otterbourne, p. 225. # Rymer, vol. 8. p. 353. VOL. II. Pp fing 1405.

1403.

290

Chap. XVIII. fing fingly those infurrections, which, had they been united, might have proved fatal to his throne. The earl of Nottingham, fon to the duke of Norfolk, and the archbilhop of York, brother to the earl of Wiltshire, whom Henry, then duke of Lancaster, had beheaded at Briftol, tho' they had remained quiet, while Piercy was in the field, still harboured in their breast a violent hatred against the enemy of their families; and they determined, in conjunction with the earl of Northumberland, to feek revenge against him. They betook themselves to arms before that powerful nobleman was prepared to join them; and publishing a manifesto, in which they reproached Henry with his ulurpation of the crown and the murder of the late King, they required, that the right line fhould be reftored, and all public grievances be redreffed. The earl of Weftmoreland, whofe power lay in the neighbourhood, approached them with an inferior force at Shipton near York; and being afraid to hazard a battle, he attempted to fubdue them by an artifice, which nothing but the greatest folly and fimplicity on their part could have rendered fuccefsful. He defired a conference with the archbishop and earl between the two armies: He heard their grievances with great patience: He begged them to propole the remedies: He approved of every thing which they fuggested: He granted them all their demands: He also engaged that Henry should give them entire fatisfaction : And when he faw them pleafed with the facility of his conceffions, he obferved to them, that, fince amity was now in effect reftored between them, it were better on both fides to difinifs their forces, which otherwife would prove an infupportable burthen to the country. The archbishop and the earl of Nottingham immediately iffued orders to that purpose : Their troops difbanded upon the field : But Weftmoreland, who had fecretly iffued contrary orders to bis army, feized the two rebels without refiftance, and carried them to the King, who was advancing with hafty marches to suppress the rebellion *. The trial and punifhment of an archbifhop might have proved a very troublefome and dangerous undertaking, had Henry proceeded regularly, and allowed time for an opposition to form itself against that unufual measure. The celerity of the execution alone could here render it fafe and prudent. Finding that Sir William Gafcoigne, the chief justice, made fome fcruple of acting on this occafion, he appointed Sir William Fulthorpe a judge for that purpofe; who, without any indictment, trial or defence, pronounced fentence of death upon the prelate, which was inftantly executed. This was the first instance in England of a capital punifhment inflicted on a bifhop; whence the clergy of that rank might learn, that their crimes, as well as those of Laics, were not to pals with impuni-

* Walfingham, p. 373. Otterbourne, p. 255.

3

¢y.

HENRY IV.

ty. The earl of Nottingham was condemned and executed in the fame fum- Chap. XVIII. mary manner: But tho' many other perfons of condition, fuch as the lord Falconberge, Sir Ralph Haflings, Sir John Colville, were engaged in this rebellion, no more feem to have fallen victims to Henry's feverity.

THE earl of Northumberland, on receiving this intelligence, fled into Scotland, together with lord Bardolf*; and the King, without opposition, reduced all the caftles and fortreffes, belonging to these noblemen. He thence turned his arms against Glendour, over whom his fon, the prince of Wales, had obtained fome advantages : But that enemy, more troublefome than dangerous, still found means of defending himfelf in his faltneffes, and of eluding, tho' not refifting, all the force of England. In a fubfequent feason, the earl of Northumberland and lord Bardolf, impatient of their exile, entered the north, in hopes of raifing the people to arms; but found the country in fuch a posture as rendered all their attempts unfuccelsful. Sir Thomas Rokefby, fheriff of Yorkshire, levied fome forces, attacked the invaders at Bramham, and gained a victory, in which both Northumberland and Bardolf were flain +. This profperous event, joined to the death of Glendour, which happened foon after, freed Henry from all his domeftic enemies; and this prince, who had mounted the throne by fuch unjuffifiable methods, and held it by fuch an exceptionable title, had yet, by his valour, prudence, and addrefs, accustomed his people to the yoke, and had obtained a greater ascendant over his haughty barons, than the law alone, not supported by these active qualities, was ever able to confer.

About the fame time, fortune gave Henry an advantage over that neighbour, who, by his fituation, was beft enabled to difturb his government. Robert the third King of Scots, was a prince, tho' of flender capacity, extremely innocent and inoffenfive in his conduct: But Scotland, ftill lefs than England, was at that time fitted for cherifhing, or even enduring, fovereigns of that character. The duke of Albany, Robert's brother, a prince of more abilities, at leaft of a more boifterous and violent difpolition, had affumed the government of the flate; and not fatisfied with prefent authority, he entertained the criminal purpofe of extirpating his brother's children, and of acquiring the crown to his own family. He threw in prifon David, his eldeft nephew; who there perifhed with hunger: James alone, the younger brother of David, flood between that tyrant and the throne; and King Robert, fenfible of his fon's danger, embarked him on board a fhip, with a view of fending him into France, and entrufting him to the protection of that friendly power. Unfortunately, the veffel was taken by the Englifh; prince James, a boy about nine years of age, was carried to London;

* Walfingham, p. 374.

† Walfingham, p. 377. Chron. Otterb. p. 261. P p 2

and 1407.

Chap. XVIII. an

14.07.

292

and tho' there fubfifted a truce at that time between the two kingdoms, Henry con ftantly refueed to reftore the young prince to his liberty. Robert, worn out with cares and infirmities, was unable to bear the flock of this laft misfortune; and he foon after died, leaving the government in the hands of the duke of Albany *. Henry was now more fenfible than ever of the importance of the acquifition, which he had made: While he retained fuch a pledge in his hands, he was fure of keeping the duke of Albany in dependance; or if offended, he could eafily, by reftoring the true heir, take ample revenge upon the ufurper. But tho' the King, by detaining James in the Englifh court, had fhown himfelf fomewhat deficient in generofity, he made ample amends by giving that prince an excellent education, which afterwards qualified him, when he mounted the throne, to reform, in fome meafure, the rude and barbarous manners of his native country.

THE hoftile difpofitions, which always prevailed between France and England, were reftrained, during the greatest part of this reign, from appearing in action: The jealoufies and civil commotions, with which both nations was difturbed, kept each of them from taking advantage of the unhappy fituation of its neighbour. But as the abilities and good fortune of Henry had been able fooner to compose the English factions, this prince began, in the latter part of his reign, to look abroad, and to foment the animofities between the families of Burgundy and Orleans, by which the government of France was, during that period, fo much distracted. He knew, that one great fource of the national discontent against his predeceffor was the inactivity of his reign; and he hoped, by giving a new direction to the reftless and unquiet spirits of his people, to prevent their breaking out in domeftic wars and diforders. That he might join policy to force, he firit entered into treaty with the duke of Burgundy, and fent that prince a fmall body of troops, which supported him against his enemies +. Soon after, he hearkened to more advantageous propofals made him by the duke of Orleans, and difpatched a greater body to fupport that party ‡. But the leaders of the oppolite factions having made a temporary accommodation of their differences, the interests of the English were facrificed; and this effort of Henry proved, in the iffue, entirely vain and fruitlefs. The declining flate of his health and the fhortnefs of his reign, prevented him from renewing the attempt, which his more fortunate fon carried to fo great a length against the French monarchy.

Parliamentary transactions.

1411.

1412.

SUCH were the military and foreign transactions of this reign: The civil and parliamentary are somewhat more memorable; and more worthy of our attention. During the two last reigns, the elections of the commons had appeared a circumflance of government not to be neglected; and Richard was even accused of uf-

* Buchanan, lib. 10.

t Walfingham, p. 380. ‡ Rymer, vol. 8. p. 715, 738.

ing

H E N R Y IV.

ing unwarrantable methods for procuring to his partizans a feat in that houfe. Chap. XVIII This practice formed one confiderable article of charge against him in his depofition ; yet Henry fcrupled not to tread in his footfteps, and to encourage the fame abuses in elections. Laws were enacted against fuch undue influence, and even a sheriff was punished for an iniquitous return, which he had made *: But laws commonly were, at that time, very ill executed; and the liberties of the people, fuch as they were, flood on a furer bafis than on laws and parliamentary elections. Tho' the house of commons was little able to withstand the violent currents, which perpetually ran between the monarchy and the ariftociacy, and that house might eafily be brought, at a particular time, to make the most unwarrantable conceffions to either; the general inflitutions of the flate lill remained invariable ; the interests of the feveral members continued on the fame footing ; the fword was in the hands of the fubject ; and the government, tho' thrown into temporary diforders, foon fettled itself on its antient foundations.

DURING the greatest part of this reign, the King was obliged to court popularity; and the houfe of commons, fenfible of their own importance, began to affume powers, which had not ufually been exercifed by their predeceffors. In the first feffion of this reign, they procured a law, that no judge, in concurring with any iniquitous measure, should be excused by pleading the orders of the King, or even the danger of his own life from the menaces of the fovereign +. In the fecond year of Henry, they infilled on maintaining the practice of not granting any fupply before they received an anfwer to their petitions ; which was a tacit method of bargaining with the prince ‡. In the fifth year, they defired the King to remove from his household four officers, who had diffleafed them, among whom was his own confessor; and Henry, tho' he told them, that he knew of no offence, which these perfons had committed, yet, in order to gratify them, complied with their requeft |. In the fixth year, they voted the King fupplies, but appointed treasurers of their own, to fee the money difburfed for the purposes intended, and required them to deliver in their accounts to the house §. In the eighth year, they proposed thirty very important articles for the regulation of the government and household, which were all granted them; and they even obliged all the members of council, all the judges, and all the officers of the household, to fwear to the observance of them 4. The abridger of the records observes the unufual liberties taken by the fpeaker and the houfe during this period *. But the great authority of the commons was but a temporary advantage arifing from the prefent fituation. In a fubfequent parliament, when the freaker made

† Cotton, p. 364. ‡ Cotton, p. 406. || Cotton, * Cotton, p. 429. * Cotion, p. 462. § Cotton. p. 438. 4 Cotton, p. 456, 457. p. 426. his

1412.

Chap. XVIII. his cuftomary applications to the throne for liberty of fpeech, the King, having now overcome all his domeftic difficulties, plainly told him, that he would have no novelties introduced, and would enjoy his prerogatives. But on the whole, the limitations of the government feem to have been more fenfibly felt, and more carefully maintained by Henry than by any of his predeceffors.

294

DURING this reign, when the house of commons were, at any time, brought to make unwary conceffions to the crown, they also showed their freedom by a very speedy retractation of them. Henry, tho' he entertained a perpetual and well-grounded jealoufy of the family of Mortimer, allowed not their name to be once mentioned in parliament; and as none of the rebels had ventured to declare the earl of Marche King, he never attempted to procure, what would not have been refused him, an express declaration against the claim of that nobleman; becaufe he knew that fuch a declaration, in the prefent circumftances, would have no authority, and would only ferve to revive the memory of Mortimer's title in the minds of the people. He proceeded in his purpose after a more artful and covert manner. He procured a fettlement of the crown on himfelf and his heirsmale *, thereby tacitely excluding the females, and transferring the Salic law to the English government. He thought, that, tho' the house of Plantagenet had at first derived their title from females, this was a remote event, unknown to the generality of the people; and if he could once accuftom the nation to the practice of excluding women, the title of the earl of Marche would gradually be forgot and neglected by them. But he was very unfortunate in this attempt. During the long contefts with France, the injuffice of the Salic law had been fo much exclaimed against by the nation, that a contrary principle had taken deep root in the minds of men, and it was now become impossible to eradicate it. The fame house of commons, therefore, in a subsequent fession, apprehensive that they had overturned the foundations of the English government, and that they had opened the door to more civil wars than might enfue even from the irregular advancement of the houle of Lancaster, applied with such earnestness for a new settlement of the crown, that Henry yielded to their requeft, and agreed to the fucceffion of the princeffes of his family +. A certain proof, that no-body was, in his heart, fatisfied with the King's title to the crown, or knew on what principle to reft it.

But tho' the commons, during this reign, flowed a very laudable zeal for liberty in their transactions with the crown; their efforts against the church were still more extraordinary, and seemed to anticipate very much on the spirit which became so general in little more than a century afterwards. I know, that the credit

* Cotton, p. 454.

+ Rymer, vol. 8. p. 462.

of

NR H E Y IV.

of these passages refts entirely on one antient historian *; but that historian was Chap. XVIII. contemporary, was a churchman, and it was contrary to the interefts of his order to preferve the memory of fuch transactions, much more to forge precedents, which posterity might, fome time, be tempted to imitate. This is a truth fo evident, that the most likely way of accounting for the filence of the records on this head, is by fuppoling, that the authority of fome churchmen was fo great as to procure a razure, with regard to these circumstances, which the indifcretion of one of that order has happily preferved to us.

In the fixth of Henry, the commons, who had been required to grant supplies, proposed in plain terms to the King, that he should feize all the temporalities of the church, and employ them as a perpetual fund to ferve the exigencies of the flate. They infifted, that the clergy poffeffed a third of the lands of the kingdom; that they contributed nothing to the fupport of the public burden; and that their exorbitant riches tended only to difqualify them for performing their minifterial functions with proper zeal and attention. When this address was prefented, the archbishop of Canterbury, who then attended the King, objected, that the clergy, tho' they went not in perfon to the wars, fent their vaffals and tenants in all cafes of neceffity; while at the fame time, they themfelves, who ftaid at home, were employed, night and day, in offering up their prayers for the happines and profperity of the flate. The fpeaker fmiled, and replied without referve, that he thought the prayers of the church but a very flender fupply. The archbishop, however, prevailed in the difpute : The Ki g difcouraged the application of the commons: And the lords rejected the bill which the lower house had framed for despoiling the church of her revenues +.

THE commons were not discouraged by this repulse: In the eleventh of the King they returned to the charge with more zeal than before : They made a calculation of all the ecclefiaftical revenues, which, by their account, amounted to 485,000 marks a year, and included 18,400 ploughs of land. They proposed to divide this riches among fifteen new earls, 1500 knights, 6000 efquires. and a hundred hospitals; befides 20,000 pounds a-year which the King might take for his own use: And they infifted, that the clerical functions would be better performed than at present, by 15,000 parish priest, at the rate of feven marks a piece of yearly flipend 1. This application was accompanied with an address for mitigating the statutes enacted against the Lollards, which shows from what fource the address came. The King gave the commons a fevere reply, and

* Walfingham. † Walfingham, p. 371. Ypod Neuft. p. 563. || Walfingham, p. 379. Tit. Livius.

farther

295

1412.

- Chap. XVHI. farther to fatisfy the church, and to prove that he was quite in earneft, he ordered a Lollard to be burned before the diffolution of the parliament *.

1413.

2.96

WE have now related almost all the memorable transactions of this reign, which was bufy and active; but produced few events, that deferve to be transmitted to pofterity. The King was fo much employed in defending his crown, which he had obtained by fuch unwarrantable means, and poffeffed by fo bad a title, that he had little leifure to look abroad, or perform any actions, which might redound to the honour or advantage of the nation. His health declined vilibly fome months before his death : He was fubject to fits, which bereaved him, for the time, of his fenfes : And tho' he was yet in the flower of his age, his end was vizoth March. fibly approaching. He expired at Westminster in the forty-fixth year of his age, and the thirteenth of his reign.

Death

and character

Soloo?

THE great popularity, which Henry enjoyed before he attained the crown, and of the King. which had fo much aided him in the acquisition of it, was entirely loft many years before the end of his reign; and he governed his people more by terror than by affection, more by his own policy than by their fenfe of duty or allegiance. When men came to reflect in cool blood on the crimes which had led him to the throne; the rebellion against his prince; the deposition of a lawful King guilty fometimes perhaps of oppreffion, but more frequently of imprudences; the exclufion of the true heir; the murder of his fovereign and near relation; thefe were fuch enormities as drew on him the hatred of his fubjects, fanctified all the rebellions against him, and made the executions, tho' not remarkably fevere, which he found neceffary for the maintenance of his authority, appear cruel as well as iniquitous to the people. Yet without pretending to apologize for these crimes, which must ever be held in deteftation, it may be remarked, that he was infenfibly led into this blameable condust by a train of incidents, which few men poffefs virtue enough to withftand. The injuffice with which his predeceffor had treated him, in first condemning him to banishment, and then despoiling him of his patrimony, made him naturally think of revenge, and of recovering his loft rights; the headlong zeal of the people hurried him into the throne; the care of his own fecurity, as well as his ambition, made him an ufurper; and the fteps have always been to few between the prifons of princes and their graves, that we need not wonder if Richard's fate was no exception to the general rule. All these confiderations make Henry's fituation, if he retained any fenfe of virtue, very much to be lamented; and the inquietude with which he poffeffed his envied greatnefs, and the remorfes, by which it is faid he was continually haunted, render him

* Rymer, vol. 8. p. 627. Otterbourne, p. 267.

an

HENRY IV.

an object of our pity, even when feated upon the throne. But it must be owned, Chap. XVIII. that his prudence and vigilance and forefight, in maintaining his power, were admirable : His command of temper remarkable : His courage, both military and political, without blemisch : And he possesses of the possesses which fitted him for his high station, and which rendered his usurpation of it, tho' pernicious in after times, rather falutary, during his own reign, to the English nation.

HENRY was twice married : By his first wife, Mary de Bohun, daughter and heir of the earl of Hereford, he had four fons, Henry, his fucceffor in the throne, Thomas duke of Clarence, John duke of Bedford, and Humphrey duke of Glocester; and two daughters, Blanche and Philippa, the former married to the duke of Bavaria, the latter to the King of Denmark. His second wife, Jane, whom he married after he was King, and who was daughter to the King of Navarre, and widow of the duke of Brittany, brought him no issue.

the "rithes whiten had led the property

Literative of the second second to be a second to be

CHAP.

C H A P. XIX.

ALTERIA PERINANYAN

HENRY V.

The King's former diforders——His reformation—The Lollards— Punishment of lord Cobham—State of France—Invasion of that kingdom—Battle of Azincour—State of France—New invasion of France—Assistantion of the duke of Burgundy—Treaty of Troye—Marriage of the King—His death—And character— Miscellaneous transactions during this reign.

Chap. XIX. 1413. The King's former diforders.

-

298

THE many jealousies, to which Henry IV's situation naturally exposed him, had fo infected his temper, that he had been perfuaded to entertain unreafonable fufpicions with regard to the fidelity of his eldeft fon; and during the latter years of his life, he had excluded that prince from all fhare in public bufinefs, and was even difpleafed to fee him at the head of armies, where his martial talents, the' useful to the support of government, acquired him a renown, which, he thought, might prove dangerous to his own authority. The active fpirit of young Henry, reftrained from its proper exercise, broke out in extravagancies of every kind; and the riot of pleafure, the frolics of debauchery, the outrage of wine, filled the vacancies of a mind, better adapted to the purfuits of ambition, and the cares of government. This courfe of life threw him among companions, whofe diforders, if accompanied with fpirit and humour, he feconded and indulged; and he was detected in many fallies, which, to feverer eyes, appeared totally unworthy of his rank and flation. There even remains a tradition, that, when heated with liquor and jollity, he fcrupled not to accompany them in attacking the paffengers on the ftreets and highways, and defpoiling them of their goods; and he found an amufement in the incidents, which the terror and regret of these defenceless people produced on such occasions. This extreme of diffoluteness proved equally difagreeable to his father, as that eager application to bufinefs, which had at first given him occasion of jealousy; and he faw in his fon's behaviour the fame neglect of decency, the fame attachment to low company, which had deftroyed the perfonal character of Richard, and which, more than all his errors in government, had tended to overturn his throne. But the nation in 8

general

HENR Y V.

general confidered the young prince with more indulgence; and observed fo many Chap. XIX. gleams of generofity, fpirit, and magnanimity, breaking continually thro' the cloud, which a wild conduct threw over his character, that they never ceafed hoping for his amendment, and afcribed all the weeds, which shot up in that rich foil, to the want of proper culture and attention in the King and his ministers. There passed an event which encouraged these agreeable views, and gave much occafion for favourable reflexions to all men of fense and candor. A riotous companion of the prince's had been indicted before Gafcoigne, the chief juffice, for fome diforders; and Henry was not ashamed to appear at the bar with the criminal, in order to give him countenance and protection. Finding, that his prefence had not over-awed the chief juffice, he proceeded to infult that magiftrate on his tribunal; but Gascoigne, mindful of the character which he then bore, and the majefty of the fovereign and of the laws, which he fuftained, ordered the prince to be carried to prison for his rude behaviour *. The spectators were agreeably difappointed, when they faw the heir of the crown fubmit peaceably to this fentence, make reparation for his error by acknowledging it, and check his impetuous nature in the midft of its extravagant career.

THE memory of this incident, and of many others of a like nature, rendered His reformathe profpect of the future reign no wife difagreeable to the nation, and encreafed tion. the joy, which the death of fo unpopular a prince as his father, naturally occafioned. The first steps taken by the young King confirmed all those preposses, entertained in his favour +. He called together his former companions, acquainted them with his intended reformation, exhorted them to imitate his example, but firictly inhibited them till they had given proofs of their fincerity in this particular, to appear any more in his prefence; and he thus difmiffed them with liberal prefects ‡. The wife ministers of his father, who had checked his riots, found that they had unknowingly been paying the highest court to him ; and were received with all the marks of favour and confidence. The chief juftice himfelf, who trembled to approach the royal prefence, met with praifes, inftead of reproaches, for his past conduct, and was exhorted to perfevere in the fame rigorous and impartial execution of the laws. The furprize of those, who expected an opposite behaviour, augmented their fatisfaction; and the character of the young King appeared brighter than if it had never been shaded by any errors.

But Henry was anxious not only to repair his own mifconduct, but alfo to make amends for those iniquities, into which policy or the necessity of affairs had betrayed his father. He expressed the deepest forrow for the fate of the unhap-

* Hall, fol. 33. + Walfing. p. 382. 1 Hall, fol. 33. Hollingshed, p. 543. Goodwin's Life of Henry V. p. I.

Qq2

299

1413.

py

1413.

300

Chap. XIX. py Richard, did juffice to the memory of that unfortunate prince, even performed anew his funeral obfequies with pomp and folemnity, and cherished all those who had diftinguished themfelves by their loyalty and attachment towards him *. Inftead of continuing the reftraints which the jealoufy of his father had imposed on the earl of Marche, he received that young nobleman with fingular courtefy and favour; and by this magnanimity fo gained on the gentle and unambitious nature of his rival, that he remained ever after fincerely attached to him, and gave him no diffurbance in his future government. The family of Piercy was reftored to its fortune and honours +. The King feemed ambitious to bury all party diffinctions in oblivion : The inftruments of the preceding reign, who had been advanced from their blind zeal for the Lancastrian interest, more than from their merits, gave place every where to men of more honourable characters : Virtue feemed now to have an open career, in which it might exert itfelf: The exhortations, as well as example, of the prince gave it encourage. ment : All men were unanimous in their attachment to Henry; and the defects of his title were forgot, amidst the perfonal regard, which was universally paid to him.

The Lollards.

THERE remained among the people only one party diffinction, which was derived from religious differences, and which, as it is of a peculiar and commonly a very obfinate nature, the popularity of Henry was not able to overcome. The Lollards were every day encreasing in the kingdom, and were become a formed party, which appeared extremely dangerous to the church, and even formidable to the civil authority \pm . The enthuliafim by which these fectarics were generally actuated, the great alterations which they pretended to introduce, the hatred which they expressed against the established hierarchy, gave an alarm to Henry, who, either from a fincere attachment to the antient religion, or from the dread of the unknown confequences, which attend all important changes, was determined to execute the laws against fuch bold innovators. The head of this fect was Sir John Oldcaftle, lord Cobham, a nobleman, who had diftinguished himself by his valour and his military talents, and had, on many occafions, acquired the effeem both of the late and of the prefent King II. His high character and his zeal for the new fect pointed him out to Arundel, Archbishop of Canterbury, as the proper victim of ecclefiaftical feverity; whofe punifhment would ftrike a terror into the whole party, and teach them that they must expect no mercy under the prefent administration. He applied to Henry for a permission to indict lord Cob-

* Hift. Croyland. contin. Hall. fol. 34. Holingshed. p. 544. + Holingshed, p. 545. ‡ Walfingham, p. 382. § Walfingham, p. 382.

ham;

HENRY V.

"ham *; but the generous nature of that prince was averfe to fuch fanguinary me- Chap. XIX. thods of conversion. He represented to the primate, that reason and conviction 1413. were the beft expedients for fupporting truth; that every gentle means ought first to be tried, in order to reclaim men from error; and that he himself would endeavour, by a conversation with Cobham, to reconcile him to the Catholic faith. But he found that nobleman obstinate in his opinions, and determined not to facrifice truths of fuch infinite moment to his complaifance for fovereigns +. Henry's principles of toleration, or rather his love of the practice, could carry him no farther; and he then gave full reins to ecclefiaftical feverity against this Inflexible herefiarch. The primate indicted Cobham; and with the affiftance of his three fuffragans, the bifhops of London, Winchefter, and St. David's, condemned him to the flames for his erroneous opinions. Cobham, who was confined to the Tower, made his efcape before the day of his execution. The bold spirit of this man, provoked by perfecution and stimulated by zeal, was urged to attempt the moft criminal enterprizes; and his unlimited authority over the fect proved, that he well merited the attention of the civil magiftrate. He formed in his retreat very violent defigns against his enemies; and dispatching his emiffaries to all quarters, appointed a general rendezvous of the party, in order to feize the perfon of the King at Eltham, and put their perfecutors to the fword ‡. Henry, apprized of their intention, removed to Weftminster: Cobham 1414. was not difcouraged by this difappointment; but changed the place of rendezvous to the fields near St. Giles: The King, having flut the gates of the city, to prevent any conjunction from that quarter, came into the fields in the night-time, feized fuch of the confpirators as appeared, and afterwards laid hold of the feveral parties, who were haftening to the place appointed. It appeared, that few were in the fecret of the confpiracy : The reft implicitely followed their leaders : But upon the trial of the prifoners, the treafonable defigns of the fect were rendered certain, both from evidence and from the confession of the criminals themselves §. Some were executed, the greater number pardoned ||. Cobham himfelf, who made Punishment of his efcape by flight, was not brought to justice, till four years after; when he was lord Cobham. hanged as a traitor; and his body was burnt on the gibbet, in execution of the fentence pronounced against him as a heretic 4. This criminal defign, which was perhaps fomewhat aggravated by the clergy, brought difcredit upon the party, and checked the progrefs of that fect, which had embraced the fpeculative doctrines of Wickliffe, and at the fame time afpired to a reformation of ecclefiaftical abufes.

* Fox's Acts and Monuments, p. 513. + Rymer, vol. 9. p. 61. Walfingham, p. 383. ‡ Walfingham, p. 385. § Cotton, p. 554. Hall. fol. 35. Holingshed, p. 544. 4 Walfingham, p. 400. Otterbourne, p. 280. | Rymer, vol. 9. p. 119, 129, 193. Hollingshed, p. 561. THESE

Chap. XIX. 1414. 302

THESE two points were the great objects of the Lollards ; but the generality of the nation was not affected in the fame degree by both of them. Common fenfe and obvious reflection had discovered to the people the advantages of a reformation in discipline; but the age was not yet fo far advanced as to be feized with the fpirit of controversy, or to enter into those abstruse doctrines, which the Lollards endeavoured to propagate throughout the kingdom. The very notion of herefy alarmed the generality of the people : Innovation in fundamental principles was fuspicious : Curiofity was not, as yet, a proper counter-ballance to authority : And even many, who were the greatest friends to the reformation of abuses, were anxious to express their detestation of the speculative tenets of the Wicliffites, which, they feared, threw difgrace on fo good a caufe. This turn of thought appears evidently in the proceedings of the parliament, which was fummoned immediately after the detection of Cobham's confpiracy. That affembly paffed fevere laws against the new heretics : They enacted, that whoever was convicted of Lollardy before the Ordinary, befides fuffering capital pnnishment according to the laws formerly eftablished, should also forfeit his lands and goods to the King; and that the chancellor, treasurer, justices of the two benches, sheriffs, justices of peace, and all the chief magistrates in every city and borough should take an oath to use their utmost endeavours for the extirpation of herefy*. Yet this very parliament, when the King demanded fupply, renewed the offer formerly preffed upon his father, and entreated him to feize all the ecclefiaftical revenues, and convert them to the use of the crown +. The clergy were alarmed : They could offer the King no bribe which was equivalent : They only agreed to confer on him all the priories alien, which depended on capital abbies in Normandy, and had been bequeathed them when that province remained united to England: And Chicheley, now archbishop of Canterbury, endeavoured to divert the blow, by giving occupation to the King, and by perfuading him to undertake a war againft France, in order to recover his loft rights to that kingdom ‡.

It was the dying injunction of the late King to his fon, not to allow the English to remain long in peace, which was apt to breed intestine commotions; but to employ them in foreign expeditions, by which the prince might acquire honour; the nobility, in sharing his dangers, might attach themselves to his perfon; and all the reftless spirits find occupation for their inquietude. The natural difposition of Henry sufficiently inclined him to follow this advice, and the civil diforders of France, which had been lengthened out beyond those of England, opened a full career to his ambition.

* 2 Hen. V. chap. 7. + Hall. fol. 35. + H

‡ Hall, fol. 35, 36.

THE

HENRY V.

THE death of Charles V. which followed to foon after that of Edward III. Chap. XIX. and the youth of his fon, Charles VI. put the two kingdoms for fome time in a 1415. fimilar fituation; and it was not to be apprehended, that either of them, during France. a minority, would be able to make much advantage of the weaknefs of the other. The jealoufies also between Charles's three uncles, the dukes of Anjou, Berri, and Burgundy, had diftracted the affairs of France rather more than those between the dukes of Lancaster, York, and Glocester, Richard's three uncles, difordered those of England; and had carried off the attention of the French nation from any vigorous enterprize against foreigners. But in proportion as Charles advanced in years, the factions were composed; his two uncles, the dukes of Anjou and Burgundy, died ; and the King himfelf, affuming the government, gave fymptoms of genius and fpirit, which revived the drooping hopes of his country. This promifing flate of affairs was not of long continuance : The unhappy prince fell fuddenly into a fit of frenzy, which rendered him incapable of exercifing his authority; and tho' he recovered from this diforder, he was fo fubject to relapfes, that his judgment was gradually, but fenfibly impaired, and no fteddy plan of government could be purfued by him. The administration of affairs was difputed between his brother, Lewis, duke of Orleans, and his coufin german, John duke of Burgundy : The propinquity to the crown pleaded in favour of the former : The latter, who, in right of his mother, had inherited the county of Flanders, which he annexed to his father's extensive dominions, derived a lustre from his fuperior power : The people were divided between these contending princes : And the King, now refuming and now dropping his authority, kept the victory -undecided, and prevented any regular fettlement of the ftate, by the final prevalence of either party.

AT length, the dukes of Orleans and Burgundy, feeming to be moved by the cries of the nation and by the interpolition of common friends, agreed to bury all paft quarrels in oblivion, and to enter into ftrict amity together : They fwore before the altar to the fincerity of this friendship; the priest administered the facrament to both of them; they gave to each other every pledge, which could be deemed facred among men: But all this folemn preparation was only a cover for the bafeft treachery, which was deliberately meditated by the duke of Burgundy. He made his rival be affaffinated in the ftreets of Paris : He endeavoured for fome time to conceal the part which he took in the crime: But being detected, he embraced a refolution still more criminal and more dangerous to fociety, by openly avowing and justifying it *. The parliament of Paris itself, the tribunal of juffice, heard the harangues of the duke's advocate in defence of af-

* La Laboureur, liv. 27. chap. 23, 24.

303

faffina-

Chap. XIX. 1414.

THESE two points were the great objects of the Lollards ; but the generality of the nation was not affected in the fame degree by both of them. Common fenfe and obvious reflection had discovered to the people the advantages of a reformation in discipline; but the age was not yet fo far advanced as to be feized with the fpirit of controversy, or to enter into those abstruse doctrines, which the Lollards endeavoured to propagate throughout the kingdom. The very notion of herefy alarmed the generality of the people : Innovation in fundamental principles was fuspicious: Curiofity was not, as yet, a proper counter-ballance to authority: And even many, who were the greatest friends to the reformation of abuses, were anxious to express their detestation of the speculative tenets of the Wicliffites, which, they feared, threw difgrace on fo good a caufe. This turn of thought appears evidently in the proceedings of the parliament, which was fummoned immediately after the detection of Cobham's confpiracy. That affembly paffed fevere laws against the new heretics : They enacted, that whoever was convicted of Lollardy before the Ordinary, befides fuffering capital pnnifhment according to the laws formerly established, should also forfeit his lands and goods to the King; and that the chancellor, treasurer, justices of the two benches, sheriffs, justices of peace, and all the chief magistrates in every city and borough should take an oath to use their utmost endeavours for the extirpation of herefy*. Yet this very parliament, when the King demanded fupply, renewed the offer formerly preffed upon his father, and entreated him to feize all the ecclefiastical revenues, and convert them to the use of the crown +. The clergy were alarmed : They could offer the King no bribe which was equivalent : They only agreed to confer on him all the priories alien, which depended on capital abbies in Normandy, and had been bequeathed them when that province remained united to England: And Chicheley, now archbishop of Canterbury, endeavoured to divert the blow, by giving occupation to the King, and by perfuading him to undertake a war against France, in order to recover his loft rights to that kingdom ‡.

IT was the dying injunction of the late King to his fon, not to allow the Englifh to remain long in peace, which was apt to breed inteffine commotions; but to employ them in foreign expeditions, by which the prince might acquire honour; the nobility, in fharing his dangers, might attach themfelves to his perfon; and all the reftlefs fpirits find occupation for their inquietude. The natural difpolition of Henry fufficiently inclined him to follow this advice, and the civil diforders of France, which had been lengthened out beyond those of England, opened a full career to his ambition.

* 2 Hen. V. chap. 7.

+ Hall. fol. 35.

‡ Hall, fol. 35, 36.

THE

HENRY V.

THE death of Charles V. which followed fo foon after that of Edward III. Chap. XIX. and the youth of his fon, Charles VI. put the two kingdoms for fome time in a 1415. fimilar fituation; and it was not to be apprehended, that either of them, during France. a minority, would be able to make much advantage of the weakness of the other. The jealoufies also between Charles's three uncles, the dukes of Anjou, Berri, and Burgundy, had diftracted the affairs of France rather more than those between the dukes of Lancaster, York, and Glocester, Richard's three uncles, difordered those of England; and had carried off the attention of the French nation from any vigorous enterprize against foreigners. But in proportion as Charles advanced in years, the factions were composed; his two uncles, the dukes of Anjou and Burgundy, died ; and the King himfelf, affuming the government, gave fymptoms of genius and fpirit, which revived the drooping hopes of his country. This promifing flate of affairs was not of long continuance : The unhappy prince fell fuddenly into a fit of frenzy, which rendered him incapable of exercifing his authority; and tho' he recovered from this diforder, he was fo fubject to relapfes, that his judgment was gradually, but fenfibly impaired, and no fteddy plan of government could be pursued by him. The administration of affairs was difputed between his brother, Lewis, duke of Orleans, and his coufin german, John duke of Burgundy : The propinquity to the crown pleaded in favour of the former : The latter, who, in right of his mother, had inherited the county of Flanders, which he annexed to his father's extensive dominions, derived a lustre from his fuperior power : The people were divided between these contending princes : And the King, now refuming and now dropping his authority, kept the victory -undecided, and prevented any regular fettlement of the ftate, by the final prevalence of either party.

AT length, the dukes of Orleans and Burgundy, feeming to be moved by the cries of the nation and by the interpolition of common friends, agreed to bury all paft quarrels in oblivion, and to enter into ftrict amity together: They fwore before the altar to the fincerity of this friendship; the prieft administered the facrament to both of them; they gave to each other every pledge, which could be deemed facred among men: But all this folemn preparation was only a cover for the bafeft treachery, which was deliberately meditated by the duke of Burgundy. He made his rival be affaffinated in the ftreets of Paris : He endeavoured for fome time to conceal the part which he took in the crime: But being detected, he embraced a refolution ftill more criminal and more dangerous to fociety, by openly avowing and juftifying it *. The parliament of Paris itfelf, the tribunal of juffice, heard the harangues of the duke's advocate in defence of af-

* La Laboureur, liv. 27. chap. 23, 24.

303

faffina-

1415.

304

Chap. XIX. faffination, which he denominated tyrannicide; and that affembly, partly influenced by faction, partly overawed by power, pronounced no fentence of condemnation against this detestable doctrine *. The fame question was afterwards agitated before the council of Constance; and it was with difficulty, that a feeble decifion, in favour of the contrary opinion, was procured from these fathers of the church, the ministers of peace and of religion. But the mischievous effects of that tenet, had they been before any wife doubtful, appeared fufficiently from the present incidents. The commission of this crime, which destroyed all trust. and fecurity, rendered the war implacable between the French parties, and cut off every means of peace and accommodation. The princes of the blood, confpiring with the young duke of Orleans and his brothers, made violent war on the duke of Burgundy; and the unhappy King, feized fometimes by one party, fometimes by another, transferred alternately to each of them the appearance of legal authority. The provinces were laid wafte by mutual depredations : Affaffinations were every where committed from the animofity of the feveral leaders ; or what was equally terrible, executions were ordered without any legal or free trial, by pretended courts of judicature. The whole kingdom was diftinguished into two parties, the Burgundians, and the Armagnacs; fo the adherents of the young duke of Orleans were called, from the count of Armagnac, father-in-law to that prince. The city of Paris, distracted between them, but inclining more to the Burgundians, was a perpetual fcene of blood and violence; the King and royal family were often detained captives in the hands of the populace; their faithful ministers were butchered or imprisoned before their face; and it was dangerous for any man, amidst these enraged factions, to be diffinguished by a strict adherence to the principles of probity and honour.

> DURING this scene of general violence, there rose into some confideration a body of men, which ufually makes no figure in public transactions even in the most peaceful times; and that was the university of Paris, whose opinions were fometimes required, and more frequently offered, in the multiplied difputes between the parties. The fchifm, by which the church was at that time divided, and which occafioned frequent controverfies in the univerfity, had raifed the mafters to an unufual degree of importance; and this connexion between literature and fuperflition had beftowed on the former a weight to which reafon and knowledge are not, of themfelves, any wife intitled among men. But there was another fociety whole fentiments were much more decifive at Paris, the fraternity of butchers, who, under the direction of their ringleaders, had declared for the duke of Burgundy, and committed the most violent outrages against the opposite

> > * Le Labourner, liv. 27. chap. 27. Monftrelet, chap. 39.

HENRYV

opposite party. To counterballance their power, the Armagnacs made interest Chap. XIX. with the fraternity of carpenters; the populace ranged themfelves on the one fide or the other ; and the fate of the capital depended on the prevalence of either party.

THE advantage, which might be made of these confusions, was easily perceived in England; and according to the maxims, which ufually prevail among nations, it was determined to lay hold of the favourable opportunity. The late King, who was courted by both the French parties, fomented the quarrel, by alternately fending affiftance to both; but the prefent fovereign, impelled by the vigor of youth and the ardor of ambition, determined to push his advantages to a greater length, and to carry a violent war into that diffracted kingdom. But while he was making preparations for that purpofe, he tried to effectuate his purpofe by negotiation; and he fent over ambaffadors to Paris, offering a perpetual peace and alliance; but demanding Catharine, the French King's daughter, in marriage, two millions of crowns as her portion, the payment of one million fix hundred thousand as the arrears of King John's ransom, and the immediate poffefiion and full fovereignty of Normandy and of all the other provinces, which had been ravished from England by the arms of Philip Augustus; together with the fuperiority of Brittany and Flanders *. Such exorbitant demands showed, that he was fenfible of the prefent miferable condition of France; and the terms, offered by the French court, tho' much inferior, difcovered their confcioufnefs of the fame melancholy truth. They were willing to give him the princefs in marriage, to pay him eight hundred thousand crowns, to refign the entire fovereignty of Guienne, and to annex to that province the country of Perigord, Rovergue, Xaintonge, the Angoumois, and other territories +. As Henry was not willing to accept of these conditions, and scarce expected that his own demands would be complied with, he never interrupted a moment his preparations for war, and having affembled a great fleet and army at Southampton, having invited all the nobility and military men of the kingdom to attend him by the hopes of glory and of conquest, he came to the fea-fide, with a purpose of embarking on his expedition.

* Rymer, vol. 9. p. 208.

+ Rymer, vol. 9, p. 211. It is reported by fome historians (fee Hist. Croyl. Cont. p. 500) that the Dauphin, in derifion of Henry's claims and diffolute character, fent him a box of tennis balls ; intimating that thefe implements of play were better adapted to him than the inftruments of war. But this flory is by no means credible; the great conceffions made by the court of France, flow, that they had already entertained a just idea of Henry's character, as well as of their own fituation.

VOL. II.

Rr

305

1415.

BUT

Chap. XIX. 1415.

306

Bur while Henry was meditating conquests upon his neighbours, he unexpectedly found himfelf in danger from a confpiracy at home, which was happily detected in its infancy. The earl of Cambridge, fecond fon of the late duke of York, having espoufed the fifter of the earl of Marche, had zealoufly embraced the interefts of that family; and had held fome conferences with the lord Scrope of Masham, and Sir Thomas Gray of Heton, about the means of recovering to that nobleman his just right to the crown of England. The conspirators, so foon as they were detected, acknowledged their guilt to the King *; and Henry proceeded without delay to their trial and condemnation. The utmost that could be expected of the best King in those ages, was, that he would fo far observe the effentials of juffice, as not to make an innocent perfon a victim to his feverity : But as to the formalities of law, which are often as material as the effentials themfelves, they were facrificed without fcruple to the leaft intereft or convenience. A jury of commoners was fummoned : The three confpirators was indicted before them : The conftable of Southampton caftle fwore, that they had feparately confessed their guilt to him : Without other evidence, Sir Thomas Gray was condemned and executed : But as the earl of Cambridge and lord Scrope pleaded the privilege of their peerage, Henry thought proper to fummon a court of eighteen barons, in which the duke of Clarence prefided : The evidence, given before the jury, was read to them : The prifoners, tho' one of them was a prince of the blood, were not examined, nor produced in court, nor heard in their own defence; but received fentence of death upon this proof, which was every way irregular and illegal; and the fentence was foon after executed. The earl of Marche was accused of having given his approbation to this confpiracy; and received a general pardon from the King +. He was probably either innocent of the crime imputed to him, or had made reparation by his early repentance and discovery 1.

Invation of France. THE fucceffes, which the arms of England have, in different ages, obtained over those of France, have been much owing to the favourable fituation of the former kingdom. The English, happily feated in an island, could make advantage of every misfortune which attended their neighbours, and were little exposed to the danger of retaliation. They never left their own country, but when conducted by a King of extraordinary genius, or found their enemy divided by intestine factions, or were supported by a powerful alliance on the continent ; and as all these circumstances concurred at present to favour their enterprize, they had reason to expect from it a proportionable fucces. The duke of Burgundy, * Rymer, vol. 9. p. 300. T. Livii, p. 8.

‡ St. Remi, chap. 55. Godwin, p. 65.

+ Rymer, vol. 9. p. 303.

expelled

Y V. ENR H

expelled France by a combination of the princes, had been fecretly follicit- Chap, XIX. ing the alliance of England *; and Henry knew, that that prince, tho' he fcrup-1415. led at first to join the inveterate enemy of his country, would willingly, if he faw any probability of fuccefs, both affift him with his Flemish fubjects, and draw over to the fame caufe all his numerous partizans in France. Trufting therefore to this circumstance, but without establishing any concert with the duke, he put to fea, and landed near Harfleur, at the head of an army of 6000 men at arms, 14th August. and 24,000 foot, mostly archers. He immediately began the fiege of that place, which was valiantly defended by the lords d'Estoûteville, de Guitri, de Gaucourt, and others of the French nobility : But as the garrifon was weak, and the fortifications in bad repair, they were at last obliged to capitulate; and they promifed to furrender, if they received no fuccour before the eighteenth of September. The day came, and there was no appearance of a French army to relieve them : Yet they still delayed, on various pretences, to open their gates; till Henry, incenfed at their breach of faith, ordered a general affault, took the town by ftorm, and put all the garrifon to the fword ; except fome gentlemen, whom the victorious army, in hopes of reaping profit by their ranfom, were induced to spare +.

THE fatigues of this fiege, and the unufual heat of the feason, had fo wasted the English army, that Henry could enter on no farther enterprize ; and was obliged to think of returning into England. He had difmiffed his transports, which could not fafely anchor in an open road upon the enemy's coaft; and he lay under a neceffity of marching by land to Calais, before he could reach a place of fafety. A numerous French army of 14,000 men at arms and 40,000 foot was by this time affembled in Normandy under the conftable d'Albert ; a force, which, if prudently conducted, was fufficient either to trample down the English in the open field, or to harafs and reduce to nothing their fmall army, before they could finish fo long and difficult a march. Henry, therefore, very cautiously offered to facrifice his conquest of Harsleur for a safe passage to Calais; but his propofal being rejected by the French court, he determined to force his way by valor and policy thro' all the opposition of the enemy §. That he might not difcourage his own army by the appearance of flight, or expose them to those hazards which naturally attend precipitate marches, he made very flow and deliberate journies ||, till he reached the Somme, which he proposed to pass at the ford of Blanquetague, the fame place where Edward, in a like fituation, had

* Rymer, vol. 9. p. 137, 138.

|| Laboureur, liv. 35. chap. 6.

+ Le Laboureur, liv. 35. chap. 4, 5. § T. Livii. p. 12. Rr 2 before

1415.

308

Chap. XIX. before escaped from Philip de Valois. But he found the ford rendered impaffable by the precaution of the French general, and guarded by a ftrong body on the oppolite bank *; and he was therefore obliged to march higher up the river, in order to feek for a fafe paffage. He was continually harraffed on his march by flying parties of the enemy; faw bodies of troops on the other fide ready to oppofe every attempt ; his provisions were cut off ; his foldiers languished with fickness and fatigue; and his affairs feemed to be reduced to a defperate fituation: When he was fo dexterous or fo fortunate as to feize by furprize a paffage near St. Quintin, which had not been fufficiently guarded, and he fafely carried over his army t.

Battle of Azincour.

25th Octr.

HENRY then bent his march northwards to Calais; but he was ftill exposed to great and imminent danger from the enemy, who had also paffed the Somme, and threw themfelves full in his way, with a purpole of intercepting his retreat. After he had paffed the fmall river of Ternois at Blangi, he was furprized to obferve from the heights the whole French army drawn up in the plains of Azincour, and fo posted that it was impossible for him to proceed on his march, without coming to an engagement. Nothing in appearance could be more unequal than the battle upon which all his fafety and his fortunes depended. The Englifh army were little more than half the number, which had difembarked at Harfleur; and laboured under every difcouragement and neceffity. The enemy were four times more numerous; were headed by the Dauphin and all the princes of the blood; and were plentifully supplied with provisions of every kind. Henry's lituation was exactly limilar to that of Edward at Creffy, and that of the black Prince at Poictiers; and the memory of these great events, inspiring the English with courage, made them hope for a like deliverance from their present difficulties. The King likewife obferved the fame prudent conduct which had been followed by these great commanders. He drew up his army on a narrow ground between two woods, which guarded each flank ; and he patiently expected in that posture the attack of the enemy ‡.

HAD the French conftable been able, either to reason justly upon the present circumstances of the two armies, or to profit by past experience, he had declined a combat, and had waited, till neceffity, obliging the English to advance, had made them relinquish the advantages of their situation. But the impetuous valour of the French nobility, and a vain confidence in fuperior numbers, brought on this fatal action, which proved the fource of infinite calamities to their country. The French archers on horfeback and their men at arms, crowded in their

* St. Remi, chap. 58.

+ T. Livii, p. 13. ‡ St. Remi, chap. 62. 2

ranks,

HENRY V.

ranks, advanced upon the English archers, who had fixed pallifadoes in their Chap. XIX. front to break the impreffion of the enemy, and who fafely plyed them, from behind that defence, with a shower of arrows, which nothing could refift *. The clay foil, moiftened by fome rain, which had lately fallen, proved another obftacle to the force of the French cavalry : The wounded men and horfes difcomposed their ranks: The narrow compass, in which they were pent, hindered them from recovering any order : The whole army was a scene of confusion, terror and difmay : And Henry, perceiving his advantage, ordered the English archers, who were light and unincumbered, to advance upon the enemy, and feize the moment of victory. They fell with their battle-axes upon the French, who, in their prefent pofture, were incapable either of flying or of making defence : They hewed them in pieces without refiftance +: And being feconded by the men at arms, who also pushed on against the enemy, they covered the field with the killed, wounded, difmounted and overthrown. After all appearance of oppofition was over, the English had leizure to make prifoners; and having advanced with uninterrupted fuccels to the open plain, they there faw the remains of the French rear guard, which still maintained the appearance of a line of battle. At the fame time, they heard an alarm from behind : Some gentlemen of Picardy, having collected about 600 peafants, had fallen upon the English baggage, and were doing execution on the difarmed followers of the camp, who fled before them. Henry, feeing the enemy on all fides of him, began to entertain apprehenfions fromhis prifoners; and he thought it neceffary to iffue general orders for putting them to death 1 : But on the difcovery of the truth, he flopped the flaughter, and was still able to fave a great number.

No battle was ever more fatal to France, by the number of princes and nobility, flain or taken prifoners. Among the former were, the Conftable himfelf, the count de Nevers and the duke of Brabant, brothers to the duke of Burgundy, the count de Vaudemont, brother to the duke of Lorraine, the duke of Alençon, the duke of Barre, the count de Marle. The most eminent prisoners were the dukes of Orleans and Bourbon, the counts d'Eu, Vendome, and Richemont, and the mareschal de Boucicaut. An archbishop of Sens also perished fighting in this battle. The killed are computed on the whole to have amounted to ten thousand men; and as the flaughter fell chiefly upon the cavalry, it is pretended, that, of these, eight thousand were gentlemen §. Henry was master of § St. Remi, chap. 64. This author fays he was present in the battle. Monstrelet, chap. 148, makes the number amount to 8400. 14,000

1415.

^{*} Walfingham, p. 392. T. Livii, p. 19. La Laboureur, liv. 35. chap. 7. Monftrelet, chap. 147. chap. 7. St. Remi, chap. 62. Monstrelet, chap. 147. Hall, fol. 50.

1415.

Chap XIX. 14,000 prifoners. The perfon of chief note, who fell among the English, was the duke of York, who perifhed fighting by the King's fide, and had an end more honourable than his life. He was fucceeded in his honours and fortune by his nephew, fon to the earl of Cambridge, executed in the beginning of the year. All the English who were flain, exceeded not forty *; tho' fome writers make the numbers more confiderable +.

> THE three great battles of Creffy, Poictiers, and Azincour bore a fingular re. femblance to each other, in their most confiderable circumstances. In all of them, there appears the fame temerity in the English princes, who, without any object of moment, merely for the fake of plunder had ventured fo far into the enemies country as to leave themfelves no refource; and unlefs faved by the utmost imprudence in the French commanders, were, from their very fituation, exposed to inevitable deftruction, But allowance being made for this temerity, which, according to the irregular plans of war, followed in those ages, feems to have been, in fome meafure, unavoidable; there appears, in the day of action, the fame prefence of mind, dexterity, courage, firmnels and precaution on the part of the English : The fame precipitation, confusion, and vain confidence on the part of the French : And the events were fuch as might have been expected from fuch opposite conduct. The immediate confequences too of these three great victories were fimilar : Inftead of puffing the French with vigour, and taking advantage of their confternation, the English princes, after their victory, feem rather to have relaxed their efforts, and to have allowed the enemy leizure to recover from his loss. Henry interrupted not his march a moment after the battle of Azincour; he carried his prifoners to Calais, and from thence to England; he even concluded a truce with the enemy; and it was not till after an interval of two years that any body of English troops appeared in France.

> THE poverty of all the European princes, and the fmall refources of their kingdoms, were the caufes of these continual interruptions in their hostilities; and tho' the maxims of war were in general very deftructive, their military operations were mere incurfions, which, without any fettled plan, they carried on against each other. The luftre, however, attending the victory of Azincour, procured fome fupplies from the English parliament; tho' still unequal to the expences of a campaign. They granted Henry an entire fifteenth of moveables; and they conferred on him for life the duties of tonnage and poundage, and the fubfidies on the exportation of wool and leather. This concession is more confiderable than that which had been granted to Richard II. by his last parliament, > * Walfingham, p. 393. Otterbourne, p. 277. St. Remi, chap. 64. + Monstrelet, chap. 147. and and which was afterwards, on his deposition, made fo great an article of charge Chap. XIX. against him.

But during this interruption of hostilities from England, France was exposed State of to all the furies of civil war; and the feveral parties became every day more en-France. raged against each other. The duke of Burgundy, in hopes that the French ministers and generals were entirely difcredited, by the misfortune at Azincour, advanced with a great army to Paris, and attempted to re-inftate himfelf in poffeffion of the government, as well as of the King's perfon. But his partizans in that city were over-awed by the court, and kept in fubjection: The duke defpaired of fuccefs : And he retired with his forces, which he immediately difperfed in the low countries *. He was next year invited to make a new attempt, by fome violent 1416. quarrels, which broke out in the royal family. The Queen, Isabella, daughter of the duke of Bavaria, who had been hitherto an inveterate enemy to the Burgundian faction, had received a great injury from the other party, which the implacable fpirit of that princefs was never able to forgive. The public neceffities obliged the count d'Armagnac, created constable of France in place of d'Albert, to feize the great treasures which Isabella had amaffed ; and when the expressed her difpleafure at this injury, he infpired into the weak mind of the King fome jealoufies against her conduct, and pushed him to feize and put to the torture, and afterwards throw into the Seine, Bois-bourdon, her favourite, whom he accufed of a commerce of gallantry with that princefs. The Queen herfelf was fent to Tours, and confined under a guard +; and after these multiplied infults, she no longer fcrupled to enter into a correspondence with the duke of Burgundy. As her son, the Dauphin Charles, a youth of fixteen, was entirely governed by the faction of Armagnac, the extended her animolity to him, and fought his deftruction with the moft unrelenting hatred. She had foon an opportunity of rendering her unnatural purpose effectual. The duke of Burgundy, in concert with her, entered France at the head of a great army : He made himfelf mafter of Amiens, Abbeville, Dourlens, Montreüil, and other towns in Picardy; Senlis, Rheims, Chalons, Troye, and Auxerre, declared themfelves for his party ‡. He got poffeffion of Beaumont, Pontoife, Vernon, Meulant, Montlheri, towns in the neighbourhood of Paris; and carrying farther his progress towards the west, he feized Etampes, Chartres, and other fortreffes ; and was at last able to deliver the Queen, who fled to Troye, and declared openly against those ministers, who, she faid, detained her husband in captivity §.

* Le Laboureur, liv. 35. chap. 10. † St. Remi, chap. 74. Monftrelet, chap. 167. ‡ St. Remi, chap. 79. § St. Remi, chap. 81. Monftrelet, chap. 178, 179.

MEAN.

311

A

Chap. XIX. 1416.

312

MEAN-WHILE, the partizans of Burgundy raifed a commotion in Paris, which always inclined to that faction. Lile-Adam, one of the duke's captains, was received into the city in the night time, and headed the infurrection of the people, which in a moment became fo impetuous, that nothing could oppofe it. The perfon of the King was feized : The Dauphin made his efcape with difficulty : Great numbers of the faction of Armagnac were immediately butchered : The count himfelf, and many others of note, were thrown into prifon : Murders were daily committed from private animolity, under pretence of faction: And the populace, not fatiated with their fury, and deeming the course of public juffice too dilatory, broke open the prifons, and put to death the count d'Armagnac, and all the other nobility who were there confined *.

1417. of France. Ift August.

1418.

WHILE France was in fuch furious combustion, and was so ill prepared to refift New invation a foreign enemy, Henry, having collected fome treasures, and levied an army, landed in Normandy at the head of 25,000 men; and met with no confiderable opposition from any quarter. He made himself master of Falaise and Cherbourg; Evreux and Caen submitted to him; Pont de l'Arche opened its gates; and Henry, having fubdued all the lower Normandy, and received a reinforcement of 15000 men from England †, formed the fiege of Rouen, which was defended by a garrifon of 4000 men, feconded by the inhabitants, to the number of 15,000 1. The cardinal des Urfins here attempted to incline him towards peace, and to moderate his pretentions : But the King replied to him in fuch terms as fhewed that he was fully fenfible of all his prefent advantages : " Do you not " fee," faid he, " that God has led me hither as by the hand ? France has no " fovereign: I have just pretensions on that kingdom: Every thing is here in " the utmost confusion : No one thinks of refisting me. Can I have a more " fenfible proof, that that Being, who difpofes of empires, has determined to " put the crown of France upon my head ?" §

But tho' Henry had opened his mind to this fcheme of ambition, he still continued to negotiate with his enemies, and endeavoured to obtain more fecure, tho' less confiderable advantages. He made, at the fame time, offers of peace to both parties; to the Queen and cuke of Burgundy on the one hand, who having poffeffion of the King's perfon, carried the appearance of legal authority ||; and to the Dauphin on the other, who being the undoubted heir of the monarchy, was adhered to by every one that had a regard to the true interefts of their country 4. These two parties also carried on a continual negotiation with each other. The terms

+Walfing. p. 400. 1 St. Re-* St. Remi, chap. 85, 86, Monstrelet, chap. 118. + Rymer, § Juvenal des Urfins. || Rymer, vol. 9. p. 717, 749. mi, chap. 91. vol. 9. p. 626, &c.

NRY V. H E

terms propofed on all fides were perpetually varying: The events of the war, and Chap. XIX. the intrigues of the cabinet, intermingled with each other: And the fate of France remained long in this uncertainty. After many negotiations, Henry offered the Queen and the duke of Burgundy to make peace with them, to efpouse the prince is Catharine, to accept of all the provinces ceded to Edward III. by the treaty of Bretigni, with the addition of Normandy, which he was to receive in full and entire fovereignty *. Thefe terms were accepted of : There remained only fome circumstances to adjust, in order to the full completion of the treaty : But in this interval the duke of Burgundy fecretly finished his treaty with the Dauphin; and thefe two princes agreed to fhare the royal authority during King Charles's life, and to unite their arms in expelling foreign enemies +.

THIS alliance, which feemed to cut off from Henry all hopes of farther fuccefs, proved in the iffue the most favourable event which could have happened for his pretenfions. Whether the Dauphin and duke of Burgundy were ever fincere in their mutual engagements is uncertain; but very fatal effects refulted from their momentary and feeming union. The two princes agreed to an interview, in order to concert the means of rendering effectual their common attack of the English; but how both or either of them could with fafety venture upon this conference, it feemed fomewhat difficult to conrive. The affafination perpetrated by the duke of Burgundy, and fill more, his open avowal of the deed, and defence of the doctrine, tended to diffolve all the bands of civil fociety; and even men of honour, who detested the example, might deem it just, on a favourable opportunity, to retaliate upon the author. The duke, therefore, who neither dared to give, nor could pretend to require any truft, agreed to all the contrivances for mutual fecurity, which were proposed by the ministers of the Dauphin. The two princes came to Montereau : The duke lodged in the caffle ; the Dauphin in the town, which was divided from the caftle by the river Yonne : The bridge between them was chosen for the place of interview : Two high rails were drawn acrofs the bridge: The gates on each fide were guarded, the one by the officers of the Dauphin, the other by those of the duke: The princes were to enter into the intermediate space by the opposite gates, accompanied each by ten perfons; and with all these marks of diffidence, to conciliate their mutual friendship. But it appeared, that no precautions are fufficient, where laws have no place, and where all principles of honour are utterly abandoned. Tannegui de Chatel, and others of the Dauphin's retainers, were zealous partizans of the house of Orleans, and they determined to feize the opportunity of revenging Assistantion on the affaffin the murder of that prince : They so fooner entered the rails, than of the duke of Burgundy.

* Rymer, vol. 9. p. 762. VOL. II.

† Rymer, vol. 9. p. 776. St. Remi, chap. 95. Sf they 1410.

1419.

Chap. XIX. they drew their fwords and attacked the duke of Burgundy : His friends were aftonished, and thought not of making any defence; and all of them either fhared his fate, or were taken prifoners by the retinue of the Dauphin *.

> THE extreme youth of this prince, made it doubtful whether he was admitted into the fecret of the confpiracy : But as the deed was committed under his eye, by his most intimate friends, who still retained their connexions with him, the blame of the action, which was certainly more imprudent than criminal, fell entirely upon him. The whole state of affairs was every where changed by that unexpected incident. The city of Paris, which was paffionately devoted to the family of Burgundy, broke out into the higheft fury against the Dauphin. The court of King Charles entered from intereft into the fame views; and as all the minifters about that monarch had owed their preferment to the late duke, and forefaw their downfall if the Dauphin recovered possession of his father's perfon, they were concerned to prevent by any means, the fuccess of his enterprize. The Queen, perfevering in her unnatural animofity against her fon, encreafed the general flame. and infpired into the King, as far as he was fusceptible of any fentiment, the fame prejudices by which fhe herfelf had long been actuated. But above all, Philip count de Charolois, now duke of Burgundy, thought himfelf bound by every tye of honour and of duty, to revenge the murder of his father, and to profecute the affaffin to the utmost extremity. And in this general transport of rage, every confideration of national and family intereft was buried in oblivion by all parties: The fubjection to a foreign enemy, the expulsion of the lawful heir, the flavery of the kingdom, appeared but fmall evils, if they led to the gratification of the prefent paffion.

> THE King of England had, before the death of the duke of Burgundy, profited extremely by the diffractions of France, and was daily making a confiderable progrefs in Normandy. He had taken Roüen after an obstinate fiege + : He had made himself master of Pontoise and Gisors: He even threatened Paris, and by the terror of his power, had obliged the court to remove to Troye: And in the midft of his fucceffes, he was agreeably furprized, to find his enemies, inftead of combining against him for their mutual defence, disposed to rush into his arms, and to make him the inftrument of their vengeance upon each other. A league was immediately concluded at Arras between him and the duke of Burgundy. That prince, without flipulating any thing for himfelf, except the profecution of his father's murder, and the marriage of the duke of Bedford with his fifter, was willing to facrifice the kingdom to Henry's ambition, and he agreed to every demand, which was made by that monarch. In order to finish

* St. Remi, chap. 97. Monstrelet, chap. 211. † T. Livii, p. 69. Monstrelet, chap. 201. that that aftonifhing treaty, which was to transfer the crown of France to a stranger, Chap. XIX. Henry went to Troye, accompanied by his brother, the dukes of Clarence and Glocefter; and was there met by the duke of Burgundy. The imbecility, into which King Charles had fallen, made him incapable of feeing any thing but thro' the eyes of those who attended him; as they, on their part, faw every thing thro' the medium of their passions. The treaty, being already concerted among the parties, was immediately drawn and figned and ratified : Henry's will feemed to be a law throughout this whole negotiation: Nothing was attended to but his advantages.

N RY V. H E

THE principal articles of the treaty were, that Henry should espouse the prin- Treaty of cefs Catharine : That King Charles, during his life time, fhould enjoy the title Troye. and dignity of King of France: That Henry should be declared and acknowledged heir of the monarchy, and be entrufted with the prefent administration of the government : That that kingdom fhould pass to his heirs whatsoever : That France and England fhould for ever be united under one king; but fhould ftill retain their feveral ufages, cuftoms, and privileges : That all the princes, peers, vaffals, and communities of France, fould fwear, both that they would adhere to the future fucceffion of Henry, and pay him prefent obedience as regent: That that prince fould unite his arms to those of King Charles and the duke of Burgundy, in order to fubdue the adherents of Charles, the pretended Dauphin: And that these three princes should make no peace nor truce with him but by common confent and agreement *.

SUCH was the tenor of this famous treaty; a treaty, which as nothing but the most violent animosity could dictate, fo nothing but the power of the fword could carry it into execution. It is hard to fay, whether its confequences, had it taken place, would have proved more pernicious to England or to France. It must have reduced the former kingdom to the rank of a province : It would have entirely disjointed the fucceffion of the latter monarchy, and have brought on the destruction of every descendant of the royal family : As the houses of Orleans, Anjou, Alencon, Brittany, Bourbon, and of Burgundy itfelf, whole titles were preferable to that of the English princes, would on that account have been exposed to perpetual jealoufy and perfecution from the fovereign. There was even a palpable deficiency in Henry's claim, which no art could palliate. For befides the infuperable objections, to which Edward IIId's pretentions were exposed, be was not heir to that monarch : If female fucceffion was admitted, the right had devolved to the houfe of Mortimer : Allowing, that Richard II. was a tyrant, and that Henry IV th's merits, in depofing him, were fo great towards the English, * Rymer, vol. 9. p. 895. St. Remi, chap. 101. Monstrelet, chap. 223.

S f 2

1420.

315

as 1420.

Marriage of the King.

316

Chap. XIX. as to juffify that nation for placing him on the throne; Richard had nowife offended France, and his rival had merited nothing of that kingdom : It could not poffibly be pretended, that the crown of France was become an appendage to that of England; and that a prince, who, by any means, got possession of the latter, was, without farther queftion, entitled to the former. So that on the whole, it must be allowed, that Henry's claim to France was, if poffible, still more unintelligible, than the title, by which his father had mounted the throne of England.

> But tho' all these confiderations were overlooked, amidst the hurry of passions, by which the courts of France and Burgundy were actuated, they would neceffarily revive during times of more leizure and tranquillity ; and it behoved Henry to push his present advantages, and allow men no leizure for reason or reflection. In a few days after, he espoused the princes, Catherine: He carried his father in law to Paris, and put himfelf in poffeffion of that capital: He obtained from the parliament and the three effates a ratification of the treaty of Troye: He fupported the duke of Burgundy in procuring a fentence against the murderers of his father: And he immediately turned his arms with fuccefs against the adherents of the Dauphin, who, to foon as he heard of the treaty of Troye, took on him the ftyle and authority of regent, and appealed to God and his fword for the maintenance of his title.

> THE first place which Henry fubdued, was Sens, which opened its gates after a flight refiftance. With the fame facility, he made himfelf mafter of Montereau. The defence of Melun was more obstinate; Barbasan, the governor, held out for the space of four months against the besiegers; and it was famine alone which obliged him to capitulate. Henry promifed to fpare the lives of all the garrifon, except fuch as were accomplices in the murder of the duke of Burgundy; and as Barbasan himself was suspected to be of the number, his punishment was demanded by Philip: But the King had the generofity to intercede for him; and to prevent his execution *.

1421.

THE neceffity of providing supplies both of men and money obliged Henry to go over to England; and he left the duke of Exeter, his uncle, governor of Paris during his abfence. The authority, which naturally attends fuccefs, procured him from the English parliament a fublidy of a fifteenth; but if we may judge by the fmallnefs of this fupply, the nation was no wife fanguine on their King's victories; and in proportion as the prospect of their union with France came nearer, they began to open their eyes, and to fee the dangerous confequences with which it

* Holingshed, p. 577.

muft

HENRYV.

muft neceffarily be attended. It was fortunate for Henry, that he had other refources, Chap. XIX. befides pecuniary fupplies from his native fubjects. The provinces, which he had already conquered, maintained his troops; and the hopes of farther advantages allured to his ftandard all men of ambitious fpirits in England, who defired to fignalize themfelves by arms. He affembled a new army of twenty four thoufand archers, and four thoufand horfemen*, and marched them to Dover, the place of embarkation. Every thing had remained in tranquillity at Paris under the duke of Exeter; but there had happened in another quarter of the kingdom a minfortune, which haftened his departure.

THE detention of the King of Scots in England had hitherto proved very advantageous to Henry; and by keeping the regent in awe, had preferved, during the whole course of the French war, the northern frontier in tranquillity. But when intelligence arrived in Scotland, of the progrefs made by Henry, and the near prospect of his fuccession to the crown of France, the nation was alarmed, and forefaw their own inevitable ruin, if the fubjection of their ally left them to combat alone an enemy, who was already fo much fuperior to them in power and riches. The regent entered into the fame views; and tho' he declined an open war with England, he permitted a body of feven thousand Scots, under the command of the earl of Buchan, his fecond fon, to be transported into France for the fervice of the Dauphin. To render this aid ineffectual, Henry had carried over the young King of Scots, whom he obliged to fend orders to his countrymen to leave the French fervice; but the Scots general replied, that he would obey no commands which came from a King in captivity, and that a prince, while in the hands of his enemy, was no wife entitled to authority. These troops therefore, continued still to act under the earl of Buchan; and were employed by the Dauphin to oppose the progress of the duke of Clarence in Anjou. The two armies encountered at Baugé : The English were defeated : The duke himfelf was flain by Sir Allan Swinton, a Scots knight, who commanded a company of men at arms: And the earls of Somerset +, Dorset, and Huntingdon were taken prifoners 1. This was the first action, which turned the tide of fucces against the English; and the Dauphin, that he might both attach the Scots to his fervice, and reward the valour and conduct of the earl of Buchan, honoured that nobleman with the office of conftable.

But the arrival of the King of England, with fo confiderable an army, was more than fufficient to repair this lofs. Henry was received at Paris with great expref-

* Monftrelet, chap. 242. + His name was John, and he was afterwards created duke of Somerfet. He was grandfon of John of Gaunt duke of Lancaster. The earl of Dorfet was brother to Somerfet, and fucceeded him in that title. ‡ St. Remi, chap. 110. Monstrelet, chap. 239. Hall, fol. 76.

i kite

fions

1421.

318

Chap. XIX. fions of joy; fo obstinate were the prejudices of the people : And he immediately conducted his army to Chartres, which had long been befieged by the Dauphin. That prince decamped on the approach of the English; and being refolved to decline a battle, he retired with his army *. Henry made himself master of Dreux without a blow: He laid fiege to Meaux at the follicitation of the Parifians, who were much incommoded by the garrifon of that place. This enterprize employed the English arms during the space of eight months : The baftard of Vaurus, the governor of Meaux, diftinguished himself by an obftinate defence; but was at last obliged to furrender at differentian. The cruelty of this officer was equal to his bravery: He was accustomed to hang without diffinction all the English and Burgundians who fell into his hands : And Henry, in revenge of his barbarity, ordered him immediately to be hanged on the fame tree, which he had made the inftrument of his inhuman executions +.

> THIS fuccels was followed by the furrender of many other places in the neighbourhood of Paris, which held for the Dauphin : That prince was chaced beyond the Loire, and almost totally abandoned all the northern provinces : He was even purfued into the fouth by the united arms of the English and Burgundians, and threatened with total deftruction : Notwithstanding the bravery and fidelity of his captains, he faw himfelf unequal to his enemies in the open field; and found it neceffary to temporize, and to avoid all hazardous actions with a rival, who had gained fo much the afcendant over him. And to crown all the other profperities of Henry, his queen was delivered of a fon, who was called by his father's name. and whofe birth was celebrated by rejoicings no lefs pompous and no lefs fincere at Paris than at London. The infant prince feemed to be univerfally regarded as the future heir of both monarchies.

1422. Death,

But the glory of Henry, when it had nearly reached the fummit, was ftopped fhort by the hand of nature ; and all his mighty projects vanished into fmoke. He was feized with a fiftula, which the furgeons at that time had not skill enough to cure; and he was at last fensible, that his distemper was mortal, and that his end was approaching. He fent for his brother the duke of Bedford, the earl of Warwic, and a few more noblemen, whom he had honoured with his confidence ; and he delivered to them, in great tranquillity, his laft will with regard to the government of his kingdom and family. He entreated them to continue, towards his infant fon, the fame fidelity and attachment, which they had always profeffed to him during his life-time, and which had been cemented by fo many

* St. Remi, chap. 3. † Rymer, vol. 10. p. 212. T. Livii, p. 92, 93. St. Remi, chap. 116. Monstrelet, chap. 260.

mutual

H E N R Y V.

mutual good offices. He expressed his indifference on the approach of death; and Chap. XIX. tho' he regreted, that he must leave unfinished a work fo happily begun, he declared himfelf confident, that the final acquilition of France would be the effect of their prudence and valour. He left the regency of that kingdom to his eldeft brother, the duke of Bedford ; that of England to his younger, the duke of Glocefter; and the care of his fon's perfon to the earl of Warwic. He recommended to all of them an anxious care to maintain the friendship of the duke of Burgundy; and advised them never to give liberty to the French princes taken at Azincour, till his fon was of age, and could himfelf hold the reins of government. And he conjured them, if the fuccefs of their arms, fhould not enable them to place young Henry on the throne of France, never at least to make peace with that kingdom, unlefs the enemy, by the ceffion of Normandy and its annexation to the crown of England, made compensation for all the hazards and expence of his enterprize *.

HE next applied himfelf to his devotions, and ordered his chaplain to read the feven penitential pfalms. When he came to that paffage of the fifty first pfalm; Build thou the walls of Jerufalem ; he interrupted him, and professed his ferious intention, after he should have fully subdued France, to have made a croifade against the Infidels, and recover poffeffion of the Holy Land +. So ingenious are men in deceiving themfelves, that Henry forgot in those moments, all the blood fpilt by his ambition; and received comfort from this late and feeble refolve, which, as the mode of these enterprizes was now past, he certainly would never have carried into execution. He expired in the thirty fourth year of his age and 31ft August. the tenth of his reign.

THIS prince possefied many eminent virtues; and if we give indulgence to and character ambition in a monarch, or rank it, as the vulgar are inclined to do, among his of the King. virtues, they were unstained by any confiderable blemish. His abilities appeared equally in the cabinet and in the field ; the boldness of his enterprizes was no less remarkable than his perfonal valour in conducting them. He had the talent of attaching his friends by affability, and of gaining his enemies by address and clemency. The English, dazzled by the lustre of his character, still more than by that of his victories, were reconciled to the defects of his title: The French almost forgot that he was an enemy: And his care of maintaining justice in his civil administration, and preferving difcipline in his armies, made fome amends to both nations for the calamities infeparable from those wars, in which his fhort reign was almost entirely occupied. That he could forgive the earl of Marche, who had a better

* Monstrelet, chap. 265. Hall, fol. 80.

+ St. Remi, chap. 118. Monstrelet, chap. 265.

1422.

319

1.4

1422.

320

Chap. XIX. better right to the throne than himfelf, is a fure proof of his magnanimity; and that the earl relied fo entirely on his friendship is no lefs a proof of his established character for candor and fincerity. There remain in hiftory few inftances of fuch mutual truft; and still fewer where neither party found reason to repent it.

THE exterior figure of this great prince, as well as his deportment, was engaging. His stature was fomewhat above the middle fize; his countenance beautiful; his limbs genteel and slender, but full of vigour; and he excelled in all warlike and manly exercifes *. He left by his queen, Catherine of France, only one fon, not full nine months old ; whole misfortunes in the course of his life, furpaffed all the glories and fucceffes of his father.

In less than two months after Henry's death, Charles VI. of France, his father in law, terminated his unhappy life. He had, for feveral years, posseffed only the appearance of royal authority: Yet was this circumstance of confiderable moment to the English; and divided the duty and affections of the French between them and the Dauphin. This prince was proclaimed and crowned King of France at Poictiers, under the name of Charles VII. Rheims, the place where that ceremony was usually performed, was at that time in the hands of his enemies.

CATHERINE of France, Henry's Widow, married foon after his death, a Welch gentleman, Sir Owen Tudor, faid to be descended from the antient princes of that country : She bore him two fons, Edmund and Jafper, of whom, the eldeft was created earl of Richmond; the fecond earl of Pembroke. The family of Tudor, first raifed to distinction by this alliance, mounted afterwards the throne of England.

Miscellaneous transactions.

THE long fchism, which had divided the Latin church for near forty years, was finally terminated in this reign by the council of Conftance; which deposed the Pope, John XXIII. for his crimes, and elected Martin V. in his place, who was acknowledged by almost all the kingdoms of Europe. This great and unufual act of authority in the council gave the Roman Pontiffs ever after a mortal antipathy to these affemblies. The fame jealoufy, which had long prevailed in most European countries, between the civil aristocracy and monarchy, now also took place between these powers in the ecclesiaftical body. But the great feparation of the bishops in the feveral states, and the difficulty of affembling them, gave the Pope a mighty advantage, and made it more eafy for him to collect all the power of the Hierarchy in his own perfon. The cruelty and treachery which attended the punishments of John Hufs and Jerome of Prague, the unhappy disciples of Wickliffe, who were burned alive for their errors by

* T. Livii, p. 4.

2

this

HENRY

this council, prove this melancholy truth, that toleration is none of the virtues of Chap. XIX. priefts in any form of ecclefiaftical government. But as the English prince had ^{1422.} little or no concern in these great transactions, we are here the more concise in relating them.

V.

THE first commission of array, which I we meet with, was issued in this reign *. The military part of the feudal fystem, which was the most effential circumstance of it, was entirely diffolved; and could no longer ferve for the defence of the kingdom. Henry, therefore, when he went to France in 1415, empowered certain commissioners to take a review of all the freemen in each county able to bear arms, to divide them into companies, and to keep them in readiness for resisting the enemy. This was the æra, when the feudal militia gave place to one which was perhaps still less orderly and regular.

WE have an authentic and exact account of the ordinary revenues of the crown during this reign; and they amount only to 55,714 pounds 10 fhillings and 10 pence a-year +. This is nearly the fame with the revenues of Henry III. and the Kings of England had neither become much richer nor poorer in the courfe of fo many years. The ordinary expences of the government amounted to 52,507 pounds 16 fhillings and 10 pence : So that the King had of furplus only 3206 pounds 14 fhillings for the fupport of his household; for his wardrobe; for the expence of embaffies; and other articles. This fum was nowife fufficient; he was therefore obliged to have frequent recourse to parliamentary supplies, and was thus, even in time of peace, not altogether independant of his people. But wars were a monftrous expence, which neither the prince's ordinary revenue, nor the extraordinary fupplies, were able to bear; and he was always reduced to many miferable shifts, in order to make any tolerable figure in them. He commonly borrowed money from all quarters; he pawned his jewels, and fometimes the crown itfelf 1; he ran in arrears to his army; and he was often obliged, notwithstanding all these expedients, to stop in the midst of his career of victory, and to grant truces to the enemy. The high pay which was given to foldiers agreed very ill with this low revenue. All the extraordinary supplies granted by parliament to Henry during the course of his reign were only feven tenths and fifteenths, about 203,000 pounds ||. It is easy to compute how foon this money must be exhausted by armies of 24,000 archers, and 6000 horse; when each archer had a fixpence a-day §, and each horfeman two fhillings. The most

* Rymer, vol. 9. p. 254, 255. + Rymer, vol. 10. p. 123. ‡ Rymer, vol. 10. p. 190. || Parliamentary Hiftory, vol. 2. p. 168.

§ It appears from many passages of Rymer, particularly vol. 9. p. 258, that the King paid 20 marks a-year for an archer, which is a good deal above fixpence a-day. The price had rifen, as is natural, by raifing the denomination of money.

VOL. II.

Tt

fplendid

1422.

322

Chap. XIX. fplendid fucceffes proved commonly very fruitlefs when supported by fo poor a revenue; and the debts and difficulties, which he thereby incurred, made the King pay dear for his victories. The civil administration, likewife even in time of peace, could never be very regular, where the government was fo ill enabled to support itself. Henry a year before his death owed debts, which had been contracted when he was prince of Wales *. It was in vain that the parliament pretended to reftrain him from arbitrary practices, when he was reduced to fuch neceffities. Tho' the right of levying purveyance, for inftance, had been expressly guarded against by the great charter itself, and was frequently complained of by the commons, it was found absolutely impracticable to abolish it; and the parliament at length, fubmitting to it as a legal prerogative, contented themfelves with enacting laws to limit and confine it. The duke of Glocefter, in the reign of Richard II. possefied a revenue of 60,000 crowns, (about 30,000 pounds ayear of our prefent money) as we learn from Froiffart +, and was confequently richer than the King himfelf, if all circumftances be duely confidered.

> It is remarkable, that the city of Calais alone was an annual expence on the crown of 19,119 pounds ±; that is, above a third of the common charge of the government in time of peace. This fortrefs was of no use to the defence of England, and only gave that kingdom an inlet to annoy France. Ireland coft two thousand pounds a year, over and above its own revenue; which was certainly very low. Every thing contributes to give us a very mean idea of the state of Europe in those ages.

> FROM the most early times, till the reign of Edward III. the denomination of money had never been altered : A pound fterling was still a pound troy; that is, about three pounds of our prefent money. That conqueror was first obliged to innovate in this important article. In the twentieth year of his reign, he coined twenty-two shillings out of a pound troy; in his twenty-feventh year he coined twenty-five shillings. But Henry V. who was also a conqueror, raifed still farther the denomination, and coined thirty shillings from a pound troy #: His revenue therefore would be about 110,000 pounds of our prefent money; and by the cheapnefs of provisions, would be equivalent to above 330,000 pounds.

> NONE of the princes of the house of Lancaster ventured to impose taxes without confent of parliament : Their doubtful or bad title became fo far of advantage to the conftitution. The rule was then fixed, and could not fafely be broke afterwards even by more abfolute princes.

* Rymer, vol. 10. p. 114.

+ Liv. 4. chap. 86. I Fleetwood's Chronicon Preciofum, p. 52.

1 Rymer, vol. 10. p. 113.

CHAP.

Y H E N R VI.

H A P C XX.

H E N R Y VI.

Government during the minority-State of France-Military operations-Battle of Verneuil-Siege of Orleans-The maid of Orleans ____ The fiege of Orleans raifed ____ The King of France crowned at Rheims-Prudence of the duke of Bedford-Execution of the maid of Orleans-Defection of the duke of Burgundy-Death of the duke of Bedford-Decline of the English in France-Truce with France-Marriage of the King with Margaret of Anjou-Murder of the duke of Glocester-State of France-Renewal of the war with France—The English expelled France.

URING the reigns of the Lancastrian princes, the authority of parliament Chap. XX. feems to have been more confirmed, and the privileges of the people more regarded, than during any former period ; and the two preceding Kings, tho' Government men of great spirit and abilities, abstained from such exertions of prerogative, as during the minority. even weak princes, whofe title was undifputed, were tempted to think that they might venture upon with impunity. The long minority, of which there was now the profpect, encouraged still farther the lords and commons to extend their authority; and without paying much regard to the verbal deftination of Henry V. they affumed the power of giving a new arrangement to the whole administration. They declined altogether the name of Regent with regard to England: They appointed the duke of Bedford to be protector or guardian of that kingdom, a title which they fuppofed to imply lefs authority : They invefted the duke of Glocester with the same dignity during the absence of his elder brother *; and in order to limit the power of both these princes, they named a council, without whofe advice and approbation no measure of importance could. be determined +. The perfon and education of the infant prince was committed to Henry Beaufort, bishop of Winchester, his great uncle, and the legitimated son of John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster; who, as his family could never have

* Rymer, vol. 10. p. 261. Cotton, p. 564. † Cotton, p. 564.

Tt 2

1422.

323

any 1422.

324

Chap. XX. any pretensions to the crown, might fafely, they thought, be intrusted with that important charge *. The two princes, the dukes of Bedford and Glocefter, who might deem themfelves injured by this plan of government, yet, being perfons of great integrity and honour, acquiefced willingly in any appointment, which feemed to give fecurity to the public; and as the wars in France appeared to be the object of greateft moment, they avoided every difpute, which might throw an obftacle in the way of these conquests.

State of France.

WHEN the flate of affairs between the English and French Kings was confidered with a fuperficial eye, every advantage feemed to be on the fide of the former; and the total expulsion of Charles appeared to be an event, which might naturally be expected from the fuperior power of His rival. Tho' Henry was yet in his infancy, the administration was devolved on the duke of Bedford, the most accomplished prince of his age; whose experience, prudence, valor, and generofity perfectly qualified him for this high office, and enabled him both to maintain union among his friends, and to gain the confidence of his enemies. The whole power of England was at his command : He was at the head of armies enured to victory : He was feconded by the most renowned generals of the age, the earls of Somerfet, Warwic, Salifbury, Suffolk, and Arundel, Sir John Talbot and Sir John Fastolfe : And besides Guienne, the antient inheritance of England, he was mafter of the capital, and of all the northern provinces, which were best enabled to furnish him with supplies both of men and money, and to affift and support his English forces.

BUT Charles, notwithstanding the prefent inferiority of his power, possefied fome advantages, derived partly from his fituation, partly from his perfonal character, which promifed him fuccefs, and ferved, first to controul, then to overballance, the fuperior force and opulence of his enemies. He was the true and undoubted heir of the monarchy : Every Frenchman, who knew the interefts. or defired the independance of his country, turned his eyes towards him as its fole refuge : The exclusion given him, by the imbecillity of his father, and the forced or precipitate confent of the states, had plainly no validity : That spirit of faction, which had blinded the people, could not long hold them in fo grofs a delution : Their national and inveterate hatred against the English, the authors of all their miferies, must foon revive, and give them an indignation at bending their necks under the yoke of that hoftile people : Great nobles and princes, acsuftomed to maintain an independance against their native fovereigns, would never endure a fubjection to ftrangers : And tho' most of the princes of the blood were,

* Hall, fol. 83. Monftrelet, vol. 2. p. 27.

H E N R Y VI.

were, fince the fatal battle of Azincour, detained prifoners in England, the in- Chap. XX. habitants of their demesnes, their friends, their vasials, all declared a zealous attachment to the King, and exerted themfelves in refifting the violence of foreign invaders.

CHARLES himfelf, tho' only in his twentieth year, was of a character well calculated to become the object of these benevolent sentiments ; and perhaps from the favour, which naturally attends youth, was the more likely, on account of his tender age, to acquire the good-will of his native fubjects. He was a prince of the most friendly and benign disposition, of easy and familiar manners, and of a just and found, tho' not a very vigorous, understanding. Sincere, generous, affable, he engaged from affection the fervices of his followers, even while his low fortunes might make it their interest to defert him; and the lenity of his temper could pardon in them those fallies of discontent, to which princes in his fituation are fo frequently exposed. The love of pleasure often seduced him into indolence; but amidft all his irregularities the goodnefs of his heart ftill shone forth; and by exerting at intervals his courage and activity, he proved, that his general remiffnels proceeded not from the want, either of a just spirit of ambition, or of perfonal valor.

Tho' the virtues of this amiable prince lay fome time in obfcurity, the duke of Bedford knew, that his title alone made him formidable, and that every foreign affiftance would be requifite, ere a regent of England could hope to complete the conqueft of France; an enterprize, which, however it might fem to be much advanced, was still exposed to many and great difficulties. The chief circumftance, which had procured to the English all their prefent advantages, was the refertment of the duke of Burgundy againft Charles; and as that prince feemed intent rather on gratifying his paffion than coullulting his interefts, it was the more eafy for the regent, by demonstrations of respect and confidence, to retain him in the alliance of England. He bent therefore all his endeavours to that purpose: He gave the duke every proof of friendship and regard : He even proffered him the regency of France, which Philip declined : And that he might corroborate national connexions by private ties, he concluded his own marriage with the princefs of Burgundy, which had been flipulated by the treaty of Arras.

BEING fenfible, that next to the alliance of Burgundy, the friendship of the duke of Brittany was of the greateft importance towards forwarding the English conquefts; and that, as the provinces of France, already fubdued, lay between the dominions of thefe two princes, he could never hope for any fecurity without preferving

142%.

1423.

1423.

Chap. XX. preferving his connexions with them; he was very intent on ftrengthening himfelf also from that quarter. The duke of Brittany, having received many just reafons of difpleafure from the minifters of Charles, had already acceded to the treaty of Troye, and had, with other vafials of the crown, done homage to Henry V. in quality of heir to the kingdom : But as the regent knew, that the duke was much governed by his brother, the count de Richemont, he endeavoured to fix his friendship, by paying his court and doing fervices, to this haughty and ambitious prince.

> ARTHUR, count de Richemont, had been taken prisoner at the battle of Azincour, had been treated with great indulgence by the late King, and had even been permitted on his parole to take a journey into Brittany, where the flate of affairs required his prefence. The death of that victorious monarch happened before Richemont's return ; and this prince pretended, that, as his word was given perfonally to Henry V. he was not bound to fulfil it towards his fon and fucceffor : A chicane, which the regent, as he could not force him to compliance, deemed it prudent to overlook. An interview was fettled at Amiens between the dukes of Bedford, Burgundy, and Brittany, at which the count de Richemont was also prefent +: The alliance was renewed between these princes : And the regent perfuaded Philip to give in marriage to Richemont his eldeft fifter, widow of the deceased Dauphin, Lewis, the elder brother of Charles. Thus Arthur was connected both with the regent and the duke of Burgundy, and feemed engaged by interest to profecute the fame object, in forwarding the progress of the English arms.

> WHILE the vigilance of the duke of Bedford was employed in gaining or confirming these allies, whose neighbourhood rendered them so important, he did not overlook the flate of more remote countries. The duke of Albany, regent of Scotland, had died ; and his power had devolved to Murdac, his fon, a prince of a weak understanding and of indolent dispolitions; who, far from possessing the talents requisite for the government of that fierce people, was not even able to maintain authority in his own family, or reftrain the petulance and infolence, of his fons. The ardor of the Scots to ferve in France, where Charles treated them with great honour and diffinction, and where the regent's brother enjoyed the dignity of conftable, broke out a fresh under this feeble administration : New fuccours daily came over, and filled the armies of the French King : The earl of Douglas conducted a reinforcement of 5000 men to his affiftance. And it was juftly to be dreaded, that the Scots, by commencing open hoftilities in the north.

> > + Hall, fol. 84. Monstrelet, vol. 1. p. 4. Stowe, p. 364.

-would 17th April.

HENRY VI:

would occasion a diversion still more considerable of the English power, and Chap. XX. would eafe Charles, in part, of that load, by which he was at prefent fo grievoully oppressed. The duke of Bedford, therefore, perfuaded the English council to form an alliance with James their prifoner; to free that prince from his long captivity; and to connect him with England, by marrying him to a daughter of the earl of Somerfet and coufin of the young King*. As the Scots regent, tired of his prefent dignity, which he was not able to fupport, was now become entirely fincere in his applications for James's liberty, the treaty was foon concluded; forty thousand pounds of ransom were flipulated +; and the King of Scots was reftored to the throne of his anceftors, and proved, in his fhort reign, one of the most illustrious princes, who had ever governed that kingdom. He was murdered in 1437 by his traiterous kinfman the earl of Athole. His affections inclined him to the party of France; but the English had never reason, during his life-time, to complain of any breach of the neutrality by Scotland.

But the regent was not fo employed in thefe political negotiations as to miltary Military oper operations neglect the operations of war, from which alone he could hope to fucceed rations. in expelling the French monarch. Tho' the chief feat of Charles's power lay in the fouthern provinces, on the other fide of the Loire; his partizans were poffeffed of fome fortreffes in the northern, and even in the neighbourhood of Paris; and it behoved the duke of Bedford first to clear these countries of the enemy, before he could think of attempting more diftant conquefts. The caftle of Dorfoy was taken after a fiege of fix weeks : That of Noyelle and the town of Rüe in Piccardy underwent the fame fate : Pont fur Seine, Vertus, Montaigu were fubjected by the English arms : And a more confiderable advantage was soon after gained by the united forces of England and Burgundy. John Stuart, conftable of Scotland, and the lord d'Effifiac had formed the fiege of Crevant in Burgundy : The earls of Salifbury and Suffolk, with the count de Toulongeon, were fent to its relief : A fierce and well difputed action enfued : The Scots and French were defeated : The conftable of Scotland and the count de Ventadour were taken prisoners: And above a thousand men, among whom was Sir William Hamilton, were left on the field of battle ‡. The taking of Gaillon upon the Seine, and of la Charité upon the Loire was the fruit of this victory : And as this latter place opened an entrance into the fouthern provinces, the acquisition of it appeared on that account of the greater importance to the duke of Bedford, and feemed to promise a successful issue to the war.

* Hall, fol. 86. Stowe, p. 364. Grafton, p. 501.

+ Rymer, vol. 10. p. 299, 300, 326.

1 Hall, fol. 85. Monstrel. vol. 2. p. 8. Holingshed, p. 586. Grafton, p. 500.

1423.

THE

Chap. XX. 1424.

328

The more King Charles was threatened with an invalion in those provinces which adhered to him, the more neceffary it became, that he fhould retain poffeffion of every fortrefs, which he ftill held within the quarters of the enemy. The duke of Bedford had belieged in perfon, during the fpace of three months, the town of Yvri in Normandy; and the brave governor, unable to make any longer defence, was obliged to capitulate; and he agreed to furrender the town, if, before a certain term, no relief arrived to him. Charles, informed of thefe conditions, determined to make an attempt for faving the place. He collected, with fome difficulty, an army of 14,000 men, of whom the half were Scots; and he fent them thither under the command of the earl of Buchan, the conftable; who was attended by the earl of Douglas, his countryman, the duke of Alençon, the mareschal de la Fayette, the count d'Aumale, and the viscount de Narbonne. When the conftable arrived within a few leagues of Yvri, he found that he was come too late, and that the place was already furrendered. He immediately turned to the left, and fat down before Verneuil, which the inhabitants, in fpite of the garrifon, delivered up to him *. Buchan might now have returned in fafety, and with the glory of making an acquifition no lefs important than the place, which he was fent to relieve: But hearing of Bedford's approach, he called a council of war; and afked their opinions with regard to the conduct which he should follow in this emergence. The wifer part of the council declared for a retreat; and represented, that all the past misfortunes of the French had proceeded from their rafhnefs in giving battle, when no neceffity obliged them to rifque a decifive action ; that this army was the last refource of the King, and the only defence of the few provinces which remained to him; and that every reafon invited him to embrace cautious councils, which left time for his fubjects to return to their fense of duty, and gave leifure for difcord to arife among his enemies, who, being united by no common band of intereft or motive of alliance, could not long perfevere in their animofity against him. All these prudential confiderations were overborne by a vain point of honour, not to turn their backs to the enemy; and they refolved to await the arrival of the duke of Bedford.

27th of Aug. neuil.

THE numbers were nearly equal in this rencounter; and as the long continu-Battle of Ver- ance of the war had introduced discipline, which, however imperfect, fufficed to maintain fome appearance of order in fuch fmall armies, the battle was fierce, and well difputed, and attended with bloodshed on both fides. The constable drew up his forces under the walls of Verneuil, and refolved to abide the attack of the enemy : But the impatience of the vifcount of Narbonne, who broke his ranks, and obliged the whole line to follow him in fome hurry and confusion, * Monstrelet, vol. 2. p. 14. Grafton, p. 504.

was

HENRY VI.

was the caufe of the misfortune, which enfued. The English archers, fixing their Chap. XX. pal fadoes before them, according to their ufual cuftom, fent a volley of arrows into the thickeft of the French army; and tho' beat from their ground, and obliged to take shelter among the baggage, they foon rallied, and continued to commit great flaughter upon the enemy. The duke of Bedford, mean-while, at the head of the men at arms, made impreffion on the French, broke their ranks, chiced them off the field, and rendered the victory entirely compleat and decifive *. The conftable himfelf perished in battle, the earl of Douglas and his fon, the counts of Aumale, Tonnerre and Ventadour, with many other confiderable nobility. The duke of Alençon, the marefchal de la Fayette, the lords of Gaucour and Mortemar were taken prifoners. There fell about four thousand of the French ; and fixteen hundred of the English ; a loss then effected fo unufual on the fide of the victors, that the duke of Bedford prohibited all rejoicings for his fuccefs. Verneuil was furrendered next day upon capitulation +.

THE condition of the King of France appeared now very terrible, and almost defperate. He had loft the flower of his army and the braveft of his nobles in this fatal action : He had no refources for recruiting or fubfifting his troops : He wanted money even for his perfonal fubliftance ; and tho' all parade of a court was banifbed, it was with difficulty he could keep a table, fupplied with the plainest necessaries, for himfelf and his few followers : Every day brought him intelligence of fome lofs or misfortune: Towns, which were bravely defended, were obliged at last to furrender for want of relief or fupply : He faw his partizans entirely chaced from all the provinces which lay north of the Loire : And he expected foon to lofe, by the united efforts of his enemies, all the territories, of which he had hitherto continued mafter; when an accident happened, which faved him on the brink of ruin, and loft the English fuch an opportunity for compleating their conquefts, as they never afterwards were able to recall.

JAQUELINE, countels of Hainault and Holland, and heir of these provinces, had efpoufed John duke of Brabant, coufin german to the duke of Burgundy; but having unhappily made this choice, from the usual motives of princes, the foon found reason to repent her of the unequal alliance. She was a princess of a masculine spirit and uncommon understanding; the duke of Brabant was of a fickly complexion and weak mind : She was in the vigour of her age; he had only reached his fifteenth year : These causes had inspired her with such contempt of her hufband, which foon proceeded to antipathy, that the determined to break a marriage, where, it is probable, nothing but the ceremony had as yet intervened.

* Hall, fol. 88, 89, 90. Monfirelet, vol. 2. p. 15. Stowe, p. 365. Holingshed, p. 588. † Monstrelet, vol. 2. p. 15.

VOL. II.

329

14.24.

Uu

The

Chap. XX. 1424.

330

The court of Rome was commonly very open to applications of this nature, when feconded by power and money; but as the princefs forefaw great opposition from her hufband's relations, and was impatient to effect her purpofe, she made her escape into England, and threw herself under the protection of the duke of Glocefter. That prince, with many noble qualities, had the defect of being governed by an impetuous temper and vehement paffions; and he was rashly induced, as well by the charms of the countefs herfelf, as by the profpect of poffeffing her rich inheritance, to offer himfelf to her as a hufband. Without waiting for a papal dispensation; without endeavouring to reconcile the duke of Burgundy to this measure; he entered into a contract of marriage with Jaqueline, and immediately attempted to put himfelf in poffession of her dominions. Philip was difgusted with so precipitant a conduct : He refented the injury done to the duke of Brabant his near relation: He dreaded to have the English established on all fides of him: And he forefaw the confequences, which must attend the extensive and un controuled dominion of that nation, if, before the full fettlement of their power, they infulted and injured an ally, to whom they had already been fo much indebted, and who was fo neceffary for fupporting them in their farther progrefs. He encouraged, therefore, the duke of Brabant to make refistance: He engaged many of Jaqueline's fubjects to adhere to that prince : He himfelf marched troops to his fupport : And as the duke of Glocester still perfevered in his purpose, a tharp war was fuddenly kindled in the Low-Countries. The quarrel foon became perfonal as well as political. The English prince wrote to the duke of Burgundy, complaining of the opposition made to his pretensions; and tho' in the main, he employed amicable terms in his letter, he took notice of fome falfehoods, into which Philip had been betrayed during the course of these transactions. This unguarded expression was highly refented : The duke of Burgundy infifted, that he should retract it : And mutual challenges and defiances passed between them on this occasion *.

THE duke of Bedford could eafily forfee the bad effects of fo ill-timed and imprudent a quarrel. All the fuccours, which he expected from England, and which were fo neceffary in this critical emergence, were intercepted by his brother, and employed in Holland and Hainault: The forces of the duke of Burgundy, which he alfo depended on, were diverted by the fame wars: And befides this double lofs, he was in imminent danger of alienating for ever that confederate, whofe friendship was of the utmost importance to his interests, and whom the late King had injoined him, with his dying breath, to gratify by every mark of xegard and attachment. He inforced all these topics to the duke of Glocester: He en-

* Monftrelet, vol. 2. p. 19, 20, 21.

deavour-

E

HENRY VI.

deavoured to mitigate the refentment of the duke of Burgundy : He interposed Chap. XX. with his good offices between these princes : But he was not fuccessful in any of his endeavours; and he found, that the impetuofity of his brother's temper was ftill the chief obstacle to all accommodation *. For this reason, instead of pushing the victory gained at Verneüil, he found himfelf obliged to take a journey into England, and to try, by his councils and authority, to moderate the meafures of the duke of Glocefter.

THERE had likewife broke out fome differences among the English ministry, which had proceeded to great extremities, and which required the regent's prefence to compose them +. The bishop of Winchester, to whom the care of the King's perfon and education had been entrufted, was a prelate of great capacity and experience, but of an intriguing and dangerous character; and as he aspired to the government of affairs, he had continual difputes with his nephew the protector, and he gained frequent advantages over the vehement and impolitic temper of that prince. The duke of Bedford employed the authority of parliament to reconcile them; and thefe rivals were obliged to promife before that affembly, that they would bury all quarrels in oblivion t. Time alfo feemed to open expedients for composing the difference with the duke of Burgundy. The credit of that prince had procured a bull from the Pope; by which not only Jaqueline's contract with the duke of Glocester was annulled; but it was also declared, that even in cafe of the duke of Brabant's death, it should never be lawful for her to espouse the English prince. Humphrey, despairing of success, married another lady of inferior rank, who had lived fome time with him, as his miftrefs §. The duke of Brabant died; and his widow, before the could recover poffeffion of her dominions, was obliged to declare the duke of Burgundy her heir, in cafe the died without children, and to promife never to marry any perfon without his confent. But tho' the affair was thus terminated to the advantage of Philip, it left a difagreeable impression on his mind : It excited an extreme jealousy of the English, and opened his eyes to his true interests : And as nothing but his animosity against Charles had engaged him in alliance with them, it counterballanced that paffion by another of the fame kind, which in the end became prevalent, and brought him back, by degrees, to his natural connexions with his family and his native country.

ABOUT the fame time, the duke of Brittany began to withdraw himfelf from the English alliance. His brother, the count de Richemont, tho' connected by § Stowe, p. 367.

331

14244

1425-

Uu₂

marriage

^{*} Monstrelet, p. 18. + Stowe, p. 368. Holingshed, p. 590. ‡ Hall, fol. 98, 99. Holingshed, p. 593, 594. Polydore Virgil, p. 466. Grafton, p. 512, 519.

1425.

332

Chap. XX. marriage with the dukes of Burgundy and Bedford, was extremely attached by inclination to the French intereft; and he willingly hearkened to all the advances which Charles made him for obtaining his friendship. The high office of constable, vacant by the earl of Buchan's death, was offered him; and as his martial and ambitious temper aspired to the command of armies, which he had in vain attempted to obtain from the duke of Bedford, he not only accepted that truft, but brought over his brother to an alliance with the French monarch. The new conftable, having made this one change in his measures, firmly adhered ever after to his engagements with France. Tho' his pride and violence, which would admit of no rival in his mafter's confidence, and even prompted him to affaffinate the other favourites, had fo much difgusted Charles, that he once banished him the court, and refused to admit him to his presence, he still acted with vigour for the fervice of that monarch, and obtained at last, by his perfeverance, the pardon of all his past offences.

1426.

In this fituation, the duke of Bedford, on his return, found the affairs of France, after paffing eight months in England. The duke of Burgundy was much difgusted. The duke of Brittany had entered into engagements with Charles, and had done homage to that prince for his dutchy. The French had been allowed to recover from the aftonishment, into which their frequent difafters had thrown them. An incident even happened, which ferved extremely to raile their courage. The earl of Warwic had befieged Montargis with a fmall army of 3000 men; and the place was reduced to extremity, when the baftard of Orleans undertook to throw relief into it. This general, who was natural fon to the prince affaffinated by the duke of Burgundy, and who was afterwards created count de-Dunois, conducted a body of 1600 men to Montargis; and made an attack on the enemy's trenches with fo much valour, prudence, and good fortune, that he not only penetrated into the place, but gave a fevere blow to the English, and obliged Warwic to raife the fiege *. This was the first fignal action, which raifed the fame of Dunois, and opened him the road to all those great honours, which he afterwards attained.

- Bur the regent, foon after his arrival, revived the credit of the English arms, by an important enterprize, which he happily atchieved. He fecretly brought together, in separate detachments, a confiderable army to the frontiers of Brittany; and tell fo unexpectedly upon that province, that the duke, unable to make refiftance, yielded to all the terms required of him : He renounced the French alliance; he engaged to maintain the treaty of Troye; he acknowleged the duke of Bedford for regent of France; and promifed to do homage for his dutchy to Chap. XX, King Henry *. And the English prince, having thus freed himself from a dangerous enemy who lay behind him, refolved on an undertaking, which, if fuccefsful, would, he hoped, caft the balance between the two nations; and prepare the way for the final conquest of France.

* Monfirelet, vol. 2. p. 32, 33. Holingfhed, p. 597.

OF

HENRY VI.

THE city of Orleans was fo fituated between the provinces commanded by 1428. Henry, and those possefied by Charles, that it opened an easy entrance to either; Siege of Orand as the duke of Bedford intended to make a great effort to penetrate into the leans. fouth of France, it behoved him to begin with this place, which, in the prefent circumstances, was become the most important in the kingdom. He committed the conduct of the enterprize to the ear of Salifbury, who had newly brought him over a re-inforcement of 6000 men from England, and who had much diftinguished himself, by his abilities, during the course of the present wars. Salifbury, paffing the Loire, made himfelf mafter of feveral fmall places, which furrounded Orleans on that fide +; and as his intentions were thereby known, the French King used every expedient to fupply the city with a garrifon and provisions, and enable it to maintain a long and obftinate fiege. The lord of Gaucour, a brave and experienced captain, was appointed governor : Many officers of diffinction threw themfelves into the place: The troops, which they conducted, were enured to war, and were determined to make the most obstinate resistance : And even the inhabitants, difciplined by the long continuance of hoftilities, were well qualified, in their own defence, to fecond the efforts of the most veteran forces. The eyes of all Europe were turned towards this icene; where, it was reafonably fuppoted, the French were to make their last stand for maintaining the independance of their monarchy, and the rights of their fovereign.

THE earl of Salifbury at last approached the place with an army, which confisted only of 10,000 men; and not being able, with 10 fmall a force, to inveft fo great a city, that commanded a bridge over the Loire, he flationed himfelf on the fouthern fide towards Sologne, leaving the other, towards the Beauffe, ftill open to the enemy. He there attacked the fortifications, which guarded the entry to the bridge; and after an obitinate refiftance, he carried feveral of them: But was himfelf killed by a cannon ball as he was taking a view of the enemy 1. The earl of Suffolk fucceeded to the command; and being re-inforced with great numbers of English and Burgundians, he passed the river with the main body of his army, and invetted Orleans on the other fide. As it was now the depth of winter, + Monstrelet, vol. 2. p. 38, 39. Poly. Virg. p. 468. * Monstrelet, vol. 2. p. 35, 36. 1 Hall, fol. 105. Monftrelet, vol. 2. p. 39. Stowe, p. 369. Holingshed, p. 599. Grafton, p. 531. Suffolk,

333

1426.

1428.

334

Chap. XX. Suffolk, who found it difficult, in that feason, to throw up intrenchments all around, contented himself, for the present, with erecting redoubts at different distances, where his men were lodged in fafety, and were ready to intercept the fupplies, which the enemy might attempt to throw into the place. Tho' he had feveral pieces of artillery in his camp, (and this is the first fiege in Europe, where cannon were found to be of importance) the art of engineering was hitherto fo imperfect, that Suffolk trufted more to famine than force for fubduing the city; and he proposed in the spring to render the circumvallation more compleat, by drawing intrenchments from one redoubt to another. Numberless feats of valour were performed both by the beliegers and belieged during this winter : Bold fallies were made, and repulfed with equal boldnefs: Convoys were fometimes introduced and often intercepted : The fupplies were still unequal to the confumption of the place: And the English seemed daily, tho' flowly, to be advancing towards the completion of their enterprize.

1429.

BUT while they lay in this fituation, the French parties ravaged all the country around; and the beliegers, who were obliged to draw their provisions from a diftance, were themfelves exposed to the danger of want and famine. Sir John Fastolffe was bringing up a large convoy, of every kind of ftores, which he efcorted with a detachment of 2,500 men; when he was attacked by a body of 4000 French, under the command of the counts of Clermont and Dunois. Fastolffe drew up behind his waggons; but the French generals, cautious of attacking him in that pofture, planted a battery of cannon against him, which threw every thing into confusion, and would have enfured them the victory; had not the impatience of fome Scots troops, who broke the line of battle, brought on an engagement, in which Fastolffe was victorious. The count de Dunois was wounded; and above 500 French were left on the field of battle. This action, which was of great importance in the prefent conjuncture, was commonly called the battle of Herrings; because the convoy brought a great quantity of that kind of provisions, for the use of the English army during the Lent seafon *.

CHARLES feemed now to have but one expedient for faving this city, which had been fo long invefted. The duke of Orleans, who was full prifoner in England, prevailed on the protector and the council to confent, that all his demefnes fhould be allowed to preferve a neutrality during the war, and fhould be fequeftered, for greater fecurity, into the hands of the duke of Burgundy. This prince,

* Hall. fol. 106. Monftrelet, vol. 2. p. 41, 42. Stowe, p. 369. Holingfhed, p. 600. Polyd. Virg. p. 469. Grafton, p. 532.

ENRY VI. n w - H

prince, who was much lefs cordial in the English interefts than formerly, went to Chap. XX. Paris, and made the propofal to the duke of Bedford; but the regent replied very coldly, that he was not of a humour to beat the bushes, while others ran away with the game : An answer, which fo much difgusted the duke, that he recalled all the troops of Burgundy, that acted in the fiege *. The place, however, was every day more and more closely invested by the English : Great scarcity began a'ready to be felt by the garrifon and inhabitants : Charles, in defpair of collecting an army, which should dare to approach the enemy's entrenchments, not only gave the city for loft, but began to entertain a very difinal prospect with regard to the general flate of his affairs. He faw that the country, in which he had hitherto, with great difficulty, fubfifted, would be laid entirely open to the invalion of a powerful and victorious enemy; and he talked already of retiring with the remains of his forces into Languedoc and Dauphiny, and of defending himself as long as possible in that diftant quarter. But it was fortunate for this good prince, that he lay under the dominion of women; and that the women, whom he confulted, had the fpirit to fupport his finking refolutions in this defperate extremity. Mary of Anjou, his Queen, a princefs of great merit and prudence, vehemently opposed this measure, which, the forefaw, would difcourage all his partizans, and ferve as a general fignal for deferting a prince, who feemed himfelf to defpair of fuccefs. His miftrefs too, the fair Agnes Sorel, who lived in entire amity with the Queen, feconded all her remonstrances, and threatened, that, if he thus pufillanimoufly threw away the fcepter of France, fhe would feek in the court of England a fortune more correspondent to her wishes. Love was able to rouze in the breaft of Charles that courage, which ambition had failed to excite : He refolved to difpute every inch of ground with an imperious enemy; and rather to perifh with honour in the midft of his friends than yield inglorioufly to his bad fortune : When relief was unexpectedly brought him by another female of a very different character, who gave rife to one of the most fingular revolutions, that is to be met with in history.

In the village of Domremi near Vaucouleurs, on the borders of Lorraine, The maid of there lived a country girl of twenty-feven years of age, called Joan d'Arc, who Orleans. was fervant in a fmall inn, and who in that station had been accustomed to tend the horfes of the guefts, to ride them without a faddle to the watering-place, and to perform other offices, which, in well-frequented inns, commonly fall to to the fhare of the men fervants +. This girl was of an irreproachable life, and

335

1429.

^{*} Hall, fol. 106. Monstrelet, vol. 2. p. 42. Stowe, p. 369. Grafton, p. 533.

⁺ Hall, fol. 107. Monftrelet, vol. 2. p. 42. Grafton, p. 534.

1429.

226 -

Chap. XX. had not hitherto been remarked for any fingularity; whether that the had met with no occasion to excite her genius, or that the unskilful eyes of those, who conversed with her, had not been able to difcern her uncommon merit. It is easy to imagine, that the present situation of France was an interesting object. even to perfons of the loweft rank, and would become the frequent fubject of their conversation : A young prince, expelled his native throne, by the fedition of fubjects and by the arms of strangers, could not fail to move the compassion of all his people, whole hearts were uncorrupted by faction; and the peculiar character of Charles, fo ftrongly inclined to friendship and the tender passions, naturally rendered him the hero of that fex, whole generous minds know no bounds in their affections. The fiege of Orleans, the progrefs of the English before that place, the great diffress of the garrison and inhabitants, the importance of faving the city and its brave defenders, had turned thither the eyes of all the world; and Joan, inflamed by the general fentiment, was feized with a wild defire of bringing relief to her fovereign in his prefent diffreffes. Her unexperienced mind, working day and night on this favourite object, miltook the impulses of her paffion for heavenly infpirations ; and the fancied, that the faw visions and heard voices, exhorting her to re-establish the throne of France, and to expel the foreign invaders. An uncommon intrepidity of temper made her overlook all the dangers, which might attend her in fuch a path ; and thinking herfelf deftined by heaven to this office, fhe threw afide that bashfulness and timidity, which would naturally adhere to her fex, her years, and her low flation. She went to Baudricourt, governor of Vaucouleurs; procured admiffion to him; informed him of her infpirations and intentions; and conjured him not to neglect the voice of God, who fpoke thro' her, but to fecond those heavenly revelations, which impelled her to this glorious enterprize. Baudricourt treated her at first with fome neglect; but on her frequent returns to him, and importunate follicitations, he began to remark fomething extraordinary in the maid, and was inclined, at all hazards, to make fo eafy an experiment. It is uncertain, whether this gentleman had difcernment enough to perceive, that great use might be made with the vulgar of fo uncommon an engine ; or, what is more likely in that credulous age, was himfelf a convert to this visionary: But he adopted at last the scheme of Joan ; and he gave her fome attendants, who conducted her to the French court, which at that time refided at Chinon.

> It is the bufinefs of hiftory to diffinguish between the miraculous and the marvellous; to reject the first in all narrations merely profane and human; to fcruple the fecond; and when obliged by undoubted teftimony, as in the prefent cafe, to admit of fomething extraordinary, to receive as little of it as is con-

fiftent

HENRY VI.

fiftent with the known facts and circumstances. It is pretended, that Joan, im- Chap. XX. mediately on her admiffion, knew the King, tho' fhe had never feen his face before, and tho' he purpofely kept himfelf in the crowd of courtiers, and had laid afide every thing in his drefs and apparel, which might diffinguish him : That fhe offered him, in the name of the fupreme Creator, to raife the fiege of Orleans, and conduct him to Rheims to be there crowned and anointed; and on his expressing some doubts of her mission, revealed to him, before some form confidents, a fecret, which was unknown to all the world but himfelf, and which nothing but a heavenly infpiration could difcover to her : And that fhe demanded, as the inftrument of her future victories, a particular fword, which was kept in the church of St. Catharine de Fierbois, and which, tho' fhe had never feen it, fhe defcribed by all its marks, and by the place in which it had long been laid and neglected *. This is certain, that all these miraculous stories were fpread abroad, in order to catch the vulgar. The more the King and his minifters were determined to give into the illufion, the more fcruples they pretended. An affembly of grave doctors and theologians cautioufly examined Joan's miffion, and pronounced it undoubted and fupernatural. She was fent to the parliament, then refiding at Poictiers; and was interrogated before that affembly: The prefidents, the counfellors, who came perfuaded of her imposture, went away convinced of her infpiration. A ray of hope began to break thro' that despair, in which the minds of all men were before enveloped. Heaven had now declared itfelf in favour of France, and had laid bare its out-ftretched arm to take vengeance on her invaders. Few could diftinguish between the impulse of inclination and the force of conviction; and none would fubmit to the trouble of lo difagreeable a fcrutiny.

AFTER these artificial precautions and preparations had been for fome time employed, Joan's requests were at last complied with : She was armed cap-apee, mounted on horfeback, and flown in that martial habiliment before the whole people. Her dexterity in managing her fleed, tho' acquired in her former occupation, was regarded as a new proof of her miffion; and the was received with the loudest acclamations by the spectators. Her former occupation was even denied : She was no longer the fervant of an inn : She was converted into a shepherdels, an employment much more agreeable to the imagination. To render her still more interesting, near ten years were substracted from her age; and all the fentiments of love and of chivalry, were thus united to those of enthusiafm, in order to inflame the fond fancy of the people with prepossessions in her favour.

> * Hall, fol. 107. Holingshed, p. 600. X' X

WHEN

VOL. II.

337

1429.

Chap. XX. 1429.

WHEN the engine was thus dreffed up in full fplendor, it was time to effay its force against the enemy. Joan was fent to Blois, where a large convoy was prepared for the fupply of Orleans, and an army of ten thousand men, under the command of St. Severe, affembled to efcort it. She ordered all the foldiers to confeis themselves before they fet out on the enterprize: She banished from the camp all women of bad fame : She displayed in her hands a confecrated banner; where the Supreme Being was represented, grasping the globe of earth, and furrounded with Flower de Luces. And she infisted, in right of her prophetic mission, that the convoy should enter Orleans, by the direct road from the fide of Beausse; but the count de Dunois, unwilling to submit the rules of the military art to her inspirations, ordered it to approach by the other fide of the river, where, he knew, the weakest part of the English army was stationed.

PREVIOUS to this attempt, the maid had wrote to the regent and to the Englifh generals before Orleans, commanding them, in the name of the omnipotent Creator, by whom fhe was commiffioned, immediately to raife the fiege and to evacuate France; and menacing them with divine vengeance in cafe of their difobedience. All the Englifh affected to fpeak with derifion of the Maid and of her heavenly commiffion; and faid, that the French King was now indeed reduced to a forry pafs, when he had recourfe to fuch ridiculous expedients: But they felt their imagination fecretly ftruck with the vehement perfuafion, which prevailed in all around them; and they waited with an anxious expectation, not unmixed with horror, for the iffue of thefe extraordinary preparations.

29th April.

4th May.

As the convoy approached the river, a fally was made by the garrifon on the fide of Beauffe, to prevent the English general from fending any detachment to the other fide: The provisions were peaceably embarked in boats, which the inhabitants of Orleans had fent to receive them: The maid covered with her troops the embarkation: Suffolk ventured not to attack her: And the French general carried back the army in fafety to Blois; an alteration of affairs, which was already visible to all the world, and which had a proportional effect on the minds of both parties.

THE Maid entered the town of Orleans, arrayed in her military garb, and difplaying her confecrated flandard; and was received, as a celeftial deliverer, by all the inhabitants. They now believed themfelves invincible under her facred influence; and Dunois himfelf, perceiving fuch a mighty alteration both in friends and foes, confented, that the next convoy, which was expected in a few days, fhould enter by the fide of Beauffe. The convoy approached : No fign of refiftance appeared in the befiegers : The waggons and troops paffed without without interruption between the redoubts of the English: A dead filence and aftonishment reigned among those troops, formerly so elated with victory, and so fierce for the combat.

HENRY VI.

THE earl of Suffolk was in a fituation very unufual and extraordinary; and which might well confound the man of the greateft capacity and firmeft temper. He faw his troops overawed, and ftrongly impreffed with the idea of a divine influence, accompanying the Maid. Inftead of banifhing these vain terrors by hurry and action and war, he waited till the foldiers should recover from the panic; and he thereby gave leizure for these preposses to fink still deeper into their minds. The military maxims, which are prudent in common cases, deceived him in these unaccountable events. The English felt their courage daunted and overwhelmed; and thence inferred a divine vengeance hanging over them. The French drew the fame inference from an inactivity fo new and unexpected. Every circumstance was now reversed in the opinions of men, on which all depends: The spirit, resulting from a long course of uninterrupted fucces, was on a fudden transferred from the victors to the vanquished.

THE Maid called aloud, that the garrifon fhould remain no longer on the defensive; and the promifed her followers the affiftance of heaven in attacking those redoubts of the enemy, which had so long kept them in awe, and which they had never hitherto dared to infult. The generals feconded her ardor: An attack was made on one redoubt, and it proved fuccessful *: All the English, who defended the entrenchments, were put to the fword or taken prisoners: And Sir John Talbot himself, who had drawn together, from the other redoubts, fome troops to bring them relief, dared not to appear in the open field against fo formidable an enemy.

NOTHING feemed impossible after this fuccess to the Maid and her enthusiastic votaries. She urged the generals to attack the main body of the English in their entrenchments: But Dunois, still unwilling to hazard the fate of France by too great temerity, and fensible that the least reverse of fortune would make all the prefent visions evaporate, and reftore every thing to its former condition, checked her vehemence, and proposed to her, first to expel the enemy from their forts on the other fide of the river, and thus lay the communication with the country entirely open, before she attempted any more hazardous enterprize. Joan was perfuaded, and these forts were vigorously affailed. In one attack the French were repulsed; the Maid was left almost alone; she was obliged to retreat, and join the runaways; but displaying her facred standard, and animating them

> * Monftrelet, vol. 2. p. 45. X x 2

339 and Chap. XX.

1429.

with

Chap. XX. 1429.

with her countenance, her gestures, her exhortations, she led them back to the charge, and overpowered the English in their entrenchments. In the attack of another fort, she was wounded in the neck with an arrow; she retreated a moment behind the affailants; she pulled out the arrow with her own hands; she had the wound quickly dreffed; and she hastened back to head the troops, and to plant her victorious banner on the ramparts of the enemy.

By all thefe fucceffes, the Englifh were entirely chaced from their fortifications on that fide: They had loft above fix thoufand men in thefe different actions; and what was ftill more important, their wonted courage and confidence was wholly gone, and had given place to amazement and defpair. The Maid returned triumphant over the bridge, and was again received as the guardian angel of the city. After performing fuch miracles, fhe convinced the moft obdurate incredulity of her divine miffion: Men felt themfelves animated as by a fuperior energy, and thought nothing impoffible to that divine hand, which fowifibly conducted them. It was in vain even for the Englifh generals to oppofe with their foldiers the prevailing opinion of fupernatural influence: They themfelves were probably moved by the fame belief: The utmost they dared to advance, was, that Joan was not an inftrument of God; she was only the implement of the Devil: But as the English had felt, to their fad experience, that the Devil might be allowed fometimes to prevail, they derived not much confolation from the enforcing of this opinion.

The fiege of Orleans raifed, $th May.

IT might prove extremely dangerous for Suffolk, with fuch intimidated troops, to remain any longer in the prefence of fuch a courageous and victorious enemy; and he therefore raifed the fiege, and retreated with all the precautions imaginable. The French refolved to push their conquests, and to allow the English no leizure to recover from their consternation. Charles formed a body of fix thousand men, and fent them to attack Jergeau, whither Suffolk had retired with a detachment of his army. The fiege lasted ten days; and the place was obstinately defended. Joan displayed her wonted intrepidity on this occasion. She defcended into the foffee, in leading the attack; and fhe there received a blow on the head with a ftone, by which fhe was confounded and beat to the ground : But the foon recovered herfelf ; and in the end rendered the affault fuccessful : Suffolk was obliged to yield himfelf prifoner to a Frenchman called Renaud ; but before he fubmitted, he asked his adversary, whether he was a geneleman. On receiving a fatisfactory answer, he demanded, whether he was a knight. Renaud replied, that he had not yet attained that honour. Then I make you one, replied Suffolk : Upon which, he gave him the blow with his fword, fword, which dubbed him into that fraternity; and he immediately furrendered Chap. XX. himself his prisoner.

THE remainder of the English army was commanded by Fastolfe, Scales and Talbot, who thought of nothing but of making their retreat, as foon as possible, into a place of fafety ; while the French efteemed the overtaking them equivalent to a victory. So much had the events, which paffed before Orleans, altered every thing between the two nations! The vanguard of the French under Xaintrailles attacked the rear of the enemy at the village of Patay. The battle lasted 18th June. not a moment : The English were discomfited and fled : The brave Fastolfe himfelf showed the example of flight to his troops; and the order of the garter was taken from him, as a punishment for this inftance of cowardice *. Two thoufand men were killed in this action; and both Talbot and Scales taken prifoners.

In the account of all these successes, the French writers, to magnify the wonder, represent the Maid (who was now known by the appellation of the maid of Orleans) as not only active in the combats, but as performing the office of general; directing the troops, conducting the military operations, and fwaying the deliberations in all councils of war. It is certain, that the policy of the French court endeavoured to maintain this appearance with the public : But it is much more probable, that Dunois and the wifer commanders prompted her in all her measures, than that a country girl, without experience or education, could, on a fudden, become expert in a profession, which requires more genius and capacity, than any other active scene of life. It is fufficient praise, that she could diftinguish the perfons on whose judgment she might rely ; that she could feize their hints and fuggeftions, and, on a fudden, deliver their opinion as her own ; and that fhe could curb, on occafion, that vifionary and enthufiaftic fpirit, with which she was undoubtedly actuated, and could temper it with prudence and discretion.

THE raifing of the fiege of Orleans was one part of the Maid's promife to Charles : The crowning him at Rheims was the other : And fhe now infifted vehemently, that he should forthwith set out on that enterprize. A few weeks before, fuch a propofal would have appeared the most extravagant in the world. Rheims lay in a diftant quarter of the kingdom; was then in the hands of a victorious enemy ; the whole road, which led to it, was occupied by their garrifons; and no imagination could be fo fanguine as to think, that fuch an attempt could fo foon come within the bounds of poffibility. But as it was extremely

* Monstrelet, vol. 2. p. 46.

1429.

342

Chap. XX. tremely the interest of Charles to maintain the belief of fomething extraordinary and divine in these events, and to avail himself of the present consternationof the English; he refolved to follow the exhortations of his warlike propheters, and to lead his army upon this promifing adventure. Hitherto, he had kept remote from the fcene of war : As the fafety of the ftate depended entirely upon his perfon, he had been perfuaded to reftrain his military ardour : But observing this profperous turn of affairs, he now determined to appear at the head of his armies, and to fet the example of valour to all his foldiers. And the French nobility faw at once their young fovereign affuming a new and more brilliant character, feconded by fortune, and conducted by the hand of heaven; and they caught fresh zeal to exert themselves in replacing him on the throne of his anceftors.

CHARLES fet out for Rheims at the head of twelve thousand men : He passed The King of France crown- by Troye, which opened its gates to him : Chalons imitated the example: Rheims 17th July.

fent him a deputation with its keys before his approach to it : And he fcarce perceived, as he paffed along, that he was marching thro' an enemy's country. The ceremony of his coronation was here performed * with the holy oil, which a pigeon had brought to King Clovis from heaven, on the first establishment of the French monarchy: The maid of Orleans flood by his fide, in compleat armour, and difplaying her facred banner, which had fo often diffipated and confounded his fiercest enemies : And the people shouted with the most unfeigned joy, on viewing fuch a complication of wonders. After the completion of the ceremony, the Maid threw herfelf at the King's feet, embraced his knees, and with a flood of tears, which pleafure and tenderness extorted from her, the congratulated him on this fingular and marvellous event.

CHARLES, thus crowned and anointed, became more venerable in the eyes of all his fubjects, and feemed, in a manner, to receive anew, from a heavenly commission, his title to their allegiance. The inclinations of men swaying their belief, no one doubted of the infpirations and prophetic spirit of the Maid : So many incidents, which paffed all human comprehension, left little room to question a fuperior influence: And the real and undoubted facts gave credit to every exaggeration, which could fcarce be rendered more wonderful. Laon, Soiffons, Chateau-Thierri, Provins, and many other towns and fortreffes in that neighbourhood, immediately after Charles's coronation, fubmitted to him on the first fummons; and the whole nation was difpofed to give him the most zealous testi. monies of their duty and affection.

* Monstrelet, vol. 2. p. 48.

NOTHING

HENRY VI.

NOTHING can impress us with a higher idea of the wifdom, addrefs, and re- Chap. XX. folution of the duke of Bedford, than his being able to maintain himfelf in for Prudence of perilous a fituation, and to preferve fome footing in France, after the defection of the duke of fo many places, and amidft the universal inclination of the reft to imitate that Bedford. contagious example. This prince feemed prefent every where by his vigilance and forefight: He employed each refource, which fortune had yet left him : He held all the English garrifons in a posture of defence: He kept a watchful eye over every attempt among the French towards an infurrection : He retained the Parifians in obedience, by employing alternately careffes and feverity : And knowing that the duke of Burgundy was already wavering in his fidelity, he acted with for much skill and prudence, as to renew, in this dangerous crifis, an alliance, which was so important to the credit and support of the English government.

THE fmall fupplies which he received from England fet the talents of this great man in ftill a ftronger light. The ardour of the Englifh for foreign conquefts was now extremely abated by time and reflection : The parliament feems even to have become fenfible of the danger, which might attend their farther progrefs : No fupply of money could be obtained by the regent during his greateft diftreffes; and men inlifted flowly under his ftandard, or foon deferted, by reafon of the wonderful accounts, which had reached England, of the magic, and forcery, and diabolical power of the maid of Orleans^{*}. It happened fortunately, in this emergency, that the bifhop of Winchefter, now created a cardinal, landed at Calais with a body of 5000 men, which he was conducting into Bohemia, on a croifade againft the Huffites. He was perfuaded to lend thefe troops to his nephew during the prefent difficulties \dagger ; and the regent was thereby enabled to take the field, and to oppofe the French King, who was advancing with his army to the gates of Paris.

THE extraordinary capacity of the duke of Bedford appeared alfo in his military operations. He attempted to reftore the courage of his troops by boldly advancing to the face of the enemy; but he chofe his pofts with fo much caution, as always to decline a combat, and to render it impoffible for Charles to attack him. He ftill attended that prince in all his movements; covered his own towns and garrifons; and kept himfelf in a pofture to reap advantage from every imprudence or falfe ftep of the enemy. The French army, which confifted moftly of voluntiers, who ferved at their own expence, foon after retired and was diffolved: Charles went to Bourges, the ordinary place of his refidence; but not

* Rymer, vol. 10. p. 459, 472,

+ Rymer, vol. 10. p. 421.

3 till

1430.

25th May.

344

Chap. XX. till he had made himfelf master of Compiegne, Beauvais, Senlis, Sens, Laval. Lagni, St. Denis, and of many places in the neighbourhood of Paris, which the affections of the people had put into his hands.

> THE regent endeavoured to revive the declining flate of his affairs, by bringing over the young King of England, and having him crowned and acknowledged King of France at Paris *. All the vaffals of the crown, who lived within the provinces poffeffed by the English, swore anew allegiance and did homage to him. But this ceremony was cold and infipid in comparison of the eclat which had attended the coronation of Charles at Rheims; and the duke of Bedford expected more effect from an accident, which put into his hands the perfon, who had been the author of all his calamities.

> THE maid of Orleans, after the coronation of Charles, declared to the count de Dunois, that her wishes were now fatisfied, and that she had no farther defire than to return to her former condition, and to the occupations and courfe of life, which became her fex : But that nobleman, fenfible of the mighty advantages, which might fill be reaped from her prefence in the army, exhorted her to persevere, till, by the final expulsion of the English, she had brought all her prophecies to their full completion. In purfuance of this advice, fhe threw herfelf into the town of Compiegne, which was at that time belieged by the duke of Burgundy, affisted by the earls of Arundel and Suffolk; and the garrifon on her appearance believed themselves thenceforth invincible. But their joy was of short duration. The Maid, next day after her arrival, headed a fally upon the quarters of John de Luxembourg; fhe twice drove the enemy from their entrenchments; finding their numbers to encrease every moment, she ordered a retreat; when hard preffed by the purfuers, she turned upon them, and made them again recoil; but being here deferted by her friends, and furrounded by the enemy, fhe was at last, after exerting the utmost valour, taken prisoner by the Burgundians +. The common opinion was, that the French officers, finding the merit of every victory afcribed to her, had, in envy to her renown, by which they themselves were so much eclipsed, willingly exposed her to this fatal accident.

> THE envy of her friends on this occasion was not a greater proof of her merit than the triumph of her enemies. A complete victory would not have given more joy to the English and their partizans. The fervice of te deum, which has fo often been prophaned by princes, was publickly celebrated on this fortunate event at Paris. The duke of Bedford fancied, that, by the captivity of that ex-

> > 7

* Rymer, vol. 10. p. 432.

+ Stowe, p. 371.

traor-

HENRY VI.

traordinary woman, who had blafted all his fucceffes, he would again recover his Chap. XX. former afcendant over France; and to puth farther the prefent advantage, he purchafed the captive from John de Luxembourg, and formed a profecution againft her, which, whether it proceeded from vengeance or policy, was equally barbarous, and difhonourable.

THERE was no poffible reafon, why Joan fhould not be regarded as a prifoner of war, and be entitled to all the courtefy and good ufage, which civilized nations practife towards enemies on thefe occafions. She had never, in her military capacity, forfeited, by any act of treachery or cruelty, her claim to that treatment: She was unftained with any civil crime: Even the virtues and the very decorums of her fex had ever been rigidly obferved by her *: And tho' her appearing in war, and leading armies to battle, may feem an exception, fhe had thereby performed fuch fignal fervice to her prince, that fhe had abundantly compenfated for this irregularity; and was even, on that very account, the more an object of praife and admiration. It was neceffary, therefore, for the duke of Bedford to intereft religion fome way in the profecution; and to cover under that cloak his flagrant violation of juffice and humanity.

THE bifhop of Beauvais, a man wholly devoted to the English interest, prefented a petition against Joan, on pretence that she was taken within the bounds of his diocese, and he defired to have her tried by an ecclessaftical court for forcery, impiety, idolatry and magic: The university of Paris was so mean as to join in the same request: Several prelates, among whom the cardinal of Winchester was the only Englishman, were appointed her judges: They held their court in Rouen, where the young King of England then resided: And the maid, cloathed in her former military apparel, but loaded with irons, was produced before this tribunal.

SHE first defired to be eased of her chains: Her judges answered that she had once already attempted an escape by throwing herself from a tower: She confesfed the fact, maintained the justice of her intention, and owned, that, if she could, she would still execute that purpose. All her other speeches showed the fame firmness and intrepidity: Tho' harrassed with interrogatories, during near the

* We learn from her trial in Pafquier, that when accused of having put to death Franquet d'Arras her prifoner, the juftified herfelf by faying, that he was a known robber, and lay under fentence of death by a civil magistrate. She was to careful of obferving decorums, that, when the was in any town or garrifon, the always went to bed with fome women of character in the place: When in the camp, the lay in armour, and always had one of her brothers on each fide of her. The English never reproached her with any thing in regard to her morals.

Yy

VOL. II.

345

1431.

course

1431.

Chap. XX. courfe of four months, fhe never betrayed any weaknefs or womanish fubmiffion ; and no advantage was gained over her. The point, which her judges pushed most vehemently, was her visions and revelations and intercourse with departed faints; and they afked her, whether she would submit to the church the truth of these inspirations : She replied, that she would submit them to God, the fountain of truth. They then exclaimed, that the was a heretic, and denied the authority of the church. She appealed to the Pope: They rejected her appeal.

> THEY asked her, why she put trust in her standard, which had been confecrated by magical incantations : She replied, that fhe put truft in the Supreme Being alone, whole image was imprefied upon it. They demanded, why the carried in her hand that standard at the anointment and coronation of Charles at Rheims : She answered, that the person, who had shared the danger, was entitled to fhare the glory. When accufed of going to war contrary to the decorums of her fex, and of affuming government and command over men; the fcrupled not to reply, that her fole purpofe was to defeat the English, and to expel them from the kingdom of France. In the iffue, the was condemned for all the crimes of which the had been accufed, aggravated by herefy; her revelations were declared to be inventions of the devil to delude the people; and fhe was fentenced to be delivered over to the fecular arm.

> JOAN, fo long furrounded by inveterate enemies, who treated her with every mark of contumely; brow-beaten and overawed by men of fuperior rank, and men invefted with the enfigns of a facred character, which she had been accuftomed to revere; felt her fpirit at last fubdued, and those visionary dreams of infpiration, in which the had been buoyed up by the triumphs of fuccefs and the applaufes of her own party, gave way to the terrors of that punifhment to which the was fentenced. She publickly declared herfelf willing to recant; the acknowledged the illufion of those revelations which the church had rejected; and she promifed never more to maintain them. Her fentence was then mitigated : She was condemned to perpetual imprifonment, and to be fed during life on bread and water.

> ENOUGH was now done to fulfill all political views, and to convince both the French and the English, that the opinion of divine influence, which had fo much encouraged the one and daunted the other, was entirely without foundation. But the barbarous vengeance of Joan's enemies was not fatisfied with this victory. Sufpecting, that the female drefs, which fhe had now confented to wear, was difagreeable to her, they purpofely placed in her apartment a fuit of man's apparel; and watched for the effect of that temptation upon her. On the fight of a drefs, in which the had acquired fo much renown, and which, the once believed, believed, fhe wore by the particular appointment of heaven, all her former ideas Chap. XX. and paffions revived; and the ventured in her folitude to cloath herfelf again in 1431. / the forbidden garment. Her infidious enemies caught her in that fituation : Her fault was interpreted to be no lefs than a relapfe into herefy : No recantation would now fuffice, and no pardon could be granted her. She was condemned to be burned in the market place of Roüen; and the infamous fentence was accordingly executed. This admirable heroine, to whom the more generous fu- the maid of perstition of the antients would have erected altars, was, on pretence of he-Orleans. refy and magic, delivered over alive to the flames, and expiated by that dread-14th June. ful punishment the fignal fervices, which she had rendered to her prince and to her native country.

THE affairs of the English, far from being advanced by this execution, went every day more and more to decay : The great abilities of the regent were unable to refift the ftrong inclination, which had feized the French to return under the obedience of their rightful fovereign, and which that act of cruelty was ill fitted to remove. Chartres was furprized by a ftratagem of the count de Dunois : A body of the English, under lord Willoughby, was defeated at St. Celerin upon the Sarte * : The fair in the fuburbs of Caen, feated in the midst of the English territories, was pillaged by de Lore, a French captain of reputation: The duke of Bedford himfelf was obliged by Dunois to raife the fiege of Lagni with fome difhonour : And all these misfortunes, tho' light, yet being continued and uninterrupted, brought difcredit to the English, and menaced them with an approaching loss of all their conquests. But the chief detriment, which the regent fustained, was by the death of his dutchefs, who had hitherto preferved fome appearance of friendship between him and her brother, the duke of Burgundy +: And his marriage foon afterwards, with Jaqueline of Luxembourg, was the beginning of a breach between them 1. Philip complained, that the regent had never had the civility to inform him of his intentions, and that fo fudden a marriage was a flight on his fifter's memory. The cardinal of Winchefter mediated a reconciliation between these princes, and brought them both to St. Omers for that purpose. The duke of Bedford here expected the first visit both as he was fon, brother, and uncle to a King, and because he had already made fuch advances as to come into the duke of Burgundy's territories, in order to have an interview with him: But Philip, proud of his great power and independant dominions, refused to pay this compliment to the Regent : And the two princes, * Monfirelet, vol. 2. p. 100. + Monstrelet, vol. 2. p. 87. Grafton, p 554.

1 Stowe, p. 373.

Yy2

unable 14320

Chap. XX.

348

unable to adjust the ceremonial, parted without seeing each other *. A very bad prognostic of their cordial intentions to renew past friendship and amity !

NOTHING could be more repugnant to the interests of the house of Burgundy, than to unite the crowns of France and England on the fame head; an event, which, had it taken place, would have reduced the duke to the rank of a petty prince, and have rendered his fituation entirely dependant and precarious. The title also to the crown of France, which, after the failure of the elder branches, might accrue to the duke or his pofterity, had been facrificed by the treaty of Troye; and ftrangers and enemies were thereby irrevocably fixed upon the throne. Revenge alone had carried Philip into thefe impolitic measures; and a point of honour had hitherto induced him to maintain them. But as it is the nature of paffion gradually to decay; while the fense of interest maintains an eternal influence and authority; the duke had, for fome years, appeared fenfibly to relent in his animofity against Charles, and to hearken willingly to the apologies made by that prince for the murder of the late duke of Burgundy. His extreme youth was pleaded in his favour; his incapacity to judge for himfelf; the afcendant gained over him by his minifters; and his inability to refent a deed, which, without his knowlege, had been perpetrated by those under whose guidance he was then placed. The more to gratify the pride of Philip, the King of France had banished from his court and prefence Tanegui de Chatel, and all those concerned in that affaffination; and had offered to make any other atonement, which could be required of him. The ills, which Charles had already fuffered, had tended to gratify the duke's revenge; the miferies to which France had been for long exposed, had begun to move his compassion; and the cries of all Europe admonifhed him, that his refeatment, which might hitherto be deemed pious, would, if carried farther, be univerfally condemned as barbarous and unrelenting. While the duke was in this difpolition, every difgult, which he received from England, made a double impression upon him; the entreaties of the count de Richemont and the duke of Bourbon, who had married his two fifters, had weight; and he determined finally to unite himfelf to the royal family of France, from which his own was defcended. For this purpofe, a congrefs was appointed at Arras under the mediation of deputies from the Pope and the council of Bafle: The duke of Burgundy came thither in perfon: The duke of Bourbon, the count de Richemont and other perfons of high rank, appeared as ambaffadors from France: And the English having also been invited to attend, the cardinal of Winchefter, the archbifhop of York, and others, received from the protector . and council a commission for that purpose +.

* Monstrelet, vol. 2. p. 90. Grafton, p. 561. + Monstrelet, vol. 2. p. 110.

Defection of the duke of Burgundy.

1435.

THE

THE conferences were held in the Abbey of St. Vaaft; and began with difcuffing the propofals of the two crowns, which were fo wide of each other as to admit of no hopes of accommodation. England offered, that each party fhould remain in poffeffion of what they had at prefent, after making fome equal exchanges for mutual convenience: France offered to cede Normandy with Guienne, but both of them loaded with the usual homage and vaffalage to the crown. As the claims of England upon France were univerfally unpopular in Europe; the mediators declared the offers of Charles very reafonable; and the cardinal of Winchefter, with the English ambaffadors, immediately left the congress. There remained nothing but to difcufs the mutual pretensions of Charles and Philip. These were easily adjusted : The vaffal was in a fituation to give law to his superior; and he exacted conditions, which, had it not been for the prefent neceffity, would have been deemed, to the last degree, dishonourable and difadvantageous to the crown of France. Belides making repeated atonements and acknowledgements for the murder of the duke of Burgundy, Charles was obliged to cede. all the towns of Picardy which lay between the Somme and the Low Countries ; he yielded feveral other territories; he agreed, that thefe and all the other dominions of Philip fhould be held by him, during his life-time, without doing any homage or swearing fealty to the prefent King; and he freed his subjects from all obligations to allegiance, if ever he infringed this treaty *. Such were the conditions, upon which France purchased the friendship of the duke of Burgundy.

THE duke fent over a herald to England with a letter, in which he notified the conclution of the treaty of Arras, and apologized for his departure from that of Troye. The council received the herald with great coldnefs: They even aftigned him his lodgings in a fhoemaker's houfe, by way of infult; and the populace were fo incenfed, that, if the duke of Glocefter had not given him guards, his life would have been exposed to danger, when he appeared in the ftreets. The Flemings, and other fubjects of Philip, were infulted, and fome of them murdered by the Londoners; and every thing feemed to tend towards a rupture between the two nations \ddagger . Thefe violences were not difagreeable to the duke of Burgundy; as they afforded him a pretence for the farther meafures, which he intended to take againft the English, whom he now regarded as implacable and dangerous enemies.

A few days after the duke of Bedford received intelligence of this treaty, 14th Septr. fo fatal to the interests of England, he died at Roüen; a prince of great Death of the abilities, and of many virtues; and whose memory, except from the barbarous ford.

* Monstrelet, vol. 2. p. 112. Grafton, p. 565.

612

execution.

Chap. XX. 1435. August

3.49

[†] Monstrelet, vol. 2. p. 120. Holingshed, p. 612,

1435.

1436.

350

Chap. XX. execution of the maid of Orleans, was unfullied by any confiderable blemifh. Ifabella, Queen of France, died a little before him, defpifed by the English, detefted by the French, and reduced in her latter years to regard with an unnatural horror, the progrefs and fucceffes of her own fon, in recovering poffeffion of his kingdom. This period was also fignalized by the death of the earl of Arundel *, a great English general, who, tho' he commanded three thousand men, was foiled by Xaintrailles at the head of fix hundred, and foon after expired of the wounds which he received in the action.

THE violent factions, which prevailed in the court of England, between the duke of Glocester and the cardinal of Winchester, prevented the English from taking the proper measures for repairing these multiplied loss; and threw all their affairs into confusion. The popularity of the duke and his near relation to the crown, gave him advantages in the conteft, which he often loft by his open and unguarded temper, unfit to ftruggle with the politic and interested spirit of his rival. The balance, mean-while, of thefe parties, kept every thing in fufpence: Foreign affairs were much neglected: And tho' the duke of York, fon to that earl of Cambridge who was executed in the beginning of the laft reign, was appointed fucceffor to the duke of Bedford, it was feven months before his commission passed the feals; and the English remained to long in an enemy's country, without a proper head or governor.

Decline of the English in France.

THE new governor on his arrival found the capital already loft. The Parifians had always been more attached to the Burgundian than to the English interest; and after the conclusion of the treaty of Arras, their affections, without any farther controul, univerfally led them to return to their allegiance under their native fovereign. The conftable, together with Lile-Adam, the fame perfon who had before put Paris into the hands of the duke of Burgundy, was introduced in the night time by intelligence with the citizens: The lord Willoughby, who commanded only a fmall garrifon of 15,00 men, was expelled: That nobleman difcovered great valour and prefence of mind on the occafion; but unable to guard fo large a place against fuch multitudes, he retired into the Baftile, and being there invefted, delivered up the place, and was contented to flipulate for the fafe retreat of his troops into Normandy +.

In the fame feafon, the duke of Burgundy took openly part against England, and commenced hostilities by the fiege of Calais, the only place which now gave the English any fure hold of France, and still rendered them dangerous. As he was beloved among his own fubjects, and had acquired the epithet of Good, from his popular qualities, he was able to intereft all the inhabitants of the Low-countries in the fuccefs of this enterprize; and he invefted that place with an army, very formidable from its numbers, but without experience, difcipline, or military fpirit *. On the first alarm of this fiege, the duke of Glocester affembled some forces, fent a defiance to Philip, and challenged him to wait the event of a battle, which he promifed to give, as foon as the wind would permit him to reach Calais. The warlike genius of the English had at that time rendered them terrible to all the northern parts of Europe; much more to the Flemings, who were more expert in manufactures, than in arms; and the duke of Burgundy, being already foiled in fome attempts before Calais, and observing the discontent and terror of his own army, thought proper to raife the fiege, and to retreat into his own ter- 26th June! ritories, before the arrival of the enemy +.

+ Monstrelet, vol. 2. p. 127. Graf-* Monftrelet, vol. 2. p. 105. Holingshed, p. 610. ton, p. 568.

THE English were still masters of many fine provinces in France; but retained poffestion, more by the extreme weakness of Charles, than by the ftrength of their own garrifons or the force of their armies. Nothing indeed can be more furprizing than the feeble efforts made, during the courfe of feveral years, by thefe two potent nations against each other; while the one ftruggled for independancy, and the other afpired to a total conqueft of its rival. The general want of induftry, commerce, and police, in that age, had rendered all the European nations, and France and England no lefs than the others, unfit for bearing the burthens of war, when it was prolonged beyond one feafon; and the continuance of hoftilities had, long ere this time, exhausted the force and patience of both these kingdoms. Scarce could the appearance of an army be brought into the field on either fide; and all the operations confifted in the furprize of places, in the rencounter of detached parties, and in incursions upon the open country; which were performed by fmall bodies affembled on a fudden from the neighbouring garrifons. In this method of conducting the war, the French King had much the advantage : The affections of the people were entirely on his fide: Intelligence was early brought him of the flate and motions of the enemy : The inhabitants were ready to join in any attempts against the garrifons: And thus ground was continually, tho' flowly, gained against the English. The duke of York, who was a prince of ability, ftruggled against these difficulties during the course of five years; and being affifted by the valour of lord Talbot, foon after created earl of Shrewibury, he performed actions which acquired him honour, but merit not the attention of pofterity. It would have been well, had this feeble war, in fparing the blood of * Monstrelet, vol. 2. p. 126, 130, 132. Holingshed, p. 613. Grafton, p. 571. + Monftrelet, vol. 2. p. 136. Holingshed, p. 614. the:

Chap. XX.

1436.

Chap. XX.

1436.

1440.

352

the people, prevented likewife all other oppreffions; and had the fury of men, which reason and justice cannot reftrain, thus happily received a check from their impotence and inability. But the French and English, tho' they exerted fuch fmall force, were, however, ftretching beyond their refources, which were ftill fmaller; and the troops, deftitute of pay, were obliged to fubfift by plundering and oppreffing the country, both of friends and enemies. The fields in all the north of France, which was the scene of war, were laid waste and left uncultivated *. The cities were gradually depopulated, not by the blood fpilt in war, but by the more deftructive pillage of the garrifons : And both parties, weary of hoftilities, which decided nothing, feemed at last defirous of peace, and they fet on foot negotiations for that purpose. But the proposals which came from France and from England, were still fo wide of each other, that all hopes of accommodation immediately vanished. The English ambassadors demanded restitution of all the provinces which had once been annexed to England, together with the final ceffion of Calais and its diffrict; and required the poffeffion of these extensive territories without the burthen of any fealty or homage on the part of their prince : The French offered only part of Guienne, part of Normandy, and Calais, loaded with the usual burthens. It appeared in vain to continue the negociation, while there was fo little prospect of agreement. The English were still too haughty to stoop from the vaft hopes, which they had formerly entertained, and to accept of terms more fuitable to the prefent condition of the two kingdoms.

THE duke of York foon after refigned his government to the earl of Warwic, a nobleman of reputation, whom death prevented from a long enjoyment of his dignity. The duke, upon the demife of this nobleman, returned to his charge, and during his administration a truce was concluded between the King of England and the duke of Burgundy, which had become neceffary for the commercial interest of their subjects +. The war with France continued in the fame languid and feeble state as before.

THE captivity of five princes of the blood, taken prifoners in the battle of Azincour, was a confiderable advantage which England long enjoyed above its enemy; but this fuperiority was now entirely loft. Some of thefe princes had died; fome had been ranfomed for fums of money; and the duke of Orleans, the most powerful among them, was the last who remained in the hands of the English. He offered the fum of 54,000 nobles ‡ for his liberty; and when

* Grafton, p. 562. † Grafton, p. 573. ‡ Rymer, vol. 10. p. 764, 776, 782, 795. 796. This fum was equal to 36,000 pounds fterling of our prefent money. A fubfidy of a tenth and fifteenth was fixed by Edward III. at 29,000 pounds, that is 58,000 of our prefent money. The parisament granted only one fubfidy during the courfe of feven years, from 1437 to 1444. this this propofal was laid before the council of England, as every queftion was there Chap. XX. an object of faction, the party of the duke of Glocester, and that of the cardinal of Winchefter, were divided in their fentiments with regard to it. The duke reminded the council of the dying advice of the late King, that none of these prifoners should on any account be released, till his fon was of sufficient age to hold, himfelf, the reins of government. The cardinal infifted on the greatness of the fum profered, which in reality was near equal to two thirds of all the extraordinary fupplies, that the parliament, during the course of feven years, granted for the fupport of the war. And he added, that the release of this prince was more likely to be advantageous than prejudicial to the English interests ; by filling the court of France with faction, and giving a head to those numerous malecontents, whom Charles was at prefent able with great difficulty to reftrain. The cardinal's party, as usual, prevailed : The duke of Orleans was released, after a melancholy captivity of twenty-five years *: And the duke of Burgundy, as a pledge of his entire reconciliation with the family of Orleans, facilitated to that prince the payment of his ranfom. It must be confessed, that the princes and nobility in those ages, went to war on very difadvantageous terms. If they were taken prisoners, they either remained in captivity during life, or purchased their liberty at the price which the victors were pleafed to impofe, and which often reduced their families to beggary and want.

THE fentiments of the cardinal, fome time after, prevailed in another point of ftill greater moment. That prelate had always encouraged every propofal of accommodation with France; and had reprefented the utter impoffibility, in the present circumstances, of pushing farther the conquests in that kingdom, and the great difficulty of even maintaining those which were already made. He infifted on the extreme reluctance of the parliament to grant fupplies; the diforders in which the English affairs in Normandy were involved; the daily progress made by the French King; and the advantage of ftopping his hand by a temporary accommodation, which might leave room for time and accidents to operate in favour of the English. The duke of Glocefter, high spirited and haughty, and educated in the lofty pretensions, which the first fuccesses of his two brothers had rendered familiar to him, could not yet be induced to relinquish all hopes of prevailing over France; much lefs, could he fee with patience, his own opinion thwarted and rejected by the influence of his rival in the English council. But notwithstanding his opposition, the earl of Suffolk, a nobleman who always adhered to the cardinal's party, was dispatched to Tours, in order to negotiate with 1440.

VOL: II.

* Grafton, p. 578. Zz

353

1443.

the

Chap. XX. 1443. 28th May. Truce with France.

Margaret of Anjou.

354

the French ministers. It was found impossible to adjust the terms of a lasting peace; but a truce for twenty-two months was concluded, which left every thing on the prefent footing between the parties. The numerous diforders, under which the French government laboured, and which time alone could remedy, induced Charles to affent to this truce; and the fame motives engaged him afterwards to prolong it *. But Suffolk, not content with executing this object of his commiffion, proceeded also to finish another business, which seems rather to have been implied than included in the powers, which had been granted him +.

In proportion as Henry advanced in years, his character became fully known in the court, and was no longer ambiguous to either faction. Of the moft harmlefs, inoffenfive, fimple manners; but of the most flender capacity; he was fitted, both by the foftnefs of his temper, and the weaknefs of his underftanding, to be perpetually governed by those who furrounded him; and it was easy to forefee, that his reign would prove a perpetual minority. As he had now reached the twenty-third year of his age, it was natural to think of chooling him a queen ; and each party was ambitious of having him receive one from their hand; as it was probable, that this circumftance would decide forever the victory between them. The duke of Glocester proposed a daughter of the count d'Armagnac; but had not credit to effectuate his purpofe. The cardinal and his friends had cast their eye on Margaret of Anjou, daughter of Regnier, titular King of Sicily, Naples, and Jerufalem, defcended from the count of Anjou, brother of Charles V. who had left these magnificent titles, but without any real power or poffessions, to his pofterity. This prince's herfelf was the most accomplished of her age both in body and mind; and feemed to poffefs those qualities, which would equally. qualify her to acquire the afcendant over Henry, and to fupply all his defects and weakneffes. Of a malculine, courageous spirit, of an enterprizing temper, endowed with folidity as well as vivacity of underftanding, the had not been able to ... conceal these great talents even in the privacy of her father's family; and it was reasonable to expect, that, when the thould mount the throne, they would break. out with still superior lustre. The earl of Suffolk, therefore, in concert with his affociates of the English council, made propofals of marriage to Margaret, which were accepted. But this nobleman, befides pre-occupying Margaret's favour by. being the chief means of her advancement, endeavoured to ingratiate himfelf with Marriage of her and her family, by very extraordinary conceffions : Tho' the princefs brought the King with no dowry with her, he ventured of himfelf, without any direct authority from the council, but probably with the allowance of the cardinal, and the ruling members, to engage by a fecret article, that the province of Maine, which was at that time

* Rymer, vol. 11. p. 101, 108, 206, 214.

+ Rymer, vol. 11. p. 53.

NRY VI. E H

time in the hands of the English, should be delivered up to Charles of Anjou Chap. XX. 1443. her uncle *, who was prime minister and favorite of the French King, and who had already received from his mafter the grant of that province as his appanage.

THE treaty of marriage was ratified in England : Suffolk obtained first the title of marquis, then that of duke; and even received the thanks of parliament, for his fervices in concluding it +. The princefs fell immediately into clofe connexions with the cardinal and his party, the dukes of Somerfet, Suffolk, and Buckingham 1; who, fortified by her powerful friendship, refolved on the final ruin of the duke of Glocester.

THIS generous prince, worfted in all court intrigues, for which his temper was not fuited, but poffeffing, in a high degree, the favour of the public, had already received from his rivals a most cruel mortification, which he had hitherto born patiently, but which it was impossible, that a perfon of his spirit and humanity could ever forgive. His dutchefs, the daughter of Reginald, lord Cobham, had been accused of the crime of witchcraft, and it was pretended, that a waxen figure of the King was found in her poffeffion, which the and her affociates, fir Roger Bolingbroke a prieft, and one Margery Jordan of Eye, melted in a magical manner before a flow fire, with an intention of making Henry's force and vigour wafte away, by like infenfible degrees. The accufation was well calculated to affect the weak and credulous mind of the King, and to gain belief in an ignorant age; and the dutchefs was brought to trial with her confederates. The nature of this crime, fo opposite to all common fenfe, feems always to exempt the accufers from obferving the rules of common fenfe in their evidence : The prifoners were pronounced guilty; the dutchefs was condemned to do public penance, and to fuffer perpetual impriforment, and the others were executed §. But as thefe violent proceedings were afcribed folely to the malice of the duke's enemies, the people, contrary to their usual practice on fuch occasions, acquitted the unhappy fufferers; and encreafed their efteem and affection towards a prince, who was thus exposed, without protection, to fuch mortal injuries.

THESE fentiments of the public made the cardinal of Winchefter and his party fenfible, that it was neceffary to deftroy a man, whofe popularity might become dangerous, and whole refentment they had fo much caule to apprehend. In order to effectuate their purpose, a parliament was summoned to meet, not at London, which was supposed to be too well affected to the duke, but at St. Edmondfbury, where they expected that he would lie entirely at mercy. As foon duke of Glocefter.

1 Holingshed, p. 626. § Stowe, * Grafion, p. 590. + Cotton, p. 630. p. 381. Holingshed, p. 622. Grafton, p. 587. Zz2 25

144.70

1447. 28th Feb.

Chap. XX. as he appeared, he was accused of treason, and thrown into prifon. He was foon after found dead in his bed *; and tho' it was pretended that his death was natural, and tho' his body, which was exposed to public view, bore no marks of outward injury, no one doubted that he had fallen a facrifice to the ven-Murder of the geance of his enemies. A trick, formerly practifed on Edward II. on Richard II: and on Thomas of Woodftock, duke of Glocefter, could deceive no body. The reafon of this violence feems not, that the ruling party apprehended his acquital in parliament on account of his innocence, which, in fuch times was feldom much regarded; but that they imagined his public trial and execution would have been more invidious than his private murder, which they pretended to deny. Some gentlemen of his retinue were afterwards tried for aiding him in his treafons, and were condemned to be hanged, drawn and quartered. They were hanged and cut down; but just as the executioner was proceeding to quarter them, their pardon was produced, and they were recovered to life +. The most barbarous kind of mercy, that can poffibly be imagined !

> THIS prince is faid to have received a more learned education than was ufual in his age, to have founded one of the first public libraries in England, and to have been a great patron of learned men. Among other advantages, which he reaped from this turn of mind, it tended much to cure him of credulity; of which the following inftance is given by Sir Thomas More. There was a man, who pretended, that, tho' he was born blind, he had recovered his fight by touching the shrine of St. Albans. The duke, happening foon after to pass that way, queftioned the man, and feeming to doubt of his fight, asked him the colour of feveral cloaks, worn by perfons in his retinue. The man told him very readily. You are a knave, cried the prince; bad you been born blind, you could not have diffinguished colours : And immediately ordered him to be put in the ftocks as an impoftor 1.

> THE cardinal of Winchefter died fix weeks after his nephew, whofe murder was univerfally afcribed to him as well as to the duke of Suffolk, and which, it is faid, gave him more remorfe in his last moments, than could naturally be expected from a man hardened, during the courfe of a long life, in falfhood and in politics. What fhare the Queen had in this guilt is uncertain; her ufual activity and spirit made the public conclude with some reason that the duke's enemies durst not have ventured on fuch a deed without her privity. But there happened foon after an event, of which she and her favourite, the duke of Suffolk, bore uncontestably the whole odium.

* Grafton, p. 597.

† Fabian Chron. anno 1447.

L

‡ Grafton, p. 597. THAT

THAT article of the marriage treaty, by which the province of Maine was to Chap. XX. be yielded to Charles of Anjou, the Queen's uncle, had probably been hitherto kept a fecret; and during the life-time of the duke of Glocefter, it would have been dangerous to venture on the execution of it. But as the court of France infifted ftrenuoufly on performance, orders were now difpatched, under Henry's hand, to Sir Francis Surienne, governor of Mans, commanding him to furrender that place to Charles of Anjou. Surienne, either queftioning the authenticity of the order, or regarding his government as his only fortune, refused compliance; and it became neceffary for a French army under the count de Dunois, to lay fiege to the city. The governor made as good a defence as his fituation could permit; but receiving no relief from Edmund duke of Somerfet, who was at that time governor of Normandy, he was at last obliged to capitulate, and to furrender not only Mans, but all the other fortreffes of that province, which was thus entirely alienated from the crown of England.

The bad effects of this measure flopped not here. Surienne, at the head of all his garrifons, amounting to 2500 men, retired into Normandy, in expectation of being taken into pay, and of being quartered in fome towns of that province. But Somerfet, who had no means of fubfifting fuch a multitude, and who was probably incenfed at Surienne's difobedience, refufed to admit him; and this adventurer, not daring to commit depredations on the territories either of the King of France or of England, marched into Brittany, feized the town of Fougeres, repaired the fortifications of Pontorfon and St. James de Beuvron, and fublifted his troops by the ravages, which he committed on all that province *. The duke of Brittany complained of this violence to the King of France, his liege lord: Charles remonstrated with the duke of Somerfet : That nobleman replied, that the injury was done without his privity, and that he had no authority over Surienne and his companions +. Tho' this answer might appear very fatisfactory to Charles, who had often felt feverely the licentious, independant fpirit of fuch mercenary foldiers, he never would admit the apology. He fill infified, that these plunderers should be recalled, and that reparation should be made to the duke of Brittany for all the damages, which they had committed : And in order to render an accommodation abfolutely impracticable, he made the effimation of damages amount to no lefs a fum than 1,600,000 crowns. He was fenfible of the fuperiority, which the prefent flate of his affairs gave him over England ; and he determined to take advantage of it.

1447.

1448.

357

* Monftrelet, vol. 3. p. 6.

+ Monstrelet, vol. 3. p. 7. Hollingshed, p. 629.

No

Chap. XX. 1448.

358

State of France.

1449. Renewal of France.

No fooner was the truce concluded between the two kingdoms, than Charles employed himfelf, with great induftry and judgment, in repairing those numberlefs ills, to which France, from the continuance of wars both foreign and domeftic, had fo long been exposed. He reftored the course of public juffice; he introduced order into the finances; he established discipline in his troops; he represed faction in his court; he revived the languid state of agriculture and the arts; and in the courfe of a few years, he rendered his kingdom flourishing within itfelf, and formidable to all its neighbours. Mean while, affairs in England had taken a very different turn. The court was divided into parties, which were enraged against each other : The people were discontented with the government : Conquests in France, which were an object more of glory than of interest, were overlooked amidit domestic incidents, which engroffed all mens attention : The governor of Normandy, ill supplied with money, was obliged to difmifs the greater part of his troops, and to allow the fortifications of the towns and caftles to fall into difrepair : And the nobility and people of that province had, during the open communication with France, enjoyed frequent opportunities of renewing connexions with their antient mafter, and of concerting the means for expelling the English. The occasion therefore feemed favourable to Charles for breaking the truce; and Normandy was at once invaded by four powerful arthe war with mies; one commanded by the King himfelf; a fecond by the duke of Brittany; a third by the duke of Alençon; and a fourth by the count de Dunois. The places opened their gates almost as foon as the French appeared before them : Verneüil, Nogent, Chateau Gaillard, Ponteau de mer, Gifors, Mante, Vernon, Argentan, Lifieux, Fecamp, Coutances, Belefme, Pont de l'Arche, fell in an inftant into the hands of the enemy : The duke of Somerfet, fo far from having an army, which could take the field, and relieve these places, was not able to fupply them with the neceffary garrifons and provisions: He retired with the few troops, of which he was master, into Rouen; and thought it fufficient, if, till the arrival of fuccours from England, he could fave that capital from the general fate of the province. The King of France, at the head of a formidable army, fifty thousand ftrong, prefented himself before the gates : The dangerous example of revolt had infected the inhabitants, and they called aloud for a capitulation. Somerfet, unable to refift at once both the enemies within and from without, retired with his garrifon into the palace and caffle ; which, being places not tenable, he was obliged to furrender : He purchased a retreat to Harsleur by the payment of 56,000 crowns, by engaging to furrender Arques, Tancarville, Caudebec, Honfleur, and other places in the higher Normandy, and by delivering 3

4th Nov.

ing hoftages for the performance of these articles *. The governor of Honfleur Chap. XX. refused to obey his orders; upon which, the earl of Shrewsbury, who was one of the hoftages, was detained prifoner; and the English were thus deprived of the only general, capable of recovering them from their prefent diffreffed fituation. Harfleur made a better defence under Sir Thomas Curfon, the governor; but was finally obliged to open its gates to the count de Dunois. Succours at last appeared from England under Sir Thomas Kyriel, and landed at Cherbourg: But these came very late, amounted only to 4000 men, and were foon after put to rout at Fourmigni by the count de Clermont +. This battle, or rather fkirmish, was the only action fought by the English for the defence of their dominions in France, which they had purchased at such an expence of blood and treasure. Somerset, shut up in Caen without any prospect of relief, found it neceffary to capitulate: Falaife opened its gates, on condition that the earl of Shrewfbury should be reftored to liberty : And Cherbourg, the last place of Normandy, which remained in the hands of the English, being delivered up, the conquest of that important province was finished in a twelvemonth by Charles, to the infinite joy of the inhabitants and of his whole kingdom ‡.

A LIKE rapid fuccels attended the French arms in Guienne; tho' the inhabitants of that province were, from long cuftom, better inclined to the English government. The count de Dunois was dispatched thither, and met with no refistance in the field, and very little from the towns. Great improvements had The English been made, during this age, in the structure and management of artillery, and Erance, none in fortification; and the art of defence was by that means more unequal, than either before or fince, to the art of attack. After all the fmall places about Bourdeaux were reduced, that city agreed to fubmit, if not relieved by a certain time; and as no one in England thought ferioufly of these diffant concerns, no relief appeared; the place furrendered; and Bayonne being taken foon after, this whole province, which had remained united to England, fince the acceffion of Henry II. was, after a period of three centuries, finally swallowed up by the French monarchy.

THO' no peace nor truce was concluded between France and England, the war was in a manner at an end. The English, torn in pieces by the civil diffenfions which enfued, made but one feeble effort more for the recovery of Guienne :: And Charles, occupied at home, in regulating the government, and fencing, * Monstrelet, vol. 3. p. 21. Grafton, p. 643. + Holingsted, p. 631.

‡ Grafton, p. 646.

againft

1450.

Chap. XX. 1450.

against the intrigues of his factious son, Lewis the Dauphin, scarce ever attempted to invade them in their island, or to retaliate upon them, by availing himself of their intestine confusions.

C H A P. XXI.

Las boold to some H a CE as Nor R d Y for VI. and it success

Claim of the duke of York to the crown—The earl of Warwic— Impeachment of the duke of Suffolk—His banishment—and death —Popular insurrection—The parties of York and Lancaster— First armament of the duke of York—First battle of St. Albans— Battle of Blore-beath—of Northampton—A parliament—Battle of Wakefield—Death of the duke of York—Battle of Mortimer's Cross—Second Battle of St. Albans—Edward IV. assures the crown—Miscellaneous transactions of this reign.

Chap. XXI. 1450.

A WEAK prince, feated on the throne of England, had never failed, however gentle and innocent, to be infefted with faction, difcontent, rebellion, and civil commotions; and as the incapacity of Henry appeared every day in a fuller light, thefe dangerous confequences began, from paft experience, to be univerfally and juftly apprehended. Men alfo of unquiet fpirits, no longer employed in foreign wars, whence they were now excluded by the fituation of the neighbouring flates, were the more likely to excite inteftine diforders, and by their emulation, rivalfhip, and animofities, to tear the bowels of their native country. But tho' thefe caufes alone were fufficient to breed confufion, there concurred another circumflance of the moft dangerous nature: A pretender to the crown appeared. The title itfelf of the weak prince, who enjoyed the name of fovereignty, was difputed: And the Englifh were now to pay the fevere, tho' late penalty, of their turbulence againft Richard II. and of their levity in violating, without any neceffity or juft reafon, the lineal fucceffion of their monarchs.

ALL

ALL the males of the house of Mortimer were extinct ; but Anne, the fifter Chap. XXI. of the last earl of Marche, having espoufed the earl of Cambridge, beheaded in Claim of the the reign of Henry V. had transmitted her latent, but not yet forgotten claim to duke of York ker fon, Richard, duke of York. This prince, thus defcended by his mother to the crown. from Philippa, only daughter of the duke of Clarence, fecond fon of Edward III. flood plainly in the order of fucceffion before the King, who derived his defcent from the duke of Lancaster, third fon of that monarch; and that claim could not, in many refpects, have fallen into more dangerous hands than those of the duke of York. Richard was a man of valour and abilities, of a prudent conduct and mild difpolitions: He had enjoyed an opportunity of difplaying these virtues in his government of France: And tho' recalled from that command by the intrigues and fuperior interest of the duke of Somerfet, he had been fent to suppress a rebellion in Ireland; had succeeded much better in that enterprize than his rival in the defence of Normandy; and had even been able to attach to his perfon and family, the whole Irish nation, whom he was fent to fubdue *. In the right of his father, he bore the rank of first prince of the blood ; and by this station, he gave a lustre to his title derived from the family of Mortimer, which, tho' of great nobility, was equaled by other families in the kingdom, and had been eclipfed by the royal defcent of the houfe of Lancafter. He possessed an immense fortune from the union of so many successions, those of Cambridge and York on the one hand, with those of Mortimer on the other : Which last inheritance had before been augmented by an union of the effates of Clarence and Ulfter, with the patrimonial poffeffions of the family of Marche. The alliances too of Richard, in marrying the daughter of Ralph Nevil, earl of Weftmoreland, had very widely extended his interest among the nobility, and had procured him many connexions in that formidable order.

THE family of Nevil was perhaps at this time the moft potent, both from their opulent poffeffions and from the characters of the men, that has ever appeared in England. For befides the earl of Weftmoreland, the lords Latimer, Fauconbridge, and Abergavenny; the earls of Salifbury and Warwic were of that family, and were of themfelves, on many accounts, the greatest noblemen of the kingdom. The earl of Salifbury, brother in law to the duke of York, was the eldeft fon by a fecond marriage of the earl of Weftmoreland; and inherited by his wife, daughter and heir of Montacute, earl of Salifbury, killed before Orleans, the poffeffions and title of that great family. His eldeft fon, Richard, had married Anne, the daughter and heir of Beauchamp, earl of Warwic, who died governor of France; and by that alliance he enjoyed the poffeffions, and had

VOL. II.

* Stowe, p. 387. 3 A acquir-

1450: The carl of Warwic.

Chap. XXI. acquired the title of that other family, one of the most opulent, most antient; and most illustrious of the kingdom. The perfonal qualities also of these two earls, efpecially of Warwic, enhanced the splendor of their nobility, and encreafed their influence over the people. This latter nobleman, commonly known, from the fubfequent events, by the appellation of the King-maker, had diftinguished himself, by his gallantry in the field, by the hospitality of his table, by the magnificence, and still more by the generofity of his expence, and by the spirited and bold manner, which attended him in all his actions. The undefigning; frankness and openness of his character rendered his conquest over mens affections. the more certain and infallible : His prefents were regarded as fure testimonies. of efteem and friendship; and his professions as the overflowings of his genuine fentiments. No less than 30,000 people are faid to have daily lived at his board. in the different manors and caftles which he poffeffed in England : The military men, allured by his munificence and hospitality, as well as by his bravery, were zealoufly attached to his interefts : The people in general bore him an unlimited affection: His numerous retainers were more devoted to his will, than to the prince or to the laws: And he was the greatest, as well as the last, of those mighty barons, who formerly over-awed the Crown, and rendered the people incapable of any regular fystem of civil government.

> But the duke of York, befides the family of Nevil, had many other partizans among the great nobility. Courtney, earl of Devonshire, descended from the royal blood of France, was attached to his interefts : Moubray, duke of Norfolk, from his hereditary hatred to the family of Lancaster, had embraced the fame party: And the difcontents, which univerfally prevailed among the people, rendered every combination of the great the more dangerous to the established government.

> Tho' the people were never willing to grant the supplies neceffary for keeping; poffeffion of the conquered provinces in France, they repined extremely at the lofs of these boasted acquisitions; and fancied, because a sudden irruption could make conquests, that, without steddy counfels and an uniform expence, it was poffible to maintain them. The voluntary ceffion of Maine to the queen's uncle, had made them fuspect treachery in the loss of Normandy and Guienne. They still confidered Margaret as a French woman and a latent enemy of the kingdom. And when they faw her father and all her relations active in promoting the fuccefs of the French, they could not be perfuaded, that fhe, who was all powerful in the English council, would very zealously oppose them in their enterprizes.

> > BUT

362

-Tupon

ENRY VI. H

But the most fatal blow, which was given to the popularity of the crown and Chap XXI. to the interests of the house of Lancaster, was by the assafisation of the virtuous duke of Glocefter, whole character, had he been alive, would have kept in awe the partizans of York, but whofe memory, being extremely cherisched by the people, ferved to throw an infinite odium on all his murderers. By this event, the reigning family fuffered a double prejudice : It was deprived of its firmeft fupport; and it was loaded with all the infamy of that imprudent and barbarous execution.

As the duke of Suffolk was known to have had an active hand in this crime, he partook deeply of the hatred, which attended it; and the clamours, which neceffarily role against him, as prime minister and declared favourite of the queen, were thereby augmented to a ten-fold pitch, and became abfolutely The great nobility could ill brook to fee a fubject exalted uncontroleable. above them; much more one who was only great grandfon to a merchant, and who was of a birth fo much inferior to theirs. The people complained of his arbitrary measures; which were, in fome degree, a neceffary confequence of the irregular power then posseffed by the prince, but which the least disaffection easily magnified into tyranny. The immense acquisitions, which he daily made, were the object of envy; and as they were made at the expence of the crown, which was itfelf reduced to the most scandalous poverty, they appeared on that account, to all indifferent perfons, the more exceptionable and invidious.

THE revenues of the crown, which had long been difproportioned to its power and dignity, had been extremely dilapidated during the minority of Henry *; both by the rapacity of the courtiers, which the King's uncles could not controul, and by the neceffary expences of the French war, which had always been fo ill supplied by the grants of parliament. The royal demesnes were diffipated, and at the fame time the King was loaded with a debt of 372,000 pounds, a fum fo immenfe, that the parliament could never think of discharging it. This unhappy fituation forced the ministers upon many arbitrary measures : The household itfelf could not be fupported without firetching to the utmost the right of purveyance, and rendering it a kind of univerfal robbery upon the people: The public clamour rofe high upon this occafion, and no one had the equity to make allowance for the neceffity of the King's fituation. Suffolk, once become odious, bore the blame of the whole; and every grievance in every part of the adminiftration was univerfally imputed to his tyranny and injuffice.

> * Cotton, p. 609. 3 A 2

THIS

1450.

THIS nobleman, fenfible of the public hatred under which he laboured, and Chap. XXI. 1450. Impeachment forseeing an attack from the commons, endeavoured to overawe his enemies, by of the duke of boldly prefenting himfelf to the charge, and by infifting upon his own innocence, Suffolk. and even upon his merits and those of his family in the public service. He role up in the houfe of peers; took notice of the clamours propagated againft him; and complained, that, after ferving the crown in thirty four campaigns, after flaying abroad feventeen years without once returning to his own country; after lofing a father and three brothers in the wars with France; after being himfelf a prifoner, and purchafing his liberty by a large ranfom; it fhould yet be fufpected, that he had been debauched from his allegiance by that enemy whom he had ever oppofed with fuch zeal and fortitude, and that he had betrayed his prince, who had rewarded his fervices by the highest honours and greatest offices, which it was in his power to confer *. This speech did not answer the purpose intended. The commons, rather the more provoked at his challenge, opened their charge against Suffolk, and fent up to the house of peers an accusation of high treason, divided into feveral articles. They infifted, that he had perfuaded the French King to invade England with an armed force, in order to depofe the King, to place on the throne his own fon, John de la Pole, whom he intended to marry to Margaret, the only daughter of the late John, duke of Somerfet, and to whom, he imagined, he would by that means acquire a title to the crown: That he had contributed to the release of the duke of Orleans, in hopes, that that prince would aid and affift King Charles in expelling the English from France, and recovering full poffeffion of his kingdom : That he had afterwards encouraged that King to make open war on Normandy and Guienne, and had promoted his conquefts by betraying the fecrets of England, and obstructing the fuccours propoled to be fent over to those provinces: And that he had, without any powers or commission, promised by treaty to deliver up the provinces of Maine to Charles of Anjou, and had accordingly delivered it up; a conceffion, which proved in the iffue the chief caufe of the lofs of Normandy +.

> It is evident, from a review of these articles, that the commons adopted without enquiry all the popular clamours against the duke of Suffolk, and charged him with crimes, of which none but the vulgar could feriously believe him guilty. Nothing can be more incredible, than that a nobleman of his rank and character could think of acquiring the crown to his family, and of deposing Henry by foreign force, and together with him, Margaret, his patron, a princes of fo much spirit and genetration. Suffolk appealed to many noblemen in the house,

> * Cotton, p. 641. † Cotton, p. 642. Hall, fol. 157. Holingsched, p. 631. Grafton, p. 607.

H E N R Y VI.

365

ner

1450.

who knew, that he had intended to marry his fon to one of the co-heirs of the earl Chap. XXI. of Warwic, and was difappointed in his defign only by the death of that lady : And he observed, that Margaret of Somerset could bring to her husband no title to the crown; because she herfelf was not so much as comprehended in the entail, fettled by act of parliament. It is eafy to account for the lofs of Normandy and Guienne from the fituation of affairs in the two kingdoms, without fuppoling any treachery in the English ministers; and it may fafely be affirmed, that greater vigour of council was requisite to defend them from the arms of Charles. VII. than to conquer them at first from his predecessor. It could never be the intereft of any English minister to betray and abandon these provinces; much lefs of one, who was fo well established in his master's favour, who enjoyed fuch high honours and ample poffeffions in his own country, who had nothing to dread but the effects of popular hatred, and who could never think, without the most extreme reluctance, of becoming a fugitive and exile in a foreign land. The only article, which carries any face of probability, is his engagement for the delivery of Maine to Charles of Anjou; but Suffolk maintained, with great appearance of truth, that this measure was known and confented to by feveral at the council board *; and it feems hard to afcribe to it, as is done by the parliament; the fublequent lofs of Normandy and expulsion of the English. Normandy lay open on every fide to the invafion of the French: Maine, an inland province. must foon after have fallen without any attack : And as the English possessed in other parts more fortreffes than they could garrifon or provide for, it feemed no bad policy to contract their force, and to render the defence practicable, by reducing it into fmaller compass.

THE commons were probably fensible, that this charge of treason against Suffolk would not bear a ftrict fcrutiny; and they therefore fent up, foon after, a new charge of mifdemeanours, which they also divided into feveral articles. They affirmed, among other imputations, that he had procured exorbitant grants from the crown, had embezzled the public money, had conferred offices on improper perfons, had perverted juffice by maintaining iniquitous caufes, and had procured pardons to notorious offenders +. The articles are moftly general; but are not improbable : And as Suffolk feems to have been a bad man and a bad minifter, it will not be rafh in us to think, that he was guilty, and that many of thefe articles could have been proved against him. The court was alarmed at the profecution of a favourite minister, who lay under fuch a load of popular prejudices; and an expedient was fallen upon to fave him from prefent ruin. The King fent for all the lords, spiritual and temporal, to his apartment: The prifo-

* Cotton, p. 643.

77

+ Cotton, p. 643.

1450.

366

His banishment

Chap. XX. ner was produced before them, and afked what he could fay in his own defence : He denied the charge; but fubmitted to the King's mercy : Henry expressed himfelf not to be fatisfied with regard to the first bill of treafons; but in confideration of the fecond of mifdemeanors, he declared, that, by virtue of Suffolk's own fubmiffion, not by any judicial authority, he banifhed him the kingdom during five years. The lords remained filent, but fo foon as they returned to their own house, they entered a protest, that this sentence should no wife infringe their privileges, and that if Suffolk had infifted upon his right, and had not fubmitted voluntarily to the King's orders, he was intitled to a trial by his peers in parliment.

> IT was easy to see, that these irregular proceedings were meant to favour Suffolk, and that, as he still possessed the Queen's confidence, he would, on the first favourable opportunity, be reftored to his country, and be re-instated in his former power and credit. A captain of a veffel was therefore employed by his enemies to intercept him in his paffage to France : He was feized near Dover; his head ftruck off on the fide of a long boat, and his body thrown into the fea*. No enquiry was made after the authors and accomplices of this atrocious act of violence.

> THE duke of Somerfet fucceeded to Suffolk's power in the ministry, and credit with the Queen ; and as he was the perfon, in whofe hands the French provinces were loft, the public, who judge always by the event, foon made him equally the object of their animolity and hatred. The duke of York was absent in Ireland during all thefe transactions; and however it might be fuspected, that his partizans had excited and supported the profecution of Suffolk, no immediate ground of complaint could, on that account, lie against him. But there happened foon after an incident, which rouzed the jealoufy of the court, and difcovered to them the extreme danger, to which they were exposed from the pretentions of that wife and popular prince.

THE humours of the people, fet afloat by the parliamentary impeachment, and by the fall of fo great a favourite as Suffolk, broke out in various commotions, Popular infur- which were foon suppressed; but there arose one in Kent, which was likely to have been attended with more dangerous consequences. A man of low condition, one John Cade, a native of Ireland, who had been obliged to fly into France for his crimes, observed on his return the discontents of the people; and he laid on them the foundation of projects, which were at first attended with furprizing fuccefs. He took the name of John Mortimer, intending, as is fuppofed, to pafs himfelf for a fon of that fir John Mortimer, who had been fentenced to death by

> * Hall, fol. 158. Hift. Croyland. contin. p. 525. Stowe, p. 388. Grafton, p. 610. parliament, 8

and death

rection.

parliament, and executed in the beginning of this reign, without any trial or evi- Chap. XX. dence, merely upon an indictment of high treason, given in against him *. On the first mention of that popular name, the common people of Kent, to the number of 20,000, flocked to Cade's standard; and he excited their zeal, by publifhing complaints against the numerous abuses of government, and demanding. redrefs of their grievances. The court, not yet fully fenfible of the danger, fent a small force against the rioters, under the command of fir Humphrey Stafford, who was defeated and flain in an action near Sevenoke +; and Cade, advancing; with his followers towards London, encamped on Black-heath. Tho' elated by his victory, he still maintained the appearance of moderation; and fending the court a very plaufible lift of grievances t, he promifed, that, when thefe were redreffed, and when lord Say, the treasurer, and Cromer, high sheriff of Kent, were punished for their malversations, he would immediately lay down his arms. The council, who observed, that nobody was willing to fight against men fo reafonable in their pretenfions, carried the King, for prefent fafety, to Kenilworth ; and the city immediately opened their gates to Cade, who maintained, during fome time, great order and discipline among his followers. He always led them out into the fields during the night-time ; and published severe edicts against plunder and violence of every kind : But being obliged, in order to gratify their malevolence against Say and Cromer, to put these ministers to death without a legal trial §; he found, that, after the commission of this crime, he was no longer mafter of their riotous difpolition, and that all his orders were neglected ||. They broke into a rich house, which they plundered; and the citizens, alarmed with this act of violence, flut their gates against them, and being feconded by a detachment of foldiers, fent them by lord Scales, governor of the tower, they repulfed the infurgents with great flaughter 4. The Kentishmen were fo difcouraged with this blow, that, upon receiving a general pardon from the primate then chancellor, they retreated towards Rochefter, and then difperfed. The pardon was foon after annulled, as being extorted by violence: A price was fet on Cade's head *, who was killed by one Iden, a gentleman of Suffex; and many of his followers were capitally punished for their rebellion.

* Stowe, p. 364. Cotton, p. 564. This author admires, that fuch a piece of injuffice fhould have been committed in peaceable times : He might have added, and by fuch virtuous princes as Bedford and Glocefler. But it is to be prefumed, that Mortimer was guilty ; tho' his condemnation was highly. irregular and illegal. The people had at this time a very feeble fenfe of law and a confliction; and power was very imperfectly reftrained by these limits. When the proceedings of a parliament were fo insegular, it is easy to imagine, that those of a king would be more fo. + Hall, fol. 159. § Grafton, p. 612. * Rymer, vol. 11. p. 275. || Hall, fol. 160. - 4 Hift. Croyl. contin. p. 526.

14500

367

IT

1450.

York.

368

Chap. XXI. IT was imagined by the court, that the duke of York had fecretly infligated Cade to this attempt, in order to make an experiment of the dispositions of the people towards his title and family *: And as the trial had fucceeded to his wifh, the ruling party had greater reafon than ever to apprehend the future confequences of his pretenfions. At the fame time, they heard that he intended to return from Ireland; and fearing, that he meant to bring an armed force along with him, they iffued orders, in the King's name, for opposing him, and for refusing him accefs into England +. But the duke difarmed his enemies by coming attended with no more than his ordinary retinue : The precautions of the ministers ferved only to shew him their jealousy and malignity against him : He was fensible, that his title, by being dangerous to the King, was also become dangerous to himfelf: He now faw the impossibility of remaining in his prefent fituation, and the neceffity of proceeding forward in support of his claim. His partizans, therefore, were inftructed to maintain in all companies, his right by fucceffion, and by the eftablished laws and constitution of the kingdom: These questions became every day more and more the fubject of conversation : The minds of men were infenfibly fharpened against each other by disputes, before they came to more dangerous extremities : And various topics were pleaded in fupport of the pretentions of each party.

THE partizans of the house of Lancaster maintained, that the' the exaltation The parties of Lancafter and of Henry IV. might at first be deemed fomewhat irregular, and could not be juftified by any of those principles, on which that prince chose to rest his title, it was yet founded on general confent, was a national act, and was derived from the voluntary approbation of a free people, who, being loofened from their allegiance by the tyranny of the preceding government, were moved by gratitude, as well as by a fense of public interest, to commit the sceptre into the hands of their deliverer : That even if that eftablishment were allowed to be at first invalid, it had acquired folidity by time, the only principle which ultimately gives authority to government, and removes those fcruples, which the irregular fteps, attending all revolutions, naturally excite in the minds of the people : That the right of fucceffion was a rule admitted only for general good, and for the maintenance of public order; and could never be pleaded to the overthrow of national tranguility, and the fubverfion of regular eftablifhments: That the principles of hberty, no lefs than the maxims of internal peace, were injured by these pretensions of the house of York; and if fo many re-iterated acts of the legislature, by which the crown was entailed on the prefent family, were now invalidated, the English nation must be confidered, not as a free people who could dispose of their own govern-

> * Cotton, p. 661. Stowe, p. 391. + Stowe, p. 394.

Y VI. HEN R

government, but as a troop of flaves, who were implicitly transmitted by fuc- Chap. XX. ceffion from one hand to another : That the nation was bound to allegiance under the house of Lancaster by moral, no less than by political duty; and were they to infringe those numerous oaths of fealty, which they had sworn to Henry and his numerous predeceffors, they would thenceforth be fo thrown loofe from all principles, that it would be found difficult ever after to fix and reftrain them : That the duke of York himfelf had frequently done homage to the King as his lawful fovereign, and had thereby, in the moft folemn manner, made an indirect renunciation of those claims, with which he now dared to difturb the tranquility of the public : That even tho' the violation of the rights of blood, made on the deposition of Richard, was perhaps rash and imprudent, it was now too late to remedy the mifchief; the danger of a difputed fuccession could no longer be obviated; the people, accuftomed to a government, which, in the hands of the late King, had been fo glorious, and in that of his predeceffor, fo prudent and falutary, would ftill afcribe a right to it; by caufing multiplied diforders, and by fhedding an inundation of blood, the advantage would only be obtained, of exchanging one pretender for another; and the house of York itself, if established on the throne, would, on the first opportunity, be exposed to those revolutions, which the giddy fpirit, excited in the people, gave fo much reafon to apprehend : And that tho' the prefent King enjoyed not the fhining talents, which had appeared in his father and grandfather, he might still have a fon, who should be endowed with them; he was himfelf eminent for the most harmlefs and inoffensive manners; and if active princes were dethroned on pretence of tyranny, and indolent ones on the plea of incapacity, there would thenceforth remain in the conftitution no fettled and eftablished rule of obedience to any fovereign.

THESE ftrong topics in favour of the house of Lancaster, were opposed by arguments no lefs convincing on the fide of the houfe of York. The partizans of this latter family afferted, that the maintenance of order in the fucceffion of princes, fo far from incroaching on the rights of the people, or invalidating their fundamental title to good government, was established only for the purposes of government, and ferved to prevent those numberless confusions, which must enfue, if no rule was followed but the uncertain and difputed views of prefent convenience and advantage: That the fame maxims, which enfured the public peace, were also falutary to national liberty; the privileges of the people could only be maintained by the observance of laws; and if no account was made of the rights of the fovereign, it could lefs be expected, that any regard would be paid to the property and freedom of the subject: That it was never too late to correct any permicious precedent; an unjuft establishment, the longer it stood, acquired the 3 B Vol. II. greater 1450.

Chap. XX. 1450.

370

greater fanction and validity; it could, with more appearance of reafon, be pleaded as an authority for a like injuffice; and the maintenance of it, inflead of favouring public tranquility, tended to disjoint every principle, by which human fociety was fupported : That ufurpers would be happy, if their prefent poffeffion of power, or their continuance for a few years, could convert them into legal princes; but nothing would be more miferable than the people, if all reftraints on violence and ambition were thus removed, and a full fcope given to the attempts of every turbulent innovator: That time indeed beftowed a folidity on government, whofe first foundation was the most infirm ; but it acquired a long courfe of time to operate this effect, and the total extinction of those claimants, whose title was built on the original principles of the conftitution : That the depolition of Richard, and the advancement of Henry IV. were not deliberate national acts; but the refult of the levity and violence of the people, and proceeded from those very defects in human nature, which the eftablishment of political fociety, and of an order in fucceffion, was calculated to prevent : That the fubfequent entails of the crown were a continuance of the fame violence and ufurpation; they were not ratified by the legislature, fince the confent of the rightful King was still wanting; and the acquiescence, first of the family of Mortimer, then of that of the family of York, proceeded from prefent neceffity, and implied no renunciation of their pretensions : That the reftoration of that order of fuccession, could not be confidered as a change, which familiarized the people to revolutions; but as a correction of former changes, which had itfelf encouraged the giddy fpirit of innovation, rebellion, and difobedience : And that as the original title of Lancaster ftood only, in the perfon of Henry IV. on prefent convenience, even this principle, unjustifiable as it was, when not supported by laws, and warranted by the conflitution, had now entirely gone over to the other fide; nor was there any comparison between a prince utterly unable to sway the scepter, and governed entirely by corrupt ministers, or by an imperious Queen, engaged in foreign and hostile interefts; and a prince of mature years, of approved wifdom and experience, a native of England, the lineal heir of the crown, who by his reftoration would replace every thing on their antient foundations.

So many plaufible arguments could be urged on both fides of this interefting queftion, that the people were extremely divided in their fentiments; and tho' the noblemen of greateft power and influence feem to have embraced the party of York, the oppofite caufe had the advantage of being fupported by the prefent laws, and by the immediate pofferfion of royal authority. There were alfo many great noblemen of the Lancastrian party, who ballanced the power of their antagonists; and kept the nation in fuspence between them. The earl of Northumberland berland adhered to the prefent government : The earl of Westmoreland, in spite Chap. XXI. of his connections with the duke of York, and with the family of Nevil, of which he was the head, was brought over to the fame party; and the whole north of England, the most warlike part of the kingdom, was, by means of these two potent noblemen, engaged warmly in the interefts of Lancaster. Edmund Beaufort, duke of Somerfet, and his brother Henry, were great supports of that cause; as were alfo Henry Holland, duke of Exeter, Stafford, duke of Buckingham, the earl of Shrewfbury, the lord Clifford, lord Dudley, lord Scales, lord Audley, and other noblemen.

WHILE the kingdom was in this fituation, it might naturally be expected, that fo many turbulent barons, poffeffed of fo much independant authority, would immediately have flown to arms, and have decided the quarrel, after their usual manner, by war and battle, under the standard of the contending princes. But there were ftill many caufes, which retarded thefe defperate extremities, and made a long train of faction, intrigue and cabal, precede the military operations. By the gradual progrefs of arts in England, as well as in other parts of Europe, the people were now become of fome confequence; laws were beginning to be respected by them; and it was requisite, by various pretences, previoufly to reconcile their minds to the overthrow of fuch an antient eftablishment as that of the house of Lancaster, ere their concurrence could reasonably be expected. The duke of York himfelf, the new claimant, was of a very moderate and cautious character, an enemy to violence, and inclined to truft rather to time and policy, than to fanguinary meafures, for the fuccefs of his pretenfions. The very imbecillity itfelf of Henry tended to keep the factions in sufpence, and made them fland long in awe of each other : It rendered the Lancastrian party unable to ftrike any violent blow against their enemies; it encouraged the Yorkifts to hope, that, after banifhing the King's minifters, and getting pofferfion of his perfon, they might gradually undermine his authority, and be able, without the perilous experiment of a civil war, to change the fucceffion, by parliamentary and legal authority.

THE difpolition, which appeared in a parliament, affembled foon after the arrival of the duke of York from Ireland, favoured these expectations, and both dif- 6th Nov. covered an unufual boldnefs in the commons, and were a proof of the general difcontents which prevailed against the administration. The lower house, without any previous enquiry or examination, without alledging any other caufe than common fame, ventured to prefent an addrefs against the duke of Somerset, the dutchefs of Suffolk, the bishop of Chefter, Sir John Sutton lord Dudley, and feveral 3 B 2 others

1451.

1450.

1451.

372

Chap. XXI. others of inferior rank ; and they prayed the King to remove them for ever from his perfon and councils, and to prohibit them from approaching within twelve miles of the court *. This was a violent attack, fomewhat arbitrary, and supported but by few precedents, against the ministry; yet the King durst not entirely and openly oppofe it : He replied, that, except the lords, he would banish all the others from court during a year, unless he had occasion for their affiftance in fuppreffing any rebellion. At the fame time, he rejected a bill, which had paffed both houses for attainting the late duke of Suffolk, and which difcovered a very general prejudice against the measures of the court.

The first armament of the duke of York.

1452.

THE duke of York, trufting to these symptoms, railed an army of 10,000 men, with which he marched towards London; demanding a reformation of the government, and the removal of the duke of Somerfet from all his power and authority +. He found unexpectedly the gates of the city thut against him; and on his retreating into Kent, he was followed by the King at the head of a fuperior. army; in which feveral of Richard's friends, particularly Salifbury and Warwic appeared; probably with a view of mediating between the parties, and of feconding, on occafion, the duke of York's pretenfions. A parley enfued ; Richard ftill infifted upon the removal of Somerfet, and his fubmitting to a trial in parliament: The court pretended to comply with his demand; and that nobleman was put under arreft : The duke of York was then perfuaded to pay his refpects to the King in his tent; and on repeating his charge against the duke of. Somerfet, he was furprized to fee that minister step from behind the curtain, and offer to justify his innocence. Richard now found, that he was betrayed; that he was in the hands of his enemies; and that it was become necessary, for his own fafety, to lower his pretenfions. No violence, however, was attempted against him : The nation was not in a disposition to bear the destruction of fo popular a prince : He had many friends in Henry's army : And his fon, who was not in the power of the court, might ftill be able to revenge his death on all his enemies : He was therefore difmiffed ; and he retired to his feat at Wigmore on, the borders of Wales t.

WHILE the duke of York lived in this retreat, there happened an incident, which, by encreafing the public difcontents, proved favourable to his hopes. Several Gascon lords, affectionate to the English government, and difgusted with the new dominion of the French, came to London, and offered to return to their allegiance under Henry II. The earl of Shrewfbury, with a body of 8000

‡ Grafton, p. 620. * Parliamentary Hiftory, vol. 2. p. 263. + Stowe, p 394. || Holingshed, p. 640.

7.5

men.

men, was fent over to support them. Bourdiaux opened its gates to him : He Chap. XXI. made himfelf master of Fronfac, Castillon, and some other places: His affairs bore for fome time a profperous afpect: But as King Charles haftened to refift this danger- 20th July. ous invalion, the fortunes of the English were then reversed ; Shrewsbury, a venerable warrior above eighty years of age, was killed in battle; his conquefts were loft; Bourdeaux was again obliged to fubmit to the French King *; and all hopes of recovering that province were for ever extinguished.

THO' the English might deem themselves happy to be fairly rid of distant domipions, which were of no use to them, and which they never could defend against the growing power of France; they expressed great discontent on this occasion; and they threw all the blame on the ministry, who had not been able to effect impoffibilities. While they were in this difpofition, the birth of a fon to Henry, 13th October. who was baptized under the name of Edward, was deemed no joyful incident; and as it removed all hopes of the peaceable fucceffion of the duke of York, who was otherwife, in the right of his father, and by the laws enasted fince the acceffion of the house of Lancaster, next heir to the crown, it had rather a tendency to inflame the quarrel between the parties. But the duke was incapable of violent councils; and even when no visible obstacle lay between him and the throne, he was prevented by his own fcruples from mounting it. Henry, always unfit to exercise the government, fell at this time into a diftemper, which fo far encreafed his natural imbecillity, that it rendered him incapable of maintaining even the appearance of royalty. The Queen and the council, deflitute of this fupport, found themfelves unable to refift the York party ; and they were obliged to yield to the torrent. They fent Somerfet to the Tower; and appointed Richard lieutenant of the kingdom, with powers to open and hold a feffion of parliament +. That affembly alfo, taking into confideration the flate of the kingdom, created him protector during pleafure. Men, who thus entrusted royal authority to one, who had fuch evident and ftrong pretensions to the crown, were not furely averse to his taking immediate and full possefion of it. Yet the duke, inftead of pushing them to make farther concessions, appeared somewhat timid and irrefolute even in receiving that power which was tendered to him. He defired, that it might be recorded in parliament, that this authority was conferred on him of their own free motion, without any application on his part: He expressed his hopes, that they would affift him in the exercife of it: He made it a condition of his acceptance, that the other lords, who were appointed to be of his council, fhould also accept of that truft, and should exercise it: And he required, that all the powers of his office should be foecified.

* Polyd. Virg p. 501. Grafton, p. 623. + Rymer, vol. 11. p 344.

373

1453.

14:4.

1454.

374

Chap. XXI. fpecified and defined by act of parliament. This moderation of Richard was certainly very unufual and very amiable ; but it was attended with bad confequences in the prefent state of affairs, and by giving time for the animolities of faction to arife and ferment, it proved the fource of all thefe furious wars and commotions, which enfued.

THE enemies of the duke of York foon found it in their power to make advantage of his exceffive caution. Henry having fo far recovered from his diffemper, as to carry the appearance of exercifing the royal power; they moved him to refume his authority, to annul the regency of the duke, to releafe Somerfet from the Tower *, and to commit the administration into the hands of that nobleman. Richard, fenfible of the dangers, which might attend his former acceptance of the parliamentary commission, should he submit to the annulling of it, levied an army; but still without advancing any pretensions to the crown. He complained only of the King's ministers, and demanded a reformation of the First battle of government. A battle was fought at St. Albans, in which the Yorkifts were fuperior, and without fuffering any lofs on their fide, flew above 5000 of their enemies; among whom were the duke of Somerfet, the earl of Northumberland, the earl of Stafford, eldeft fon to the duke of Buckingham, lord Clifford, and many other perfons of diffinction +. The King himfelf fell into the hands of the duke of York, who treated him with great respect and tenderness : He was only obliged (which he regarded as no hardfhip) to commit the whole authority of the crown into the hands of his rival.

> THIS was the first blood spilt in that fatal quarrel, which was not finished in lefs than a courfe of thirty years, which was fignalized by twelve pitched battles, which opened a fcene of extraordinary fierceness and cruelty, is computed to have coft the lives of eighty princes of the blood, and almost entirely annihilated the antient nobility of England. The ftrong attachments, which, at that time, men of the fame kindred bore to each other, and the vindictive fpirit which was confidered as a point of honour, rendered the great families implacable in their refentments, and widened every moment the breach between the parties. Yet affairs did not immediately proceed to the last extremities : The nation was kept for fome time in suspence: The vigor and spirit of Queen Margaret, supporting her fmall power, ftill proved a ballance to the great authority of Richard, which was checked by his irrefolute temper. A parliament, which was foon after affembled, discovered plainly by the contrariety of their proceedings, the contraoth July.

* Rymer, vol. 11. p. 361. Holingshed, p. 642. Grafton, p. 626. + Stowe, p. 399. Holingshed, p. 643.

riety

1455.

St. Albans. 22d May.

riety of the motives, by which they were actuated. They granted the Yorkifts Chap. XXI. a general indemnity; and they reftored the protectorship to the duke, who in accepting it, still perfevered in all his former precautions : But at the fame time, they renewed their oaths of fealty to Henry, and fixed the continuance of the protectorship to the majority of his eldest fon Edward, who was invested in the ufual dignities of prince of Wales, duke of Cornwal, and earl of Chefter. The only decifive act, paffed by this parliament, was a full refumption of all the grants, which had been made fince the death of Henry V. and which had reduced the crown to the most fcandalous poverty.

IT was not found difficult to wreft power from hands fo little tenacious as those of the duke of York. Margaret, availing herfelf of that prince's absence, produced her hufband before the houfe of lords; and as his ftate of health permitted him at that time to act his part with fome tolerable decency, he declared his intentions to refume the government, and to put an end to Richard's authority. This measure, being unexpected, was not opposed by the contrary party : The house of lords, who were many of them difgufted with the late act of refumption, affented to Henry's propofal : And the King was accordingly declared to be reinstated in his fovereign authority. The duke of York even acquiefced in this irregular act of the peers ; and no difturbance enfued. But that prince's claim to the crown was too well known, and the fteps, which he had taken to promote it, were too evident, ever to allow fincere truft and confidence to have place between the parties. The court retired to Coventry, and invited the duke of York and the earls of Salifbury and Warwic to attend the King's perfon. As they were on the road, they received intelligence, that defigns were formed by their enemies against their liberties and lives. They immediately feparated themfelves : Richard withdrew to his caffle of Wigmore in the county of Hereford: Salifbury to Middleham in Yorkshire : And Warwic to his government of Calais, which had been committed to him after the battle of St. Albans, and which, as it gave him the command of the only regular military force maintained by England, was of the utmost importance in the present juncture. Still, men of peaceable difpolitions, and among the reft Bourchier, archbishop of Canterbury, thought it not too late to interpole with their good offices, in order to prevent that effusion of blood, with which the kingdom was threatened; and the awe, in which each party flood of the other, rendered their mediation for fome time fuccelsful. It was agreed, that all the great leaders on both fides should meet in London, and be folemnly reconciled. The duke of York and his partizans came thither with numerous retinues, and took up their quarters near each other for mutual fecurity.

1455-

1456.

375

1457.

1458.

-1458.

376

Chap. XXI fecurity. The chieftains of the Lancastrian party used the same precaution. The mayor, at the head of 5000 men, kept a ftrict guard, night and day; and was extremely vigilant in maintaining peace between them *. Terms were adjusted, which took not away the ground of difference. An outward reconciliation only was procured : And in order to notify this accord to the whole people, a folemn procession to St. Paul's was appointed, where the duke of York led queen Margaret, and a chieftain of one party marched hand in hand with a chieftain of the opposite +. The lefs real cordiality prevailed, the more were the exterior demonstrations of friendship and amity redoubled. But it was evident to all men of fenfe, that a conteft for a crown could not thus be peaceably accommodated; that each party only watched for an opportunity of fubverting the other; and that much blood must yet be spilt, ere the nation could be reftored to perfect tranquillity, or enjoy a fettled and eftablished government.

1459.

EVEN the smallest accident, without any formed defign, was sufficient, in the prefent difposition of mens minds, to diffolve the seeming amity between the parties; and had the intentions of the leaders been ever fo amicable, they would have found it difficult to reftrain the animofity of their followers. One of the King's retinue infulted one of the earl of Warwic's : Their companions on each fide took part in the quarrel: A fierce combat enfued : The earl apprehended his life to be aimed at : He fled over to his government at Calais ‡; and both parties, in every county of England, openly made preparations for deciding the conteft by war and arms.

Battle of Blore heath. 23d Septr.

THE earl of Salifbury, marching to join the duke of York, was overtaken, at Blore-heath on the borders of Staffordshire, by lord Audley, who commanded much superior forces; and a small rivulet with steep banks ran between the two armies. Salisbury here supplied his defect in numbers by stratagem; a refinement, of which there occur few inftances in the English civil wars, where a headlong courage, more than military conduct, is commonly to be remarked. He feigned a retreat, and allured Audley to follow him with precipitation: But when part of the royal army had paffed the brook, Salifbury fuddenly turned upon them; and partly by the furprize, partly by the division of the enemies forces, put them to rout : The example of flight was followed by the reft of the. army : And Salifbury, obtaining a complete victory, reached the general rendezvous of the Yorkifts at Ludlow §.

* Fabian Chron. anno 1458. The author fays, that fome lords brought 900 retainers, fome 600. + Holingshed, p. 648. Poly. Virg. p. 506. pone less than 400. See also Grafton, p. 633. § Holingshed, p. 649. Graf.on, p. 936. t Grafton, p. 625. Grafton, p. 634. THE

THE earl of Warwic brought over to this rendezvous a choice body of vete- Chap. XX. rans from Calais, on whom, it was thought, the fortune of the war would much depend; but this reinforcement proved, in the iffue, the ruin of the duke of York's party. When the royal army approached, and a general action was every hour expected, Sir Andrew Trollop, who commanded the Veterans, deferted to the King in the night-time; and the Yorkifts were fo difmayed by this inftance of treachery, which made every man apprehenfive of his fellow, that they feparated next day without firiking a ftroke *: The duke of York fled to Ireland : The earl of Warwic, attended by many of the other leaders, escaped to his government of Calais; where his great popularity among all orders of men in the kingdom, particularly among the military, foon drew to him partizans, and rendered his power very formidable. The friends of the houfe of York in England kept themselves every where in readiness to rife on the first summons from their leaders.

AFTER meeting with fome fucceffes at fea, Warwic landed in Kent, with the earl of Salifbury, and the earl of Marche, eldeft fon to the duke of York; and being met by the primate, the lord Cobham, and other perfons of diffinction, he marched, amidst the acclamations of the people, to London. The city immediately opened its gates to him ; and his troops encreasing on every day's march, he foon found himfelf in a condition to face the royal army, which haftened from Coventry to attack him. The battle was fought at Northampton; and was foon Battle of Northampdecided against the royalists by the infidelity of lord Grey of Ruthin, who, commanding Henry's vanguard, deferted to the enemy during the heat of action, 10th July. and fpread a confternation thro' the troops. The duke of Buckingham, the earl of Shrewfbury, the lords Beaumont and Egremont, and Sir William Lucie were killed in the action or purfuit : The flaughter fell chiefly on the gentry and nobility; the common people were spared by orders of the earls of Warwic and Marche+. Henry himfelf, that empty shadow of a King, was again taken prisoner; and as the innocence and fimplicity of his manners, which bore the appearance of fanctity, had procured him the tender regard of the people ‡, the earl of Warwic and the other leaders took care to diffinguish themfelves by their respectful demeanour towards him.

A parliament was fummoned in the King's name, and met at Weftminster; A parliament. where the duke of York foon after appeared from Ireland. This prince had never hitherto advanced openly any claim to the crown : He had only complained of ill ministers, and demanded a redress of grievances : And even in the present + Stowe, p. 409. ‡ Hall, fol. 169. Grafton, p 595. * Holingshed, p. 650. Grafton, p. 537. crifis. 3 C. VOL II.

1459.

377

1460.

1460.

378

Chap. XXI, crifis, when the parliament was furrounded by his victorious army, he flowed fuch a regard to law and liberty, as is very unufual during the prevalence of a party in any civil diffentions; and was still lefs to be expected, in those violent and licentious times. He advanced towards the throne; and being met by the archbishop of Canterbury, who asked him, whether he had yet paid his respects to the King? he replied, that he knew of none to whom he owed that title. He then flood near the throne *, and addreffing himfelf to the houfe of peers, he gave them a deduction of his title by defcent, mentioned the cruelties by which the house of Lancaster had paved at first their way to sovereign power, infisted on the calamities which had attended the government of Henry, exhorted them to return into the right path, by doing justice to the lineal fucceffor, and thus pleaded his cause before them as his natural and lawful judges +. This cool and moderate manner of demanding a crown, intimidated his friends and difcouraged his enemies : The lords remained in fuspence ‡; and no one ventured to utter a word on this occafion. Richard, who had probably expected, that the peers would have invited him to place himfelf on the throne, was much difappointed at their filence; but defiring them to reflect on what he had proposed to them, he departed the houfe. The peers took the matter under confideration, with as great tranquility, as if it had been a common subject of debate : They defired the affistance of some confiderable members among the commons in their deliberations : They heard, in feveral fucceffive days, the reasons alledged for the duke of York : They even ventured to propose objections to his claim, founded on former entails of the crown, and on the oaths of fealty fworn to the house of Lancaster §: They also observed, that, as Richard had all along born the arms of York, not those of Clarence, he could not claim as successor to the latter family : And after receiving answers to these objections, derived from the violence and power by which the house of Lancaster supported their present possession of the crown; they ventured at last to pronounce a decision. Their sentence was calculated, as far as poffible, to pleafe both parties : They declared the title of the duke of York to be certain and indefeafible; but in confideration, that Henry had enjoyed the crown, without dispute or controversy, during the course of thirty-eight years, they determined that he fhould continue to poffers the title and dignity during the remainder of his life; that the administration of the government, meanwhile, should remain with Richard, that he should be acknowleged the true and lawful heir of the monarchy, that every one fhould fwear to maintain his fucceffion, that it should be treason to attempt his life, and that all former fettlements of the crown,

> * Holingshed, p. 655. + Cotton, p. 665. Grafton, p. 643. 1 Holingshed, p. 657. § Cotton, p. 666. Grafton, p. 645.

crown, in this and the two last reigns, should be abrogated and refcinded *. The Chap. XXI. duke of York acquiefeed in this decifion : Henry himfelf, being a prifoner, could not oppose it : Even if he had enjoyed his liberty, he would not probably have felt any violent reluctance against it : And the act thus paffed with the unanimous confent of the whole legislative body. Tho' the mildness of this compromife is chiefly to be afcribed to the moderation of the duke of York, it is impossible not to obferve in those transactions visible marks of a higher regard to law, and a more fixed authority, enjoyed by parliament, than has appeared in any former period of English history.

It is probable, that the duke of York, without employing either menaces or violence, could have obtained from the commons a fettlement more confiftent and uniform : But as many, if not all the members of the upper house, had received grants, conceffions, or dignities, during the laft fixty years, when the house of Lancaster was posseffed of the government, they were afraid of invalidating their own titles by too fudden and violent an overthrow of that family; and in thus temporizing between the parties, they fixed the throne on a bafis, upon which it could not poffibly ftand. The duke, apprehending his chief danger to arife from the genius and fpirit of Queen Margaret, fought a pretence for banifhing her entirely the kingdom; and for that purpole, he fent her, in the King's name, a fummons to come immediately to London; intending, in cafe of her difobedience, to proceed to extremities against her. But the queen needed not this menace to excite her activity in behalf of the rights of her family. After the defeat at Northampton, fhe had fled with her infant fon to Durham, and from thence to Scotland; but foon returning, fhe applied to the northern barons, and employed every motive to procure their affiftance. Her affability, infinuation, and address, qualities in which the excelled; her careffes, her promifes wrought a powerful effect on every one who approached her: The admiration of her great qualities was fucceeded by compation towards her helplefs condition : The nobility of that quarter, who regarded themfelves as the most warlike of the kingdom, were moved by indignation to find the fouthern barons dispose of the crown and fettle the government : And that they might allure the people to their ftandard, they promifed them the fpoils of all the provinces on the other fide the Trent. By these means, the Queen had collected an army twenty thousand ftrong, with a celerity which was neither expected by her friends, nor apprehended by her enemies.

THE duke of York, informed of her appearance in the north, haltened thither with a body of 5000 men, to suppress, as he imagined, the beginnings of an

> * Cotton, p. 666. Grafton, p. 647. 3 C 2

infur-

1460.

- 379

1460.

,380

Battle of Wakefield. 24th Decem.

Chap. XXI. infurrection ; when, on his arrival at Wakefield, he found himfelf fo much outnumbered by his enemies. He threw himfelf into Sandal caftle, which was fituated in the neighbourhood; and he was advifed by the earl of Salifbury, and other prudent counfellors, to remain in that fortrefs, till his fon, the earl of Marche, who was levying forces in the borders of Wales, could advance to his affiftance *. But the duke, tho' deficient in political courage, poffeffed perfonal bravery to an eminent degree; and notwithstanding all his wifdom and experience, he thought, that he should be forever difgraced, if, by taking shelter behind walls, he should for a moment refign the victory to a woman. He defcended into the plain, and offered battle to the enemy, which was inftantly accepted. The great inequality of number was fufficient alone to decide the victory; but the Queen, by fending a detachment, who fell on the back of the duke's army, rendered her advantage Death of the ftill more certain and undifputed. The duke himfelf was killed in the action; duke of York. and as his body was found among the flain, the head was cut off by Margaret's orders, and fixed on the gates of York, with a paper crown upon it, in derifion of his pretended title. His fon, the earl of Rutland, a youth of feventeen, was brought to lord Clifford; and that barbarian, in revenge of his father's death, who had perished in the battle of St. Alban's, murdered, in cold blood, and with his own hands, this innocent prince, whole exterior figure, as well as other accomplifhments, are reprefented by hiftorians as extremely amiable. The earl of Salifbury was wounded and taken prifoner, and immediately beheaded, with feveral other perfons of diffinction, by martial law at Pomfret +. There fell near three thousand of the Yorkists in this battle: The duke himself was greatly and juftly lamented by his own party; a prince who furely merited a better fate, and whofe errors in conduct proceeded entirely from fuch qualities, as render him the more an object of efteem and affection. He perished in the fiftieth year of his age, and left behind him three fons, Edward, George, and Richard, with three daughters, Anne, Elizabeth, and Margaret.

1461.

Battle of Mor-

THE queen, after this important victory, divided her army; and fent the fmaller division under Jasper Tudor, earl of Pembroke, half brother to the King, againft Edward, the prefent duke of York. She marched herfelf with the larger division towards London, where the earl of Warwic was left with the command of the Yorkifts. Pembroke was defeated by Edward at Mortimer's Crofs in umer's crofs. Hereford thire with the lofs of near 4000 men : His army was difperfed; he himfelf escaped by flight; but his father, Sir Owen Tudor, was taken prifoner, and immediately beheaded by Edward's orders. This barbarous practice, being once + Polyd, Virg. p. 510.

* Stowe, p. 412.

begun, begun, was continued by both parties, from revenge, which covered itself under Chap. XXI. the pretence of retaliation *.

MARGARET compensated this defeat by a victory which she obtained over the earl of Warwic. That nobleman, on the approach of the Lancastrians, led out his army, re-inforced by a ftrong body of the Londoners, who were very affectionate to his caufe; and he gave battle to the Queen at St. Albans. While the Second battle armies were warmly engaged, Lovelace, who commanded a confiderable body of the Yorkists, treacherously withdrew from the combat; and this dishonourable action, of which there are many inftances in thefe civil wars, decided the victory in favour of the Queen. About 2300 of the Yorkifts perifhed in the battle and flight; and the perfon of the King fell again into the hands of his own party. This weak prince was fure to be almost equally a prisoner whichever party had the keeping of him; and fcarce any more decorum was observed by the one than by the other in their method of treating him. Lord Bonville, to whole care he had been entrusted, staid with him after the defeat, on assurance of pardon, given him by Henry : But Margaret, regardlefs of her hufband's promife, ordered immediately the head of that nobleman to be ftruck off by the executioner +. Sir Thomas Kiriel, a brave warrior, who had fignalized himfelf in the French wars, was treated in the fame inhuman manner.

THE Queen made no great advantage of this victory : Young Edward advanced upon her from the other fide; and collecting the remains of Warwic's army, was foon in a condition of giving her battle with superior forces. She was fenfible of her danger, if she lay between the enemy and the city of London; and the found it neceffary to retreat with her army to the north ‡. Edward entered London amidst the acclamations of the citizens, and immediately opened a new scene to his party. This prince, in the bloom of youth, remarkable for the beauty of his perfon, for his bravery, his activity, his affability, and every popular quality, found himself so much possessed of public favour, that, elated with the fpirit, natural to his age, he refolved no longer to confine himfelf within those narrow limits, which his father had prefcribed to himfelf, and which had been found by experience fo prejudicial to his caufe. He determined to affume the name and dignity of King; to infift openly on his claim; and thenceforth, to treat the opposite party as traitors and rebels to his lawful authority. But as a national confent, or the appearance of it, feemed, notwithstanding his plausible title, to be still requisite to precede this bold measure, and as the assembling a parliament might occasion too many delays, and be attended with other inconveniencies, he ventured to proceed in a lefs regular manner, and to put it out of the 1461.

* Holingshed, p. 660. Grafton, p. 650.

+ Holingshed, 660.

1 Grafton, p. 652. power,

Chap. XXI. power of his enemies to throw obstacles in the way of his advancement. His army was ordered to affemble in St. John's Fields ; infinite numbers of people furrounded them; an harangue was pronounced to this mixed multitude, fetting forth the title of Edward, and inveighing against the tyranny and usurpation of the rival family; and the people were then afked, whether they would have Henry of Lancaster for King ? They universally exclaimed against the proposal. It was then demanded, whether they would accept of Edward, eldeft fon of the late duke of York? They expressed their confent with loud and joyful acclamations *. A great number of bishops, lords, magistrates, and other persons of distinction, were then affembled at Baynard's caftle, who ratified the popular election; and the new King was next day proclaimed in London, under the name of Ed-5th March. ward IV +.

> In this manner, finished the reign of Henry VI. a monarch, who, while yet in his cradle, had been proclaimed King both of France and England, and who began his life with the most splendid prospects, which any prince in Europe had ever enjoyed. The revolution was unhappy for his people, as it was the fource of civil wars; but was almost entirely indifferent to Henry himself, who was utterly incapable of exercifing his authority, and who, provided he met perfonally with good usage, was equally easy, as he was equally enflaved, in the hands of his enemies and of his friends. His weakness and his disputed title were the chief caufes of the public misfortunes : But whether his Queen, and his ministers, were not also guilty of some great abuses of power, it is not easy for us at this diftance to determine : There remain no proofs on record of any confiderable violation of the laws, except in the death of the duke of Glocefter, which was a private crime, formed no precedent, and was but too much of a piece with the ufual ferocity and cruelty of the times.

THE most remarkable law, which passed in this reign, was that for the due Miscellaneous transactions of election of members of parliament in counties. After the fall of the feudal fyfthis reign. tem, the diffinction of tenures was in a great measure loft; and every freeholder, as well those who held of mesne lords, as the immediate tenants of the crown, were by degrees admitted to give their votes at elections. This innovation was confirmed by a law of Henry IV 1; which gave right to fuch a multitude of electors, as was the occasion of great diforder. In the eighth and tenth of this King, therefore, laws were enacted, limiting the electors to fuch as poffeffed forty shillings a year in land, free from all burthen, within the county §. This > * Stowe, p. 415. Holingshed, p. 661. + Grafton, p. 653. ‡ Statutes at large, 7. Henry IV. cap. 15. § Statutes at large, 8. Henry VI. cap. 7. 10 Henry VI. cap. 2.

Edward IV. affumes the crown.

HENRY VI.

fum was equivalent to near twenty pounds a year of our prefent money; and it Chap. XXI. were to be wished, that the spirit, as well as letter of this law, had been maintained.

THE preamble of the flatute is remarkable : "Whereas the elections of knights, " have of late, in many counties of England, been made by outrageous, and excef-" five numbers of people, many of them of fmall fubftance and value, yet pre-" tending to a right equal to the best knights and efquires ; whereby manflaugh-" ters, riots, batteries, and divisions among the gentlemen and other people of " the fame counties, shall very likely rife and be, unless due remedy be provided " in this behalf, &c." We may learn from thefe expressions what an important matter the election of a member of parliament was now become in England : That affembly was beginning in this period to affume great authority : The commons had it much in their power to enforce the execution of the laws; and if they failed in their duty, in this particular, it proceeded lefs from any exorbitant power of the crown, than from the licentious spirit of the aristocracy, and perhaps from the rude education of the age, and their own want of a due fenfe of the advantages refulting from a regular administration of justice.

WHEN the duke of York, the earls of Salifbury and Warwic, fled the kingdom upon the defertion of their troops, a parliament was fummoned at Coventry in 1460, by which they were all attainted. This parliament feems to have been very irregularly conftituted, and fearcely deferves the name : Infomuch, that an act paffed in it, " that all fuch knights of any county, as were returned by vir-" tue of the King's letters, without any other election, should be valid, and that " no fheriff, for returning them, fhould incur the penalty of the ftatute of Hen-" ry IV *." All the acts of that parliament were afterwards reverfed; " be-" caufe it was unlawfully fummoned, and the knights and barons not duly cho-" fen +."

THE parliaments in this reign, inftead of relaxing their vigilance against the usurpations of the court of Rome, endeavoured to enforce the former flatutes enacted to that purpole. The commons petitioned, that no foreigner should be capable of any church preferment, and that the patron might be allowed to prefent anew upon the non-refidence of any incumbent 1 : But the King eluded thefe petitions. Pope Martin wrote him a fevere letter against the statute of provisors; which he calls an abominable statute, that would infallibly damn every one, who observed it §. The cardinal of Winchester was legate ; and being also a kind of prime minister, and immenfely rich from the profits of his clerical dignity, the parliament became jealous of his extending the papal power; and they protefted, that the 1461.

* Cotton, p. 664. + Statutes at large, 39 Henry VI. cap. 1. ‡ Cotton, p. 585. Burnet's Collection of Records, vol. 1. p. 99.

383

cardinal

Chap. XXI. cardinal should absent himself in all affairs and councils of the King, whenever 1461. the Pope or See of Rome was touched upon *.

384

PERMISSION was given by parliament to export corn when it was at low prices; wheat at fix fhillings and eight pence a quarter, barley at three fhillings and four pence \ddagger . It appears from these prices, that corn flill remained at about half of its present value; tho' other commodities were much cheaper. The inland commerce of corn was also opened in the eighteenth of the King, by allowing any collector of the customs to give a licence for carrying it from one county to another \ddagger . The same year a kind of navigation act was proposed with regard to all places within the Streights; but the King rejected it §.

THE first instance of debt contracted upon parliamentary fecurity occurs in this reign I.

* Cotton, p. 593. † Statutes at large, 15. Henry VI. cap. 2. 23. Henry VI. cap. 6, † Cotton, p. 625. § Cotton, p. 626. || Cotton, p. 593, 614, 638.

CHAP.

XXII. CHAP.

IV. R D E W A

Battle of Touton-Henry escapes into Scotland-A parliament-Battle of Hexham-Henry taken prisoner, and confined to the Tower -King's marriage with the lady Elizabeth Gray-Warwic difgusted ____ Alliance with Burgundy ____ Infurrection in Yorksbire____ Battle of Banbury-Warwic and Clarence banished-Warwic and Clarence return-Edward IV. expelled-Henry VI. restored-Edward IV. returns-Battle of Barnet, and death of Warwic-Battle of Teukesbury, and murder of prince Edward-Death of Henry VI.-Invasion of France-Peace of Pecquigni-Trial and execution of the duke of Clarence-Death and character of Edward IV.

TOUNG Edward, now in his twentieth year, was of a temper well fitted to Chap. XXII. make his way thro' fuch a fcene of war, havoc, and devastation, as must conduct him to the full poffeffion of that crown, which he claimed from hereditary right, but which he had affumed from the tumultuary election alone of his own party. He was bold, active, enterprizing; and his hardnefs of heart and feverity of character rendered him impregnable to all those movements of compaffion, which might relax his vigour in the profecution of the most bloody revenges against his enemies. The very commencement of his reign gave fymptoms of his fanguinary disposition. A tradefman of London, who kept shop at the fign of the crown, having faid, that he would make his fon heir to the crown; this harmless pleasantry was interpreted to be spoke in derision of Edward's affumed title; and he was condemned and executed for the offence*. Such an act of tyranny was a proper prelude to the fcenes, which enfued. The fcaffold, as well as the field, ftreamed inceffantly with the nobleft blood of England, fpilt in the quarrel between the two contending families, whose animofity was now become

> * Habington in Kennet, p. 431. Grafton, p. 791. 3 D

VOL. II.

1461.

1461.

386

Chap. XXII. come implacable. The people, divided in their affections, took alfo oppofite fymbols of party : The partizans of the houfe of Lancafter chofe the red rofe as their mark of diffinction; those of York were denominated from the white; and thefe civil wars were thus known, all over Europe, by the name of the quarrel between the two roles.

> THE licence, in which queen Margaret had been obliged to indulge her troops. fruck a great terror into the city of London and all the fouthern parts of the kingdom; and as the there expected a very obflinate refiftance, the prudently retired northwards among her own partizans. The fame licence, joined to the zeal of faction, foon brought great multitudes to her flandard; and fhe was able, in a few days, to affemble an army fixty thoufand ftrong in Yorkshire. The King and the earl of Warwic made hafte, with an army of forty thousand, to check her progrefs; and when they reached Pomfret, they difpatched a body of troops, under the command of the lord Fitzwalter, to fecure the paffage of Ferrybridge over the river Are, which lay between them and the enemy. Fitzwalter took poft at the place affigned him; but was not able to defend it againft lord Clifford, who attacked him with fuperior numbers. The Yorkifts were chaced over the river with great flaughter; and lord Fitzwalter himfelf was flain in the action *. The earl of Warwic, dreading the confequences of this misfortune, at a time when a decifive action was every hour expected, immediately ordered his horfe to be brought him, which he flabbed before the whole army ; and kiffing the hilt of his fword, fwore, that he was determined to fhare the fate of the meaneft foldier +. And to flow the greater fecurity, a proclamation was at the fame time iffued, giving to every one who pleafed full liberty to retire; but menacing the fevereft punifhments to those who should difcover any fymptoms of cowardice in the enfuing battle t. Lord Falconbridge was fent to recover the post which had been loft; he passed the river fome miles above Ferrybridge, and falling unexpectedly on lord Clifford, he revenged the former difafter by the defeat of the party and the death of their leader §.

Battle of Touton. 29th of Mar.

THE two hoftile armies met at Touton; and a fierce and bloody battle enfued. While the Yorkifts were advancing to the charge, there happened a great fall of fnow, which, driving full on the faces of their enemies, blinded them; and this advantage was improved by a stratagem of lord Falconbridge. That nobleman ordered fome infantry to advance before the line, and after having fent a volley of flight-arrows, as they were called, amidft the enemy, immediately to retire. The Lancastrians, imagining that they were got within reach of the opposite

+ Habington, p. 432. * W. Wyrcester, p. 489. Hall, fol. 186. Holingshed, p. 664. 1 Holingshed, p. 664. § Hift. Croyl. cont. p. 53.2.

army,

army, discharged all their arrows, which thus fell short of the Yorkists, without Chap. XXII. doing any execution *. After the quivers of the enemy were exhausted, Edward advanced his line, and committed flaughter with impunity on the difmayed Lancaftrians : The bow however was foon laid afide, and the fword decided the combat, which ended in a total victory on the fide of the Yorkifts. Edward iffued orders to give no quarter +: The routed army was purfued to Tadcafter with great blood fhed and confusion; and above thirty fix thousand men are computed to have fallen in the battle and pursuit 1: Among these were the earl of Westmoreland, and his brother, Sir John Nevil, the earl of Northumberland, the lords Dacres and Welles, and Sir Andrew Trollop §. The earl of Devonfhire, who was now engaged in Henry's party, was brought a prifoner to Edward; and was foon after beheaded by martial law at York. His head was fixed on a pole erected over the gates of that city; and the head of duke Richard and that of the eatl of Salifbury were taken down, and buried with their bodies. Henry and Margaret had remained at York during the action ; but learning the defeat of their army, and being fenfible, that no place in England could now afford them shelter, they fled with great precipitation into Scotland. They were accompanied by the duke of Exeter, who, tho'he had married Edward's fifter, had taken part with the Lancastrians, and by Henry duke of Somerset, who had commanded in the unfortunate battle of Touton, and who was the fon of that nobleman killed in the first battle of St. Albans.

NOTWITHSTANDING the great animolity, which prevailed between the two Henry escapes kingdoms, Scotland had never exerted itfelf with vigour, to take advantage either into Scotland. of the wars which England carried on with France, or of the civil wars which broke out between the contending families. James I. more laudably employed, in civilizing his fubjects and taming them to the falutary yoke of law and juffice, avoided all hoftilities with foreign nations; and tho' he feemed interested to maintain a ballance between France and England, he gave no farther affiftance to the former kingdom in its greateft diffreffes, than permitting, and perhaps encouraging, his subjects to inlift in the French fervice. After the murder of that excellent prince, the minority of his fon and fueceffor, James II. and the diffractions incident to it, retained the Scots in the fame flate of neutrality; and the fuperiority, vifibly acquired by France, rendered it then unneceffary for her ally to interpose in her defence. But when the quarrel commenced between the houses of York and Lancaster, and became absolutely incurable but by the total extinction of one party; James, who had now rifen to man's effate, was tempted

* Hall, fol. 186. t Holingshed, p. 665. Grafton, p. + Habington, p. 432: 656. Hift. Croyl. cont. p. 533. § Hall, fol. 187. Habington, p. 433. 3 D 2 to 1461.

387

1461.

388

Chap XXII. to feize this advantage, and he endeavoured to recover those places, which the English had formerly conquered from his ancestors. He laid fiege to the castle of Roxborough in 1460, and had provided himfelf of a fmall train of artillery for that enterprize : But his cannon were fo ill framed, that one of them burft as he was firing it, and put an end to his life in the flower of his age. His fon and fucceffor, James 111. was also a minor : The usual distractions ensued in the government : The queen dowager, Anne of Gueldres, afpired to the regency : The family of Douglas opposed her pretensions: And queen Margaret, when she fled into Scotland, found there a people little lefs divided by faction than those by whom the had been expelled. Tho' the pleaded the connexions between the royal family of Scotland and the houfe of Lancaster, by the young King's grandmother, who was a daughter of the earl of Somerfet; fhe could engage the Scots council to go no farther than to express their good wishes in her favour: But on her offer to deliver to them immediately the important fortrefs of Berwic, and to contract her fon in marriage with a fifter of King James's, the found a better reception; and the Scots promifed the affiftance of their arms to re-inftate her family upon the throne *. But as the danger from that quarter feemed not very urgent to Edward, he did not purfue the fugitive King and Queen into their retreat; but returned to London, where a parliament was fummoned for fettling the government.

4th of Novr.

On the meeting of this affembly, Edward found the good effects of his vigo-A pasliament. rous measure in affuming the crown, as well as of his victory at Touton, by which he had fecured it : The parliament no longer hefitated between the two families, or propofed any of those ambiguous decisions, which could only tend to perpetuate and inflame the animolities of party. They recognized the title of Edward to the crown, by hereditary defcent, thro' the family of Mortimer; and declared that he was King in right, from the death of his father, who had alfo the fame lawful title; and that he was in poffeffion of the throne from the day that he affumed the government, tendered to him by the acclamations of the people +. They expressed their abhorrence of the usurpation and intrusion of the house of Lancaster, particularly that of the earl of Derby, otherwise called Henry IV. which, they faid, had been attended with every kind of diforder, the murder of the fovereign and the oppression of the subjects. They annulled every grant which had paffed in those reigns ; they reinstated the King in all the posfeffions, which had belonged to the crown at the pretended deposition of Richard II. and the' they confirmed judicial deeds and the decrees of inferior courts,

* Hall, fol. 137. Habington, p. 434.

+ Cotton, p. 670.

they

they reverfed all attainders paffed in any pretended parliament ; particularly the Chap. XXII. attainder of the earl of Cambridge, the King's grandfather; as well as that of the earls of Salifbury and Glocefter and of lord Lumley, who vere forfeited for adhering to Richard II. *

MANY of these votes were the refult of the usual violence of party : The common fenfe of mankind, in more peaceable times, repealed them: And the flatutes of the house of Lancaster, being the deeds of an established government, and enacted by princes long poffeffed of authority, have always been held as valid and obligatory. The parliament, however, in fubverting fuch deep foundations, had still the pretence of replacing the government on its antient and natural bafis: But in their fubfequent measures, they were more guided by revenge, or at least the views of convenience, than by the maxims of equity and justice. They paffed an act of forfeiture and attainder against Henry VI. and queen Margaret, and their infant fon, prince Edward: The fame act was extended to the dukes of Somerfet and Exeter; to the earls of Northumberland, Devonshire, Pembroke, Wilts ; to the vifcount Beaumont, the lords Roos, Nevil, Clifferd, Wells, Dacre, Gray of Rugemont, Hungerford; to Alexander Hedie, Nicholas Latimer, Edmond Mountfort, John Heron, and many other perfons of difinction +. The parliament vefted the eftates of all these attainted perfons in thecrown; tho' their fole crime was the adhering to a prince, whom every individual of the parliament had fo long recognized, and whom that very King himklf, who was now feated on the throne, had acknowledged and obeyed as his lavful fovereign.

THE neceffity of fupporting the government eftablished, will justify more fully fome other acts of violence; tho' the method of conducting them may still appear exceptionable. John earl of Oxford and his fon, Aubrey de Vere, were detected in a correspondence with Margaret, were tried by nartial law before the constable, were condemned and executed ‡. Sir William Tyrrel, Sir Thomas Tudenham, and John Montgomery were convicted in the fame arbitrary court; were executed, and their estates forfeited. This introduction of martial law into civil government was a high strain of prerogative; which, were it not for the violence of the times, would probably have appeared exceptionable to a nation fo jealous of their liberties as the English were now become §. It was impof-

§ That we may judge how arbitrary a court, that of the confable of England was, we may perufe the patent granted to the earl of Rivers in this reign, as it is to be found ir Spellman's Gloffary in verb.

^{*} Cotton, p. 672. Statutes at large, 1 Edw. IV. cap. 1. + Cotton, p. 670. W. Wyrcefter, p. 490. ‡ W. de Wyrcetter, p. 492. Hall, fol. 189. Gration, p. 658. Fabian, fol. 215. Fragm. ad finem. T. Sproti.

Chap. XXII. impofible but fuch a great and fudden revolution must leave the roots of difcon-14⁶¹. tent and diffatisfaction in the fubjects, which would require great art, or in licu of it, great violence to extirpate them. The latter was more fuitable to the genius of the nation in that uncultivated age.

But the new establishment seemed precarious and uncertain, not only from the domestic discontents of the people, but from the efforts of foreign powers. Lewis, the eleventh of the name, had fucceeded to his father, Charles, in 1460; and was led, from the obvious motives of national interest, to feed the flames of civil difcord among fuch dangerous neighbours, by giving fupport to the weaker party. But the intriguing and politic genius of this prince was here checked by itfelf: Having attempted to fubdue the independant spirit of his own vassals, he had excited fuch an opposition at home, as prevented him from making all the advantage, which the opportunity afforded, of the diffentions among the English. He fent however a small body to Henry's affistance under Varenne, Seneschal of Normandy *, who landed in Northumberland, and got poffession of the caffle of Alnewic; but as the indefatigable Margaret, went in perfon to France, where the follicited larger fupplies +; and promifed Lewis to deliver up Calais, if her family was by his means reftored to the throne of England; he was afterwards perfuaded to fend along with her a body of 2000 men at arms ‡, which enabled her to take the field, and to make an inroad into England. Tho' re-inforced by verb. Conflabularius; as alfo, more fully in Rymer, vol. 11. p. 581. Here is a claufe of it: Et ulterius, de uberiori gratia nostra eidem commiti de Rivers plenam potestatem damus ad cognoscendum, & procedendum, in omnibus, & fingulis, caufis et negotiis, de et super crimino lese majestatis seu super occasione cæterisque caufis, quibuscunque per præfatum comitem de Rivers, ut constabuliarum Anglie-guæ in curia constabularii Angliæ ab antiquo, viz. tempore dicii domini Gulielmi conquestoris seu aliquo tempore citra tractari, audiri, examinari, aut decidi consueverant, aut jure debuerant, aut debent, causasque et negotia prædicta cum omnibus et singulis emergentibus, incidentibus & connexis, audiendum, examinandum, et fine debito terminandum, etiam summarie et de plano, fine strepitu et figura justitize, sola facti veritate inspecta, ac etiam manu regia, fi opportunum visum fuerit eidem comiti de Rivers, vices nostras, appellatione remota. The office of constable was perpetual in the monarchy; its jurifdiction was not limited to times of war, as appears from this patent, and as we learn from the fame author : Yet its authority was in direct contradiction to Magna Charta ; and it is evident that no regular liberty could fubfift with it. It involved a full dictatorial power, continually fublifting in the flate. The only check on the crown, befides the want of force to support all its prerogatives, was, that the office of constable was commonly either hereditary or during life ; and the perfon invefted with it, was, for that reafon, not fo proper an inftrument of arbitrary power in the King. Accordingly, the office was suppressed by Henry VIII. the most arbitrary of all the English princes. The practice, however, of exercifing martial law, still subfisted; and was not abolished till the Petition of Right under Charles I. This was the epoch of true liberty, confirmed by the Reftoration, and enlarged and fecured by the Revolution.

* Monstrelet, vol. 3. p. 95. † W. Wyrcester, p. 493. Hall, fol. 190. Holingshed, p. 665. ‡ W. Wyrcester, p. 493.

1462.

1464.

a numerous train of adventurers from Scotland, and by many partizans of the Chap. XXH. family of Lancaster; the received a check at Hedgley-more from lord Montacute or Montague, brother to the earl of Warwic, and warden of the eaft Marches between Scotland and England *. Montague was fo elated with this fuccefs, that, while a numerous re-inforcement was on their march to join him by orders from Edward, he yet ventured, with his own troops alone, to attack the Lancaf- Battle of Hextrians at Hexham, and he obtained a complete victory over them. The duke of ham. Somerfet, the lords Roos, and Hungerford, were taken in the purfuit, and immediately beheaded by martial law at Hexham +. Summary juffice was in like manner executed at Newcastle on fir Humphrey Nevil, and feveral other gentlemen 1. All those who were spared in the field, fuffered on the scaffold; and the utter extermination of their adverfaries was now become the plain object of the York party; a conduct, which received but too plaufible an apology from the preceding practice of the Lancastrians.

THE fate of the unfortunate royal family, after this defeat, was very fingular. Margaret, flying with her fon into a foreft, where fhe endeavoured to conceal herfelf, was befet, during the darknefs of the night, by robbers, who either ignorant or regardlefs of her quality, defpoiled her of her rings and jewels, and treated her with the utmost indignity. The partition of this rich booty raifed a quarrel among them; and while their attention was thus engaged, the took the opportunity of making her escape with her fon into the thickeft of the foreft, where the wandered for fome time, over fpent with hunger and fatigue, and funk with terror and affliction. While in this wretched condition, the faw a robber approach with his naked fword ; and finding that fhe had no means of efcape, fhe fuddenly embraced the refolution of trufting entirely for protection to his faith and generofity. She advanced towards him ; and prefenting to him the young prince, called out to him, Here, my friend, I commit to your care the fafety of your King's fon. The man, whole humanity and generous spirit had been obscured, but not entirely loft, by his vicious course of life, was flruck with the fingularity of the event, and charmed with the confidence reposed in him; and he vowed, not only to abitain from all injury against the princess, but to devote himself entirely to her fafety and protection §. By his means the dwelt fome time concealed in the foreft, and was at last conducted to the fea coast, whence she made her efcape into Flanders. She paffed thence into her father's court, where fhe lived feveral years in privacy and retirement. Her husband was not fo fortunate or fo dextrous in finding the means of his escape. Some of his friends took him un-

+ W. Wyrcefter, p. 498. Hall, fol. 190. Grafton, p. 661. * Rymer, vol. 11. p. 500. 1 Fabian, fol. 215. Polyd. Virg. p. 512, 513. § Monstrelet, vol. 3. p. 96.

29I

1464. 25th April.

der

1464.

392

Chap. XXII. der their protection, and conveyed him into Lancashire ; where he remained concealed during a twelvemonth; but he was at last detected, delivered up to Edward, and thrown into the Tower *. The fafety of his perfon was owing lefs to the generofity of his enemies, than to the contempt, which they had entertained of his courage and his understanding.

> THE imprisonment of Henry, the expulsion of Margaret, the execution and confiscation of all the most confiderable Lancastrians, seemed to give full security to Edward's government; whose title by blood, being now recognized by parliament, and univerfally fubmitted to by the people, was no longer in danger of being impeached by any antagonist. In this prosperous situation, the King delivered himfelf up, without controul, to those pleasures which his youth, his high fortune, and his natural temperament invited him to enjoy; and the cares of royalty were lefs attended to, than the diffipation of amufement, or the allurements of paffion. The cruel and unrelenting fpirit of Edward, tho' enured to the ferocity of civil wars, was at the fame time extremely devoted to the fofter paffions, which, without mitigating his fevere temper, maintained a great influence over him, and fhared his attachment with the purfuits of ambition, and the thirft of military glory. During the prefent interval of peace, he lived in the most familiar and fociable manner with his fubjects +, particularly with the Londoners; and the beauty of his perfon, as well as the gallantry of his addrefs, which, even unaffisted by his royal dignity, would have rendered him extremely acceptable to the fair fex, facilitated all his applications for their favour. This eafy and pleafurable life augmented every day his popularity among all ranks of men : He was the peculiar favourite of the young and gay of both fexes : The disposition of the English, little addicted to jealoufy, kept them from taking umbrage at these liberties: And his indulgence in amusements, while it gratified his inclination, was thus become, without defign, a means of fupporting and fecuring his government : But as it is difficult to reduce the ruling paffion within ftrict rules of prudence, the amorous temper of Edward led him into a fnare which proved very fatal to his future repose, and to the stability of his throne.

King's marlady Elizabeth Gray.

JAQUELINE DE LUXEMBOURG, dutchess of Bedford, had, after her husband's riage with the death, fo far facrificed her ambition to love, that she espoused, in second marriage, fir Richard Wideville, a private gentleman, afterwards created lord Rivers, to whom the bore feveral children, and among the reft, Elizabeth, who was remarkable for the grace and beauty of her perfon, as well as for other amiable accomplifhments. This young lady had married fir John Gray of Groby, by whom fhe had children; and her hufband being killed in the fecond battle of St. Albans, > + Polyd. Virg. p. 513. Biondi. * Hall, fol. 191. Fragm. ad finem Sproti.

fighting

fighting on the fide of Lancaster, and his estate being for that reason confiscated, Chap. XXII. his widow retired to live with her father, at his feat of Grafton in Northamptonfhire. The King came accidentally to the house, after a hunting party, in order to pay a vifit to the duchefs of Bedford; and as the occafion feemed favourable for obtaining fome grace from this gallante monarch, the young widow flung herfelf at his feet, and with many tears, entreated him to take pity on her impoverified and diffreffed children. The fight of fo much beauty in affliction, ftrongly affected the amorous Edward; love flole infenfibly into his heart under the guife of compaffion; and her forrow, fo becoming a virtuous matron, made his efteem and regard quickly correspond to his affection. He raifed her from the ground with affurances of favour; he found his paffion encreafe every moment, by the conversation of the amiable object; and he was foon reduced in his turn to the pofture and file of a fupplicant at the feet of Elizabeth. But the lady, either averfe to difhonourable love from a fenfe of duty, or perceiving that the impreffion which the had made was to deep as to give her hopes of obtaining the higheft elevation, obftinately refused to gratify his paffion; and all the endearments, careffes, and importunity of the young and amiable Edward, proved fruitlefs against her rigid and inflexible virtue. His paffion, irritated by opposition, and encreased by his veneration for fuch honourable fentiments, carried him at last beyond all bounds of reason; and he offered to share his throne, as well as his heart, with the woman, whose beauty of person, and dignity of character, seemed so well to entitle her to both. The marriage was celebrated privately at Grafton *: The fecret was carefully kept for fome time : No one fufpected, that fo libertine a prince could facrifice fo much to a romantic paffion : And there were in particular ftrong reafons, which at that time rendered this ftep in the highest degree dangerous and imprudent.

THE King, defirous to fecure his throne, as well by the profpect of iffue, as by foreign alliances, had, a little before, determined to make application to fome neighbouring princes; and he had cast his eye on Bona of Savoy, fister to the Queen of France, who, he hoped, would, by his marrying her, enfure him the friendship of that power, which was alone both able and inclined to give support and affiftance to his rival. To render the negotiation more fuccessful, the earl of Warwic had been difpatched to Paris, where the princefs then refided; he had demanded Bona in marriage for the King; his propofals had been accepted; the treaty was fully concluded; and nothing remained but the ratification of the terms agreed on, and the bringing over the princefs into England +. But when

* Hall, fol. 193. Fabian, fol. 216. + Hall, fol. 193. Habington, p. 437. Holingfhed, p. 667. Grafton, p. 665. Polyd. Virg. p. 513. the VOL. II. 3 E 1464.

Chap. XXII. the fecret of Edward's marriage broke out, the haughty earl, deeming himfelf affronted, both by being employed in this deceitful negotiation, and by being kept 1464. a stranger to the King's intentions, who had owed every thing to his friendship, immediately returned to England, inflamed with rage and indignation. The influence of paffion, over fo young a man as Edward, might have ferved as an excufe for his imprudent conduct, had he deigned to acknowledge his error, or had pleaded his weakness as an apology : But his faulty shame or pride prevented him from fo much as mentioning the affair to Warwic : and that nobieman was allowed to depart the court, full of the fame ill humour and difcontent, which he brought to it.

Warwic difgusted.

1466.

EVERY incident now tended to widen the breach between the King and this powerful subject. The Queen lost not her influence by marriage; and she was equally folicitous to draw every grace and favour to her own friends and kindred, and to exclude those of the earl, whom she regarded as her mortal enemy. Her father was created earl of Rivers : He was made lord treasurer in the room of lord Mountjoy * : He was invefted in the office of conftable for life ; and his fon received the furvivance of that high dignity +. The fame young nobleman was married to the only daughter of lord Scales, enjoyed the great eftate of that family, and had the title of Scales conferred upon him. Catharine, the Queen's fifter, was married to the young duke of Buckingham, who was a ward of the crown 1: Mary, another of her fifters, espoufed William Herbert, created earl of Huntingdon : Anne, a third fifter, was given in marriage to the fon and heir of Gray, lord Ruthyn, created earl of Kent §. The daughter and heir of the duke of Exeter, who was also the King's neice, was contracted to fir Thomas Gray, one of the Queen's fons by her former hufband; and as the lord Montague was treating of a marriage between his fon and this lady, the preference given to young Gray was deemed an injury and affront to the whole family of Nevil.

THE earl of Warwic could not endure the leaft diminution of that credit, which he had long enjoyed, and which he thought, he had merited by fuch important fervices. Tho' he had received fo many grants from the crown, that the revenue, arifing from them, amounted, befides his patrimonial effate, to 80,000 crowns a year, according to the computation of Philip de Comines II; his ambitious fpirit was still diffatisfied, fo long as he faw others surpasshim in authority and influence with the King +. Edward alfo, jealous of that power which had fupported him, and which he himfelf had contributed ftill higher to exalt, was well-pleafed to Chap. XXII. raife up rivals in credit to the earl of Warwic; and he juftified by this political view, his extreme partiality to the Queen's kindred. But the other nobility of England, envying the fudden growth of the Widevilles*, were more inclined to take part with Warwic's difcontent, to whole grandeur they were already accuftomed, and who had reconciled them to his fuperiority by his gracious and popular manners. And as Edward obtained from parliament a general refumption of all grants, which he had made fince his acceffion, and which had extremely impoverified the crown +; this act, tho' it paffed with fome exceptions, particularly one in favour of the earl of Warwic, gave a general alarm to the nobility, and difgusted many, even zealous, partizans of the family of York.

* W. Wyrcefter, p. 506. + Rymer, vol. 11. p. 581. ‡ W. Wyrcefter, p. 505. § W. Wyrcefter, p. 506. || Liv. 3. chap. 4. 4 Polyd. Virg. p. 514.

But the most confiderable affociate, whom Warwic acquired to his party, was George, duke of Clarence, the King's fecond brother. This prince deemed himfelf no lefs injured than the other grandees, by the uncontrouled influence of the queen and her relations; and as his fortunes were still left on a precarious footing, while theirs were fully eftablished, this neglect, joined to his unquiet and reftless spirit, inclined him to give countenance to all the male-contents t. The favourable opportunity of gaining him was efpied by the earl of Warwic, who offered him in marriage his eldeft daughter, and co-heir of his immenfe fortunes. a fettlement, which, as it was fuperior to any that the King himfelf could confer upon him, immediately attached him to the earl's party §. Thus an extensive and dangerous combination was infenfibly formed against Edward and his miniftry: Tho' the object of the malecontents was not at prefent to overturn the throne, it was difficult to forefee the extremities, to which they might be carried ; and as opposition to an administration was always in those ages profecuted by force of arms, civil convultions and diforders were likely to be foon the refult of thefe intrigues and confederacies.

WHILE this cloud was gathering at home, Edward carried his views abroad, Alliance with and endeavoured to fecure himfelf against his factious nobility, by entering into the duke of Burgundy. foreign alliances. The dark and dangerous ambition of Lewis XI. the more it was known, the greater alarm it excited among all his neighbours and vaffals; and as it was supported by great abilities, and unrestrained by any principles of faith or humanity, they found no fecurity to themfelves but by a jealous combination. against him. Philip, duke of Burgundy, was now dead : His rich and extenfive dominions were devolved to Charles, his only fon, whole martial difpolition

* Hift. Croyl. cont. p. 539. + W. Wyrcefter, p. 508. 1 Grafton, p. 673. § W. Wyrcefter, p. 511. Hall, fol. 200. Habington, p. 439. Holingthed, p. 671. Polyd. Virg. p. 515.

Stand will a B 2 and 1 boy quilbre acquired

1486.

hallo

1466.

Chap. XXII. acquired him the firname of Hardy, and whole ambition, more outrageous than that of Lewis, but feconded by lefs power and policy, was regarded with a more favourable eye by the other powers of Europe. The opposition of interests, and ftill more, a natural antipathy of character, produced a declared animofity between these two bad princes; and Edward was thus secure of the fincere attachment of either of them, for whom he should choose to declare himself. The duke of Burgundy, being descended by his mother, a daughter of Portugal, from John of Gaunt, was naturally inclined to favour the house of Lancaster *: But this confideration was eafily overballanced by politicks; and Charles, perceiving the interest of that house to be extremely decayed in England, fent over his natural brother, commonly called the baftard of Burgundy, to carry in his name proposals of marriage to Margaret the King's fifter. The alliance of Burgundy was more popular with the English, than that of France; the commercial interests of the two nations invited the princes to a close union; their common jealoufy of Lewis was a natural cement between them; and Edward, pleafed with firengthening himfelf by fo potent a confederate, foon concluded the alliance, and beftowed his fifter upon Charles +. A league, which Edward at the fame time concluded with the duke of Brittany, feemed both to encrease his fecurity, and to open to him the profpect of rivalling his predeceffors in those foreign conquefts, which, however fhort-lived and unprofitable, had rendered their reign fo popular and illustrious t.

1469.

1468.

Infurrection in Yorkshire.

BUT whatever ambitious schemes the King might have built on these alliances, they were foon frustrated by intestine commotions, which engrossed all his attention. These diforders probably arose not immediately from the intrigues of the earl of Warwic, but from accident, affifted by the turbulent fpirit of the age, by the general humour of discontent which that popular nobleman had inftilled into the nation, and perhaps by fome remains of attachment to the house of Lancafter. The hospital of St. Leonards near York, had received, from an antient grant of King Athelftane, a right of levying a thrave of corn from every ploughland in the county; and as these charitable establishments are very liable to abuse, the country people complained, that the revenue of the hospital was no longer expended for the relief of the poor, but was fecreted by the managers, and employed for their private purpofes. After long repining at the contribution, they refused payment : Ecclesiaftical and civil censures were issued against them : Their goods were diffrained, and their perfons thrown into jail: Till, as their ill-humour

* Comines, liv. 3. chap. 4, 6. Parliament, Hift. vol. 2. p. 332. † Hall, fol. 169, 197.

‡ W. Wyreefter, p. 5.

daily

daily encreafed, they role in arms; fell upon the officers of the hofpital, whom Chap. XXII. 14.69. they put to the fword ; and proceeded in a body, fifteen thousand ftrong, to the gates of York *. The lord Montague, who commanded in those parts, opposed himfelf to their progrefs; and having been fo fortunate in a fkirmish as to feize Robert Hulderne their leader, he ordered him immediately to be led to execution ; according to the barbarous and illegal practice of those times +. The rebels, however, ftill continued in arms; and being foon headed by men of greater diftinction, Sir Henry Nevil, fon of lord Latimer, and Sir John Coniers, they advanced fouthwards, and began to appear dangerous to the government. Herbert, earl of Pembroke, who had received that title on the forfeiture of Jasper Tudor, was ordered by Edward to march against them at the head of a body of Welfhmen; and he was joined by five thousand archers under the command of Stafford, earl of Devonshire, who had fucceeded in that title to the family of Courtney, which had also been forfeited. But a trivial difference about quartershaving begot an animolity between these two noblemen, the earl of Devonshire retired with his archers, and left Pembroke alone to encounter the rebels 1. The two armies approached near Banbury; and Pembroke, having prevailed in a Battle of Bant fkirmish, and having taken Sir Henry Nevil prifoner, ordered him immediately bury. to be put to death, without any form of process. This execution enraged, without terrifying, the rebels: They attacked the Welfh army, routed them, put 26th July, them to the fword without mercy; and having feized Pembroke, they took immediate revenge upon him for the death of their leader §. The King, imputing this misfortune to the earl of Devonthire, who had deferted Pembroke, ordered him to be executed in a like fummary manner. But these fpeedy executions, or rather open murders, did not ftop there : The northern rebels, fending a party to Grafton, feized the earl of Rivers and his fon, John; men who had become obnoxious by their near relation to the King and his partiality towardsthem : And these noblemen were immediately executed by orders from Sir John Coniers ||.

THERE is no part of English history fince the Conquest, so obscure, so uncertain, so little authentic or confistent, as that of the wars between the two Rofes: Historians differ about many material circumstances; some events of the utmost confequence, in which they almost all agree, are incredible and contradicted by records \downarrow ; and it is remarkable, that this profound darkness falls upon us just on the

* Hall, fol. 200. Holingshed, p. 672. Polyd. Virg. p. 516. ‡ Stowe, p. 221. Holingshed, p. 672. Fragm. ad finem Sprotti. Grafton, p. 676, 677. || Fabian, fol. 217. • Grafton, p. 676, 677.

4 We shall give an instance: Almost all the historians, even Comines, and the continuator of the annals of Croyland, affert, that Edward was about this time taken prisoner by Clarence and Warwic, and

398

1469.

Chap. XXII. the eve of the reftoration of letters, and when the art of Printing was already known in Europe. All we can diffinguish with certainty thro' the deep cloud, which covers that period, is a scene of horror and bloodshed, favage manners, arbitrary executions, and treacherous difhonourable conduct in all parties. There is no poffibility, for inftance, of accounting for the views and intentions of the earl of Warwic at this time. It is agreed, that he refided, with his fon in law, the duke of Clarence, in his government of Calais during the commencement of this rebellion; and that his brother, Montague, acted with vigour against the northern rebels. We may thence prefume, that the infurrection had not proceeded from the fecret councils and infligation of Warwic; tho' the murder, committed by the rebels, on the earl of Rivers, his capital enemy, forms, on the other hand, a violent prefumption against him. He and Clarence came over to England, offered their fervice to Edward, were received without any fuspicion, were entrufted by him in the highest commands *, and still perfevered in their fidelity. Soon after, we find the rebels quieted and difperfed by a general pardon granted by Edward from the advice of the earl of Warwic : But why fo courageous a prince, if fecure of Warwic's fidelity, fhould have granted a general pardon to men, who had been guilty of fuch violent and perfonal outrages against him, is not intelligible; nor why that nobleman, if unfaithful, should have endeavoured to appeafe a rebellion, of which he was able to make fuch advantages. But it appears, that, after this infurrection, there was an interval of peace, during which the King loaded the family of Nevil with honours and favours of the highest nature : He made the lord Montague a marquess, by the fame name : He created his fon, George, duke of Bedford +: He declared publicly his inten-> and was committed to the cuftody of the archbishop of York, brother to the earl; but being allowed to take the diversion of hunting by this prelate, he made his escape, and afterwards chaced the rebels out of the kingdom. But that all the flory is falle appears from Rymer, where we find, that the King, throughout all this period, continually exercifed his authority, and never was interrupted in his government. On the 7th of March 1470, he gives a commission of array to Clarence, whom he then imagined a good fubject; and on the 23d of the fame month, we find him iffuing an order for apprehending him. Befides, in the King's manifesto against the duke and earl (Clauf. 10 Edw. IV. m. 7, 8.) where he enumerates all their treasons, he mentions no fuch fact: He does not fo much as accuse them of exciting young Welles's rebellion : He only fays, that they exhorted him to continue in his rebellion. We may judge how smaller facts will be misrepresented by historians, who can in the most material transactions mistake fo grossly. There may even some foruple arise with regard to the propofals of marriage made to Bona of Savoy; tho' almost all the historians concur in it, and the fact be very likely in itself: For there are no traces in Rymer of any fuch embaffy of Warwic's to France. The chief certainty in this and the preceding reign arifes either from public records, or from the notice taken of certain passages by the French historians. On the contrary, for fome centuries after the Conquest, the French hiftory is not compleat without the affiftance of English authors.

* Rymer, vol. 11. p. 647, 649, 650. + Cotton, p. 702.

3

tion

where any point to E D W A R D IV.

tion of marrying that young nobleman to his eldest daughter, Elizabeth, who, Chap. XXII. as he had yet no fons, was the prefumptive heir of the crown : Yet we find, that, foon after, being invited to a feast by the archbishop of York, a younger brother of Warwic and Montague, he entertained a fudden fuspicion, that they intended to feize his perfon or to murder him : And he abruptly departed from the entertainment *.

Soon after, there broke out another rebellion, which is as unaccountable as all the preceding events; chiefly becaufe no fufficient reafon is affigned for it, and becaufe, fo far as it appears, the family of Nevil had no hand in exciting and fomenting it. It arofe in Lincolnfhire, and was headed by Sir Robert Welles, fon to the lord of that name. The army of the rebels amounted to 30,000 men; but the lord Welles himfelf, far from giving countenance to them, fled into a fanctuary, in order to fecure his perfon against the King's anger or fuspicions. He was drawn from this retreat by a promife of fafety; and was foon after, notwithstanding this affurance, beheaded, along with Sir Thomas Dymoc, by orders from Edward+. The King fought a battle with the rebels, defeated them, took Sir Robert Welles and Sir Thomas Launde prifoners, and ordered them immediately to be beheaded.

EDWARD, during these transactions, had so little jealousy of the earl of Warwic or duke of Clarence, that he granted them commissions of array for levying forces against the rebels 1 : But these noblemen, so soon as they left the court, raifed troops in their own name, iffued declarations against the government, and complained of grievances, oppreffions, and bad minifters. The unexpected defeat of Welles difconcerted all their measures; and they retired northwards into Lancashire, where they expected to be joined by lord Stanley, who had married the earl of Warwic's fifter. But as that nobleman refused all concurrence with Warwic and them, and as lord Montague alfo remained quiet in Yorkshire; they were oblig- Clarence ed to diffolve their army, and to fly into Devonshire, where they embarked and banished. made fail towards Calais §.

THE deputy governor, whom Warwic had left at Calais, was one Vaucler, a Gafcon, who, feeing the earl return in this miferable condition, refused him admiffion into the place; and would not fo much as permit the dutchefs of Cla-

* Fragm. E. IV. ad fin. Sprotti. + Hall, fol. '204. Fabian, fol. 218. Habington, p. 442. Holingshed, p. 674. ‡ Rymer, vol. 11. p. 652.

§ The King offered by proclamation a reward of 1000 pounds, or 100 pounds a year in land, to any that would feize them. Whence we may learn that land was at that time fold for about ten years purchafe. See Rymer, vol. 2. p. 654.

1470.

1 3th March.

rence

1470.

400

Chap. XXII. rence to land, tho' a few days before, the had been delivered on thip board of a fon, and was at that time extremely difordered by fickness. With difficulty, he would allow a few flaggons of wine to be carried to the ship for the use of the ladies: But as he was a man of fagacity, and well acquainted with the revolutions, to which England was fubject, he fecretly apologized to Warwic for this appearance of infidelity, and reprefented it as proceeding entirely from zeal for his fervice. He faid, that the place was ill supplied with provisions; that he could not depend on the attachment of the garrifon; that the inhabitants, who lived by the English commerce, would certainly declare for the established government; that the place was at prefent unable to refift the power of England on the one hand, and that of the duke of Burgundy on the other; and that, by feeming to declare for Edward, he would acquire the confidence of that prince, and ftill keep it in his power, when it fhould become fafe and prudent, to reftore the fortress to its antient master *. It is uncertain, whether Warwic was fatisfied with this apology, or fufpected a double infidelity in Vaucler; but he feigned to be entirely convinced by him; and having feized fome Flemish veffels which he found lying off Calais, he immediately made fail towards France.

> THE King of France, uneasy at the close conjunction between-Edward and the duke of Burgundy, received with the greatest demonstrations of regard and friendship the unfortunate Warwic +, with whom he had formerly maintained a fecret correspondence, and whom he hoped still to make his instrument in overturning the government of England, and re-establishing the house of Lancaster. No animolity was ever greater than that which had long prevailed between that house and the earl of Warwic. His father had been executed by orders from Margaret: He himfelf had twice reduced Henry to captivity, had banifhed the queen, had put to death all their most zealous partizans either in the field or on the fcaffold, and had occasioned innumerable ills to that unhappy family. For this reafon, believing that fuch inveterate rancour would never admit of any cordial reconciliation, he had not mentioned Henry's name, when he took arms against Edward; and he rather endeavoured to prevail by means of his own adherents, than revive a party, which he fincerely hated. But his prefent diffrefies and the entreaties of Lewis, made him hearken to terms of accommodation; and Margaret being fent for from Angers, where fhe then refided, an agreement was from common interest soon formed between them. It was stipulated, that Warwic should adopt the cause of Henry, and endeavour to reftore him to liberty and to re-eftablish him on the throne; that the administration of the government, during the minority of young Edward, Henry's fon, fhould refide

* Polyd. Virg. p. 519. * Comines, liv. 3' chap. 4. Hall, fol. 205.

4

fide conjointly in the earl of Warwic and duke of Clarence; that prince Ed- Chap. XXII, ward fhould marry the lady Anne, fecond daughter of that nobleman; and that the crown, in cafe of the failure of male-iffue in that prince, should descend to the duke of Clarence, to the entire exclusion of King Edward and his posterity. Never was confederacy on all fides, lefs natural or more evidently the work of neceffity: But Warwic hoped, that all former paffions of the Lancastrians might be loft in prefent political views; and that at worft, the independent power of his family, and the affections of the people, would be able to give him fecurity, and enable sim to exact the full performance of all the conditions agreed on. The marriage of prince Edward with the lady Anne was immediately celebrated in France.

EDWARD reasonably forefaw, that it would be easy to diffolve an alliance, compoled of fuch difcordant parts. For this purpole, he fent over a lady of great fagacity and addrefs, who belonged to the train of the dutchefs of Clarence, and who, under colour of attending her miftrefs, was empowered to negotiate with the duke, and renew the connexions of that prince with his own family *. She reprefented to Clarence, that he had unwarily, to his own ruin, become the inftrument of Warwic's vengeance, and had thrown himfelf entirely in the power of his most inveterate enemies; that the mortal injuries, which the one royal family had fuffered from the other, were now paft all forgivenefs, and no idea of an imaginary union in interests could ever fuffice to obliterate them; that even if the leaders were willing to forget past offences, the animolity of their adherents would prevent a fincere coalition of parties, and would, in fpite of all temporary and verbal agreements, preferve an eternal oppolition of measures between them; and that a prince, who deferted his own kindred, and joined the murderers of his father, left himself single, without friends, without protection, and would not, when misfortunes inevitably fell upon him, be fo much as entitled to any pity or regard from the reft of mankind. Clarence was only one and twenty years of age, and feems to have poffeffed but a flender capacity; yet he could eafily fee the force of these reasons; and on the promise of forgiveness and favour from his brother, he fecretly engaged, on a favourable opportunity, to defert the earl of Warwic, and abandon the Lancastrian party.

DURING this negotiation, Warwic was fecretly carrying on a correspondence of the fame nature with his brother, the marquefs of Montague, who was entirely trufted by Edward; and like motives produced a like refolution in that nobleman. The marquefs alfo, that he might render the projected blow the more

* Comines, liv. 3. chap. 5. Hall, fol. 207. Holingshed, p. 675. VOL. II. 3 F deadly

1470.

1470.

Chap. XXII. deadly and incurable, refolved, on his fide, to watch a favourable opportunity for committing bis perfidy, and still to maintain the appearance of being a zealous adherent to the house of York.

> AFTER these mutual fnares were thus carefully laid, the decision of the quarrel advanced apace. Lewis prepared a fleet to effort the earl of Warwic, and offered him a fupply of men and money*. The duke of Burgundy, on the other hand, enraged at that nobleman for his feizure of the Flemish ships before Calais, and anxious to fupport the reigning family in England, with whom his own inteachts were now collected, fitted out a larger fleet, with which he guarded the Channel; and he inceffantly warned his brother in law of the imminent perils, to which he was exposed. But Edward, tho' always brave and often active, had very little forefight or penetration : He was not fenfible of his danger : He made no fuitable preparations against the earl of Warwie+: He even faid, that the duke might fpare himfelf the trouble of guarding the feas, and that he wished for nothing more than to fee Warwic fet foot on English ground 1. A vain confidence in his own prowefs, joined to the immoderate love of pleafure, had made him incapable of all found reafon and reflection.

Septr. Warwic and Clarence resurn.

THE event soon happened, of which Edward seemed so defirous. A storm difperfed the Flemish navy, and left the feas open to Warwic §. That nobleman feized the opportunity, and fetting fail, quickly landed at Dartmouth, with the duke of Clarence, the earls of Oxford and Pembroke, and a fmall body of troops ; while the King was in the north, engaged in suppressing an infurrection, which had been raifed by the lord Fitz-Hugh, brother in law to Warwic. The scene, which enfues, feems more like the fiction of a poem or romance than an event in true hiftory. The prodigious popularity of Warwic], the zeal of the Lancastrin party, the spirit of discontent with which many were infected, and the general inftability of the English nation, occasioned by the late frequent revolutions, drew fuch multitudes to his standard, that in a very few days his army amounted to fixty thousand men, and was continually encreasing. Edward haf. tened fouthwards to encounter him; and the two armies approached each other near Nottingham, where a decifive act on was every moment expected. The rapidity of Warwic's progrefs had incapacitated the duke of Clarence from executing bis plan of treachery; and the marquefs of Montague had here the opportunity of ftriking the first blow. He communicated the defign to his adherents, who promifed him their concurrence : They took to arms in the night time, and haftened with loud acclamations to Edward's quarters : The King was alarmed at

* Comines, liv. 3. chap. 4. Hall, fol. 207. + Grafton, p. 687. Comines, liv. || Hall, fol 295. § Comines, liv. 3. chap. 5. 3. chap. 5. Hall, fol. 208. the the noife, and flarting from his bed, heard the cry of war, ufually employed by Chap. XXII. the Lancastrian party. Lord Hastings, his chamberlain, informed him of the danger, and urged him to make his escape by speedy flight from an army, where he had fo many concealed enemies, and where few feemed to be zealoufly attached to his fervice. He had just time to get on horfeback, and to hurry with a fmall retinue to Lynne, in Norfolk, where he luckily found fome fhips ready, on Edward IV. board which he prefently embarked *. And after this manner, the earl of War-expelled. wic, in no longer space than eleven days after his first landing, was left entire master of the kingdom.

But Edward's danger did not end with his embarkation. The Easterlings or Hanfe-Towns were then at war both with France and England; and fome thips of these people, hovering on the English coast, espied the King's veffels, and gave chace to them; nor was it without extreme difficulty, that he made his escape into the port of Alcmaer in Holland. He had fled from England with fuch precipitation, that he had carried nothing of value along with him; and the only reward, which he could beftow on the captain of the veffel, that brought him over, was a robe, lined with fables; promifing him an ample recompence, if fortune should ever become more propitious to him +.

IT is not likely, that Edward could be very fond of prefenting himfelf in this lamentable condition before the duke of Burgundy; and that having fo fuddenly, after his mighty vaunts, loft all footing in his own kingdom, he could be infenfible to the ridicule, which must attend him in the eyes of that prince. The duke, on his part, was no less embarraffed how he should receive the dethroned. monarch. As he had ever borne a greater affection to the house of Lancaster than to that of York, nothing but political views had engaged him to contract an alliance with the latter family; and he forefaw, that probably the revolution in England would now turn this alliance against him, and render the reigning family in that kingdom his implacable and jealous enemy. For this reafon, when the first rumor of that event reached him, attended with the circumstance of Edward's death, he feemed rather pleafed with the cataftrophe; and it was no agreeable difappointment to find, that he must either undergo the burthen of fupporting an exiled prince, or the difhonour of abandoning fo near a relation 1. He began already to fay, that his connexions were with the kingdom of England, not with the King; and that it was indifferent to him, whether the name of Edward or that of Henry was employed in the articles of treaty §. Thefe

* Comines, liv. 3. chap. 5. Hall, fol. 208. + Comines, liv. 3. chap. 5.

‡ Comines, liv 3. chap. 5. Habington, p. 445. § Comines, liv. 3. chap. 6. Hall, fol. 211.

3 F 2 fenti-

403

1470.

Chap. XXII. fentiments were continually firengthened by the fublequent events. Vaucler, the 1470. deputy governor of Calais, tho' he had been confirmed in his command by Edward, and even received an annual penfion from the duke of Burgundy on account of his fidelity to the crown *, no fooner faw his old mafter, Warwic, reinftated in authority, than he declared for him, and with great demonftrations of zeal and attachment, put the whole garrifon in his livery †. And the intelligence, which the duke received every day from England, feemed to promife an entire and full fettlement in the family of Lancafter.

Henry VI. reftored.

IMMEDIATELY after Edward's flight had left the kingdom entirely at Warwic's disposal, that nobleman hastened to London; and taking Henry from his confinement in the Tower, into which he had been the chief caufe of throwing him, he proclaimed him King with great folemnity. A parliament was fummoned in the name of that prince to meet at Weftminster; and as this affembly could pretend to no liberty amidft fuch enraged factions, governed by fuch an impetuous spirit as Warwic, their votes were entirely dictated by the ruling party 1. The treaty with Margaret was here fully executed : Henry was recognized for lawful King; but his incapacity for government being avowed, the regency was entrusted to Warwic and Clarence till the majority of prince Edward; and in default of that prince's iffue, Clarence was declared fucceffor to the crown. The usual business also of reversals went on without opposition : Every statute, made, during the reign of Edward, was repealed; that prince was declared to be an ufurper; he and his adherents were attainted; and in particular, Richard, duke of Glocefter, his younger brother : All the attainders of the Lancaftrians, the dukes of Somerfet and Exeter, the earls of Richmond, Pembroke, Oxford and Ormond, were reverfed; and every one was reflored, who had loft either honours or fortune, by his former adherence to the caufe of Henry.

THE ruling party were more fparing in their executions, than was usual after any revolution during those violent times. The only victim of diffinction was John Tibetot, earl of Worcester, constable of England. This accomplished perfon, born in an age and nation where the nobility valued themselves on ignorance as their privilege, and left learning to monks and schoolmasters, for whom indeed the spurious erudition that prevailed, was best fitted, had been struck with the first rays of true science, which began to punetrate from the south, and had been zealous, by his exhortations and example, to propagate the love of letters among his unpolished countrymen. It is pretended, that knowledge had not produced on this nobleman himself, the effect which fo naturally attends it, of hu-

Grafton, p. 683. + Comines, liv. 3. chap. 6. Hall, fol. 211.

1 Grafton, p. 691. Fabian, fol. 219. Polyd. Virg. p. 521.

maniz-

manizing the temper, and foftening the heart *; and that he had enraged the Chap. XXII. Lancaftrians against him, by the feverities which he exercised upon them, during the prevalence of his own party. He endeavoured to conceal himfelf after the flight of Edward; but was caught on the top of a tree in the forest of Weybridge, was conducted to London, tried before the earl of Oxford, condemned and executed. All the other confiderable Yorkifts either fled beyond fea, or took shelter in fanctuaries; where the ecclefiaftical privileges offered them protection. In London alone, it is computed, that no lefs than 2000 perfons faved themfelves in this manner +; and among the reft, Edward's Queen, who was there delivered of a fon, called by his father's name 1.

QUEEN Margaret, the other rival Queen, had not yet appeared in England» but on receiving intelligence of Warwic's fuccefs, was preparing with prince Edward for her journey. All the banifhed Lancastrians flocked to her; and among the reft, the duke of Somerfet, fon to the duke beheaded after the battle of Hexham. This nobleman, who had long been regarded as head of the party, had fled into the Low Countries on the difcomfiture of his friends; and as he concealed his name and quality, he had languished in the most extreme want and indigence. Philip de Comines tells us §, that he himfelf there faw him, as well as the duke of Exeter, in a condition no better than that of the meaneft beggar; till being discovered by Philip duke of Burgundy, they had small pensions allowed them, and were living in filence and obscurity, when the success of their party called them from their retreat. But both Somerfet and Margaret were detained by contrary winds, from reaching England ||, till a new revolution in that kingdom, no lefs fudden and furprizing than the former, threw them into greater mifery than that from which they had just emerged.

THO' the duke of Burgundy, by neglecting Edward, and paying court to the established government, had endeavoured to conciliate the friendship of the Lancaftrians, he found that they had not fucceeded to his wish; and the antient connexions between the King of France, and the earl of Warwic, still held him in great doubt and anxiety 4. This nobleman, too haftily regarding Charles as his determined enemy, had fent over to Calais a body of 4000 men, who committed inroads on the Low-countries *; and the duke of Burgundy faw himfelf in danger of being oppreffed by the united arms of France and of England. He refolved therefore to grant fome affiftance to his brother-in-law; but in fuch a covert manner, as should give the least offence possible to the government of Eng-

1 Hall, fol. 210. + Comines, liv. 3. chap. 7. * Hall, fol. 210. Stowe, p. 422. Stowe, p. 423. Holingshed, p. 677. Grafton, p. 690. § Liv. 3. chap. 4. || Graf-* Comines, liv. 3. chap. 6. ton, p. 692. Polyd. Virg. p. 522. 4 Hall, fol. 205. land. 2

1470.

1471.

Edward IV.

returns.

Chap. XXII. land. He equipped four large vessels, in the name of some private merchants, at Terveer in Zealand ; and caufing fourteen ships to be fecretly hired of the Easterlings, he delivered this fmall fquadron to Edward, who, receiving alfo a fum of money from the duke, immediately fet fail for England. No fooner was Charles informed of his departure, than he issued a proclamation inhibiting all his fubjects to give him countenance or affiftance *; an artifice which could not blind the earl of Warwic, but which might ferve as a decent pretence, if he was fo difpofed, for maintaining friendship with the house of Burgundy.

EDWARD, impatient to take revenge of his enemies, and to recover his loft authority, made an attempt to land with his forces, which exceeded not 2000 men, on the coaft of Norfolk; but being there repulsed +, he failed northwards, 25th March. and difembarked at Ravenfpur in Yorkshire. Finding, that the new magistrates, who had been placed in authority by the earl of Warwic, kept the people from joining him, he pretended, and even made oath, that he came not to challenge the crown, but only the inheritance of the house of York, which of right belonged to him, and that he did not intend to raife a civil war in the kingdom 1. His partizans every moment flocked to his ftandard : He was admitted into the city of York §: And he was foon in a fituation, which gave him hopes of fuccefs in all his claims and pretensions. The marquis of Montague commanded in the northern counties; but from some mysterious reasons, which, as well as many other important transactions in that age, no historian has cleared up, he totally neglected the beginnings of an infurrection, which he ought to have efteemed fo formidable ||. Warwic affembled an army at Leicefter, with an intention of meeting and of giving battle to the enemy; but Edward, by taking another road, paffed him unmolefted, and prefented himfelf before the gates of London. Had he here been refused admittance, he was totally ruined : But there were many causes, which inclined the citizens to favour him. His numerous friends, iffuing forth from their fanctuaries, were active in his caufe; many rich merchants, who had formerly lent him money, faw no other chance for their payment but his reftoration; the city-dames, who had been liberal of their favours to him, and who ftill retained an affection for this young and gallant prince, fwayed their hufbands and friends in his behalf \downarrow ; and above all, the archbishop of York, Warwic's brother, to whom the care of the city was committed, had feeretly; from unknown auth April. reafons, entered into a correspondence with him, and he facilitated Edward's ad-

" Comines, liv. 3. chap. 6. + Holingsched, p. 679. ‡ Hall, fol. 214. Habington, p. 447. Holingshed, p. 679. Grafton, p. 698. Fabian, fol. 219. § Polyd. Virg. p. 524. Leland's collect. vol. 2. p. 504. || Hall, fol. 215. Habington, p. 447. Holing-+ Comines, liv. 3. chap. 7. shed, p. 680. Polyd. Virg. p. 524.

mission

EDWARD IV.

mission into London. The most likely cause, which can be assigned for those Chap. XXII. multiplied infidelities, even in the family itfelf of Nevil, is the spirit of faction, which, when it becomes inveterate, it is very difficult for any man entirely to shake off. These persons, who had long diftinguished themselves in the York party, were unable to act with zeal and cordiality for the fupport of the Lancaftrians; and they were inclined, by every profpect of favour or accommodation, offered them by Edward, to return to their antient connexions. However this may be, Edward's entrance into London, made him mafter not only of that rich and powerful city, but also of the perfon of Henry, who, defined to be the perpetual sport of fortune, thus fell again into the hands of his enemies *.

IT appears not, that Warwic, during his fort administration, which had continued only fix months, had been guilty of any unpopular acts, or had any wife deferved to forfeit that general favour, with which he had fo lately overwhelmed Edward. But this prince, who was formerly the defendant, was now the aggreffor; and having overcome the difficulties, which always attend the beginnings of an infurrection, poffeffed many advantages above his enemy: His partizans were actuated by that zeal and courage, which the notion of an attack infpires; his opponents were intimidated for a like reafon; every one, who had been difappointed in the hopes, which he had entertained from Warwic's elevation, either became a cool friend, or an open enemy to that nobleman; and each malecontent, from whatever caufe, proved an acceffion to Edward's army. The King, therefore, found himself in a condition to face the earl of Warwic, who, being reinforced by his fon in-law, the duke of Clarence, and his brother the marquis of Montague, took post at Barnet, in the neighbourhood of London. The arrival of Queen Margaret was every day expected, who would have drawn together all the true Lancastrians, and have brought a mighty accession to Warwic's forces : But this very confideration proved a motive to the earl rather to hurry on a decifive action, than to thare the victory with rivals and antient enemies, who, he forefaw, would, in cafe of fuccefs, claim the chief merit in the enterprize +. But while his jealoufy was all directed towards that fide, he overlooked the dangerous infidelity of friends, who lay the neareft to his bofom. His brother, Montague, who had lately temporized, feems now to have remained fincerely attached to the interefts of his family : But his fon in law, tho' bound to him by every tye of honour and gratitude, tho' he shared the power of the regency, tho' he had been invested by Warwic in all the honours and patrimony of the house of York, refolved to fulfil the fecret engagements, which he had formerly taken with his brother, and to support the interests of his own family : He deferted to * Grafton, p. 702.

7

+ Comines, liv. 3 chap. 7.

the 407

1471.

Chap XXII. the King in the night-time, and carried over a body of 12000 men along with 1471. him *. Warwic was now too far advanced to retreat; and as he rejected with difdain all terms of peace offered him by Edward and Clarence, he was obliged 14th April. to hazard a general engagement. The battle was fought with great obflinacy on Battle of Barboth fides: The two armies, in imitation of their leaders, exerted uncommon acts of Warwic. of valour: And the victory remained long undecided between them. But an accident threw at laft the balance to the fide of the Yorkifts. Edward's cognifance was a fun; that of Warwic a ftar with rays; and the miftinefs of the morning rendering it difficult to diftinguifh them, John earl of Oxford, who fought on the fide of the Lancaftrians, was, by miftake, attacked by his friends, and chaced off the field of battle \ddagger . Warwic, contrary to his more ufual practice, engaged that day on foot, refolving to fhow his army, that he meant to fhare every fortune with them, and he was flain in the thickeft of the engagement \ddagger : His brother underwent the fame fate: And as Edward had iffued orders not to give any quarter, a great and undiftinguifhed flaughter was made in the purfuit §. There fell about 1500 on the fide of the conquerors.

> THE fame day that this decifive battle was fought ||, Queen Margaret and her fon, now about eighteen years of age, and a very promifing youth, arrived at Weymouth, fupported by a fmall body of French forces. When this princefs received intelligence of her hufband's captivity, and of the defeat and death of the earl of Warwic, her courage, which had supported her under so many difaftrous events, here quite left her; and fhe immediately forefaw all the difmal confequences of this calamity. She took fanctuary at first in the abbey of Beaulieu \pm : but being encouraged by the appearance of Tudor, earl of Pembroke, and Courtney earl of Devonshire, of the lords Wenloc and St. John, with other men of rank, who exhorted her ftill to hope for fuccefs, fhe refumed her former fpirit, and determined to defend to the utmost the ruins of her fallen fortunes. She advanced thro' the counties of Devon, Somerfet, and Glocefter, encreafing her army on each day's march; but was at last overtaken by the rapid and expeditious Edward, at Teukesbury, on the banks of the Severne. The Lancastrians were here totally defeated : The earl of Devonshire and lord Wenloc, were killed in the field : The duke of Somerfet, and about twenty other perfons of diffinction, having taken shelter in a church, were furrounded, dragged out, and immediately beheaded : About 3000 of their fide fell in battle : And the army was entirely difperfed.

Battle of Teukefbury. 4th May.

> * Grafton, p. 700. Comines, liv. 3. chap. 7. Leland's Collect. vol. 2. p. 505. ton, p. 449. vol. 2. p. 505. ↓ Comines, liv. 3. chap. 7. ↓ Hall, fol. 218. ↓ Leland's Collect. ↓ Leland's C

QUEEN

DWARD IV. E

QUEEN Margaret and her fon were taken prifoners, and brought to the King, Chap. XXII. who afked the prince, after an infulting manner, how he dared to invade his dominions? The young prince, more mindful of his high birth than of his prefent fortune, replied, that he came thither to claim his just inheritance. The ungenerous Edward, infenfible to pity, struck him on the face with his gauntlet; and the dukes of Clarence and Glocefter, lord Haftings and fir Thomas Gray, taking the blow as a fignal for farther violence, hurried the prince into the next apartment, and there dispatched him with their daggers *. Margaret was thrown into the Tower : King Henry expired in that confinement a few days after the battle Murder of of Teukesbury; but whether he died of a natural or violent death is uncertain. ward. It is pretended, and was generally believed, that the duke of Glocester killed 21st May. him with his own hands +: But the universal odium under which that prince's memory defervedly labours, inclined perhaps the nation to aggravate his crimes Death of without any fufficient authority. It is certain however, that I lower in the transferred by the second without any fufficient authority. It is certain, however, that Henry's death was very fudden; and tho' he laboured before under an ill state of health, this circumstance, joined to the general manners of the age, gave a very natural ground of fufpicion; which was rather increafed than diminished, by the exposing of his body to public view. That precaution ferved only to recal many fimilar inftances in the English history, and to suggest the comparison.

ALL the hopes of the Lancastrians seemed now to be utterly extinguished. Every legitimate prince of that family was dead : Almost all the great leaders of the party had perished in battle or on the scaffold : Jasper, earl of Pembroke, who was levying forces in Wales, difperfed his army, when he received intelligence of the battle of Teukefbury; and he fled into Brittany with his nephew, the young earl of Richmond 1. The baftard of Falconbrige, who had levied fome forces, and advanced to London during Edward's absence, was repulsed; his men deferted him; he was taken prifoner and immediately executed §: And peace being now fully reftored to the nation, a parliament was fummoned, which ratified, as ufual, all the acts of the victor, and recognized his legal authority.

But this prince, who had been fo firm and active, and intrepid during the course of adversity, was still unable to resist the allurements of a prosperous fortune; and he wholly devoted himfelf as before, to pleafure and amufement, after he became entirely mafter of his kingdom, and had no longer any enemy who could give him anxiety or alarm. He recovered, however, by this gay and inoffenfive course of life, and by his easy, familiar manners, that popularity, which

* Hall, fol. 221. Habington, p. 453. Holingfhed, p. 688. Polyd. Virg. p. 530. + Co-1 Habington, p. 454. Polyd. Virg. p. 531. mines, Hall, fol. 223. Grafton, p. 703. § Holingshed, p, 689, 690, 693. Hift. Croyl. cont. p. 554. it 3 G

1471.

409

6th Octr.

VOL. II.

1472.

Chap. XXII. it is natural to imagine, he had loft by the repeated cruelties exercifed upon his enemies; and the example also of his jovial feftivity, ferved to abate the former acrimony of faction among his fubjects, and to reftore the focial difpolition, which had been to long interrupted between the opposite parties. All men feemed to be fully fatisfied with the prefent government; and the memory of past calamities ferved only to imprefs the people more ftrongly with a fense of their allegiance, and with the refolution of never incurring any more the hazard of renewing fuch direful fcenes.

> BUT while the King was thus indulging himfelf in pleafure, he was rouzed from the lethargy by a profpect of foreign conquefts, which, it is probable, his defire of popularity, more than the fpirit of ambition, had made him covet. Tho' he deemed himfelf very little beholden to the duke of Burgundy, for the reception which that prince had given him during his exile *, the political interefts of their flates maintained fliil a clofe connexion between them; and they agreed to unite their arms in making a powerful invafion on France. A league was formed, in which Edward flipulated to pass the feas with an army, exceeding 10,000 men, and to invade the French territories : Charles promifed to join him with all his forces : The King was to challenge the crown of France, and to obtain at least the provinces of Normandy and Guienne : The duke was to acquire Champaigne and fome other territories, and to free all his dominions from the burthen of homage to the crown of France : And neither party was to make peace without the confent of the other +. They were the more encouraged to hope for fuccefs from this league, as the count de St. Pol, conftable of France, who was mafter of St. Quintin, and fome towns on the Somme, had fecretly promiled them his affiltance; and there were also hopes of engaging the duke of Brittany to enter into the confederacy.

3474.

THE prospect of a French war was always a fure means of making the parliament open their purfes, as far as the habits of that age would permit. They voted the King a tenth of rents, or two shillings in the pound; which must have been very inaccurately levied, fince it produced only 31,460 pounds; and they added to this supply a whole fifteenth, and three quarters of another \ddagger : But as the King deemed thefe fums still unequal to the undertaking, he attempted to levy money by the way of benevalence; a fort of exaction, which, except during the reign of Henry III. had fcarce ever been practiced in former times, and which, tho' the confent of the parties was pretended to be gained, could not be effected entirely voluntary *. The claufes, annexed to the parliamentary grant, flow Chap. XXII. 1474. fufficiently the fpirit of the nation in this refpect. The money levied by the fifteenth was not to be put into the King's hands, but to be kept in religious houfes; and if the expedition into France did not take place, it was immediately to be refunded to the people. After these grants, the parliament was diffolved, which had fat near two years and a half, and had undergone feveral prorogations; a practice not very usual at that time in England.

+ Rymer, vol. 11. p. 806, 807, 808, &c. 1 Cotton, * Comines, liv. 3. chap. 7. p. 696, 700. Hift. Croyl. cont. 558. entirely

2

EDWARD IV.

THE King paffed over to Calais with an army of 1500 men at arms, and 15000 archers; attended with all the chief nobility of England, who, prognofticating Invation of future fucceffes from the paft, were eager to appear in this great theatre of honour +. But all their fanguine hopes were damped, when they found, on entering the French territories, that neither the conftable opened his gates to them. nor did the duke of Burgundy bring them the smallest affistance. That prince, transported by his ardent temper, had carried all his armies to a great diftance, and had employed them in wars on the frontiers of Germany, and against the duke of Lorrain; and tho' he came in perfon to Edward, and endeavoured to apologize for this breach of treaty, there was no prospect that they would be able this campaign to make a conjunction with the English. This circumstance gave great difguft to the King, and inclined him to hearken to those advances, which Lewis continually made him for an accommodation.

THAT monarch, more fwayed by political views than by the point of honour, deemed no fubmiffions too mean, which could free him from enemies, who had proved fo formidable to his predeceffors, and who, united to fo many other enemies, might still shake the well established government of France. It appears from Comines, that discipline was, at this time, very imperfect among the English ; and that their civil wars, tho' long continued, yet, being always decided by hafty battles, had still left them ignorant of the improvements, which the military art was beginning to receive upon the continent ‡. But as Lewis was fenfible, that the warlike genius of the people would foon render them excellent foldiers, he was far from defpifing them for their prefent want of experience; and he employed all his art to detach them from their alliance with Burgundy. When Edward fent a herald to claim the crown of France, and to carry him a defiance in cafe of refusal; fo far from answering to this bravado in like haughty terms, he replied with great temper, and even made the herald a confiderable prefent § : He took

* Hall, fol. 226. Habington, p. 461. Grafton, p. 719. Fabian, fol. 221.

+ Comines, liv. 4. chap. 5. This author fays, (chap. 11.) that the King artfully brought over fome of the richeft of his fubjects, who, he knew, would be foon tired of the war, and would promote all proposals of peace, which he forefaw, would foon become necessary.

§ Comines, liv. 4. chap. 5. Hall, fol. 227. 1 Comines, liv. 4. chap. 5.

3 G 2

after-1475. France.

1475.

Peace of Pecquigni.

Chap XXII. afterwards an opportunity of fending a herald to the English camp; and giving him directions to apply to the lords Stanley and Howard, who, he heard, were 29th August. friends to peace, he defired the good offices of these noblemen in promoting an accommodation with their mafter *. As Edward was now fallen into like difpofitions, a truce was foon concluded on terms more advantageous than honourable to Lewis. He flipulated to pay Edward immediately 75,000 crowns, on condition that he should withdraw his army from France, and promifed to pay him 50,000 crowns a year during their joint lives: It was added, that the Dauphin, when of age, fhould marry Edward's eldeft daughter +. In order to ratify this treaty, the two monarchs agreed to have a perfonal interview; and for this purpofe, fuitable preparations were made at Pecquigni near Amiens: A close rail was drawn acrofs a bridge in that place, with no larger intervals than would allow the arm to pafs; a precaution which was used to prevent a like accident with that which happened to John duke of Burgundy in his conference with the Dauphin at Montereau. Edward and Lewis came to the oppofite fides; conferred privately together ; and having confirmed their friendship, and interchanged many mutual civilities, they foon after parted 1.

> Lewis was anxious not only to gain the King's friendship; but also that of the nation, and of all the confiderable perfons in the English court. He bestowed penfions, to the amount of 16,000 crowns a year, on feveral of the King's fayourites; on lord Haftings two thousand crowns; on lord Howard and others in proportion; and thefe great ministers were not ashamed thus to receive wages from a foreign prince §. As the two armies, after the conclusion of the truce, remained fome time in the neighbourhood of each other, the English were not only admitted freely into Amiens, where Lewis refided, but had alfo all their charges defrayed, and had wine and victuals furnished them in every inn, without any payments being demanded. They flocked thither in fuch multitudes, that once above nine thousand of them were in the town, and they might have made themfelves mafters of the King's perfon; but Lewis, concluding from their careless and diffolute manner of living, that they had no bad intentions, was careful not to betray the leaft figns of fear or jealoufy. And when Edward, informed of this diforder, defired him to fhut the gates against them ; he replied, that he would never agree to exclude the English from the place where he refided; but Edward, if he pleafed, might recall them, and place his own officers at the gates of Amiens to prevent their returning ||.

> + Rymer, vol. 12. p. 17. ‡ Comines, liv. 4. chap. 9. * Comines, liv. 4. chap. 7. || Comines, liv. 4. chap. 9. Hall, fol. 233. K Hall; fol. 235.

LEWIS'S

413

LEWIS's defire of confirming a mutual amity with England, engaged him even Chap. XXII. to make imprudent advances, which coft him afterwards fome pains to evade. In the conference at Pecquigni, he had faid to Edward, that he wilhed to have a vifit from him at Paris; that he would there endeavour to amufe him with the ladies; and that, in cafe any offences were then committed, he would affign him the cardinal of Bourbon for confessior, who, from fellow-feeling, would not be over and above fevere in the penances, which he would injoin. This hint made deeper impressions than Lewis intended. Lord Howard, who accompanied him back to Amiens, told him, in confidence, that, if he was fo difpofed, it would not be impossible to perfuade Edward to take a journey with him to Paris, where they might make merry together. Lewis pretended at first not to hear this offer; but on Howard's repeating it, he expressed his concern, that his wars with the duke of Burgundy would not permit him to attend his royal gueft, and do him the honours he intended. " Edward," faid he privately to Comines, " is a ve-" ry handfome and a very amorous prince : Some lady at Paris may like him as " well as he shall do her; and may invite him to return in another manner. It " is better that the fea should be between us." *

THIS treaty did very little honour to either of these monarchs : It discovered the imprudence of Edward, who had taken his measures fo ill with his allies, as to be obliged, after fuch expensive preparations, to return without making any acquifitions, equivalent to them : It showed the want of dignity in Lewis, who, rather than run the hazard of a battle, agreed to fubject his kingdom to a tribute, and thus acknowledge the superiority of a neighbouring prince, possessed of much less power and territory than himself. But as Lewis made interest the sole test of honour, he thought, that all the advantages of the treaty were on his fide, and that he had over-reached Edward by fending him out of France on fuch eafy terms. For this reafon, he was very folicitous to conceal his triumph; and he frictly enjoined his courtiers never to fhow the English the least fign of mockery or ridicule against them. But he did not himself very carefully observe so prudent a rule: He could not forbear, one day, in the joy of his heart, throwing out fome raillery on the eafy fimplicity of Edward and his council: When he perceived, that he was overheard by a Gascon, who had settled in England. He was immediately fenfible of the blunder; fent a meffage to the gentleman; and offered him fuch advantages in his own country, as engaged him to remain in France. It is but just, faid he, that I pay the penalty of my talkativeness +.

THE most honourable part of Lewis's treaty with Edward was the stipulation for the liberty of queen Margaret, who, tho' after the death of her hufband and

* Comines, liv. 4. chap. 10. Habington, p. 469.

+ Comines, liv. 3. chap. 10.

fon_

1475.

414

Chap. XXII. fon, fhe could no longer be formidable to the government, was still detained in cuftody by Edward. Lewis paid fifty thousand crowns for her ranfom; and that princefs, who had been to active in the ftage of the world, and who had experienced fuch a variety of fortune, passed the reft of her days in tranquillity and privacy, till the year 1482, when she died : An admirable princess, but more illustrious by her undaunted spirit in adversity, than by her moderation in prosperity. She feems neither to have enjoyed the virtues, nor been fubject to the weakneffes of her fex; and was as much tainted with the ferocity, as endowed with the courage, of that barbarous age, in which fhe lived.

> THO' Edward had fo little reafon to be fatisfied with the conduct of the duke of Burgundy, he referved to that prince a power of acceding to the treaty of Amiens : But Charles, when the offer was made him, haughtily replied, that he was able to support himself without the affistance of England, and that he would make no peace with Lewis, till three months after Edward's return into his own. country. This prince poffeffed all the ambition and courage of a conqueror; but being defective in policy and prudence, qualities no lefs effential, he was unfortunate in all his enterprizes; and perifhed at last in battle against the Swifs *; a people, whom he defpised, and who, tho' brave and free, had hitherto been in a manner overlooked in the general fystem of Europe. This event, which happened in the year 1477, produced a great alteration in the views of all the princes, and was attended with confequences which were felt for many generations. Charles left only one daughter, Mary, by his first wife; and this princess being heir of his opulent and extensive dominions, was courted by all the potentates of Christendom, who contended with each other for the poffession of fo rich a prize. Lewis, the head of her family, might, by a proper application, have obtained this match for the Dauphin, and have thereby united to the crown of France all the provinces of the Low Countries, together with Burgundy, Artois, and Piccardy; which would at once have rendered his kingdom an overmatch for all his neighbours. But a man wholly interested is as rare as one entirely endowed with the oppofite virtue; and Lewis, tho' impregnable to all the fentiments of generofity and friendship, was, on this occasion, carried from the road of true policy by the passions of animolity and revenge. He had imbibed fo deep a hatred of the houfe of Burgundy, that he chofe rather to fubdue the princefs by force of arms, than unite her to his family by marriage : He conquered the dutchy of Burgundy and that part of Picardy, which had been ceded to Philip the Good by the treaty of Arras: But he forced the flates of the Netherlands to beflow their fovereign in marriage on Maximilian of Auftria, fon to the emperor, > > * Comines, liv. 5. chap. 8.

Frede-

1477.

Frederic, from whom they looked for protection in their prefent diffreffes: And Chap. XXII. by these means, France lost the opportunity, which she never could recover, of 1477. making that important acquifition of power and territory.

DURING this interesting crifis, Edward was no less defective in policy, and was no lefs actuated by private paffions, unworthy of a fovereign and a ftatefman. Jealoufy of his brother, Clarence, had caufed him to neglect the advances which were made of marrying that prince, now a widower, to the heirefs of Burgundy *; and he fent her propofals of espousing Anthony earl of Rivers, brother to his queen, who still retained an entire ascendant over him. But the match was rejected with difdain +; and Edward refenting this treatment of his brother in law, permitted Lewis to proceed without interruption in his conquefts over that defenceless ally. Any pretence sufficed him for giving himself up entirely to indolence and pleafure, which were now become his ruling paffions. The only object, which divided his attention, was the improving the revenues of the crown, which had been extremely dilapidated by the neceffities or negligence of his predeceffors; and fome of his expedients for that purpofe, tho' unknown to us, were deemed, during the time, oppreffive to the people 1. The detail of private wrongs naturally escapes the notice of history; but an act of tyranny, of which Edward was guilty in his own family, has been taken notice of by all hiftorians, and has met with very general and deferved cenfure.

THE duke of Clarence, by all his fervices in deferting Warwic, had never been Trial and exable to recover the King's friendship, which he had forfeited by his former con- ecution of the federacy with that nobleman. He was flill regarded at court as a man of a dan-duke of Clagerous and a fickle character; and the imprudent opennefs and violence of his temper, tho' it rendered him much lefs dangerous, tended extremely to multiply his enemies, and to enrage them against him. Among these, he had had the misfortune to give difpleasure to the queen herself, as well as to his brother, the duke of Glocefter, a prince of the deepeft policy, of the most unrelenting ambition, and the least fcrupulous in the means which he employed for the attainment of his pernicious purpofes. A combination between these potent adversaries being fecretly formed against Clarence, it was determined to begin with attacking his friends; in hopes, that, if he patiently fuffered this injury, his pufillanimity would diffionour him in the eyes of the public; if he made refiftance and expressed refentment, his passion would betray him into measures, which might give them advantages against him. The King, hunting one day in the park of Thomas Burdet of Arrow, in Warwickshire, had killed a white buck,

* Polyd. Virg. Hall, fol. 240. Holingfhed, p. 703. Habington, p. 474. Grafton, p. 742. + Hall, fol. 240. 1 Hall, fol. 241. Hift. Croyl. cont. p. 559. which 1477.

416

Chap. XXII. which was a great favourite of the owner; and Burdet, vext at the lofs, broke into a paffion, and wifhed the horns of the deer in the belly of the perfon who had advised the King to commit that infult upon him. This natural expression of refentment, which would have been overlooked or forgotten, had it come from any other perfon, was rendered criminal and capital in that gentleman, by the friendship in which he had the misfortune to live with the duke of Clarence : He was tried for his life; the judges and jury were found fervile enough to condemn him; and he was publickly beheaded at Tyburn for this pretended offence *. About the fame time, one John Stacey, an ecclefiaftic, much connected with the duke, as well as with Burdet, was exposed to a like iniquitous and barbarous perfecution. This perfon, being more learned in mathematics and aftronomy than was usual in that age, lay under the reproach of necromancy with the ignorant vulgar; and the tyrannical court laid hold of this popular rumor to effect his deftruction. He was tried in a court of justice for that imaginary crime; many of the greatest peers countenanced the profecution by their prefence; he was condemned, put to the torture, and executed +.

> THE duke of Clarence was alarmed, when he found these acts of tyranny exercifed on all around him : He reflected on the fate of the good duke of Glocefter in the last reign, who, after seeing the most infamous pretences employed for the destruction of his nearest connections, at last fell himself a victim to the vengeance of his enemies. But Clarence, instead of securing his own life against the prefent danger, by filence and referve, was open and loud in justifying the innocence of his friends, and in exclaiming against the iniquity of their perfecutors. The King, highly offended with his liberty, or using that pretence against him, committed him to the Tower ‡, summoned a parliament, and tried him for his life before the house of peers, the supreme tribunal of the nation.

> THE duke was accused of arraigning public justice, by maintaining the innocence of men, who had been condemned in courts of judicature, and of inveighing against the iniquity of the King, who had given orders for their profecution §. Many rafh expressions were imputed to him, and some too reflecting on his brother's legitimacy; but he was not accused of any overt act of treason; and even the truth of these speeches may be doubted, fince the liberty of judgment was taken from the court, by the King's appearing perfonally as his brother's accufer ||, and pleading the caufe against him. But a fentence of condemnation, even when this extraordinary circumstance had not place, was a neceffary confe-

1478. 76th Jan.

quence,

^{*} Habington, p. 475. Holingsched, p. 703. Sir T. More in Kennet, p. 498. + Hist. Croyl. cont. p. 561. ‡ Hist. Croyl. cont. p. 562. § S § Stowe, p. 430. || Hift. Croyl. cont. p. 562.

quence, in those times, of any profecution by the court or the prevailing party; Chap. XXII. and the duke of Clarence was accordingly pronounced guilty by the peers. The house of commons were no less flavish and unjust : They both petitioned for the execution of the duke, and afterwards passed a bill of attainder against him *. The measures of the parliament, during that age, furnish us with examples of a ftrange contrast of freedom and fervility : They fcruple to grant, and fometimes refuse to the King the smalleft supplies, the most necessary for the support of government. even the most necessary for the maintenance of wars, for which the nation, as well as the parliament itfelf, expressed a great fondness: But they never fcruple to concur in the most flagrant act of injustice or tyranny, which falls on any individual, however diffinguished by birth or merit. Thefe maxims, fo ungenerous, fo opposite to all the principles of good government, fo contrary to the practice of prefent parliaments, are very remarkable in all the transactions of the Englifh hiftory for more than a century after the period, in which we are now engaged. I the oblam of semily ballons of shall

THE only favour, which the King granted his brother after his condemnation, was to leave him the choice of his death; and he was privately drowned in a But of Malmefey in the Tower : A whimfical choice, which implies that he had an extraordinary paffion for that liquor. The duke left two children, by the eldeft daughter of the earl of Warwic, a fon created an earl by his grandfather's title; and a daughter, afterwards counters of Salifbury. Both this prince and princess were also unfortunate in their end, and died violent deaths ; a fate which. for many years, attended almost all the descendants of the royal blood in England. There prevails a report, that a chief fource of the violent profecution of the duke of Clarence, whofe name was George, was a current prophecy, that the King's fons should be murdered by one, the first letter of whole name was G. + It is not. impoffible, that in those ignorant times, such a filly reason might have influence: But it is more probable, that the whole ftory is the invention of a fublequent age, and founded on the murder of these children by the duke of Glocefter. Comines remarks, that at that time, the English were never without some fuperflitious prophecy or other, by which they accounted for every event.

ALL the glories of Edward's reign terminated with the civil wars; where his laurels too were extremely fullied with blood, violence and cruelty. His fpirit feems afterwards to be funk in indolence and pleasure, or his measures were fruftrated by imprudence and the want of forefight. There was no object of which he was fonder than to have all his daughters fettled by fplendid marriages, tho'

+ Hall, fol. 239. Holingshed, p. 703. * Stow, p. 430. Hift. Croyl. cont. p. 562. Grafton, p. 741. Polyd. Virg. p. 537. Sir Thom. More in Kennet, p. 497. 3 H moft

VOL. II.

18th Feba

1477.

$477.

418

Chap XXII. most of these princesses were yet in their infancy, and tho' the completion of his views, it was obvious, must depend on numberless accidents, which were impossible to be foreseen or prevented. His eldest daughter, Elizabeth, was contracted to the Dauphin; his fecond, Cicely, to the eldeft fon of James III. King of Scotland ; his third, Anne, to Philip, the eldeft fon of Maximilian and the dutchefs of Burgundy; his fourth, Catharine, to John, fon and heir to Ferdinand, King of Arragon, and Ifabella, Queen of Castile *. None of these projected marriages took place; and the King himfelf faw in his life-time the rupture of the first, that with the Dauphin, for which he had always difcovered a peculiar fondness.' Lewis, who paid no regard to treaties or engagements, found his advantage in contracting the Dauphin to the princefs Margaret, the daughter of Maximilian; and the King, notwithstanding his indolence, prepared himself to revenge this indignity. The French monarch, eminent for prudence, as well as falschood, endeavoured to guard against the blow; and by a proper distribution of prefents in the court of Scotland, he excited James to make war upon England. This weak prince, who lived on bad terms with his own nobility, and whole force was very unequal to the enterprize, levied an army; but when they were preparing to enter England, the barons, confpiring against his favourites, put them to death without trial; and the army prefently dispersed. The duke of Glocefter, attended by the duke of Albany, James's brother, who had been banished his country, entered Scotland at the head of an army, took Berwic, and obliged the Scots to accept of a peace, by which they refigned that fortrefs to Edward. This fuccefs emboldened the King to think more ferioufly of a French war; but while he was making preparations for that enterprize, he was feized with a diftemper, of which he expired in the forty fecond year of his age, and the twenty third of his reign: A prince more fplendid and fhowy, than either prudent or virtuous; brave, tho' cruel; addicted to pleasure, tho' capable of activity in great emergencies; and lefs fitted to prevent ills by wife precautions, than to remedy them, after they took place by his vigour and enterprize. Befides five daughters, this King left two fons; Edward, prince of Wales, his fucceffor, then in his thirteenth year, and Richard, duke of York, in his feventh.

* Rymer, vol. 2. p. 110.

CHAP.

1482.

oth April. Death and character of Edward IV.

EDWARD V.

C H A P. XXIII.

EDWARD V. and RICHARD III.

Edward V.—State of the court—The earl of Rivers arrefted Duke of Glocester protector—Execution of lord Hastings—The protestor aims at the crown—Assure the crown—Murder of Edward V. and of the duke of York—Richard III.—Duke of Buckingham discontented—The earl of Richmond—Buckingham executed—Invasion by the earl of Richmond—Battle of Bosworth— Death and character of Richard III.

E D W A R D V.

URING the latter years of Edward IV. the nation, having, in a great Chap. XXIII. measure, forgot the bloody feuds between the two Roses, and acquiescing State of the peaceably in the eftablished government, was only agitated by some court-court. intrigues, which, being reftrained by the authority of the King, feemed no wife to endanger the public tranquillity. These intrigues arose from the perpetual rivalship between two parties; the one confisting of the Queen and her relations, particularly the earl of Rivers, her brother, and the marquifs of Dorfet, her fon; the other composed of the antient nobility, who envied the fudden growth and unlimited credit of that aspiring family *. At the head of this latter party was the duke of Buckingham, a man of very noble birth, of ample poffeffions, of great alliances, of fhining parts; who, tho' he had married the Queen's fifter, was too haughty to act in fubferviency to her inclinations, and aimed rather at maintaining an independant influence and authority. Lord Haftings, the chamberlain, was another leader of the fame party; and as this nobleman had, by his bravery and enterprize, as well as by his approved fidelity, acquired the confidence and favour of his mafter, he had been able, tho' with fome difficulty, to fupport himfelf against the credit of the Queen. The lords Howard and Stanley maintained a connexion with these two noblemen, and brought a confiderable acceffion of influence and credit to their party. All the other barons, who had no

> * Sir T. More, p. 481. 3 H 2

particular

Chap. XXIII. particular dependance on the Queen, adhered to the fame intereft; and the peo-1483. ple in general, from their natural envy against the prevailing power, bore great favour to the caufe of these noblemen.

BUT Edward knew, that, tho' he himfelf had been able to overawe those rival factions, many diforders might refult from their contefts during the minority of his fon; and he therefore took care, in his last illnes, to fummon together feveral of the leaders on both fides, and, by composing their antient quarrels, to provide, as far as possible, for the future tranquillity of the government. After expressing his intentions, that his brother, the duke of Glocester, then absent in the north, should be entrusted with the regency, he recommended to them peace and unanimity during the tender years of his fon; represented to them the dangers which must attend the continuance of their animolities; and engaged them to embrace each other with all the fymptoms of the most cordial reconciliation. But this temporary or feigned agreement lasted no longer than the King's life: He had no sooner expired, than the jealousies of the parties broke out afresh: And each of them applied, by separate messages, to the duke of Glocester, and endeavoured to acquire his favour and friendship.

THIS prince, during his brother's lifetime, had endeavoured to live on good terms with both parties; and his high birth, his extensive abilities, and his great fervices, had enabled him to support himself without falling into a dependance on either. But the new fituation of affairs, when the supreme power was devolved upon him, immediately changed all his measures; and he fecretly determined to preferve no longer that neutrality which he had hitherto maintained. His exorbitant ambition, unreftrained by any principle either of juffice or humanity, made him carry his views to the possess of the crown itself; and as this object could not be attained without the ruin of the Queen and her family, he fell, without hefitation, into concert with the opposite party. But being fensible, that the most profound diffimulation was requisite to the effecting his criminal purposes, he redoubled his professions of zeal and attachment to that princes; and he gained fuch credit with her, as to influence her conduct in a point, which, as it was of the utmost importance, was violently disputed between the opposite factions.

THE King, at the time of his father's death, refided in the caftle of Ludlow, on the borders of Wales; whither he had been fent, that the influence of his prefence might overawe the Welfh, and reftore the tranquillity of that country, which had been diffurbed by fome late commotions. His perfon was committed to the care of his uncle, the earl of Rivers, the most accomplished nobleman in England,

mansicular

EDWARD V.

England, who, having united an uncommon tafte for literature * to great abilities Chap. XXIII. in bufinefs, and valour in the field, was intitled, by his talents, ftill more than by nearness of blood, to direct the education of the young monarch. The Queen, anxious to preferve that afcendant over her fon, which fhe had fo long maintained over her hufband, wrote to the earl of Rivers, that he should levy a body of forces, in order to efcort the King to London, to protect him during his coronation, and to keep him from falling into the hands of their enemies. The opposite faction, fensible that Edward was now of an age when great advantages could be made of his name and countenance, and was approaching to the age when he would be legally intitled to exert in perfon his authority, forefaw, that the tendency of this measure was to perpetuate their subjection under their rivals; and they vehemently opposed a refolution, which they reprefented as the fignal for renewing a civil war in the kingdom. Lord Haftings threatened infantly to depart to his government of Calais + : The other nobles feemed refolute to oppose force by force : And as the duke of Glocester, on pretence of pacifying the quarrel, had declared against all appearance of an armed power, which might be dangerous, and was no wife neceffary, the Queen, trufting to the fincerity of his friendship, and overawed by so violent an opposition, revoked her orders to her brother, and defired him to bring up no greater retinue than would be necessary to support the state and dignity of the young fovereign $.

THE duke of Glocester, mean while, fer out from York, attended by a numerous train of the northern gentry. When he reached Northampton, he was joined by the duke of Buckingham, who was also attended by a splendid retinue; and as he heard, that the King was every hour expected on that road, he refolved to await his arrival, under colour of conducting him thence in perfon to London. The earl of Rivers, apprehenfive that the place would be too narrow to contain fo many attendants, fent his pupil forward by another road to Stony-Stratford; and came himfelf to Northampton, in order to apologize for this measure, and to pay his respects to the duke of Glocester. He was received with the greatest appearance of cordiality : He passed the evening in an amicable and friendly manner with Glocefter and Buckingham : He proceeded on the road with them next day to join the King: But as he was entering Stony-Strat- The earl of ford, he was arrefted by orders of the duke of Glocefter || : Sir Richard Gray, Rivers arone of the Queen's fons, was at the fame time put under a guard, together with 1st of May.

* This nobleman first introduced the noble art of Printing into England. Caxton was recommended by him to the patronage of Edward IV. See Catalogue of royal and noble authors. † Hift. Croyl. cont. p. 564, 565. ‡ Sir T. More, p. 483. || Hift. Croyl. cont. p. 564, 565.

Sir

42I

1483.

Chap. XXIII. Sir Thomas Vaughan, who poffeffed a confiderable office in the King's houfe-1483. hold; and all the prifoners were inftantly conducted to Pomfret. Glocefter approached the young prince with the greatest demonstrations of respect; and endeavoured to fatisfy him with regard to the violence committed on his uncle and brother : But Edward, much attached to these near relations, by whom he had been tenderly educated, was not fuch a mafter of diffimulation as to conceal his displeasure *.

The people, however, were extremely rejoiced at this revolution; and the 4th of May. duke was received in London with the loudest acclamations : But the Queen no fooner received intelligence of her brother's imprifonment, than the forefaw, that Glocefter's violence would not ftop there, and that her own ruin, if not that of all her children, was finally determined. She therefore fied into the fanctuary of Westminster, attended by the marquifs of Dorfet; and she carried thither the five princeffes, together with the duke of York +. She trufted, that the ecclefiaffical privileges, which had formerly, during the total ruin of her hufband and family, given her protection against the fury of the Lancastrian faction, would not now be violated by her brother-in-law, while her fon was feated on the throne; and the refolved to await there the return of better fortune. But Glocefter, anxious to have the duke of York in his power, propofed to take him by force from the fanctuary; and he reprefented to the privy council, both the indignity put upon the government by the Queen's ill-grounded apprehenfions, and the neceffity of the young prince's appearance at the enfuing coronation of his brother. It was farther alledged, that ecclefiaftical privileges were originally calculated only to give protection to unhappy men, perfecuted for their debts or crimes ; and were entirely useless to a perfon, who, by reafon of his tender age, could lie under the burden of neither, and who, for the fame reason, was utterly incapable of claiming fecurity from any fanctuary. But the two archbishops, cardinal Bourchier, the primate, and Rotheram archbishop of York, protesting against the facrilege of this measure; it was agreed, that they should first endeavour to bring the Queen to compliance by perfuafion, before any violence floud be employed against her. These prelates were known to be perfons of integrity and honour; and being themfelves entirely perfuaded of the fincerity of the duke's intentions, they employed every argument, accompanied with zealous entreaties, exhortations, and affurances, to bring her over to the fame opinion. She continued long obstinate, and insisted, that the duke of York, by living in the fanctuary, was not only fecure himfelf, but alfo gave fecurity to the King, whofe life no one would dare to attempt, while his fucceffor and avenger remained in fafety.

> * Sir T. More, p. 484. 4

+ Hift. Croyl. cont. p. 565.

EDWARD V.

fafety. But finding, that no one supported her in her fentiments, and that force, Chap. XXIII. in cafe of refusal, was threatened by the council, she at last complied, and pro-1483. duced her fon to the two prelates. She was here on a fudden ftruck with a kind of prefage of his future fate : She tenderly embraced him ; fhe bedewed him with her tears; and bidding him an eternal adieu, delivered him, with many expreffions of regret and reluctance, into their cuftody *.

THE duke of Glocefter, being the nearest male of the royal family capable of exercifing the government, feemed fully intitled, by the cuftoms of the realm, to the office of protector; and the council, not waiting for the confent of parlia- Duke of Gloment, inftalled him, without fcruple, in that high dignity +. The general pre- cefter protecjudice entertained by the nobility against the Queen and her kindred, occasioned this precipitation and irregularity; and no one forefaw any danger to the fucceffion, much lefs to the life of the infant princes, from a measure fo obvious and fo natural. Befides that the duke had hitherto been able to cover, by the most profound diffimulation, his fierce and favage nature; the numerous iffue of Edward, together with the two children of Clarence, feemed to be an eternal obfacle to his ambition; and it appeared equally impracticable for him to difpatchfo many perfons poffeffed of a preferable title, and imprudent to exclude them: But a man, who had abandoned all principles of honour and humanity, was foon carried by his predominant paffion beyond the reach of fear or precaution; and Glocefter, having fo far fucceeded in his views, no longer hefitated in removing the farther obstructions which lay between him and the crown. The death of the earl of Rivers, and of the other prifoners detained in Pomfret, was first determined; and he eafily obtained the confent of the duke of Buckingham, as well as of lord Haftings, to this violent and fanguinary measure. However easy it was, in those illegal and barbarous times, to obtain a fentence against the most innocent perfon, it appeared still more easy to dispatch an enemy, without any trial or form of procefs; and orders were accordingly iffued to Sir Richard Ratcliffe, a proper inftrument in the hands of this tyrant, to cut off the heads of the noble prifoners. The protector then affailed the fidelity of Buckingham by all the arguments capable of fwaying a vicious mind, which knew no motive of action but interest and ambition. He represented, that the murder of persons fo nearly related to the King, whom that prince profeffed fo openly to love, and whofe injuries he fo much refented, would never pass unpunished; and all the actors in that scene were bound in prudence to prevent the effects of his future vengeance : That it would be impossible to keep the Queen for ever at a distance from her fon, and equally impossible to prevent her from instilling into his tender mind

* Sir T. More, p. 491. THift. Croyl. cont. p. 566.

Chap XXIII. mind the thoughts of retaliating, by like executions, the fanguinary infults committed on her family: That the only method of obviating thefe mifchiefs was by putting the fceptre into the hands of a man, of whofe friendfhip the duke might be affured, and whofe years and experience taught him to pay refpect to merit and to the rights of antient nobility: And that the fame neceffity which had carried them fo far in refifting the ufurpation of thefe intruders, muft juftify them in attempting farther innovations, and in making, by national confent, a new fettlement of the fucceffion. To thefe reafons, he added the offers of great private advantages to the duke of Buckingham, and he eafily obtained from him a promife of fupporting him in all his enterprizes.

THE duke of Glocefter, knowing the importance of gaining lord Haftings, founded at a diftance his fentiments, by the means of one Catefby, a lawyer, who was a great confident of that nobleman; but found him impregnable in his allegiance and fidelity to the children of Edward, who had ever honoured him with his friendship *. He faw, therefore, that there was no longer any measures to be kept with him; and he determined to ruin utterly the man, whom he despaired 13th of June, of engaging to concur in his ulurpation. On the very day when Rivers, Gray, and Vaughan, were executed, or rather murdered, at Pomfret, by Haftings's advice, the protector fummoned a council in the Tower; whither that nobleman, fuspecting no defign against him, repaired without hesitation. The duke of Glocefter was capable of committing the most bloody and treacherous murders with the utmost coolness and indifference. On taking his place at the council-board, he appeared in the eafiest and most jovial humour in the world. He seemed to indulge himfelf in familiar conversation with the counfellors, before they should enter upon busines; and having paid fome compliments to Morton, bishop of Ely, on the good and early ftrawberries which he raifed in his garden at Holborn, he begged the favour of having a difh of them, which that prelate immediately difpatched a fervant to bring him. The protector then left the council, as if called away by fome other bufinefs; but foon after returning with an angry and enflamed countenance, he afked them, what punifhment those deferved that had plotted against bis life, who was to nearly related to the King, and was entrufted with the administration of the government? Haftings replied, that they merited the punishment of traitors. These traitors, cried the protector, are the forceress, my brother's wife, and Jane Shore, his mistress, with others, their affociates : See to what a condition they have reduced me by their incantations and witchcraft : Upon which he laid bare his arm, all shrivelled and decayed. But the counfellors, who knew that this infirmity had attended him from his birth,

424

* Sir T. More. p. 493.

1 looked

E D W A R D V

looked at each other in amazement; and above all, lord Haftings, who as he Chap. XXIII. 1483.1 had, fince Edward's death, engaged in an intrigue with Jane Shore *, was naturally anxious concerning the iffue of thefe extraordinary proceedings. Certainly, my lord, faid he, if they be guilty of these crimes, they deserve the severest punishment. And do you reply to me, exclaimed the Protector, with your ifs and your ands. You are the chief abettor of that witch Shore: You are yourfelf a traitor: And I fwear by St. Paul, that I will not dine before your head be brought me. He ftruck the table with his hand: Armed men rushed in at the fignal: The counfellors were thrown into the utmost consternation : And one of the guards, as if by accident or miftake, aimed a blow at lord Stanley, with a poll-ax, who aware of the danger, flunk below the table, and tho' he faved his life, he received a fevere wound on the head, in the protector's prefence. Haftings was feized, was hurried away, Execution of and inftantly beheaded on a timber-log, which lay in the court of the Tower +, lord Haffings. Two hours after, a proclamation, well-penned and fairly wrote, was read to the citizens of London, enumerating Hafting's offences, and apologizing to them, from the fuddenness of the discovery, for the fudden execution of that nobleman, who was very popular among them : But the faying of a merchant was much talked of on that occafion, who remarked, that the proclamation was certainly drawn by the spirit of prophecy 1.

LORD Stanley, the archbishop of York, the bishop of Ely, and other counsellors, were committed prifoners to different chambers of the Tower: And the protector, in order to carry on the farce of his accufations, ordered the goods of Jane Shore to be feized; and he fummoned her to answer before the council for forcery and inchantment. But as no proofs, which could be received even in that ignorant age, were produced against her, he ordered her to be tried in the spiritual court, for her adulteries and lewdnefs ; and fhe did penance in a white fheet at St. Paul's before the whole people. This lady was born of reputable parents in London, was well educated, and married to a fubftantial citizen; but unhappily, views of intereft, more than the maid's inclinations, had been confulted in this match, and her mind, tho' framed for virtue, had proved unable to refift the

* Sir Thomas More, who has been followed, or rather transcribed, by all the historians of this short reign, fays, that Jane Shore had fallen into connexions with lord Haftings ; and this account agrees best with the course of the events : But in a proclamation of Richard's, to be found in Rymer, vol. 12. p. 204, the marquis of Dorfet is reproached with these connexions. This reproach, however, might have been invented by Richard, or founded only on popular rumour ; and is not fufficient to overbalance the authority of Sir Thomas More. The proclamation is remarkable for the hypocritical purity of manners affected by Richard : This bloody and treacherous tyrant upbraids the Marquis and others, with their gallantries and intrigues as the most terrible enormities.

‡ Sir Thomas More, p. 496. + Hift. Croyl. cont. p. 566. VOL. II. 31

allure-

1483.

426

Chap. XXIII. allurements of Edward, who follicited her favours. But while feduced from her duty by this gay and amorous monarch, the still made herfelf refpectable by her other virtues; and the afcendant, which her charms and vivacity long maintained over him, was all employed in acts of beneficence and humanity. She was still forward to oppose calumny, to protect the oppressed, to relieve the indigent; and her good offices, the genuine refult of her heart, never waited the folicitation of prefents, or the hopes of reciprocal favours. But the lived not only to feel the bitterness of shame imposed on her by this barbarous tyrant, but to experience in old age and poverty, the ingratitude of those courtiers, who had long folicited her friendship, and been protected by her credit. No one, among the great multitudes, whom the had obliged, appeared to bring her confolation or relief: She languished out her life in folitude and indigence : And amidit a court, enured to the most atrocious crimes, the frailties of this woman justified all violations of friendship towards her, and all oblivion of former favours.

aims at the crown.

The protector THOSE acts of violence, exercifed against all the nearest connexions of the late King, prognofticated the fevereft fate to his defencelefs children; and after the murder of Haftings, the Protector made no longer a fecret of his intentions to usurp the crown. The licentious life of Edward, who was not restrained in his pleafures by any principle either of honour or prudence, afforded a pretence for declaring his marriage with the Queen invalid, and all his pofterity illegitimate. It was afferted, that before his efpoufals with the lady Elizabeth Gray, he had paid court to the lady Eleanor Talbot, daughter of the earl of Shrewfbury : and being repulfed by the virtue of that lady, he was obliged, ere he could gratify his defires, to confent to a private marriage, without any witneffes, by Stillington, bifhop of Bath, who afterwards revealed the fecret *: It was also maintained, that the act of attainder, paffed against the duke of Clarence, had virtually incapacitated his children from fucceeding to the crown; and thefe two families being fet afide, the Protector of courfe remained the only true and legitimate heir of the house of York. But as it would be difficult, if not impossible, to prove the preceding matriage of the late King; and as the principle which excluded the heirs of an attainted blood, from private fucceffions was never extended to the crown; the Protector refolved to make use of another plea still more shameful and scandalous. His partizans were taught to maintain, that both Edward IV. and the duke of Clarence, were illegitimate; that the dutchefs of York had received different lovers into her bed, who were the fathers of thefe children; that their refemblance to those gallants was a sufficient proof of their fourious birth; and that the duke of Glocefter alone, of all her fons, appeared,

* Hift. Croyl, cont. p. 567. Comines. Sir Thomas More, p. 482.

EDWARD V.

by his features and countenance, to be the lawful offspring of the duke of York. Chap. XXIII. Nothing can be imagined more impudent than this affertion, which threw fo foul an imputation on his own mother, a princefs of irreproachable virtue, and then alive, yet the place chosen for first promulgating it was the pulpit, before the whole people, and in the Protector's prefence. Dr. Shaw was appointed to preach in St. Paul's; and having chosen this paffage for his text, Bastard ships shall not thrive, he enlarged on all the topics, which could difcredit the birth of Edward IV. the duke of Clarence, and of all their children. He then broke out in a panygeric on the duke of Glocefter; and exclaimed, " Behold this excellent " prince, the express image of his noble father, the genuine descendant of the " house of York, bearing, no less in the virtues of his mind, than in the features " of his countenance, the character of the gallant Richard, once your hero and ⁴⁶ favourite: He alone is entitled to your allegiance: He must deliver you from " the dominion of all intruders : He alone can reftore the loft glory and honour " of the nation." It was previoully contrived, that, as the doctor should pronounce thefe words, the duke of Glocefter should enter the church; and it was expected that the audience fhould cry out, God fave King Richard; which would immediately have been laid hold of as a popular confent, and interpreted to be the voice of the nation : But by a ridiculous miftake, worthy of the whole fcene, the duke did not appear, till after this exclamation was already recited by the preacher. The doctor was therefore obliged to repeat his rhetorical figure out of its proper place : The audience, lefs from the abfurd conduct of the difcourfe, than from their deteftation of these proceedings, kept a profound filence; and the Protector and his preacher, were equally abafhed at the ill fuccefs of their ftratagem.

But the duke was too far advanced to recede from his criminal and ambitious projects. A new expedient was tried to work on the people. The mayor, who was brother to doctor Shaw, and entirely in the Protector's interefts, called an affembly of the citizens; where the duke of Buckingham, a man who poffeffed fome talents for eloquence, harangued them on the Protector's title to the throne, and difplayed those numerous virtues, of which, he pretended, that prince was possefield. He then afked them, whether they would not have the duke for King? and then ftopt, in expectation of hearing the cry, God fave King Richard. He was furprized to obferve them filent; and turning about to the mayor, he afked him the reafon. The mayor replied, that perhaps they did not underftand him. Buckingham then repeated his difcourfe with fome variation; inforced the fame topics, afked the fame queftion, and was received with the fame filence. " I now fee the caufe," faid the mayor, " the citizens are not accustomed to be harangued by any but " their 22d June.

1483.

Chap. XXIII. " their recorder ; and know not how to answer a perfon of your grace's quality." 1483. The recorder, Fitz-Williams, was then commanded to repeat the fubftance of the duke's fpeech; but the man, who was very averfe to the office, took care, throughout his whole difcourfe, to have it underflood, that he fpoke nothing of himfelf, and that he only conveyed to them the fenfe of the duke of Buckingham. Still the audience kept a profound filence : " This is wonderful obftinacy," cried the duke : "Exprefs your meaning, my friends, one way or other ; When we ap-" ply to you on this occasion, it is merely from the regard which we bear to you. " The lords and commons have fufficient authority, without your confent, to " appoint a King: But I require you here to declare in plain terms, whether or ss, not you will have the duke of Glocester for your fovereign." After all these efforts, fome of the meaneft apprentices, incited by the Protector's and Buckingham's fervants, railed a feeble cry, God fave King Richard *: The fentiments of the nation were now fufficiently declared : The voice of the people was the voice of God : And Buckingham with the mayor, haftened to Baynard's caftle, where the Protector then refided, that they might engage him to affume the government.

> WHEN Richard was told, that a great multitude was in the court, he refused to appear to them, and pretended to be apprehenfive for his perforal fafety: A circumftance much taken notice of by Buckingham, who obferved to the citizens, that the prince was ignorant of the whole defign. At last, he was perfuaded z;th June.

428

to come forth, but he still kept at fome distance; and he asked the meaning of their intrusion and importunity. Buckingham told him, that the nation were refolved to have him for King: The Protector declared his purpose to maintain his loyalty to the prefent fovereign, and exhorted them to adhere to the fame refolution. He was told, that the nation were determined to have another prince; and if he rejected their unanimous voice, they must look out for one, who would be more compliant. This argument was too powerful to be refifted : He was prevailed on to accept of the crown : And he thenceforth acted as legitimate and rightful fovereign.

The protector affumes the throne.

Murder of Edward V. and of the

THIS ridiculous farce was foon after followed by a fcene truly tragical : The murder of the two infant princes. Richard fent orders to fir Robert Brakenbury, constable of the Tower, to put his nephews to death; but this gentleman, who had fentiments of honour, refused to have any hand in the infamous office. The duke of York. tyrant then fent fir James Tyrrel, who promifed obedience; and he ordered Brakenbury to refign to this gentleman the keys of the Tower for one night. Tyrrel, choosing three affociates, Slater, Dighton and Forrest, came in the night-

* Sir Thomas More, p. 496.

time

EDWARDV.

429 time to the door of the chamber where the princes were lodged; and fending in Chap. XXIII, the affaffins, he bid them execute their commission ; while he himself staid with-1483, out. They found the young princes in bed, and fallen into a found fleep. After fuffocating them with the bolfter and pillows, they showed their naked bodies to Tyrrel, who ordered them to be buried at the flair foot, deep in the ground, under a heap of ftones *. These circumstances were all confessed by the actors in the following reign ; and they were never punished for the crime : Probably, becaufe Henry, whofe maxims of government were extremely arbitrary, defired to establish it as a principle, that the commands of the reigning fovereign ought to justify every enormity in those who paid obedience to them. But there is one circumftance not fo eafy to be accounted for : It is pretended, that Richard, difpleafed with this indecent manner of burying his nephews, whom he had murdered, gave his chaplain orders to dig up the bodies, and to interr them in confecrated ground; and as the man died foon after, the place of their burial remained unknown, and the bodies could never be found by any fearch, which Henry VII. could make for them. Yet in the reign of Charles II. when there was occasion to remove fome stones and to dig into the very spot, which was mentioned as the place of their first interment, the bones of two perfons were there found, which by their fize corresponded exactly to the age of Edward and his brother: They were concluded with certainty to be the remains of those princes, and were interred under a marble monument by orders of King Charles +. Perhaps, Richard's chaplain had died before he found an opportunity of executing his mafter's commands; and the bodies being fuppofed to be already removed, a diligent fearch was not made for them by Henry in the place where they had been interred.

* Sir T. More, p. 501.

+ Kennet, p. 551:

RICHARD

430

RICHARD III.

Chap. XXIII. THE first acts of Richard's administration were to befow rewards on those 14^{83.} Two had affisted him in usurping the crown, and to gain by favours those, who, he thought, were best able to support his future government. Thomas, lord Howard, was created duke of Norfolk; Sir Thomas Howard, his fon, earl of Surrey; lord Lovel, a viscount by the fame name; even lord Stanley was fet at liberty and made lord Steward of the household. This nobleman had become obnoxious by his first opposition to Richard's views, and also by his marrying the countess dowager of Richmond, the heiress of the Somerfet family; but fensible of the neceffity of submission to the prefent government, he counterfeited such zeal for Richard's cause, that he was received into favour, and even found means to be entrusted with the most important commands by that politic and jealous tyrant.

> But the perfon, who, both from the greatness of his fervices and the power and fplendor of his family, was beft intitled to favours under the new government, was the duke of Buckingham; and Richard feemed determined to spare no pains nor bounty in fecuring him to his interefts. Buckingham was defcended from a daughter of Thomas of Woodflock, duke of Glocefter, uncle to Richard II. and by this pedigree, he was both allied to the royal family, and had claims for dignities as well as effates, of a very extensive nature. The duke of Glocester and Henry, earl of Derby, afterwards Henry IV. had married the two daughters and co-heirs of Bohun, earl of Hereford, one of the greatest of the antient barons, whole immense property came thus to be divided into two shares. The one was inherited by the family of Buckingham; the other was united to the crown by the family of Lancaster, and after the forfeiture of that royal line, was feized as legally devolved to them, by the fovereigns of the houfe of York. The duke of Buckingham laid hold of the prefent opportunity, and claimed the reftitution of that portion of the Hereford eftate, which had escheated to the crown, as well as of the great office of conftable, which had long continued by inheritance in his anceftors of that family. Richard readily complied with thefe demands, which were probably the price stipulated to Buckingham for his assistance in promoting the ufurpation. That nobleman was inftalled in the office of conftable; he received a grant of the eftate of Hereford *; many other dignities

> > * Dugdale Baron. vol. 1. p. 168, 169.

and

⁴

ICHARD III. R

and honours were conferred upon him; and the King thought himfelf fecure of Chap. XXIII. preferving the fidelity of a man, whofe interefts feemed to be fo clofely connected with those of the present government.

But it was impossible, that friendship could long remain inviolate between Duke of two men of fuch corrupt morals as Richard and the duke of Buckingham. Hif- Buckingham torians ascribe their first quarrel to the King's refusal of making restitution of the discontented. Hereford eftate; but it is certain from records, that he paffed a grant for that purpofe, and that the full demands of Buckingham were fatisfied in this particular. Perhaps, Richard was foon fenfible of the danger which might enfue from conferring fuch an immense property on a man of so turbulent a character, and afterwards raifed difficulties about the execution of his own grant: Perhaps he refuled fome other demands of Buckingham, whom he found it impoffible to fatisfy for his past fervices: Perhaps, he refolved, according to the usual maxim of politicians, to feize the first opportunity of ruining this powerful subject, who had been the principal inftrument of his own elevation ; and the difcovery of this intention begot the first suspicions in the duke of Buckingham. However this may be, it is certain, that the duke, foon after Richard's acceffion, began to form a confpiracy against the government, and attempted to overthrow that usurpation, which he himself had to zealoufly contributed to establish.

NEVER was there an ulurpation in any country more flagrant than that of Richard, nor more repugnant to every principle of justice and public interest. His claim was entirely founded on impudent allegations, never attempted to be proved, fome of them incapable of proof, and all of them, implying fcandalous reflections on his own family, and on the perfons with whom he was the moft nearly connected. His title was never acknowledged by any national affembly, fcarce even by the lowest populace to whom he appealed; and had become prevalent merely for want of some person of distinction, who might stand forth against him, and give a voice to those fentiments of general deteftation, which arose in every bofom. Were men disposed to pardon these violations of public right, the fense of private and domestic duty, which is not to be effaced in the most barbarous times, must have begot an abhorrence against him; and have represented the murder of the young and innocent princes, his nephews, with whole protection he had been entrusted, in the most odious colours imaginable. To endure fuch a bloody usurper seemed to draw difgrace upon the nation, and to be attended with immediate danger to every individual, who was diffinguished by his birth, merit, or fervices. Such was become the general voice of the people; all parties were united in the fame fentiments ; and the Lancastrians, fo long oppreffed, and, of late, fo much difcredited, felt their blafted hopes again revive, and anxi-

Chap. XXIII. anxioufly attended to the confequences of thefe extraordinary events. The duke of Buckingham, whole family had been devoted to that interest, and who, by his mother, a daughter of Edmund, duke of Somerset, was allied to the house of Lancaster, was easily inclined to espouse the cause of this party, and to endeavour the restoring it to its antient superiority. Morton, bission of Ely, a zealous Lancastrian, whom the King had imprisoned, and had asterwards committed to the custody of Buckingham, encouraged these sentiments; and by his exhortations the duke cast his eye on the young earl of Richmond, as the only perfon, who could free the nation from the tyranny of the present usures.

The earl of Richmond.

1483.

432

HENRY, earl of Richmond, was at this time detained in a kind of honourable cuftody by the duke of Brittany; and his defcent, which feemed to give him fome pretensions to the crown, had been a great object of jealousy both in the late and in the prefent reign. John, the first duke of Somerfet, who was grandfon of John of Gaunt, by a spurious branch, but legitimated by act of parliament, had left only one daughter, Margaret; and his younger brother, Edmund, had fucceeded him in his titles, and in a confiderable part of his fortune. Margaret had espoused Edmund, earl of Richmond, half brother of Henry VI. and son of Sir Owen Tudor and Catherine of France, relict of Henry V. and the bore him only one fon, who received the name of Henry, and who after his father's death, inherited the honours and fortune of Richmond. His mother, being a widow, had espoused in second marriage Sir Henry Stafford, uncle to Buckingham, and after the death of that gentleman, had married the prefent lord Stanley; but had no children by either of these husbands; and her fon, Henry, was thus, in the event of her death, the only lawful heir of all her fortunes. But this was not the most confiderable advantage, which he had reason to expect from her fuccession : He would reprefent the eldeft branch of the house of Somerfet; he would inherit all the title of that family to the crown; and tho' its claim, while any legitimate branch sublisted of the house of Lancaster, had always been much disregarded, the zeal of faction, after the death of Henry VI. and the murder of prince Edward, immediately conferred a weight and confideration upon it.

KING Edward IV. finding, that all the Lancaftrians had caft their eyes towards the young earl of Richmond, as the object of their hopes, thought him alfo worthy of his attention; and purfued him into his retreat in Brittany, whither his uncle, the earl of Pembroke, had carried him, after the battle of Teukefbury, fo fatal to his party. He applied to Francis II. duke of Brittany, who was his ally, a weak but a good prince; and defired him to deliver up this fugitive,

* Hift. Croyl. cont. p. 568.

RICHA R D III.

tive, who might be the fource of future diffurbances in England : But the duke, Chap. XXIII. averfe to fo difhonourable a propofal, would only confent, that, for the fecurity of Edward, the young nobleman should be detained in custody; and he received an annual penfion from England for the fafe keeping or fubfiftance of his prifoner. But towards the end of Edward's reign, when the kingdom was menaced with a war both from France and Scotland, the anxieties of the English court with regard to Henry were very much encreased; and Edward made a new propofal to the duke, which covered, under the faireft appearances, the most bloody and treacherous intentions. He pretended, that he was defirous of gaining his enemy, and of uniting him to his own family by a marriage with his daughter, Elizabeth; and he follicited to have him fent over to England, for the executing a fcheme, which would redound fo much to his advantage. Thefe pretences, feconded by bribes to Peter Landais, a corrupt minifter, by whom the duke was entirely governed, gained credit with the court of Brittany : Henry was delivered into the hands of the English agents: He was ready to embark: When a fufpicion of Edward's real defign was fuggefted to the duke, who recalled his orders. and thus faved the unhappy youth from the imminent danger, which hung over him.

THESE fymptoms of continued jealoufy in the reigning family of England, both feemed to give tome authority to Henry's pretenfions, and made him the object of general favour and compassion, on account of the dangers and perfecutions to which he was exposed. The universal detestation of Richard's conduct turned still more the attention of the nation towards him; and as all the defcendants of the houfe of York were either women or minors, he feemed to be the only perfon from whom the nation could expect the expulsion of the odious and bloody tyrant. But notwithstanding these circumstances, which were so favourable to Henry, Buckingham and the bifhop of Ely well knew, that there would fill lie many obstructions in his way to the throne; and that tho' the nation had been extremely divided between Henry VI. and the duke of York, when prefent poffeffion and hereditary right flood in opposition to each other; yet, fo foon as thefe titles were conjoined by Edward IV. the bulk of the people had come over to the reigning family; and the Lancastrians had extremely decayed, both in numbers and authority. It was therefore fuggested by Morton, and readily affented to by the duke, that the only means of overturning the prefent ufurpation, was to unite the oppofite factions, by contracting a marriage between the earl of Richmond and the princefs Elizabeth, eldeft daughter of King Edward, and thereby blending together the opposite pretentions of their families, which had to long'been the fource of public diforders and convultions. They were fenfible, that YOL. II. 3 K

433

1483.

1483.

Chap. XXIII. that the people were extremely defirous of repofe after fo many bloody and deftructive commotions; that both Yorkifts and Lancastrians, who now lay equally under oppreffion, would embrace this fcheme with ardour; and that the profpect of reconciling the two parties, which was in itfelf fo defirable an end, would, when added to the general hatred of the prefent government, render their caufe abfolutely invincible. In confequence of these views, the prelate, by means of Reginald Bray, fleward to the counters of Richmond, opened the first proposals of fuch an union to that lady; and the fcheme appeared fo advantageous for her fon, and, at the fame time, fo likely to fucceed, that it admitted not of the leaft hefitation. Dr. Lewis, a Welfh phyfician, who had accefs to the Queen-dowager in her fanctuary, carried the propofals to her; and found, that revenge for the murder of her brother and of her three fons, apprehenfions for her remaining family, refentment of her confinement and oppreffions, eafily overcame all her prejudices against the house of Lancaster, and procured her approbation of a marriage, to which the age and birth, as well as the prefent fituation, of the two parties, feemed to naturally to invite them. She fecretly borrowed a fum of money in the city, fent it over to the earl of Richmond, required his oath to fulfil the marriage as foon as he fhould arrive in England, advifed him to levy as many foreign forces as possible, and promised to join him, on his first appearance, with all the friends and partizans of her family.

THE plan being thus laid upon the folid foundations of good fenfe and found policy, it was fecretly communicated to the principal perfons of both parties in all the counties of England; and a wonderful alacrity appeared in every order of men, to forward its fuccess and completion. But it was impossible, that fo extenfive a confpiracy could be conducted fo fecretly as entirely to efcape the jealous and vigilant eye of Richard; and he foon received intelligence, that his enemies, headed by the duke of Buckingham, were forming fome defign against his authority. He immediately put himfelf in a pofture of defence by levying fome troops in the North; and he fummoned the duke to appear at court, in fuch terms as seemed to promise him a renewal of their former friendship. But that nobleman, well acquainted with the barbarity and treachery of Richard, replied only by taking arms in Wales, and giving the fignal to his accomplices for a general infurrection in all parts of England. But there happened at that very time to fall fuch heavy rains, fo inceffant and continued, as exceeded any known in the memory of man; and the Severne, with the other rivers in that neighbourhood, fwelled to a height which rendered them impaffable, and prevented Buckingham. from marching into the heart of England to join his affociates. The Welfhmen, partly moved by superstition at this extraordinary event, partly distressed by famine October.

RICHARD III.

mine in their camp, fell off from him; and Buckingham finding himfelf de- Chap. XXIII. ferted by his followers, put on a difguife, and took fhelter in the houfe of Banifter, an old fervant of his family. But being detected in his retreat, he was brought to the King at Salifbury; and was inftantly tried, condemned, and Buckingham executed, according to the fummary method practifed in those ages *. The executed. other confpirators, who took arms in four different places, at Exeter, at Salifbury, at Newbury, at Maidftone, hearing of the duke of Buckingham's misfortunes, defpaired of fuccefs, and immediately difperfed themfelves.

THE marquifs of Dorfet and bifhop of Ely made their efcape beyond fea: Many others were equally fortunate. Several fell into Richard's hands, of whom he made fome examples. His executions feem not to have been remarkably fevere; tho' we are told of one gentleman, William Colingbourne, who fuffered under colour of this rebellion, but in reality for a diffich of quibbling verfes, which he had compofed againft Richard and his minifters †. The earl of Richmond, in concert with his friends, had fet fail from St. Malo's, carrying on board a body of 5000 men, levied in foreign parts; but his fleet being at firft drove back by a ftorm, he appeared not on the coaft of England till after the difperfion of all his friends; and he found himfelf obliged to return to the court of Brittany.

THE King, thus triumphant in all places, and firengthened by this unfuccefsful attempt to dethrone him, ventured at laft to fummon a parliament; a meafure which his crimes and flagrant ufurpation had made him hitherto decline. Tho' it was natural that the parliament, in a conteft of national parties, fhould always adhere to the victor, he feems to have apprehended, left his title, founded on no principle, and fupported by no party, might be rejected by that affembly. But his enemies being now at his feet, the parliament had no choice but to recognize his authority, and acknowledge his right to the crown. His only fon Edward, then a youth of twelve years of age, was created prince of Wales: The duties of tonnage and poundage were granted him for life: And Richard, in order to reconcile the nation to his government, paffed fome popular laws, particularly one againft the late practice of extorting money on pretence of benevolences.

* Hift. Croyl. cont. p. 568.

 † The lines were: The Rat, the Cat, and Lovel that Dog, Rule all England under the Hog.

 Alluding to the names of Ratcliffe and Catefby; and to Richard's arms, which were a boar.
 3 K 2

1484. 23d of Jan.

Chap. XXIII. 1484.

43:6

ALL the other measures of the King tended to the fame object. Senfible, that the only circumftance which could give him fecurity was to gain the confidence of the Yorkifts, he paid court to the Queen-dowager with fuch art and addrefs, made fuch earnest protestations of his fincere good-will and friendship, that this princels, tired of confinement, and defpairing of any fuccels from her former projects, ventured to leave her fanctuary, and to put herfelf and her daughters into the hands of the tyrant. But he foon carried farther his views for the eftablifhment of his throne. He had married Anne, the fecond daughter of the earl of Warwic, and widow of Edward prince of Wales, whom Richard himfelf had murdered; but this princefs having born him but one fon, who died about this time, he confidered her as an invincible obstacle to the settlement of his fortune, and he was believed to have carried her off by poifon; a crime for which the public could not be fuppofed to have any very folid proof, but which the usual tenor of his conduct made it reasonable to suspect. He now thought it in his power to remove the chief perils which threatened his government. The earl of Richmond, he knew, could never be dangerous but from his projected marriage with the princefs Elizabeth, the true heir of the crown ; and he therefore intended, by means of a papal dispensation, to espouse himself this princess. and thus to unite in his own family their contending titles. The Queen-dowager, eager to recover her loft authority, neither forupled this alliance, which was very unufual in England, and was regarded as inceftuous; nor felt any horror at marrying her daughter to the murderer of her three fons and of her brother : She even conjoined fo far her interefts with those of the usurper, that the wrote to all her partizans, and among the reft, to her fon the marquifs of Dorfet, defiring them to withdraw from the earl of Richmond; an injury which the earl could never afterwards forgive : The court of Rome was applied to for a difpensation : Richard thought, that he could eafily defend himfelf during the interval, till it arrived ; and he had afterwards the agreeable profpect of a full and fecure fettlement. He flattered himfelf, that the English nation, feeing all danger removed of a difputed fucceffion, would then acquiefce under the dominion of a prince, who was of mature years, of great abilities, and of a genius qualified for government; and that they would forgive him all the crimes which he had committed in paving his way to the throne.

But the crimes of Richard were fo horrid and fo fhocking to humanity, that the natural fentiments of men, without any political or public views, were fufficient to render his government unftable; and every perfon of probity and honour was earnest to prevent the sceptre from being farther polluted by that bloody and treacherous hand which held it. All the exiles flocked to the earl of Richmond in.

I C H A R D III. R

in Brittany, and exhorted him to haften his attempt of a new invafion, and to Chap. XXIL prevent the marriage of the princefs Elizabeth, which must prove fo fatal to all 1484. his hopes. The earl, fenfible of the urgent neceffity, but dreading the treachery of Peter Landais, who had entered into a negotiation with Richard for delivering. him up, was obliged to attend only to his prefent fafety; and he made his efcape to the court of France. The ministers of Charles VIII. who had now fucceeded! to the throne after the death of his father Lewis, gave him countenance and protection; and being defirous of raifing diffurbances to Richard, they fecretly encouraged the earl in the levies which he made for the fupport of his enterprize against England. The earl of Oxford, whom Richard's sufpicions had thrown into confinement, having made his efcape, here joined Henry; and enflamed his ardour for the attempt, by the favourable accounts which he brought of the difpolitions of the English nation, and their universal hatred of Richard's crimes. and usurpation.

THE earl of Richmond fet out from Harfleur in Normandy with a retinue of 1485: about 2000 perfons; and after a navigation of fix days, he arrived at Milford-Invation by Haven in Wales, where he landed without opposition. He directed his courfe Richmond. to that part of the kingdom, in hopes that the Welfh, who regarded him as their 7th of Augcountryman, and who had been already prepoffeffed in favour of his caufe by means of the duke of Buckingham, would join his standard, and enable him to make head against the established government. Richard, who knew not in what quarter he might expect the invader, had taken post at Nottingham, in the centre of the kingdom; and having given commissions to different perfons in the feveral counties, whom he empowered to oppose his enemy, he proposed in perfon to fly, on the first alarm, to the place which was exposed to danger. Sir Rice ap Thomas and Sir Walter Herbert were entrusted with this authority in Wales; but the former immediately deferted to Henry; the fecond made but feeble opposition to him : And the earl, advancing towards Shrewsbury, received every day fome reinforcement from his partizans. Sir Gilbert Talbot joined hinr with all the vaffals and retainers of the family of Shrewfbury : Sir Thomas Bourchier, Sir Walter Hungerford, brought their friends to fliare his fortune; and the appearance of men of diffinction in his camp made already the caufe wear a favourable alpect.

But the danger to which Richard was chiefly exposed, proceeded not fo muchfrom the zeal of his open enemies, as from the infidelity of his pretended friends. Scarce any nobleman of diffinction was fincerely attached to his caufe, except the duke of Norfolk; and all those who feigned the most loyalty were only watching, an tained the greateft fufpicion, were the lord Stanley and his brother Sir William;

Chap. XXIII. an opportunity to betray and defert him. But the perfons of whom he enter-whole connexions with the earl of Richmond, notwithstanding their professions of attachment to his perfon, were never entirely forgot or overlooked by him. When he empowered lord Stanley to levy forces, he ftill retained his eldeft fon, lord Strange, as a pledge of his fidelity; and that nobleman was, on this account, obliged to employ great precaution and referve in his proceedings. He railed a powerful body of his friends and retainers in Cheshire and Lancashire. but without openly declaring himfelf : And tho' Henry had received fecret affurances of his friendly intention, the armies on both fides knew not what to in-22d of Aug. fer from his equivocal behaviour. The two rivals, at last, approached each other, at Bosworth near Leicester; Henry at the head of fix thousand men, Richard with an army of above double the number; and a decifive action was every hour looked for between them. Stanley, who commanded about feven thousand men, took care to post himself at Atherstone, not far from the expected field of battle; and he made fuch a disposition as enabled him on occasion to join either party. Richard had too much fagacity not to difcover his intentions from these movements; but he kept the secret from his own men for fear of discouraging them : He took not immediate revenge on Stanley's fon, as fome of his courtiers advifed him; becaufe he hoped that so valuable a pledge would induce the father to prolong still farther his ambiguous conduct : And he hastened to decide by arms the quarrel with his competitor; being certain, that a victory over the earl of Richmond would enable him to take ample revenge of all his enemies, open and concealed.

438

> THE van of Richmond's army, confifting of archers, was commanded by John earl of Oxford : Sir Gilbert Talbot led the right wing ; Sir John Savage the left : The earl himfelf, accompanied by his uncle, the earl of Pembroke, placed himfelf in the main body. Richard alfo took post in bis main body, and entrufted the command of his van to the duke of Norfolk : As his wings were never engaged, we have not learned the names of the feveral commanders. Soon after the battle began, lord Stanley, whose conduct in this whole affair discovers great precaution and abilities, appeared in the field, and declared for the earl of Richmond. This measure, which was fo unexpected to the men, tho' not to their leaders, had a proportional effect on both armies : It inspired unufual courage into Henry's foldiers; it threw Richard's into difmay and confusion. The intrepid tyrant, fenfible of his desperate situation, cast his eye around the field, and perceiving his rival at no great diffance, he drove against him with fury, in hopes, that either Henry's death or his own would foon decide the victory between Battle of Bofworth.

1485.

HARD III. I C R

tween them. He killed with his own hands Sir William Brandon, ftandard- Chap. XXIII. bearer to the earl : He difmounted Sir John Cheyney : He was now within reach . 1485. of Richmond himfelf, who declined not the combat; when Sir William Stanley, breaking in with his troops, furrounded Richard, who, fighting bravely to the last moment, was overwhelmed by the numbers of his enemies, and perished by a fate too mild and honourable for his multiplied and deteftable enormities. His men every where fought for fafety by flight.

THERE fell in this battle about 4000 men on the fide of the vanquished; and among these the duke of Norfolk, the lord Ferrars of Chartley, Sir Richard Ratcliffe, Sir Robert Piercy, and Sir Robert Brakenbury. The lofs was very inconfiderable on the fide of the victors. Sir William Catefby, a great inftrument of Richard's crimes, was taken, and foon after beheaded, with fome others, at Leicester. The body of Richard was, found in the field, covered with dead enemies, and all befmeared with blood : It was thrown carelefsly across a horfe ; was carried to Leicester amid the shouts of the infulting spectators; and was interred in the Gray-Friars church of that place.

THE hiftorians who favour Richard (for even he has met with partizans and character among the later writers) maintain, that he was well qualified for govern-ofRichard III. ment, had he legally obtained it; and that he committed no crimes but fuch as were neceffary to procure him pofferfion of the crown : But this is a very poor apology, when it is confeffed, that he was ready to commit the most horrid crimes, which appeared neceffary for that purpofe; and it is certain, that all his courage and capacity, qualities in which he really feems not to have been deficient, would never have made compensation to the people for the danger of the precedent, and for the contagious example of vice and murder, exalted upon the throne. This prince was of a fmall flature, hump-backed, and had a very harfh difagreeable vifage; fo that his body was in every particular no lefs deformed than his mind.

THUS have we purfued the Hiftory of England thro' a feries of many barbarous ages ; till we have at last reached the dawnings of civility and science, and have the profpect, both of greater certainty in our historical narrations, and of being able to prefent to the reader a spectacle more worthy of his attention. The want of certainty, however, and of circumstances, is not alike to be complained of throughout every period of this long narration. This island possefies many antient historians of good credit, as well as many historical monuments; and it is rare. Death

Chap. XXIII. rare, that the annals of fo uncultivated a people, as were the English as well as the other European nations, after the decline of Roman learning, have been tranfmitted to pofterity fo compleat, and with fo little mixture of falfehood and of fable. This advantage we owe entirely to the clergy of the church of Rome; who, founding their authority on their fuperior knowledge, preferved the precious literature of antiquity from a total extinction *; and under fhelter of their numerous privileges and immunities, acquired a fecurity, by means of the fuperfition, which they would in vain have claimed, from the juffice and humanity, of thofe turbulent and licentious ages. Nor is the fpectacle altogether unentertaining and uninftructive, which the hiftory of thofe times prefents to us. The view of human manners and actions, in all their variety of appearances, is both profitable and agreeable; and if the afpect in fome periods feems horrid and deformed, we may thence learn to cherifh with the greater anxiety that fcience and civility which has fo clofe a connexion with virtue and humanity, and which, as it is a fovereign antidote againft fuperfition, is alfo the moft effectual remedy againft vice and diforders of every kind.

440

THE rife, progrefs, perfection, and decline of art and fcience, are curious objects of contemplation, and intimately connected with a narration of civil tranfactions. The events of no particular period can be fully accounted for, but by confidering the degrees of advancement, which men have reached in those particulars.

THOSE who caft their eye on the general revolutions of fociety, will find, that, as all the improvements of the human mind had reached nearly to their flate of perfection about the age of Augustus, there was a fensible decline from that point or period; and men thenceforth relapsed gradually into ignorance and barbarism. The unlimited extent of the Roman empire, and the confequent despotism of the monarchs, extinguished all emulation, debafed the generous spirits of men,

* Every one that has peruled the antient Monkifh writers, knows, that, however barbarous their own flyle, they are full of allufions to the Latin claffics, efpecially the poets. There feems allo in those middle ages to have remained many antient books, that are now loft. Malmeßury, who flourifhed in the reign of Henry I. and K. Stephen, quotes Livy's defcription of Cæfar's paffage over the Rubicon. Fitz-Stephen, who lived in the reign of Henry II. alludes to a paffage in the larger hiftory of Salluft. In the collection of letters, which paffes under the name of Thomas a Becket, we fee how familiar all the antient hiftory and antient books were to the more ingenious and more dignified churchmen of that time, and confequently how much that order of men muft have furpaffed all the other members of the fociety. That prelate and his friends call each other philosophers in all the courfe of their correspondence, and confider with reason the reft of the world as funk into total ignorance and barbarifm. By the prefent diffusion of learning, even those who are illiterate receive for puch improvement as to be more on a level with men of knowledge and learning.

1114

6

and

RICHARD III.

and depreffed that noble flame, by which all the refined arts muft be cherifhed Chap. XXIII. and enlivened. The military government, which foon fucceeded, rendered even the lives and properties of men infecure and precarious; and proved deftructive to those vulgar and more neceffary arts of agriculture, manufactures, and commerce; and in the end, to the military art, and genius itself, by which alone the immense fabric of the empire could be supported. The irruption of the barbarous nations, which foon followed, overwhelmed all human knowledge, which was already far in its decline; and men funk every age deeper into ignorance, flupidity, and superfition; till the light of antient fcience and history, had very nearly suffered a total extinction in all the European nations.

BUT there is an ultimate point of depression, as well as of exaltation, from which human affairs naturally return in a contrary progrefs, and beyond which they feldom pass either in their advancement or decline. The period, in which the people of Chriftendom were the lowest funk in ignorance, and confequently in diforders of every kind, may juftly be fixed at the eleventh century, about the age of William the Conqueror ; and from that Æra, the fun of fcience, beginning to re-afcend, threw out many gleams of light, which preceded the full morning, when letters were revived in the fifteenth century. The Danes and other northern people, who had to long infefted all the coafts, and even the inland parts of Europe, by their depredations, having now learned the arts of tillage and agriculture, found a fettled sublistance at home, and were no longer tempted to defert their industry, in order to feek a precarious livelihood by rapine and by the plunder of their neighbours. The feudal governments alfo, among the more fouthern nations, were reduced to a kind of fyftem; and tho' that ftrange fpecies of civil polity was ill fitted to enfure either liberty or tranquility, it was preferable to the univerfal licence and diforder, which had every where preceded it. But perhaps there was no event, which tended farther to the improvement of the age, than one, which has not been much remarked, the accidental finding a copy of Juftinian's Pandects, about the year 1130, in the town of Amalfi in Italy.

THE ecclefiaftics, who had leizure, and fome inclination to fludy, immediately adopted with zeal this excellent fyftem of jurifprudence, and fpread the knowledge of it in every part of Europe. Befides the intrinfic merit of the performance, it was recommended to them by its original connexion with the imperial city of Rome, which, being the feat of their religion, feemed to acquire a new luftre and authority, by the diffusion of its laws over the weftern world. In lefs than ten years after the difcovery of the Pandects, Vacarius, under the protection of Theobald, archbifhop of Canterbury, read public lectures of civil law in the univerfity of Oxford; and the clergy every where, by their example as well as exhortation, Yot. II. 3 L were

44I

Chap. XXIII. were the means of fpreading the higheft efteem for this new fcience. That order of men, having large poffeffions to defend, were in a manner neceffitated to turn their fludies towards the law; and their properties being often endangered by the violence of the princes and barons, it became their intereft to enforce the obfervance of general and equitable rules, from which alone they could receive protection. As they poffeffed all the knowledge of the age, and were alone acquainted with the habits of thinking, the practice as well as fcience of the law, fell moftly into their hands : And tho' the clofe connexion, which without any neceffity they formed between the canon and civil law, begot a jealoufy in the laity of England, and prevented the Roman jurifprudence from becoming the municipal law of the country, as was the cafe in many flates of Europe, a great part of it was fecretly transferred into the practice of the courts of juffice, and the imitation of their neighbours, made the Englifh gradually endeavour to raife their own law from its original flate of rudenefs and imperfection.

442

It is eafy to fee what advantages Europe muft have reaped by its inheriting at once from the antients, fo complete an art, which was of itfelf fo neceffary for giving fecurity to all other arts, and which, by refining, and full more, by beflowing folidity on the judgment, ferved as a model to farther improvements. The fenfible utility of the Roman law both to public and private intereft recommended the fludy of it, at a time when the more exalted and speculative fciences carried no charms with them; and thus the last branch of antient literature, which remained uncorrupted, was happily the first transmitted to the modern world. For it is remarkable, that in the decline of Roman learning, when the philofophers were universally infected with superstition and fophistry, and the poets and historians with barbarism, the lawyers, who in other countries are feldom models of fcience or politenes, were yet able, by the constant fludy and close imitation of their predecessors, to maintain the fame good fense in their decisions and reafonings, and the fame purity in their language and expression.

WHAT befowed an additional merit on the civil law, was the extreme ignorance and imperfection of that jurifprudence, which preceded it among all the European nations, efpecially among the Saxons or antient Englifh. What abfurdities prevailed at that time in the administration of juffice, may be conceived from the authentic monuments which remain of the antient Saxon laws; where a pecuniary commutation was received for every crime, where flated prices were fixed for men's lives and members, where private revenges were authorized for all injuries, where the use of the ordeal, corfnet, and afterwards of the ducl, was the received method of proof, and where the judges were ruftic freeholders, affembled of a fudden, and deciding a cause from one debate or altercation of the parties.

RICHARD III.

parties. Such a flate of fociety was very little advanced beyond the rude flate of Chap. XXIII. nature: Violence univerfally prevailed, inftead of general and equitable maxims: The pretended liberty of the times, was only an incapacity of fubmitting to government : And men, not protected by law in their lives and properties, fought fhelter, by their perfonal fervility and attachments, under fome powerful chieftain, or by voluntary combinations.

The gradual progress of improvement, raifed the Europeans somewhat from this uncultivated ftate; and affairs, in this island particularly, took very early a turn, which was more favourable to juffice and to liberty. Civil employments and occupations foon became honourable among the English : The situation of that people rendered not the perpetual attention to wars fo neceffary as among their neighbours, and all regard was not confined to the military profession: The gentry, and even the nobility, began to deem an acquaintance with the law, a requifite part of education : They were lefs diverted than afterwards from fludies of this kind by other fciences; and in the age of Henry VI. we are told by Fortefcue, there were in the Inns of Court about two thousand students, most of them men of honourable birth, who gave application to this branch of civil knowledge. A circumftance which proves, that a confiderable advance was already made in the feience of government, and which prognofticated fill a greater.

ONE chief advantage, which reluted from the introduction and progrefs of the arts, was the introduction and progrefs of freedom; and this confequence affected men both in their personal and civil capacities.

IF we confider the antient flate of Europe, we shall find, that the far greater part of the fociety were every where bereaved of their perfonal liberty, and lived entirely at the will of their masters. Every one, that was not noble, was a flave : The peafants were fold along with the land : The few inhabitants of cities were not in a better condition : Even the gentry themselves were subjected to a long train of fubordination under the greater barons or chief vaffals of the crown; who, tho' feemingly placed in a high flate of fplendor, yet, having but a flender protection from the law, were exposed to every tempest of state, and by the precarious condition, in which they lived, paid dearly for the power of oppreffing and tyrannizing over their inferiors. The first incident, which broke in upon this violent system of government, was the practice, begun in France, of erecting communities and corporations, endowed with privileges and a feparate municipal government, which gave them protection against the tyranny of the barons, and which

312

443

thencefond fogunled to

Chap. XXIII, which the prince himself deemed it prudent to respect *. The relaxation of the feudal tenures, and an execution, fomewhat stricter, of the public law, bestowed an independance on vaffals, which was unknown to their forefathers. And even the peafants themfelves, tho' later than other orders of the ftate, made their escape from those bonds of villenage or flavery, in which they had formerly been retained.

> IT may appear ftrange, that the progress of the arts, which feems, among the Greeks and Romans, to have daily encreased the number of flaves, should, in later times, have proved fo general a fource of liberty; but this difference of the events proceeded from a great difference in the circumstances, which attended those institutions. The antient barons, being obliged to maintain themselves continually in a military pofture, and little emulous of elegance or fplendor, employed not their villains as domestic fervants, much less as manufacturers, but composed their retinue of free men, whose military spirit rendered the chiestain formidable to his neighbours, and who were ready to attend him in every warlike enterprize. The villains were occupied entirely in the cultivation of their mafter's land, and paid their rents either in corn and cattle and other produce of the farm, or in fervile offices, which they performed about the baron's family, and upon the farms which he retained in his own poffeffion. In proportion as agriculture improved, and money encreafed, it was found, that these fervices, tho' extremely burthenfome to the villain, were of little advantage to the mafter; and that the produce of a large eftate could be much more conveniently difposed of by the peafant himfelf, who raifed it, than by the landlord or his bailiff, who were formerly accustomed to receive it. A commutation was therefore made of rents for fervices, and of money rents for those in kind ; and as men, in a subfequent age, discovered, that farms were better cultivated where the farmer enjoyed a fecurity of possession, the practice of granting leafes to the peafant began to prevail, which entirely broke the bonds of fervitude, already much relaxed from the former practices. Thus villenage went gradually into difuse throughout the more civilized parts of Europe : The interest of the master, as well as that of the flave, concurred in this alteration. The lateft laws which we find in

> * There appear early fymptoms of the jealoufy, entertained by the barons against the progress of the arts, as deftructive of their licentious power. A law was enacted, 7 Henry IV. cap. 17. prohibiting any one who did not poffefs twenty fhillings a year in land from binding his fons apprentices to any trade. They found already that the cities began to drain the country of the labourers and hufbandmen ; and did not foresee how much the encrease of commerce would increase the value of their effates. See farther, Cotton, p. 179. The Kings, to encourage the boroughs, granted them this privilege, that any villain, who had lived a twelvemonth in any corporation and had been of the gild, fhould be thenceforth regarded as free.

444

England

England for the enforcing or regulating this species of fervitude, were enacted in Chap. XXIII. the reign of Henry VII. And tho' the antient flatutes on this fubject remain ftill unrepealed by parliament, it appears, that, before the reign of Elizabeth, the diffinction of villain and freeman was totally, tho' infenfibly abolished, and that no perfon remained in the ftate, to whom the former laws could be applied.

Thus perfonal freedom became almost general in Europe; an advantage which paved the way for the encrease of political or civil liberty, and which, even where it was not attended with this falutary effect, ferved to give the members of the community fome of the most confiderable advantages of it.

THE conflitution of the English government, ever fince the invasion of this ifland by the Saxons, may boaft of this pre-eminence, that in no age the will of the monarch was ever entirely abfolute and uncontrouled : But in other refpects the ballance of power has extremely fhifted among the feveral orders of the flate; and this fabric has experienced the fame mutability, which has attended all human institutions.

THE antient Saxons, like the other German nations, where each individual was enured to arms, and where the independance of men was fecured by a great equality of possefilions, feem to have admitted a confiderable mixture of democracy into their form of government, and to have been one of the freeft nations, of which there remains any account in the records of hiftory. After this tribe was fettled in England, especially after the diffolution of the Heptarchy, the great extent of the kingdom produced a great inequality in property; and the ballance feems to have inclined to the fide of the Ariftocracy. The Norman conqueft threw more authority into the hands of the fovereign, which, however, admitted of great controul; tho' derived lefs from the general forms of the conflication, which were inaccurate and irregular, than from the independant power enjoyed by each baron in his particular district or province. The establishment of the great charter exalted ftill higher the Ariftocracy, imposed regular limits on royal power, and gradually introduced fome mixture of Democracy into the conflitution. But even during this period, from the acceffion of Edward I. to the death of Richard III. the condition of the commons was no-wife defirable; a kind of Polifh Ariftocracy prevailed; and tho' the Kings were limited, the people were as yet far from being free. It required the authority almost absolute of the fovereigns, which took place in the fubfequent period, to pull down thefe diforderly and licentious tyrants, who were equal enemies to peace and to freedom, and to establish that regular execution of the laws, which, in a following age, enabled the people to crect a regular and equitable plan of liberty.

IN

Chap. XXIII.

In each of these fucceffive alterations, the only rule of government, which is intelligible or carries any authority with it, is the established practice of the age, and the maxims of administration, which are at that time prevalent, and univerfally affented to. Those who, from a pretended respect to antiquity, appeal at every turn to an original plan of the conflicution, only cover their turbulent spirit and their private ambition under the appearance of venerable forms; and whatever period they pitch on for their model, they may still be carried back to a more antient period, where they will find the meafures of power entirely different, and where every circumstance, by reason of the greater barbarity of the times, will appear still less worthy of imitation. Above all, a civilized nation, like the English, who have happily established the most perfect and most accurate fystem of liberty, that ever was found compatible with government, ought to be cautious of appealing to the practice of their anceftors, or regarding the maxims of uncultivated ages as certain rules for their prefent conduct. An acquaintance with the hiftory of the remote periods of their government is chiefly uleful by instructing them to cherish their present constitution from a comparison or contrast with the condition of those distant times. And it is also curious, by showing them the remote, and commonly faint and disfigured originals of the most finished and most noble inftitutions, and by instructing them in the great mixture of accident which commonly concurs with a fmall ingredient of wildom and forefight, in erecting the complicated fabric of the most perfect government.

The END of the SECOND VOLUME.

E R R A T A.

P. 29. l. 22. read exorbitant authority. P. 32. l. 4. from the bottom, dele to. P. 44. l. 8. from the bottom, read yielded himself prisoner. P. 65. l. 4. read monarch. P. 117. l. 12. read the cldess for. P. 128. l. 10. read completion of the marriage. P. 132. l. 10. from the bottom, read had retired. P. 168. l. 10. from the bottom, read period of their history. P. 177. l. ult. read tumultuary. P. 217. l. 15. read independent of. P. 220. l. 20. read from it. P. 321. l. 5. dele I.

