GREAT M-R.

SIR.

*** HE fubject of a future peace, and of my k prefent letter, which of late fo much engroffed the public attention, has lain fo long dormant, that I am apprehenfive arevival of it, will not meet with an equal

The minds of men, in general, are too indulgence. open to the impreffions of prejudice, and too ready to propagate them, when conceived; unless immediately eradicated upon the first fymptons, the difease becomes contagious, all prefcriptions ufelefs, and, at length, we have no longer a right to fpeak or think. Thus reafon. the brighteft ornament of the human mind, is fuborned, and overborne by the torrent of popularity, and forced to fubmit to the giddy plaudite of a multitude.

Equally

Equally free to excuse as condemn, I will acknowledge there is fome foundation to plead the privilege of a too favourable opinion ; the want of oppolition, or rather total filence that hath enfued fince the publication of a certain pamplet *, hath too long given the advocates of that fyftem occafion for triumph, and caufe for the most wary of my countrymen to be, in a manner, reconciled to their infinuating, but delufive arguments; not only delufive as being erroneous or fuperficial in matter, but by mifreprefenting circumftances, and evading the chief points in difpute with all the arts of fophiftry and fubterfuge. These arts, Sir, have been carried to fuch height, that I cannot fay, even with respect to the author himfelf, " That I have lived to fee fubjects of the " greateft importance to this nation, publickly difcuffed " without party views or party heat, with decency and se politenefs, and with no other warmth than what a " zeal for the honour and happiness of our King and " country " might" infpire." +

If we differ thus much in matters of fentiments, no wonder we fhould, in matters of fact; and that we do this, and pretty largely too, will appear in the courfe of thefe fheets.

I do not "affect to difcover felf-interefted views at " the bottom of the faireft, and moft generous conduct;" I do not affect to be fo inquifitive into "human nature," Reafon and Juftice are my advocates in our prefent difference.

When I faw men publish their opinions, without previoufly confulting their judgment; when I heard them in a dictatorial tone exclaim, that we should have "a

" treacherous and delufive peace "," if not made conformable to their own ideas (though ever fo abfurd) could I think it other than an offence to candour and fair reafoning, effectially when there was fo much room to doubt their fyftems by their many contradictions and inconfiftencies? we were told that the French " were tired " of Canada," and that it " was not worth their afk-" ing:" and that, " the inclemency of the climate," and " the difficult accefs to it," were not the only caufes of this diflike, but still farther, " a trade fcarcely defraying the expence of the colony;" and yet, Sir, this very colony was recommended to us by the fame author, as fingly to be preferred before all other objects, and every other conquest that we had, or might obtain from the enemy, was to be facrificed at a future negociation. I fay, Sir, fuch feeming inconfiftencies must excite doubts of the truth of those facts, or the propriety of the author's hipothefis, and a defire among unprejudiced men, and those who know what they read, to have the fubject farther difcuffed, and made confonant, at leaft, to common comprehension. Though inferior in dignity and fortune, my opinion, in that or any other matter, might be equally ftrong and important, my love to my country equally prevalent and difinterefted. If I had doubts, I had a right to divulge those doubts, I had a right to expect them to be cleared up, and to fufpend my judgment till it was effectually complied with. To fee, therefore, every avenue to that defirable end, forcibly ftopped up by fuch rude and hafty declarations in favour of a particular object, as that without it we should " have a treacheous and delucifive peace, we" fhould " foon find we had done nothing "," and the like muft occasion doubts, not only of the candour, but probity of the author.

When I heard another fet of men, under the prefent circumftances of the nation, and the war, urge a reftitution with fo much warmth, and without the leaft precedent or authority to enforce fuch an innovated doctrine, could I impute it to an over zeal, to an ardour for the honour of our King and country ? Moderation, Sir, is truly commendable; but it may ferve as a cloak to bafe and iniquitous purpofes ; it may be profeffed and practifed too, not only to check " the madnefs of the " people," but to " make a virtuous and able ministry " act against themselves," their judgment, and the most important interefts of their country. If the author of the Letter to two Great Men was reprehenfible for a repetition of French perfidy, and a defire to fee the ffipulations of a former treaty executed previous to a future peace, and was therefore to be cenfured as tending to increase and inflame an improper disposition among the people; how much more fo must his accuser, who pretends to be fo cautious of fomenting popular clamours. and yet affords much greater caufe for them, by unjust obliquy and reproach, could telling the people, their " arrogance" would " deftroy" the good intentions of " a virtuous and able ministry," and the " effects" of " their victories and fucceffes ;" could telling them, they " had no fhare in acquiring" those " fucceffes," be the means of preventing or abating this infolent mood he complains of ? Such language feemed fo far from being the

refult

refult of decency and moderation, that I could not but confider it as the venom of a former infulting faction : it was certainly a fure method to fow the feeds of general discontent. The populace of this kingdom are born and educated in high notions of their liberties, and, confequently, look with a watchful eye on the prerogatives of government; fo that every attempt to diminish the one, or extend the other, would quickly raife feditions, telling them of their pretended " arrogance" was, in effect, giving them to underftand, that they made themfelves free in a matter, which, though the iffue of it fo very nearly concerned them, they were not to be confulted in, telling them they had no fhare in acquiring the "victories and fucceffes" obtained over the enemy was faying that they had not the leaft right to trouble themfelves about the measures or event of the war, for that they neither fought the battles, nor bore any fhare in the expences, affertions which are in every refpect falle and unjuft. Is it not they that cultivate our lands, reap our harvefts, fabricate those manufactures which are diffufed over the whole world, and, in fact, bring plenty and riches into the kingdom ? Is it not they that furnish men for our victorious armies and fleets ? Is it not they that receive the greatest injury from the heaviness of the taxes, and that bear all the miferies of the war by the - obstruction to trade in general ? Is it not the middling people, and those in fubordinate flations, or to use the gentleman's own meaning, Is it not the mob who do and fuffer all this? Wherefore then fhould they be treated fo contemptuoufly ? The mite of the needy hufbandman is as worthy as the largest donation of a peer ; he fubfcribes in proportion to his ability ; nay more : by the

the encrease of taxes, the livelihood of the former is vifibly affected : he must retrench his most effential demands for necessaries, while the latter only contracts his fuperfluities. By the continuance of the war, the former is fubiect to all the infolence of office; and the fcarcity of fervants, a natural confequence of fuch war, of courfe much enhances the price of labour, while his crops are ftill fubject to the fame intemperature of weather; the markets to be overflocked from the want of confumption ; and his commodities, being perifhable, must be disposed of at all events, which, at the best of times, will bear very little, if any, advancement in price. Could it then be just or reasonable to brand these people with fuch odious epithets ? It was done without the least cause ; they do not raise a clamour against the measures of the government, or the continuance of the war, rather the contrary ; they recommend a vigorous profecution of it; but, then, they hope when a peace is made, it will be fuch, as will relieve them from a repetition fo burthensome. If they are over-warm in their expressions against the French, let it be imputed to a little ebullition of hereditary enmity. The infraction of former treaties by France, her natural ambition and treachery authorize the most fevere reflections; but yet we do not hear the terms of tyrants, they do not carry fo much the appearance of private pique to the enemy, as a regard to their own fecurity, and that of all Europe.

I reflected the more, Sir, on this improper difpolition among our writers, and pretended admonifhers, becaufe it was at the time of a luppoled approaching congress; a time when unanimity ought to have been most prevalent lent throughout the kingdom, and when every head, and every hand ought to have been employed for the general good, with deliberation, and void of the leaft partiality. Inftead of this, fyftems were introduced, in themfelves abfurd, and rendered more fo by the manner of introducing them, and fuch as tended only "to em-" barrafs the negotiation, and render it a work of in-" finite difficulty.

(7)

It is not " the beauty of expression "," nor an harmony of founds that can bials my judgment; they may tickle my ear, but cannot feduce my heart; I do not pay fuch a blind deference to the external ornaments ; I read them as fuch ; I read them as introduced merely Argumenti gratiâ, often the effects of a bad caufe, and often intended to cheat people of their proper understanding. But as my countrymen, in general are characta_ rized for their great knowledge and wifdom, I hope they have not confidered fophiftry as fair reafoning, and fuffered prejudice to gain too great an afcendant over them at the prefent conjuncture. Impartial men fuspend their judgment till the matter has been properly canvaffed, if they find the caufe of their prejudices removed, they will then retract their too favourable opinion ; reafon will have its due influence, and will direct their approbation : but, whatever fystem they incline to, let me remind them to recollect the confequence, let them likewife recollect. that it is a unanimous perfeverance in their own intereft. which is the only means to check future factions; and that it will ever fuftain the efforts of a wife and virtuous administration.

And you, Sir, I flatter myfelf, will pardon this familiar and intrufive addrefs; the occafion, and your own

public declarations prompted me, the nature of your office in a manner required it. You have been particularly diffinguished by a noble emulation for the good of your conntry, I therefore perfuade myfelf you will not condemn the weakest effort built on that foundation. and aiming principally at the fame glorious end. If I have not done this before, inclination was not wanting to urge me; I heard a fuftem adopted which, I was convinced would prove detrimental to my country ; I heard of the demolition of the fortifications of Louisbourg? a confequence of that fystem, with the utmost regret; I heard it with the most pungent concern ; but then fome affairs intervened, which required my absence, at a time when I had just formed an intention of entering the lifts as a writer : I therefore hoped fome one more difengaged, would have undertook that office; an office, which feemed to me altogether fo praife worthy, and even incumbent on every Briton, who regarded his country, and thought as I did. Whence then proceeds my miftake? are the people fo prepoffeffed, or tired of any further difcuffion ? is it from a diffidence of fufficient matter to promote a more nice disquisition ? or, is it from the effects of floth? I am apprehenfive, these have all too much co-operated in their turns, to render a defion of this nature, if ever fuch a one was conceived abortive; all future expectations of it feem to have entirely vanished; nor should I now trouble you with this letter. but that the love of my country, regard for you, and particularly the preffing exigencies of the times, confpire and urge me to the tafk. The rage of war which feems rather to encrease than abate, notwithstanding the continued bad fuccefs of our enemies, induces me to take up the pen, and makes me hope that council may be neiher neither too late nor ineffectual ; it must come more acceptable, Sir, as being at a time when the fubject of peace is revived, and, if the war is continued, where the profecution of it will be the most ferviceable.

Not bred in the school of flattery and adulation, my letter may, perhaps, appear in a homely garb, and unadorned with the flowers of eloquence and fulfome panegyrick ; but let not that act against me, nor my cause ; I addrefs you as a plain Englishman, not as an orator; I do not prefume to correspond with you in court phrases, but in the rude language of a Civilian. Nor would I intrude myfelf upon you, Sir, with the impertinence of privacy, I commit my letter to the prefs, that it may introduce itfelf to you, if not by the voice of a multitude, at least from the plaufibility of a title. And I am the rather inclined to a publication, as I should be much pleased, if any gentleman differs from me in opinion, to fee the fubject farther difcuffed. Not blind, though zealous, nor bigotted, though tenacious, I fland open to conviction ; if my opinions are erroneous, let them be refuted with decency, and my heart shall thank the man that better inftructs me ; but, till that is done, excufe me, Sir, for a little petulance and obflinacy. With regard to myfelf, I can affure you, Sir, and with truth, that I have not the least connection or interest in giving a preference to any particular object, my pen indites what my heart dictates ; the fubject feems to me of national importance, and, if fuch, is worthy of your regard, and ought to meet with your indulgence and utmost encouragement.

You may poffibly, Sir, admire at my addreffing you fingly and alone; but when I confider your flation, as mediator between Majefty and the fubject, and your decla-clarations ever to encourage the national honour and welfare; the one induces me to think, that the manner of conducting a future negotiation, and the terms of the peace, principally depend on you; and the other likewife induces me to hope for the good effects of your promifed encouragement.

You have, Sir, the endeavours of a man, who thinks much of his country, and not lightly of you, and one who is a friend to mankind. If in the courfe of the following fheets, I fhould contribute to the caufe of either, I fhould reft fatisfied; but if I fhould expose the absurdities of other fystems, and be the means of reconciling the proper object of a future peace to the national honour and emolument; if I fhould be partly the humble inftrument of procuring a lasting peace, my happinefs would be compleat; my time could not be better spent, than when it proved conducive to the tranquillity of mankind, and the welfare of my country. If I fhould not fucceed, I fhould ftill have that pleasing fatisfaction, which every honeft man feels from the uprightness of his intentions.

I will likewife acknowledge, Sir, I have received no final additional temptation to my prefent plan, from the war now fubfifting between us, and the Indians on the back of our fettlements in South Carolina; it hath not a little confirmed me in an opinion that Canada would not answer the mighty things, that were urged in favour of its retention, and in preference to all other objects. Upon the first advice of this rupture, I forefaw, in fome measure, the many difficulties we fhould incur; it has always been a maxim with me, to conciliate the affections of the Indians, and rather be at variance with the French in America, than with these pcople, people, whom I thought to be our trueft and most natural friends, and whom it was our interest to be upon good terms with; and, at prefent, I cannot but confider the differences between us, in the light of a prophetic warning, not only to provide against the like hereaster, but also to direct our judgment in an ensuing negotiation.

What the event of this war will prove, I will not pretend to determine : but thus far I will fav, that the destruction of the towns of those Indians, has only ferved to reduce them to defpair, and make them more implacable enemies. Revenge will ftimulate them to acts of horror, which we may the rather expect from them, as being a people that naturally " delight in war, and 4 take pride in murder *", and who measure their notions of honour in proportion to their inhumanities. The French have felt the effects of their favage principles, and fo have we, and pretty feverely too, which ought to induce us to be more circumspect in our conduct for the future. I do not mean to infinuate the least reflection on those who promoted this war, or have been inftrumental in carrying it on; we had better have them open enemies, than treacherous and fubtle friends. But fince we have made the breach fo much the wider, let us not leave affairs in a worfe fituation than they were before that breach ; it would be deftroy_ ing the caufe of the war, and only tend to give them a meaner idea of our national courage and ability. The way to bring them to our terms is not by negociation. but by force and arms; if we exert our ftrength, they will be much more ready to embrace our interest, and continue firm in our alliance ; but then let not this exertion be directed as against a few tribes of vagabond favages, but as against a populous and warlike nation. fourred on by the French, who connive at their rebellion, and who probably do, and will farther affift them with ammunition, and their own forces; an affertion of the truth of which I am fully perfuaded, notwithflanding their commander at Albama, offered to take our traders into the fort, and protect them from the favages ; a circumftance which, I cannot but think, was owing to artifice, and to a fear left we fhould divert our victorious arms to that quarter. And I dread the more the uncertain iffue of this war, by the repeated accounts we have received from our colonies, of feveral of the French Indians and Canadians being about to retire to these parts, nay, that several of them were actually sone. The French had confiderable fettlements at Detroit and Miffilimakinac, and feveral flraggling ones about the fouth and west coasts of the lakes Erie, and Michigan, the inhabitants of which, upon hearing of the lofs of Canada, have most of them, very probably, retired to their countrymen in Louisiana, either with a view of fettling, or joining the rebel Indians for the fake of plunder, which is, indeed, most likely, as the fettlers about the lakes were chiefly civilized Indians and difbanded foldiers. I repeat again, Sir, if the French from Canada have retired to these parts, or if the war should become extended among the Indians, it may prove of the moft fatal confequences. It is evident there is not the leaft dependence to be placed on the Creeks, they have murthered fome of our traders, have neglected, if not actually refused, to make fatisfaction for the infult, or to deliver up the murtherers; nay, the affembly of the province has been to conficious of the ticklifh fituation of affairs

affairs with them, that they have been afraid to infift on the usual fatisfaction. The' matters have not hitherto been carried to any certainty of a defection of the other tribes of Indians fettled about these parts from our intereft ; yet the retreat of the army under Col. Montgomery, hath been productive of further infolence from them, and we have tamely fubmitted to it, for fear of giving them the leaft offence. The Chactaws are entirely in the French intereft, and have been only reftrained from attacking our fettlements for fear of these Creeks, who are between them and the province of Georgia. If therefore theCreeks fhould declare against us, the Chactaws would likewife ; and both of them together can fend upwards of twelve thousand warriors to the field. The removal of the army under Colonel Montgomery at fuch a critical juncture is, to all appearance, very abfurd, The feason of the year was too far advanced for them to be of any fervice in the reduction of Canada, they could be therefore ordered to New York, merely to go into quarters, and that at a time when there was the greatest reason for them to stay on the frontiers of Carolina. But as it is generally believed the regiment of Royal Welch volunteers, and the independent companies gone fome time fince from England, are to fupply their place, I hope they will get there time enough to check the enemy's progrefs, and their future machinations. Matters at prefent look but badly; fort Loudoun is fallen, and though the Indians have raifed the blockade of fort Prince George, they may return with fresh vigour, as they did to fort Loudoun, and have the fame fuccefs; in which cafe they will have full fcope to exercife their fury : the fcalping blood-hounds would be let loofe, and deftroy and depopulate our most fertile fettlements ; and, in a colony, where there are three or four blacks to one white, the confequences are truly horrible. The inhabitants have already thought of arming themfelves agreeable to the martial mandate.

The two Carolinas and Georgia, Sir, are likely to prove very valuable colonies to their mother country. are objects worthy her very tender regard, and entitled to her most vigorous protection; and as the war was, most certainly, commenced in the cause of the colonies. it is reasonable to expect, that regard should be had to ferve those who stand in the greatest need of it. That Canada will not answer the purpose, I am convinced of ; it will employ no finall part of my prefent letter. But before I proceed on the merits, give me leave, Sir, to confider what has been already faid upon the fubject.

The chief objections made by the remarker against retaining, Canada may be reduced to four, viz.

Ift, That Canada, with regard to the West India trade, would be a very unneceffary acquisition for us. " who have fuch immenfe tracts, fo much more conve-" nightly fituated for that trade, and who could eafily " fupply five times the confumption of ours, the French. se and all the Weft India islands put together, and that se too, at a much easier rate, than they can possibly " have" them " at from Canada."

adly, That " Canada, fituated in a cold climate," produced " no commodity, except furs and fkins, which " fhe" could " exchange for the commodities of Eu-" rope; and, confequently the could have little returns " to make the English merchant."

adly, That, this " trade," when " carried on with " France, fell fhort, in its most flourishing state, of " 140,000 l. a year." And, 4thly, That "Canada, in our hands, would not, " probably, yield half what it did to France."

Thefe, Sir, I think, were objections of a very nice concern to England, fuch as might have flaggered the faith of those who entertained any rational notions of retaining Canada; and fuch, as having been publickly afferted, ought, undoubtedly, to have been as publickly refuted before fuch a notion was indulged.

That this has not been done. I need not forbear to infift upon, I can fafely challenge any man to fhow me the contrary. Even the author of the pretended Reply *. who undertook to convince us of the fuperior intereft we should have in Canada, above every other conquest has paffed over in filence every material objection made againft it ; and inftead thereof, from fome words cafually dropt by the remarker, took occasion to enter into an elaborate, and indeed very unneceffary defence of our American colonies ; he tells us how abfurd the infinuations are of their future independence ; informs us of the nature of population in new coutries, and ftrongly urges the neceffity of extending our fettlements. which, we are given to understand, is the only means to prevent fuch independence. These are the author's chief topics, and from thence is inferred. that we must keep Canada at all events. I thought, when I first read the pamphlet, and still do think, that it is rather a defence of our northern colonies in gene. ral, than Canada. There were no doubts flarted of the value of our North American colonies, the objections of the remarker did not reft on that point; if they had, it was a doctrine every way unpopular, nor would any one ever entertain a notion of giving up any part of them to the French, whole great power had already made it neceffary to undertake a heavy war to check them. But I cannot help obferving, that fuch trivial expressions of the remarker, as, "the war was com-"menced in the cause of the colonies," and "we know "what trifling returns we have from some of our own "very flourishing colonies in America," feem to have founded the production of a pamphlet of near fixty columns; and that the sole drift of defending our North American colonies, seems to be to introduce an artful misapplication of things in favour of Canada, as might be proved from many influnces.

But waving all notice of this kind, give me leave, Sir, to enter into the caufe of my prefent addrefs; there is enough to be faid upon that head, without diving into idle quibbling; but it may be neceffary to confider the nature of Canada under the French government, in order to deduce fome reafonable fuggeftions of its future fituation under England. For this, Sir, I perfuade myfelf, I fhall fland excufed, tho' it fhould carry me to encroach on your time, more than I could have wifhed, as it is the only way to come at the truth, and bring matters to their proper bearings.

France, Sir, at the firft forming a colony in Canada, had many difficulties to encounter, which proved almost infuperable. Common feafe dictated to the most fimple capacity, that a country fo far to the north, must be fubject to many inconveniences from the inclemency of the climate; the French King, therefore endeavoured, in a manner, to force a fettlement by many immunities and indulgencies granted to all who would become fettlers; but notwithftanding the many attractions made use of on this occasion, very few volunteers entered into the fervice.

The flews were ranfacked for females; and thofe wretches, whole lives had been already forfeited to the gallies, for their atrocious crimes, were forced to accompany them. Such was the connubial affociation, formed to people this all-excelling Canada, a country which was looked upon, even by thefe objects of mifery, with an excefs of horror and contempt. If thefe natural difficulties of the country had not fubfifted, would France have proceeded to thefe extremities to people it ? Would fhe have given fuch large indulgencies to fettlers; at leaft, would fhe have continued them, as fhe has done, if they were not abfolutely neceffary to detain the inhabitants in their fettlement? Thefe difficulties of the country will appear to greater excefs, if we only confider the extent of the indulgencies.

Every fettler had not only his paffage free from France, but was alloted a fettlement *, and fupplied with the neceffary utenfils to cultivate fuch fettlement; with this only refervation, that he fhould repay one-third of the produce of his lands, till the fum, advanced, to enable him to earry on his fettlement, was fully paid. The exports to and from France, were exempted from any impoft or duty, neither were they liable to any, on being imported in Canada, except Brazil tobacco, which paid about twenty fhillings flirling, per hundred weight, and was intended merely to promote the growth of that commodity in their own colonies. The whole charge

According to the Baron Lahontan, " The pooreft of them have four " arpents of ground in front, and thirty or forty in depth. An arpent is a lpot of ground containing roo perches fquare, each of which is eighteen feet long. See Lahontan's Voyage to North America, Letter 2.

of paying the civil and military officers, and repairing and maintaining the fortifications was likewife vefted in the crown. But notwithstanding these advantages, the Canadians could never furmount the natural difficulties of their station, occasioned by the intemperature of the climate, and barrenness of the foil. All the money that ever centered in Canada came from France by virtue of the royal establishment (including the civil officers, and the military gentry fent by the French King to defend the colony;) and this no fooner came to their hands, than it was drawn off again by the over-ballance of their trade with Old France, for Canada having no other commodity wherewith to fupply a European market, but furs, their demands for European commodities, not only to fupport their own wants, but likewife the Indian trade, greatly exceeded their abilities to return in that article; they were therefore of neceffity obliged to pay the deficiency in money, or bills of exchange. As a farther encouragement to the fettlers. and to procure a mutual commerce, the royal establishment was made accountable for the bills of exchange: for specie being very little, if at all, used in Canada, paper credit would not have been accepted as cafh, or even negotiable, without fome fuch fecurity for the due payment, as had been frequently experienced, to the no fmall detriment of the inhabitants. Can we then call Canada an opulent, or even a thriving colony, and deferving of our most trifling confideration, when it could not depend upon its own foundation for a support; when it could not, at its highest pitch of grandeur, bear its own neceffary expences, or keep a part of the money fent thither to pay its own officers ? nay, it is an undoubted truth, that the running cash of Canada (which the inhabihabitants have been frequently obliged to circulate, notwithftanding the lofs to themfelves from its inferior value \*) has been of late years reduced fo low as within a few thoufand livres, the greateft part of which of courfe centered in the capital  $\uparrow$ . Was not the manner, living, and employment among the Canadians in general, ever fuch as denoted the extremest indigence and poverty? Was the principal inhabitants ever to be put on a level with the ordinary people of our own colonies  $\ddagger$ ? Did they not D 2 rather

* " If the merchant fells" his " fkins to any private man in the coun-" try for ready money, he is paid in the current money, which is of lefe " value than the bills of exchange, that the director of " the " office" of the farmers general " draws upon Rochel or Paris; for there they are paid " in French livres, which are twenty fols, whereas a Canada livre is but " fifteen fols." † Father Charlevoix who was in Canada in 1721, fpeaking of the fearcity of coin, fays, " in a word you will be furprized, when I tell you, " that in 1706, the trade of the moft ancient of all our colonies was car-" ried on in a bottom, or capital, of no more than 650,030 livres, and " things have been pretty much in the fame fituation. Now this fum di-" vided among thirty thousand inhabitants, is neither capable of enriching " them, nor of enabling them to purchafe the commodies of France." For this reafon moft part of them go flark naked, effectally those that live in " remote habitations. " They have not even the advantage of felling the " furplus of their commodities to the inhabitants of cities, those being ob-" liged, in order to fubfift, to have lands in the country, and to cultivate " them themfelves for their own account," fo that high or low were farmers or hunters. A pretty picture this of Canadian affluence, and well worth our envy! Charleveix, Letter 4, Vol. I. p. 149.

† Charlevoix, in the parallel he draws between the English and French colonies, has the following paragraph. " In New England, and the other " provinces of the continent of America, fubject to the British empire, " there prevails an opulence which they are utterly at a loss how to use; " and in New France, a poverty hid by an air of being in eafly circum-" flances, which feems not at all fludied. Trade and the cultivation of " their plantations flrengthen the first, whereas the fecond is fuppersourd with the industry of its inhabitants, and the taffe of the nation diffuse over it " fome-rather lead the lives of flaves both in labour and diet? The inland communication between the feveral diffricts in Canada was during fummer (if it can be fo called) chiefly carried on by boats and canoes ; what therefore could be more miferable than feeing fome paddling up and down the lakes and rivers like fo many favages, for the lakes and rivers, being in many parts very fhallow, and in others fubject to large and dangerous cataracts were rendered unfit for any other method of navigation ? What could likewife be more miferable than feeing others delving in the earth with pickaxes to break the hardened furface ? Their occupations in winter were still worfe, fome were empolyed like fo many Laplanders in guiding fledges drawn by horfes, or other animals over vaft tracts of fnow and ice, the only method they had to keep up a correspondence with their neighbours : fome (to use an English phrase) lived like so many Orfons, or wild men of the wood upon their dear bought fpoil from among the wild beafts ; and others made fhift to fubfift upon the fifh they got by breaking through the ice; an employment often impracticable, and at other times equally laborious and dangerous as the others. There are those who urge that the populoufness of Canada contradict thefe affertions ; our public papers which, fometime ago, fo much vilified this French colony, feem to have adopted this doctrine ; they now do all they can to aggrandize it; they give pompous lifts of the number

" fomething infinitely pleafing. The English planter amafics wealth, and "never makes any superfluous expence; the French inhabitant again enjoys what he has acquired, and often makes a parade of what he is not possible of. That labours for his possible is again leaves his offstring in the same necessities he was in himself at his first fetting out, and to extricate themselves as they can. Id. p. 113. Letter 3. and extent of the cities, towns, villages, and villas, which they eagerly publish with all the affurance of authenticity, and prefume, as a certainty, of its importance. But admit their accounts even to be genuine. are we from thence to infer any natural perfection of the country, or to blindly imagine it will be fo infinitely advantageous to us, from this abundant population? France, Sir, being a kingdom fo populous and extenfive in itfelf, and where agriculture is neglected, and the country, for want of it, doth not grow enough to fupport its own inhabitants, need we wonder that where a fettlement is formed, and fuch large indulgencies granted, it should attract the attention of a few of the ignonorant rabble ! and that fuch are the chief part of the European inhabitants of Canada, is undoubtedly true: the new fettlers are, in general, the very refuse of France, of very mean origin, and those who had no other profpect to get a livelihood, than by flying from their native country. Need we likewife wonder that their numbers have encreased, when they have been fuffered to poffels fuch an additional territory by encroachments ? Suppose, agreeable to a late calculation. that Canada is one thousand eight hundred miles in length, and one thousand, two hundred, and fixty in breadth, I would be glad to know, whether according to the ufual method of calculating, the number of inhabitants are in the least proportion to the extent of country ? The most extravagant account of the French has fixed the number of the inhabitants of Canada confiderably within one hundred and fifty thousand ; but they are generally computed at lefs than one hundred thousand. Even admit the former, it must imply that Canada is greatly deficient in inhabitants; and therefore muft con-convince us that the foil is very barren, and the means of getting a livelihood very difficult. It is known that the climate about Lake Champlain, and the other lakes, which include their encroachments, and which they have fo long been endeavouring to poffefs themfelves of, is more mild, and the foil more fertile than in Canada. Diveft them of thefe alone, and we fhould foon find an amazing diminution in the number of inhabitants; diveft them of thefe, and we fhould foon find, if Canada is reftored, as amazing a decreafe in their fur trade; for moft of the fkins they fend to Europe come from thence, and in fuch quantity, that Lahontan tells us, that three fourths of them come from thence, even in his time, when the French had fuch little intercourfe with the Indians about thefe lakes.

The public papers have likewife been very liberal in magnifying the fertility of Canada, but I think with very little foundation, and I believe to as little purpofe. Indeed it is inconceivable to me, how a country fo far to the north, and fubject to fuch piercing frofts, the greater part of the year can be fo very fertile. As the froft is apt to penetrate very deep, and continues fo long. it muft render the natural quality of the earth benumb'd and inactive, while it continues, efpecially as at that time the farmer is difabled from giving it the necessary culture: therefore the difficulty of vegetation, in a country where the extremity of the cold is fo piercing and permanent the greater part of the year, is very obvious, and must undoubtedly be more fo, with those commodities, that require a longer flay in the earth, to attain their natural perfection than others. Thus the growth of wheat, which generally remains nine months in the earth even in England, must meet with greater obstacles cles than barley or oats, which remain but about four. Befides, as the furface of the earth, to a confiderable depth, is rendered fo hard by the froft, it muft be impoffible for the blade of the plant to fhoot up fpontaneoufly: an infinite deal of labour muft therefore have been requifite among the Canadian farmers to open the furrows, and give the plants all the affiftance of art in their power, while they are growing; for, if the culture beftowed on plants in general is beneficial, it muft certainly be more fo to those that remain longeft in the ground.

Great care must also have been taken by the Canadian farmers every feafon, that their lands were well cleaned of the flubble of the former crops, in order to render them fit for the reception of the feed, and the neceffary culture; otherwife the plants would be liable to be rooted up by plowing. And even admit that the foil of Canada had been originally ever fo fertile, it must have been greatly impaired fince; Canada being fuch a woody country, the farmer could not remove from his old farm to cultivate fresh lands at pleasure, as the difficulty of clearing the ground of the trees and flumps muft be infinite, and in most parts impracticable : their ufual fettlements muft therefore have loft their former virtue by fuch frequent culture, and the quantity of their produce must have decreased every succeeding year. They must likewise have required a great deal of manure, which, by its nutritive juice and warmth, might qualify the foil for vegetation; and, after all the difficulties of Nature are furmounted by this laborious and expensive toil, when the plants had acquired a confiderable growth, is it reasonable to suppose that they could could totally withftand every future inclemency of weather? Do not even the husbandmen of England (a climate infinitely more mild than Canada) often have their crops blighted by one night's froft? and will it he faid, they are not more liable to these calamities in Canada? and, as the difficulties of growing wheat were fo great, by reafon of the long flay it required in the ground, before it could acquire its natural perfection, it may reasonably be conceived, that the Canadians never exported any confiderable quantity of flour, if any at all ; and this is a prime article of the provision trade to the Sugar Iflands, and another start offer Burn anter 1891()

If we want farther proof of the climate of Canada, we need only afk our brave foldiers who have been there: they will inform us, that feveral of their most hardy comrades have loft the use of their limbs merely from the effects of the weather; nay, that fome of their officers alfo (whofe difference of living one would think a fecurity against this evil) have been rendered infirm : Brigadier Murray himfelf, if I am not miftaken, makes fuch a complaint in his letter, on the furrender of Montreal and all Canada,

The affertion, that Canada fupplied their Sugar Islands. with provisions, is likewife very doubtful. I have already explained myfelf with regard to all kinds of corn, which could not grow in any abundance, not only from the disfavour of the climate, but likewife of the foil, which is a mixture of fand and ftones, and therefore naturally very unfit for vegetation. It must at least be allowed, that Canada produced but a very fmall quantity of corn more than fufficient for the occasions of its own inhabitants. I have the authority of Charlevoix in rable growth, is it realonable to luppole that :

levoix in this print *, the great demands the Canadians had for it to give their cattle in winter, rendered it impoffible.

* " The winter (fays he) commonly begins before the veffels fet fail " in order to return to France, and always in fuch a manner, as to afto-" nifh every one, except the natives of the place. The first frosts, in a " few days, fill the rivers with ice, and the earth is foon covered with " fnow, which continues for fix months, and is always fix feet deep in " places not exposed to the wind.

" It is true there is no want of wood to guard against the cold, which " very foon becomes extreme, and encroaches greatly on the foring : but " it is, however, fomething extremely flocking, not to be able to flir out " of doors without being frozen, at leaft without being wrapt up in furs " like a bear. Moreover what a spectacle is it to behold one continued " tract of fnow, which pains the fight, and hides from our view all the " beauties of nature ? No more difference between the rivers and fields. " no more variety, even the trees are covered with fnow-froft, with large " ificles depending from all their branches, under which you cannot pafs " with fafety. What can a man think, who fees the horfes with beards " of ice more than a foot long; and who can travel in a country, where, " for the fpace of fix months, the bears themselves dare not shew their " faces to the weather ? Thus I have never paffed a winter in this coun-" try, without feeing fome one or other carried to the hofpital, and who " was obliged to have his legs or arms cut off, on account of their being " benumbed and frozen. In a word, if the fky is clear, the wind which " blows from the weft, is intolerably piercing. If it turns to the fourth " or east, the weather becomes a little more moderate, but so thick a snow " falls, that there is no feeing ten paces before you, even at noon day. On " the other hand, if a compleat thaw comes on, farewell to the yearly " ftock of capons, quarters of beef and mutton, poultry, and fifh, which " they had laid up in granaries, depending on the continuance of the froft ; " fo that in fpite of the exceffive feverity of the cold, people are reduced " to the neceffity of wishing for its continuance." Charl. p. 252, 254, letter 10.

And a little after, he fays (p. 255,) " After all, these colds fo long and " fo fevere, are attended with inconveniences, which can never thorough-" ly be remedied. I reckon in the first place the difficulty of feeding the " cattle, which during the whole winter feafon can find nothing in the " fields, and, confequently, the preferving them must be extremely ex-" penfive, while their flefh, after being kept fix months on dry food, muft " have E poffible. And if this natural fearcity of corn had not fublified, the immenfe expence of maintaining cattle and poultry with it all winter, muft ftill have greatly prevented the growth of them, as indeed was the cafe, for it is an undoubted truth, that many of the farmers in Canada, made it a practice of killing them in autumn, to avoid the vaft expence of maintaining them during the winter: fo that the greateft part of the year the inhabitants chiefly lived upon falted meats and fifh. And farther, to afcertain how fmall the trade was from Canada to the French fugar iflands with provifions, we need only enquire what quantities of beef and pork have been frequently exported directly from England and Ire-

been frequently exported directly from England and Ireland, and indirectly from our own northern colonics, fometimes on their own bottom, and at others by means of their correspondence with the Dutch and Danes. Those articles generally comprized under the denomination of Lumber, they, indeed, might fend to the islands, but this was carried on in such a manner, as fearce to deferve our notice, and the name of a branch of commerce. The demands of the Canadians, as I have faid before, being greater for European commodities, than they could return in surs, they generally supplied the deficiency by a cargo of lumber, which the European fhips carried to the fugar islands, and there got in exchange fugar, coffee, indigo, &c. which they brought to Europe, and this kind of traffic generally made near a whole year's voyage. Other fhips were folely freighted with furs, or fometimes partly paid in bills of exchange directly for Europe; but much the greatest part of the thips from France to Canada, reforted to the fifhery, in the mouth of the river St. Laurence, and off the banks of Newfoundland : fo that one way or other, they all of them generally got home loaded. But is not this a further proof of the extreme poverty of Canada? Canada itfelf could not near fupply them with fufficient commodities to go freighted home, or any other market. And if they had not found a remedy in the fifhery, the whole colony of Canada would, very probably, have been long ago neglected, or abandoned by the inhabitants, for the imports from France must have been confequently much enhanced in value for want of a freight home. In fhort, if the Canadians have in any refpect become rivals, or formidable to our colonies, fo as to require fuch an effectual check, as the retention of their whole country, have we not been conducive, nay have we not been principals in the means of making them fo? Was it not the treachery and iniquitous practices of outraders, that alienated from us the affections of the Indians who, till then, kept in awe all Canada? Did not the administration neglect to reform the abuses in this matter ? Was it not rather conceived good policy to promote diffentions among the different tribes, to urge them to a war with the French, and then fhamefully defert them, with a view, as they themfelves found, if not of extirpating their whole generation, at leaft of checking their future growth ? Did not proceedings like theie, and thefe alone, force them to carry their furs to the Canadians, and to have dealings with a people, againft E 2 against whom they had the ftrongest natural prejudices and hereditary enmity, and with whom they had lived in perpetual war? Did not the French on the contrary, very much improve their good understanding with them, not only in the way of fair trade, but conformity to their way of living, and intermarriage among them ? Need we wonder then, that a behaviour fo oppofite had fuch opposite effects ? Be the Indians ever fo deceitful and vindictive, they have fenfations of humanity, and ideas of generofity; nor can we justly upbraid them with treachery and barbarity, against whom we have fo largely played the fame weapons : but without moralizing farther, let me advise, that before we impeach the honefly of others, we learn to be honeft ourfelves; I am fure it is full time. While the natives were our friends, had we any apprehenfions of danger from the French power in Canada ? No; our colonies were not obliged to maintain fo many forts on their frontiers, they enjoyed all the happiness of peace and security; if the Canadians attempted any encroachments on our claims, though at the diffance of two or three hundred miles from our fettlements, they were conftantly drove away by these people, fuch was their good faith and amity toward us. Was it not their defect alone that enabled the French to purfue the ambitious fchemes they had formed against us in America, and which they found were difregarded by our administration in England ? And yet notwithstanding the large addition of territory they acquired, and their influence over the most distant tribes of Indians, what great advantages did France receive from this their reputed invaluable colony ? Is it not really to be admired, is it not worth our confideration, to find that its amount, in the most flourishing times, exceeded ceeded little more than one hundred and thirty five thoufand pounds; and even then, that it produced no balance in favour of Canada; the inhabitants never had a fufficiency to return in exchange for common neceffaries : and if we deduct the value of those commodities that enabled them to carry on the trade with the Indians. fuch as brandy, fire-arms, powder, blankets, and feveral kinds of trinkets and utenfils, and the freightage of them from France, what could be the amount of the clear profits of these fkins to the merchant? Did the exports from Canada ever employ many fhips ? Did they ever much add to the French naval power? Did they, when imported, bring any confiderable addition to the French revenue ? fo far from it, Sir, that we were told by the Remarker, and with a great deal of truth, that " the whole produce of Canada, though it were all ex-" ported from England, and exported compleatly ma-" nufactured, would not amount to the value of" the " fingle article" of fugar from Guadalupe " unmanu-" factured : nor would it employ the one twentieth part " of the fhipping and the feamen."

By the retention of Canada one would, no doubt, expect that the French would be entirely excluded from Cape Breton, and all their right to, and fhare in the fifthery. Will not then impartial men be amazed, when they hear, that if we retain Canada, "the French *" are flill to enjoy "the right given" them by "the 13th " article of the treaty of Utrecht, to fifth in fome parts " of thefe feas !" and that "Cape Breton" is to "be " left open to them," becaufe truly this and that Great " Man conceives the refufal would be rather unreafon-" able," and becaufe "a few men of war kept at Hal-

" lifax, will effectually prevent Louisbourg's being again " made a place of ftrength." What, Sir, can we think, when we fee the continuance of a mere privilege fo ftrenuoufly recommended, which there is the greateft reason poffible to with revoked ? We, Sir, who fo much lament the growth of French power, and their ftrength by fea ; we, Sir, who have feen this very privilege abufed. who have heard them treat our fifners with all imaginable infolence and lawlefs defpotifm ; who have feen them fupplant us at the foreign market even in that commodity, which is judged to very " unreafonable" to refuse them. In fhort, Sir, we, who after a truce of about eight years, from a bloody and expensive war, and when the profecution of another, has almost reduced us to a national bankruptcy, are, I am forry to fay it by fuch good advice, and well concerted fchemes as this, in a fair way of repeating that univerfal carnage that hath of late years defolated Europe worfe than a peftilence, and finking under a burthen that may render Britain no longer a commercial kingdom, and Britons no longer a free people.

Can we doubt, Sir, that if France was fuffered to repofiefs Cape-Breton, that, fhe would repeople it and re-fortify it; I fay, Sir, can we doubt it, when we have fuch bare-faced inftances of her perfidy in the prefent ftrength of Dunkirk, and the late encroachments on 'our colonies; the former of which they fortified under our very nofes, and the latter of which they got pofieffion of by our own fupinenefs; for we were ocular witneffes of their motions, nay, were previoufly acquainted with their intentions. If, in the terms of a future peace, we fhould exact a particular flipulation from France, that we fhould even be at liberty berty to take periodical obfervations and nice furveys of the ftate of Cape-Breton in the times of peace, would not France find the means to evade the executive part of that Ripulation, even supposing that future adminiftrations fhould be inclined to adhere ftrictly to the tenor of it, a circumstance very much to be feared ? the fpecial pretexts of theltering the inhabitants, and protecting them against any irruption of the favages from the neighbouring continent, must be allowed to have fome influence : and being fo plaufible, would be ever palliative of their breach of faith. What then would be the confeguence ? Should we not foon fee Louisbourg once more become that formidable bulwark, that invaluable Dunkirk of America, which we ever confidered it to be? Should we not again experience the defection of the treacherous Arcadians? Would not France always take care to keep a numerous garrifon in Cape-Breton? Would they not again carry fire and fword into our infant fettlements in Nova Scotia? Would not our thare in the Fifhery be at their mercy ? Could a fingle thip go to Canada without paffing Cape-Breton ; Muft they not even go in fight of it, excepting when the air fhould be foggy, or our thips thould find themfelves under a neceffity of taking their paffage through the Streights of Bellifle, a paffage infinitely more tedious and dangerous? could we, therefore, in the time of war, avoid the total deftruction of our trade to Canada, and the Fishery, without keeping fleets to block up the port? And would not the keeping fuch fleets be always neceffary, and confequently always a vaft expence to the nation, and fuch as, in the time of war, would greatly overbalance the amount of the exports from Canada even in the time of peace? Is this the way, Sir, to procure the

the much defired folid peace for England, and for Europe? Is it the way to fhew " France that" we " know" our " true interefts, and are refolved fleadily " to purfue them "?" would not " a peace" upon this fuftem, be rather " treacherous and delufive ?" Should we not too foon experience, that Louisbourg would, in every refpect, become more formidable and detrimental to us than Dunkirk ever was, or ever can be ? Would not posterity hereafter admire, that England could have a M-----r remarkable for his perfpicuity, and unufually diffinguished for his attachment to the interests of his country, fo egregioufly imposed on, and who could be confistently guilty of fuch a manifest default, blunder, or whatever you pleafe to term it? in the name of decency and good manners, let us not caft fuch an affront on common fenfe.

I would not, Sir, judge too harfhly, I would be rather too fparing of cenfure; but how can I refrain a little ebullition of temper, when I fee a fyftem actually adopted, that is in itfelf fo abfurd and inconfiftent; the demolition of " the fortifications of Louifbourg †," was to be the prelude to this fanciful farce, a farce which has taken place in action, and, if I am rightly informed, had been adopted, in the refined negociation; it is therefore full time, before the curtain is dropt, to put a check to its future progrefs. The abfurdity of demolifhing the fortifications of Louifbourg is felf evident, and the more fo upon the pretence, that " a few men of war " kept at Hallifax, will effectually prevent" its " being " again made a place of ftrength." The whole muft therefore depend upon the reafonableness of keeping the whole island of Cape-Breton from the hands of France, which is a point 1 shall confider hereafter: it is sufficient at present, that the retention of these islands and the fishery, has not been urged, by the advocates, as an inducement for retaining Canada.

I perfwade myfelf, Sir, you will excufe my converfing with you fo freely, and delivering my fentiments fo plainly, I mentioned to you at my firft fetting off, I had not fludied the art of adulation, if I can acquit myfelf of my prefent tafk in the language of common fenfe, it is as much I can aim at. We are all of us apt, Sir, to talk prefumptively upon matters of fentiment; if therefore I anticipate the future fituation of Canada, whether intended to be retained or not, and give you fomething of my ideas, or rather to afk fome general queftions, what it would be under an Englifh government, I hope I thall be entitled to the excufe.

Muft it not be allowed, Sir, that under an English government, fhips cannot " come to the Weft-India " market from the bottom of the river St. Laurence. " with the groß and cheap article of lumber upon a " footing with our colonies, many of which are not " three weeks fail from them." But as to this branch. Sir, I believe, it is given up by the ftrongeft advocates of that fystem. As an English colony will not Canada be fubject to certain limits, as is the cafe with our other colonies? Would not this of courfe greatly reduce the amount of their exports in fars? Will the Canadians then have the command of the beautiful banks of the Ohio, or the Great Lakes ? Can they have possefion of lands, included in the grants of other colonies, or of those tracts, for which contracts have been already made with private companies? On the contrary must not the whole whole trade of Canada be confined within the barren' tract to the eaft of the Upper Lake, and Hudfon's-Bay ? As Englifh fubjects, will not the Canadians lofe their influence over the Indians? would not thefe latter look upon them as natives of England? and would they, in in fuch cafe, carry their fkins as far as Montreal, when they could do it fo much more conveniently at Niagaraand Ofwego, for an equal, if not larger gratuity?

But fuppofe, Sir, that the Canadians fhould have liberty. given them to refort to the lakes, and about the Forks of the Ohio, and have effablished marts there at certain feafons of the year, would they carry the fkins to Canada, when they might difpofe of them fo much more conveniently to factors in Virginia or Maryland? The heads of the rivers Potomack and Sufguehanna, that fall into Chefapeak Bay, interlock with the branches of the Ohio about Pitfburg, and thereby afford an inland navigation from the Ohio through the Apalacheon mountains to the Atlantic Ocean, and a carriage thither be much fhorter and fafer, than by navigating the lakes Erie and Ontario, down the River Caderacqui, fo to Montreal, Quebec, and up the River St. Laurence? Would not likewife even the inhabitants. within the precincts of Canada, confign their commodities to factors at New-York ? Would it not be more to their advantage than fending them by way of the River St. Laurence? The navigation of Lake Champlain and Hudson's River would be much shorter, and fafer, and confequently much cheaper.

Thus, Sir, would not the Canadians have all the drudgery of getting the fkins, and the Virginians, Marylanders, or New-Yorkers, the benefit of the fale? Would not thefe latter likewife fupply the Canadians with with English manufactures, &c. much cheaper by means of this inland navigation, than we could directly from England by the way of the River St. Laurence? Would not the greater diftance and danger of the voyage by way of the River St. Laurence; and neceffary detention of the fhip and crew, in difembarking their commodities, and loading again, of course enhance the price? Thus, Sir, is it not likely that England will receive very little addition in fhips or failors, by retaining Canada, at all events, much less than France did, tho' fo very inconfiderable; nay, perhaps, that fearce a dozen fhips would enter the River St. Laurence bound to any port in Canada within a whole year ? If the French inhabitants fhould retire from their settlements in Canada (which I am perswaded most of them would) can we expect that it will become well peopled from our own colonies, when we have fuch immense tracts on the same continent, infinitely more commodious and inviting, fuch as in Nova-Scotia, about the lakes, and every part beyond the mountain? If this " objection is founded on ignorance of the nature " of population in new countries *; I will acknowledge I am unhappy enough to deferve that cenfure; but, if the "population" of " new countries" depends, as I conceive it does, on " the pleafantnefs, fertility, and " plenty of fuch new countries +," and the inhabitants " encrease in proportion as the means and facility of " gaining a livelihood encrease ;" then I do not deferve that cenfure, but the author himfelf; for the climate of Canada is far from being pleafant, the foil far from being fertile, nor has it a plenty of any vendible commodity.

To be brief, Sir, is it not fomething paradoxical, if not inconfistent, that Canada, Being of fo very little importance to France, can be fo much the greater to us? as being the only northern colony they poffeffed, they certainly had it in their power to make its commodities turn to greater account than we can ever expect to do? You certainly, Sir, do not think we can receive greater advantages from it in a commercial view than France has done before us : it is beyond poffibility. Is there not rather the greatest reason to expect that the Canadians, by lofing the commerce of the great lakes and the Forks of the Ohio, would decreafe in their exports of furs, at leaft one half? Would not their demands, in that cafe, on Great-Britain decrease in proportion ? And how they could find wherewithal to keep life and foul together, is to me very questionable; for, by the loss of their eftablifhment on the Great Lakes, Canada would lofe very few of its own proper inhabitants, although the later fettlers fhould continue there ; for these fettlements were formed chiefly for fupporting their garrifons, and to preferve a communication with the Indians.

The military invalids, civilized Indians, and the fpare hands of the garrifon were employed in cultivating these fettlements, but no farther than was fufficient for their own wants : the Courcus de Bois went with the commodities neceffary for the Indian trade, and brought back in return their fkins. No other commercial intercourfe fubfield between Canada and their fettlements about the lakes. In a word, Sir, I would be glad to know what imaginary form of government we are to affume in Canada ; what invertion is proposed to be made in the civil polity, and what kind of innovations in the commercial fyf-

tem. Is England to pay all the neceffary officers of the civil eftablifhment ? Is England to defray all the charges of repairing and maintaining the fortifications? If fo. where is the fund to do it ? Must England, likewife, be obliged to keep a numerous force in Canada to overawe the inhabitants? Will not this be even neceffary to bring specie into the colony ; for if it does not come by this channel, how can it come at all? Canada can have no ballance in her favour from her own commodities, and, can have no money, but by virtue of the royal eftablishment: and if such eftablishment was necessary under the French, will it not be more fo under us? even the whole value of the exports from Canada would be fcarce fufficient to pay its own civil officers, much lefs the charges of maintaining their fortifications. Are the imports and exports to and from Canada to be exempted from the ufual duties on their entry and clearance? If they were fubject to fuch duties, would not the price of commodities be much enhanced, and the Canadians rendered more unable to pay for them ? And if the exemption was to take place, would it not be fo much clear lofs to the revenue? So that in every cafe, is not the mother-country fure to fuffer by retaining Canada? In a word, Sir, by retaining it, we can expect it to become no other than a colony, without trade and inhabitants. Let the advocates for the retention, give me the least prospect of its being made of any real utility and emolument to the mother country (be it ever fo fmall;) and I will not avail myfelf of its very numerous and peculiar difadvantages, very peculiar indeed ! But I am apprehenfive that this cannot be done. It cannot be faid, Sir, that we fhould retain Canada, becaufe there is reason to suspect the French will prove troublefome fome neighbours, we might as well apply this doctrine to every colony the French are poffeffed of, and even to France itfelf. But did the poffeifion of Canada give the French any fuperiority over us, either on the principles of power or commerce ? Was it not our own unparallelled negligence that raifed them from the very extremity of beggary and contempt, and made them become formidable to us ? It cannot be faid, Sir, that before the French got poffeffion of the lakes, and prevailed upon our Indian allies to abandon our interest, and take part with them, that England had any thing to apprehend from the exceffive growth of French power from that colony, fo far from this, did not our own colonies hold Canada in fuch a piteous light, that they feldom engaged vigoroufly in a war against it ? When they were inclined to correspond with Canada in this manner, did they not fet the Indians on; and did not they alone prove fufficient to keep the Canadians in the most abject awe and fubjection?

But wherefore fhould I be furprized at finding Canada ever fo deficient for England, in a commereial view, or even of any importance at all, when we have been very modeftly given to underftand that the " proposed demand of Canada is," partly " founded on the little value of" it "to the French *;" 'an affertion fo plain and fimply honeft in itfelf, that I believe, Sir, I had no occasion to have enlarged in the manner I have done: however, as I have entered the lifts, it is fit I should acquit myself with becoming courage and resolution, and shall, therefore proceed on the object of contention. Another part of the foundation is faid to be " the right we have to ask, and the power " we may have to infift on an indemnification for our * Interest of Great Britain, p. 4, and 5.

« ex-

expences t." But this is a very fhallow argument, for, have we not, Sir, the fame right to afk, and the fame poffibility (the author implies no more) of a power, to infift on an indemnification as well by retaining any other conqueft as Canada ? Moft certainly we have, and most certainly we ought, to make our preference fubordinate to our own interests and not the convenience of an enemy. The other part of the argument is faid to be " the difficulty the French themfelves will be under of " retaining their reftless fubjects in America from en-" croaching on our limits, and diffurbing our trade. " and the difficulty on our parts of preventing encroach-. ments that may poffibly exift many years without " coming to our knowledge ‡." But as this part entirely depends on the objects of our demands in North America, and in fact would be the only material foundation for us to keep Canada, I shall confider that point pretty largely. I do not mean to infift merely on the difadyantages of the commerce of Canada, my intention is not to cavil upon particulars, but to obviate every caufe for it hereafter. If the poffeffion of Canada would give us that fecurity we want, or, at leaft, ought to want, in North America, or would prove of any great detriment to the future growth of power in France, I would readily wave them as inconfiderable. I do not think either of thefe will be the confequence, and fhall prefently give my reasons why I think to; and if it is found that Canada will not give us fuch fecurity, wherefore fhould we incumber ourfelves with it, when it would prove a dead load of expence to us? and wherefore fhould we pay fuch a regard to the French, when it would prove a dead load of expence to them? It could be for no other reason than might arise from an overftrained complaisance, because it would be of little value to them.

The fecurity defirable in America, we have been informed " may be confidered as of three kinds. Ift. A " fecurity of possession that the French shall not drive " us out of the country. 2dly, 'A fecurity of our plan-" ters from the inroads of the favages, and the murders " committed by them. 3dly, A fecurity that the Bri-" tifh nation fhall not be obliged on every new war to " repeat the immense expense occasioned by this to de-" fend its poffeffions in America "." I agree with the author in the propriety of these heads, but when he fays that " all" thefe " kinds of fecurity are obtained by fub-" duing and retaining Canada," and that " the In-" dians" will have " no other Europeans near them " that can either fupply them, or inftigate them against " us + ;" I cannot but difagree with him there, it is an affertion altogether falle and extravagant : I cannot but think the retention of this fame Canada will be deficicient in all these points, and that in no small measure too. The author certainly could not be fo ignorant of the limits of Canada, to mean as he would feem to imply; he could not, with any regard to candour, or with a view to benefit the fubject, fet up a pretence fo repugnant to the intent of the French fettlements in North America, and the nature of their claims there. Does France claim any right to the Ohio, as appertaining to Canada? Does any one conceive that France would fet up a claim upon a principle fo abfurd? It is true the grant of Louifiana to Monf. Crozat, is not of itfelf, a sufficient authority to infift on any precife boundaries to

Louisiana; the patent is couched in very obscure terms, and the original expression, in some places, very ambiguous. It tells us, one part of Louisiana is bounded by the river Illinois, but whether by the mouth or fource of that river is left undetermined, and the eaftern boundary is entirely fo. This obscurity might be affected intentionally : and indeed with good reason : for as this fettlement was an illegal ufurpation, not only on the crown of Spain, but that of England, and was put in execution immediately after the treaty of Utrecht, it behoved France to keep her views in this fettlement, as fecret as poffible. But let us only confider with a little more reflection, and the matter will illustrate itfelf. The Ohio is cut off from Canada by the intermediate territories of fome of our colonies and the Six Nations, a people whom France has formally acknowledged by treaty to be fubject to England, and whofe territories extend over most of the lakes, and the circumiacent country. France therefore, could not, confistently with her former conduct, fhe could not, with the leaft colour, affume a right to the Ohio as appertaining to Canada. The nature of the French claim to all the territories they affume to themfelves in Canada and Louifiana, is still a stronger evidence to my prefent purpofe. France fettles at the mouths of the two rivers St. Laurence and Miffifippi, and on that foundation builds a right to the whole extent of those rivers, and their feveral branches, and the rivers that communicate with them; it is, in fact, the only principle on which the can found a right to the large territories claimed by her in North America : therefore the Illinois, Ohio, Wabache, Cherokee, and the other leffer rivers that communicate with the Miffifippi were undoubtedly G

meant to be included in Louisiana. Befides there may still be a more natural reason, why the boundaries of Louifiana were not primarily more clearly pointed out. than an apprehension of the confequences arising from an illegal usurpation. The grant to Crozat was the effect of a chimerical imagination, and made at a time when the French were entirely ignorant of the nature and extent of the country they were about to fettle, as will evidently appear from a flight infpection into the patent : and that they did not even mean to confine themfelves to any particular boundaries as evidently appears from the refervations contained in it. And what renders the affertion lefs plaufible and abfurd is, that apreeable to the report of the commiffaries after the treaty of Utrecht, the western frontier of Canada is limited by the river Utawawa, which falls into the river St. Laurence, near Montreal; and, even according to the modeft limitation of French hydrographers *, it included only the great lakes. I will acknowledge the poffeffion of Canada might fecure our northern colonies of Nova Scotia, and New England; but, it is evident, at the first view, it could not in the least benefit the colonies of New York, Penfylvania, Maryland, Virginia, the two Carolinas, and Georgia.

Agreeable to a late calculation it appeared that the northern colonies of New England and New York, have very near as many inhabitants as all the fouthern colonies put together. We have likewife been told that the fingle province of New York has upwards of fifty forts to defend it against an enemy, and that it can mufter as many combatants as all the fouthern colonies together,

• This is agreeable to Lahontan, and most of the French writers, &c. M. de Lisse bounds one part of Louisiana by Penfylvania and New-York; and according to Le Lieur Louisiana may extend even to the North Pole.

gether, near half of whofe inhabitants are buried alive in Penfylvania, where it is made a principle of religion not to fight. Why therefore we fhould be fo partial to fecure our northern colonies, who are infinitely more capable of withstanding an enemy, and throw all the burthen on our fouthern colonies, who have a frontier fo much more extended, and are in every respect much more incapable of defending themfelves, is very abfurd, and the more unaccountable, fince fuch an unequal diftribution of our favour, could not be of any emolument to the mother country.

If the French fhould be obliged to give up the entire poffeffion of Canada, they would, no doubt, endeavour to supply that loss, by an effectual establishment in Louifiana, where they have at prefent got a very confiderable footing; and where, if they fhould ever become well fettled, we fhall, too foon, too fadly, experience that we have indeed done fomething; that we have greatly firengthened an enemy, who is already greatly too ftrong, and that we have enabled them to effectuate a fcheme, which may, in time, give them fuch advantage over us as to endanger our own independency, as well as that of all Europe : leave them Louifiana, and we fhall quickly find, that an enfuing peace, will only prove a truce to a more expensive war, and a more powerful and obstinate refistance. We are told, (from Machiavel) " that a government feldom long preferves its dominion " over those who are foreigners to it; who, on the " other hand, fall with great eafe, and continue infe-" parably annexed to the government of their own na-"tion, which" is proved "by the fate of the English " conquests in France." Now, I would submit, whether the flate of religion among the Canadians, still far-G 2

ther aggravated by the difadvantages attending them, under an Englifh government, do not make this obfervation more applicable to the prefent point? What great and mighty good, Sir, can England hope for from a colony eftablifhed upon a principle of religious perfecution, and from fubjects, the beft and most reputable of whom are irrecoverably poifoned with the dregs of fuperfition? What, Sir, can England expect from a people nurtured from their earlieft childhood, and educated, as they advance in years, in all the hardiness and ferocity of the native favage*; a people who enjoy, by hereditary right and adoption, and, indeed, whose only patrimony is, the united good qualities of a whore and a thief?

To expect an implicit, or paffive obedience from fuch people, more efpecially as the capitulation authorizes them to retain their ghoftly fathers, would be extremely abfurd. Have not the colonies of New-England and Nova-Scotia tafted frequent inflances of the fidelity of the Acadians? Do they not even now bewail the ravages and maffacres committed by them ? Nav, were not these Canadians who took the oaths of neutrality upon the furrender of Ouebec, and were maintained with our provisions, the greatest part of the winter, the foremost in joining the army of the Chevalier Levi, and the most urgent for escalading the walls though we had an army at that very time in the heart of their country, and another preparing to enter it from another quarter? Can we doubt then, that if there fhould be the leaft prospect of a communication with

* In what light the Canadians are confidered by our colonies is remarkably illuftrated, in a late inftance of the address of the affembly of New-York to General Amherft; wherein the affembly, among the advantages accruing from the reduction of Canada, particularly felicitate their country on an end being put to the ravages and marders committed by " the favage " native, but more favage Canadian." their countrymen in Louifiana, can we flatter ourfelves, that they will not endeavour to improve it? And that there will be fuch profpect is indifputale. Many rivers afford a communication from Louifiana with the Great Lakes all the way by water, except in fome of them, finall portages of a very few miles in the whole.

As I have faid before, the ceffion of Canada can only include the Lakes; and, though the lands to the fouth and weft of those Lakes, are in fact particularized in the grants of fome of our colonies, yet the French will claim a right to them, as appertaining to Louifiana : and I will venture to affert, Sir, that leave the French in poffeffion of any part of the Miffifippi, or even on the other fide of that river, though the bounds between our colonies, and fuch fettlement should be ever for clearly and accurately pointed out, that our colonies will never enjoy that fecurity we feem fo defirous of giving them, by retaining fuch an uncomfortable gueft as Canada; and facrificing every other object to that important confideration, if not at the expence of our whole fenses, at least of the whole war. Would not the erecting forts by us, at any great diffance from the Lakes, be to very little purpofe, both in an offenfive and defenfive view, and whether fo or not, would not the fupporting garrifons in fuch forts be attended with the utmost expence and difficulties ? And yet, Sir, though we retain Canada, we must not only be obliged to support forts in Canada, and about the Lakes; but, if we mean to fecure the fole poffeffion of the Lakes, and the adjacent country, which is ours of right, we must build forts at fome hundred miles diftance from those Lakes, particularly at the junction of the River Illinois with the Miffifippi, the Miamis and Wabache, with the Ohio, and and the Ohio and Cherokee with the Miffifippi. If this is not done, will they not again attack our remote forts, and fecure the paffes to our moft fertile fettlements? Will they not, by means of these rivers, open a communication with the Canadians, which might cause frequent infurrections and disturbances there, if we have not a proper disciplined force to overawe them?

With regard to any future attempts from the French in Louisiana on the fide of the Ohio, can our fort at Pittfburg ever anfwer the purpose of an effectual barrier, when, at the small distance of two hundred and fifty miles from the capital of Penfylvania, confidering that that river flows upward of 1200 miles from thence before it falls into the Miffifippi? Can it be thought it will prove the leaft fecurity against future encroachments, or hoffilities in the colonies of Penfylvania and New-York? Might not our enemies, with the greateft facility, poffefs themfelves of the whole river to the weft of that port, without any obstruction from the garrifon ? If the garrifon fhould happen to be cut off from the fort, or the enemy be ftrong enough to block it up, or lay fiege to it "(which there is no doubt they would) must it not fall an eafy prey before any reinforcement could get to it? and that done, might they not again depopulate and ravage our frontier fettlements, and carry fire and fword into the heart of our colonies? and, in our endeavours to retake this fort, would not the difficulties we fhould have in marching an army, and conveying the neceffary baggage and artillery over the mountains, render them able to baffle our attempts, and maintain their ground there three or four campaigns, as they have done this war ? But, it they fhould find it neceffary to abandon the the fort from an incapacity, either from the want of flores or men, to defend it, might they not demolifh it, or might they not retire down the river to fome diftance, and attack it with greater vigour, upon receiving a reinforcement ?

If they fhould not chufe to come to open violence might they not fucceed without going towards that fort, and without committing any act of hoftility, by means of the rivers Miamis and Wabache, both which rife within a few miles of the fouth-weft coaft of Lake Erie, and very near Detroit, or the Streights which join that with Lake Huron ? Would it not then be very eafy for the French in Louisiana to make incursions into our fettlements there, if not cut off all communication from thence to our colonies? The general method of traffic carried on by the natives and traders in parts to the weft of the Lakes, was by navigating from the upper Lake and Lake Michigan into Lake Huron, and fo into Lakes Erie and Ontario, after having conveyed their commodities over their portage at Niagara; if to a French market, Frontenac, or Montreal; if to an English one, Ofwego, or Albany: the fingle capture of Detroit would therefore effectually preuent any intercourfe of this kind between those Indians and Canada, or any other of our colonies.

Need we doubt, likewife, that they would neglect their old track by the way of the River Illinois, before they found out a more convenient one by the River Ohio? Our fettlements at Miffilimakinac cannot be confidered as a proper barrier, they could make but very little oppofition againft any enemy, much lefs againft fuch a one as France at all times provided with all the requifites of war.

war. In any attempt of the French, can we in the leaft affure ourfelves of the fidelity of the Indians ? might they not with great probability become abettors in all the fchemes of the French, who have acquired but too much the art of conciliating the affections of the most favage among them. The tribes that inhabit these parts, and call themfelves the Ten Nations, are as numerous as any other affociated confederacy of Indians in North America. have been in ftrong alliance with the French ; there ftill are (tho' in difguife) feveral of French extraction, and many of them of the military kind. What therefore have we not to apprehend ? the forts at Miffilimakinac and Detroit would have the whole force of Louifiana to contend with, and very probably a combination of the Indians; and thus backed, could we expect to keep poffeffion of those forts? Could we draw together a fufficient force to repel the invaders? Could we attack them with the leaft advantage? Could we fupply an army at fuch a diftance from our proper frontier? the confequences of a repulse from fuch invaders, who come prepared for flaughter, would be truly horrible; let us recollect that of Braddock's, and tremble at the apprehenfions of fuch another!

Succefs, either by the River Illinois or Ohio, would likewife give the French a very confiderable fhare of the fur trade. The country for feveral miles between Lake Etie and part of the Ohio, is reckoned the chief fpot for hunting among the Indians in North-America, on account of the great refort of deer and beaver to the falt pits which are there in great abundance : and the country to the weft and north of the Upper Lake is undoubtedly well fituated for the fame trade. The Indians for feveral feveral fcore miles thereabouts refort to the English mart in Hudson's-Bay. Would not then an establishment of the French in those parts, be of the greatest detriment to us by lofing fo confiderable a fhare of that trade, and, being to beneficial to them, can we flatter ourfelves, they would be wanting in a proper exertion to effect fuch eftablifhment ? Nor could it be expected that the Indians would undertake a long peregrination to difpofe of their commodities to our colonies, when they might do it upon their own fpot fo much more conveniently to the French with equal, if not greater advantage; for it has been remarkable, that the French would rather give an advanced price, than fuffer our traders to outbid them : a policy encouraged by their government, which hath frequently reimburfed the loffes of their fubjects in Canada on this occasion.

Will not the French alfo have the fame advantage over our fouthern colonies by means of the Catawba, Cumberland, and Wood rivers, and particularly that of the Cherokees, a branch of which rifes near the heads of the rivers Chatahoochee and Couffa, which communicate with the Gulph of Mexico? Do not thefe rivers afford the prospect of a most extensive intercourse by inland navigation over the whole country, beyond the Apalachian mountains, belonging to Virginia, the Carolinas, and Georgia? while the French have any footing with the Indians in those parts, or hold the least poffeffion among them, fhall we not always have broils and diffentions among them ? The Indians beyond those mountains are severed from our colonies by a barrier naturally ftrong and important, the Apalachian mountains; and, at the fame time, greatly fecured by this barrier against any offensive attempt from our colonies ?

nies? They are, on the other hand, wholly exposed to the French from the Miffifippi, particularly all the Over-hill towns?

We have already experienced the difficulty of paffing those mountains, and attacking the Indians : but their fettlements being chiefly foread along the banks of the Cherokee River, and its branches, might not the French, by the eafy navigation thereof, difembark, and attack them in the very heart of their country, without any of the inconveniences attending a land march ? Have we not the greatest reason possible to fecure the confidence of these Indians on the back of our fouthern colonies, when they have hitherto been effected the only barrier to our colonies on that fide against the defigns of the French; a barrier, Sir, the more important, as those colonies are intirely unable to defend themfelves in our whole fecurity hitherto has depended, and, while the French have any fettlement on the Miffifippi, muft always depend on the good inclinations towards us. But can we expect this while the the French have any fettlement on the Miffifippi ? Can we hereafter expect to enjoy a union of them in our interests, when it will be fo inconfistent with common fense, and, perhaps, their natural inclinations?

But, let us farther suppose that, at a futrue negociation we should not only require the absolute ceffion of Canada, but infiss likewise that the French should confine themselves to the westward of the Mississippi, and leave us the whole south and east territory to the very banks of that river, including the great rivers Illinois and Ohio. Would even this extraordinary cession fecure us against the future inconveniences of war, against encroachments, or actual hofiilities ? According to the most enlarged ideas of the nature of population, it would be a work of many fcore years before fuch a large tract as that beyond the mountains could become well fettled ; tho' I am inclined to think, that no confiderable fettlement beyond the mountains will ever take place while the French are poffeffed of the Miffifippi : for, only confider the nature of the country beyond the mountains, divided from the coafts toward the Atlantic ocean by almost impenetrable thickets and rugged eminencies, with no natural nor artificial roads to favour an inland carriage ; and can we expect fuch inland carriage will ever fublist? Will not fettlers have these difficulties to encounter; and will not the neighbourhood of the French in Louisiana, ever be a check to fuch as are inclined to fettle there.

Security of poffeffion, Sir, is not the leaft advantage in forming colonies, nor the smalleft temptation to invite fettlers; and that for a reason very plain : when a man continues no longer a journeyman, but fets up for himfelf he does it with a view to enlarge his property, and render his life more comfortable; but, if that property is liable to a continual danger of being taken from him, and his life at the mercy of a perfidious enemy, he would undoubtedly rather continue a journeyman in fafety, than be a mafter at the great hazard of his life ?

But, to go on with the enquiry, fhall we not, (tho' we retain Canada,) be put to an immense expense in erecting, not stockadoes, but respectable forts, at proper distances, on the banks of the Missifippi, all the way from its risings to its influx into the Gulph of Mexico, an extent of some thousand miles? The source of the Missifippi is not yet known, but the river has been H 2 tr.cel traced upwards of nine hundred leagues, and this is a frontier fo extensive, that it will require many fcore thousand pounds annually to defend it, after the necesfary chain of forts have been erected to keep the French within their boundaries Muft we not likewife have forts at the most convenient passes in the inland country to keep open a communication with their respective governments of Virginia, the two Carolinas, and Georgia? And, after all those forts have been erected, how are they to be fupplied ; and how can they be effectually fupported ? Most of these forts will be two or three hun-. dred leagues diftant from the capitals of those provinces. and the ufual refidence of the governors : and those forts on the Miffifippi will be many of them near as many thousand miles; they would be in a manner divided from them by a large uncultivated track, inhabited by fculking parties of favages, whofe ficklenefs and natural treachery we have known too much of, to confide more largely in them for the future. As a people rigidly tenacious of their liberties and independency, would not a frequent paffage through their territories be deemed a caule for fulpecting, our intentions? if the French or their priefts could get privately among them, would they not be apt to put the worft conftruction on fuch paffage ? Would they not infinuate, that we had a defign to enflave or extirpate their whole generation? This fuggeftion would roufe their fleeping fuspicious humour; being naturally treacherous themfelves, they have no better opinion of the reft of the human fpecies, they would quickly take umbrage from fuch infinuations, which, in fact, would have a good foundation ; for, by these forts we should entirely furround them; and the frequent intercourse between those forts and

and their feats of government, we fhould become acquainted with the moft fecret avenues of their power? Should we not then be always exposed to the effects of their jealoufy? Would not the convoys be liable to be intercepted, our forts blocked up, and the garrifons ftarved upon the least variance with them? and would not the fame differences ftill fubfift between us and the French about the boundaries between us?

Both nations being fettled on oppofite banks of the Miffifippi, might it not be the means of introducing a reciprocal trade very detrimental to the true interefts of this nation ? Would not there always remain a fquabble about the fole property of the Miffifippi? Would it not be a perpetual bone of contention? Would not both claim a right to the navigation of it ? And as the French no fooner form a scheme, than they put it in execution. might they not eafily interrupt the communication between our forts? Might they not crofs the river, and make a conqueft, not only before any reinforcement could be fent, but even before proper intelligence could be received of an attack ; or if fuch intelligence was received before the neceffary preparations could be expedited to relieve the garrifon? We have an inftance of this in the prefent war: how difficult has it proved to gain the leaft intelligence of the fate of Fort Loudoun ? How many times was it reported to have been taken. and when it was taken, was it not with much ado credited ?

Befides, Sir, what would be the confequence of confining the French even to the weft of the Miffiffippi. The country, if we reckon to the parts inhabited by the fubjects of Spain is of much greater extent than the habitable parts of Canada, the foll infinitely more more fertile, and the climate infinitely more mild. The French would have many advantages there to render a fettlement not only agreeable, but defirable, and they would have an extent of habitable country to fecure them againft apprehenfions of a conqueft by an enemy. We know the reafon the French could not fupport themfelves in Canada was a want of proper flores and forces which could not be conveyed to them, by any other channel than the river St. Laurence; and that was blocked up by our numerous fleets. But will they be liable to this inconvenience in Louifiana? might they not land their flores and reinforcements in many places in the gulph of Mexico, in a tract of feveral hundred miles?

But what is more to be feared than every other apprehenfion from this fettlement of the French on the Miffifippi, is their intercourfe with the fubjects of Spain. Might they not fucceed in their encroachments here, as well as they have done in Hispaniola? We know what great profits they receive from this their furreptitious poffeffion, and what encouragement it is to the public spirit for manufactures, of which it is a chief support ; for from hence their commodities find their way to all South America. Our anceftors looked with contempt on the fettlement of a few buccaniers on a fpot neglected by Spain, by reafon of its barrennels and unwholefome fituation; which by the bye, were exaggerated beyond measure, and yet it has been this very barren and unwholefome fpot that has chiefly contributed to aggrandize the French power. Our notions of their fettlement on the Mififippi were exactly fimilar ; we laughed at a fettlement in a country which we reprefented as barren, marshy, and unwholefome, and gave it all the odious epithets that preprejudice could devife. The foundation of these colonies being fo fimilar, why may not the eventual effects be fo likewife? I am perfuaded, and I must infift, Sir, that in Louisiana, the French have infinitely a greater profpect to indulge their golden views, than they had from St. Domingo, or even from Canada, which we feem fo much, and, indeed, fo undefervedly, to prize. Before they made any fettlement in Louifiana, they told us of the practicability of feizing the Spanish mines at St. Barbe; and if they fhould not find a beneficial intercourfe with the Spanish subjects sufficient for their purpofe, I dare fay that they would not be wanting in industry to provide for themfelves, which might, probably, end in the fame connections between their fubjects in Louifiana and Mexico, as there is in Hispaniola; an Event, Sir, we cannot be too fecure in preventing. An administration of Great Britain, cannot be too attentive in preventing the growth of power in France, tho' at the expence of Spain, and rendering all future fchemes tending to promote an union between these two powers, abortive. A connection of intereft would engage a mutual intercourfe, and certain immunities in favour of a trade between their respective subjects. Thus it happens with the French in Hifpaniola, and fo it would happen to them in Louifiana. If we admire at the fecurity of their poffeffions in Hispaniola, let us do it no more; we do not attack France on that fide, for fear of offending his Catholic Majefty, who might, perhaps conftrue it as a breach of neutrality. Can it be faid, Sir, that the fame reafon will not hereafter be equally prevalent for them in Louifiana. If the French fhould become powerful there, the Spaniards would be glad to keep keep on good terms with them; but hitherto the French have been too diligent in their project for uniting their fettlements in Canada and Louifiana, to have made any confiderable progrefs toward the Spanish fettlements. The King of Spain could not, therefore, with any propriety, take umbrage at our making a demand of this encroachment. He is thought not to be fo over-partial to the French, and if he was ever fo much inclined, would it not be extremely imprudent, to take part with them in their prefent unhappy circumflances, and would it not be contrary to the general disposition and interefts of his fubjects ?

If I have been happy thus far, Sir, in reprefenting the infufficiency of Canada, it will be neceffary to confider a more proper object to engage our attention. It is abfolutely neceffary to lay fome reftraint on the Fiench in North America, more than by divefting them of their encroachments, merely on our northern colonies, according to the Remarkers plan; for be the bounds between our colonies and theirs ever fo clearly diffinguished, if they remain in the poffeffion of the rivers St. Laurence and Miffifippi, they will find means to evade the treaty, and again endeavour to unite their two colonies of Canada and Louifiana: one or other of these must therefore be entirely given up to us, which of them is the most proper, and will answer our views the most effectually, will beft appear from the principles upon which the French have acted in North America; and even from thence, Sir, I do not doubt to make appear that the preference given to Canada, is a false deduction from just premises, and the mere phantom of a crude imagination. We have been told, that "the French " feem to have had two capital views in all their « Ame-

** their American schemes, ever fince they have thought ** trade and commerce an object worthy of their atten-" tion. The first was to extend themselves from Canada " fouthwards, thro' the lakes along the back of our co-" lonies; by which means they might answer a double " purpofe, of cutting off our communication with the " Indian nations, and of opening a communication for " themfelves, between the rivers St. Laurence and Mif-" fifippi, and thus to join, as it were, their colonies " of Canada and Louifiana. The other part of their " plan, equally important, and more immediately fatal " to our interefts in North America, was to gain a " communication with the ocean, the only access they" had " to Canada through the river St. Laurence, being " fhut up half the year *." Now the only method to afcertain these principles, will be to confider what active measures have been profecuted to fecure them ; and, in doing this, it will be found, that they have attempted nothing toward the latter, " part of " the plan", to authorize a certainty even of the fuggestion. Their principal, their only view hitherto has been, to unite Canada and Louissana. If France had not fecured the command of Lake Champlain, we might have made incurfions into the very heart of Canada : their forts at Crown Point and Ticonderago, were therefore necessary to their own fecurity. If France had intended to open a paffage to the ocean through New York, would fhe not have made greater progrefs before this time? They built Crown Point in 1731, at the time the difpute happened between Maffachufets Bay and New Hampshire, about their boundaries. During this time, therefore, the French had a most glorious opportunity for making farther encroach-

Can we doubt then, that they would not have ments. made fome attempts to effect a fcheme we are to underftand was held in fuch effimation by them ? The iffue of this conteft gave France a still greater opportunity of doing it, for Lake Champlain and its territories were adjudged to New Hampfhire, a colony in every respect unable to maintain or defend it. They afterwards devolved upon New York, and the fame favourable opportunity ftill fubfifted : for the difmemberment of the whole province of New Jerfey from that government, and the fucceeding quarrels between them about their boundaries, which were carried to fuch height, that they were upon the point of cutting one another's throats, and, above all, the primitive weakness of the colony of New York, rendered an attempt of that nature almost fure of fuccefs. Here, therefore, thirty years are elapfed, and not one fingle ftep taken to give the leaft colour to fupport even a bare fuspicion of this defign of the French, on which fo much weight has been imposed; but rather the contrary. Did they not, after taking our fort of Sarahtoga (fituate in the heart of New York) laft war, domolifh it ? Did they not do the fame this war by Ofwego and Fort William Henry? But how differently have they acted in the profecution of their other fcheme ! there we cannot but admire how vigoroufly they exerted themfelves, and in what manner they fucceeded ! had they not, by means of their Forts Frontenac, Niagara, Venango, du Quefne, those at the junction of the Wabache with the Ohio, and the Ohio with the Millifippi, and feveral other intermediate forts effected this long wilhed for junction. Their opening a communication with the ocean, through the province of New York, if ever intended, could not then be "equally important," nor 66 more

" more immediately fatal to our interefts." If it was actually intended, it was only a fecondary object, or as I am now inclined to think rather a confequence of their fuccefs in the former. Fort du Queine was to have been their entrepot between their two colonies of Canada and Louifiana, the link that formed the union; it might therefore in that cafe, have been neceffary to have had Tome fuch port, as that of New York, on the Atlantic ocean, to be more convenient for their middle fettlements, and to avoid fuch a tedious navigation, as they would have from thence either down the Miffifippi, or up the river St. Laurence. And even admit that France had formerly held this project in fuch effimation, and had intended to put it in execution, it cannot, for the future, merit our leaft confideration as the two colonies of New England and New York, the frontier opponents against Canada on that fide, are already fufficient of themfelves to extirpate the French at any time from Canada. Befides the fettlement of Nova Scotia was not then in agitation, but now we have fo many inhabitants there, and that colony is daily encreasing in ftrength and populousness, the French would cut but a very indifferent figure in fuch an attempt hereafter. If we would then remove the caufe of the French encroachments, the effects will ceafe ; remove them from Louifiana, and we fhall experience no more incroachments ; remove them from Louifiana alone, and we fhall quickly find Canada become the fame poor infirm colony we had ever reason to believe it to be before they settled in Louifiana.

The reafons I have heard given for not attacking the French on the Miffifippi have been, that it would not I 2 anfwer anfwer the expence; that the climate was unhealthy, and the foil barren; and that the French were fo weak there, that they could give us no caufe for uneafinefs: circumftances (fay thefe knowing ones) manifefted by the fmall progrefs the French have made, and the little diffurbance they have given us this war; but give me leave to fay, Sir, they are infinuations falfe and injurious, and propagated to ferve particular purpofes.

It is true, for about two hundred miles from New Orleans (the capital), the country in many parts being fubject to inundations on account of the rifings occafioned by the confluence of feveral large rives into the Miffifippi, the water ftagnates in parts that are low; and the atmosphere thereby contracting a density and dampness, renders a residence, not fo much unwholefome, as difagreeable; but thefe inundations are periodical; they only happen at that feafon when the freshes mix with the waters of the Miffifippi; and are therefore inconveniencies that, one would be apt to think, might be removed by making trenches to draw off part of the water, and raifing the banks of the Miffifippi, where it might be found neceffary to hinder the overflowing : they are schemes the French have been some time projecting, and no doubt a people fo confpicuous for their ingenuity and industry, if fuffered to poffefs the country, would fucceed in the attempt.

But, if the country labours under these disadvantages towards the coast, higher up both the soil and climate are very different. The soil is amazingly fertile, the climate mild and falubrious, the land in general elevated, solid, and level, refreshed with breezes, and being interspersed with the most beautiful meadows, afford a most delightful ful profpect. Look up, you fee the horizon clear and ferene. Look down, you fee nature all the year lavifhing profufely her fweeteft gifts, on the uncultivated plains. Ask thofe, Sir, who have been in Louifiana, they will give you the most pleafing ideas of the country and climate, we have had fuch accounts from the French *, whofe * Father Gharlevoix remarking " what pleasure it must give to fee" the " capital of this immenfe and beautiful country, increasing infensibly, and " to be able to fay with the beft grounded hopes that this wild and defert " place, at prefent almost entirely covered over with canes and trees, one day " become a large and rich colony", fays, " these hopes are founded on the " fituation of this city on the banks of a navigable river, at the diffance of thirty-three leagues from the fea, from which a veffel may come up " in twenty-four hours; on the fertility of its foil; on the mildnefs and " wholfomenefs of the climate in thirty degrees north latitude; on the " industry of the inhabitants; on its neighbourhood to Mexico, the Ha-" vanna, the fineft iflands of America, and laftly to the English colonies." So that from hence it appears what large ideas the French entertain of this country : and that they do not always intend to live in amity with our colonies of Carolina and Georgia. But, to go on with our ghoffly father. " Can there be any thing," fays he, " more requifite to render a city flour-" ifhing ? Rome and Paris had not fuch confiderable beginnings, were not " built under fuch happy aufpices, and their founders met not with those " advantages on the Seine and the Tiber, which we have found on the " Miffifippi, in comparifon of which those two rivers are no more than " brooks." Charlevoix, vol. ii. p. 276.

A little farther, he fays (p. 300 and 301) " In a word, I have met with " none who have been on the fpot, who have fpoken difadvantageoufly of " Louifiana, but three forts of perfons whofe teffimony can be of no great " weight: the firft, are the failors, who, from the road at the ifland of " Dauphiné, have been able to fee nothing but that ifland covered with a " barren fand, and the coaft of Bilexi ftill more fandy, and have fuffered " themfelves to be perfuaded, that the entrance of the Mifflippi is imprac-" ticable to veffels above a certain bulk ; and, that the country is uninha-" bitable for fifty leagues up the river. They would have been of a very " different opinion, had they had penetration enough to diffruft thofe per-" fons whole intereft it is to conceal its most minute advantages; and that fo much, that it has occasioned it to be called, in derifion, the Frenchman's paradife.

With regard to the number of inhabitants, that is eafily accounted for, and is fo plain, that one would think men of fenfe could not make their objections upon fo weak a confideration. It is a prudential maxim among politic nations, and the prefent general method of eftablifhing colonies, not to extend their fettlements, before they have fecured a quiet poffeffion. If we confider then, that the French have partly met with the fame difficulties, from the Cherokees, Chickafaws, and Creek Indians, as the Canadians did from the Five Nations, we fhall rather admire at the progrefs

" fons who fpoke in this manner, and to discover the motives which made " them do fo.

"The fecond are wretches, who being banifhed from France, for their "crimes, or ill behaviour, true or fuppofed, or who, in order to fhun the "purfuit of their creditors, lifted themfelves among the troops, or hired "themfelves to the plantations. Both of them looked upon this country as "a place of banifhment only, and were confequently flocked with every "thing : they have no tye to bind them, nor any concern for the progrefs of " a colony of which they are involuntary members, and give themfelves "very little trouble about the advantages it is capable of procuring to the "fate.

" The third are fuch, who having feen nothing but mifery in a country, "for which exceffive fums have been difburfed, impute to it, without re-"flection, what ought folely to be laid to the incapacity or negligence of "thofe who were charged with the fettling it. They are befides not unacquainted with the reafons for publishing that Louifiana contained in its bofom immenfe treafures, and thought its value to us was very near equal to the famous mines of St. Barbe, and others fill richer, from which we flattered ourfelves we fhould be able to drive the pofferfors with eafe; and becaufe thefe ridiculous tales found credit with fools, inftead of imputing the miftake to themfelves, into which their foolish credulity had engaged them: they difcharged their ill-humour upon this country, in which they found no one article that had been promifed them."

they have already made. Even fo lately as in 1729, the French traders and fettlers were totally cut off, and maffacred; and the Indians infefted the banks of the Miffifippi fo much, that the French thought, a long time after, it would be dangerous to frequent them. For thefe reasons they have been many years worming themfelves in the good graces of these people, finding all their endeavours would prove fruitlefs, unlefs they could gain their protection. And, indeed, it muft be acknowledged, they have fucceeded much better here in this respect than in Canada. Have they not, fince the commencement of their eftablishment, in the space of lefs than fifty years, conciliated themfelves to the natives. and fecured the most important passes in the country, at the diftance of many hundred miles from their capital ? And have they not prefumed to unite Canada and Louifiana, though at the diffance of between four and five. thousand miles from their respective capitals? Can we fuppofe, the French would have attempted to put in execution this project without a proper foundation for fuccefs ? Could they have fuch foundation, if the country was fo very barren and unhealthy, or not tolerably peopled ? but it is a known fact, that notwithstanding the pretended intemperature of the climate, and the difficulty of getting up the Miffifippi to New Orleans, they have already near as many inhabitants in that capital, as they had in the capital of Canada.

Before the French fettled themfelves in Louifiana, they were contented with moderate bounds in Canada; they had enough of its bitters and fweets to cool them, from extending themfelves on that fide. From their fettlement on

on the Miffifippi, we may therefore date the commencement of their encroachments in North-America, and their growth of power there. When Carolina was to terribly befet with the Indians in 1715, the French took that opportunity to feize the fort of Albama, one of the most convenient posts in that country to affect our colonies of Carolina, and which had been fettled by our traders many years before the French fettled on the Miffifippi. If fuch infolence, fo very foon after the treaty of Utrecht, and the execution of their scheme for forming a colony on the Miffifippi, was left unpunished, could we expect better treatment for the future? If fuch expectations were entertained, the event has convinced us of their fallacy, for the French, not only still keep possession of this fort, and lay claim to the whole of the River Couffa, becaufe it falls into the River Albama (whereon the fort fo called by us is built ) but they have fince affumed an abfolute title to the whole country beyond the Apalachean and Allegany mountains, drawing a line from Cape Efcondido in the Gulph of Mexico acrofs the mountains, quite through the heart of the colonies of New York and New England, and up the Bay of Fundy : by which means they leave us only a very contracted fkirt along the coaft much fmaller, even than the tract of land between the mountains and the Miffifippi. And, in order to fupport these pretensions, and their interest with the natives, they have been constantly fending reinforcements and warlike flores; and even at the time of negociating the last peace, they were actually fending, and did, shortly after, fend a body of two thousand regulars lars to Louissana; and what numbers they have fent fince the commencement of the prefent war, fufficiently appears from the captures we have made of their ships bound to these parts, most of which were freighted with foldiers and warlike stores.

As we have examined Canada on the principle of fecurity, it may be expected, that the fame fhould be done with regard to Louifiana ; and, in fo doing, Sir, I believe every thing will be found fuitable to our defires. Suppofe that, upon the entire ceffion of the latter to us, we reftore Canada to the French, and confine them to the weft within the River Utawawa and Lake Abitibis. and to the fouth within Lake Champlain, the proper and legal boundary between the French colonies and ours; or, even fuppofe we only confine them generally within the Great Lakes, will it not be a barrier infinitely advantageous to us ? Will not fuch a frontier properly protected give us the whole command over the numerous tribes of Indians, and fecure us much the greateft fhare of the fur trade, and from all apprehensions of future encroachments ? Can we then entertain the leaft apprehensions from the French " at Montreal and the " Three Rivers ?" Can they " crofs Champlain Lake, " and attack Crown-Point "" without first taking Nut Ifland, a place whofe natural fituation gives room to think it may be made one of the ftrongest fortress in America? If we kept poffeffion of Nut Island could the French have any veffels on the Lake ? Could they transport them over land from the River St. Laurence,

* Letter to two Great Men.

rather after they had reduced that ifland, muft they not then be obliged to build fuch veffels? And fhould we not fland on a much better footing in that respect than the French could ? We must have veffels on the Lake previous to the capture of Nut Island ; and it must be allowed furely, that we could build as fast as they could. But let us give the author a little farther play. Suppofe that the Canadians fhould have taken Nut Island, taken or deftroyed our veffels on the Lake, and likewife the fort at Crown-Point ; they must still take Ticonderago, and the pafs at the Saw-Mills, before they make incursions into the settled parts of our colonies. We are likewife given to understand, that " if the « River St. Laurence be still theirs, what is to enfure " us againft an expedition to Niagara * ?" I would anfwer almost impossibilities, that is, if we intend to continue the fort there, and garrifon it, a matter I can hardly doubt. The French from Canada muft ftill have the fame difficulties to encounter, as by the way of " Champlain Lake ;" they must overcome a long and very dangerous navigation from Montreal; their veffels muft be fuperior to ours; and they muft likewife reduce Frontenac, Olwego, and Toronto, before they took Niagara: for what good effect could they reap from the capture of that place; and how could they keep poffeffion of it, when in the heart of the country of the Indians our allies, and while we had fuch important places still in our hands? And even be they as expeditious and fuccefsful as you pleafe, they cannot make fuch conquests within two years at least. The taking of Niagara, and Ticonderago alfo, coft us three years, tho' under our very nofes, and when we had not near fo many difficulties to encounter as the French will have. And, during all this time, I should be glad to know what we fhould be doing ; I have confidered the oppofition no more than could be expected in profound peace, from the garrifons of those places alone : but would not the Indians our allies, or the forces raifed by the colonies, be able to ftop the enemies progrefs, to repel them, and carry the war into the very heart of Canada without any affiftance from the mother country ? Is there likewife the least prospect of the French getting poffeffion of the Lakes? How could they come near Detroit and Miffilimakinac, more efpecially with a force to attack them? Could they get to them any otherwife than by navigating Lake Ontario, and from thence into Lake Erie, after taking those forts I have before mentioned? and, even after this is done, would not the two forts at Detroit and Miffilimakinac, be fufficiently protected by our people from Louifiana ?

Thus I think, Sir, I have fully answered the gentleman's queftion with respect to an invasion from Canada; and therefore the confequences he draws from that opinion must cease. I own, if we make this barrier in North-America, I am " fo weak to be believe that they " will lay afide" their " plan of usurpation." I dare fay they will not think of "elbowing all our colonies " round about; I dare fay they will not think " of " refuming the fame ambitions views of enlargement, " which the most facred ties of former treaties could not " reftrain *." I have these effential reasons for believing and thinking fo. When the French first possefield themfelves of these forts, and indeed of all their encroachments, they did not do it by violence; we were so unacquainted with the Lakes (otherwise than by hearsay and vague reports) and looked with so much contempt on the French power in Canada, and so little confulted the friendship of the Indians, that we had not the least apprehensions of any bad confequences arising from a neglect of either. But our ideas are now quite changed; we have experienced the danger of the designs of France, and the necessfity of keeping on good terms with the Indians, and we have forts to protect ourselves and them, on the very utmost limits of our frontier, the least attempt on which must be by open violence and hostility.

Now I am upon this fubject, give me leave, Sir, to recommend fomething to attain our ends in North-America more effectually for the future. For this purpofe, two different regulations are required; the one regarding our conduct to the Indians, and the other our measures with the French. There is no occasion to have recourse to extirpate the Indians; treat them only with more humanity, and we shall find them easy of reconciliation and alliance. But, if we again fuffer the French to have any intercourfe with them, we may always expect to have broils and diffentions. The forts on our frontier will effectually hinder this, if they are not fuffered to refort to them upon the principle of trade. Let us remind them if they should request this, that it was upon the fame pretence they formed their forts of Frontenac, Niagara, and the paffes at the other lakes. With regard to the other regulation, all kind of commerce between our colonies and the Canadians ought ought to be carefully prevented. Our own people have hitherto enabled the French to undermine them in the Indian trade, which they chiefly carried on with English commodities. Stroud's duffils, and others of our woollen manufactures were much better and cheaper in our colonies than those that could be had in Canada of French manufacture (which, by the bye, are chiefly made with our own wool.) Our rum, another prime article of the Indian trade was likewife to be had much cheaper than French brandy. By making fuch a provision for the fecurity of our colonies, and a perfeverance in meafures to prevent any intercourfe with Canada, our colonies will enjoy all the bleffings of peace and tranquillity, will be relieved from all apprehenfions of rivalfhin in trade or power, and Canada will be rendered worfe than nothing to the French, it will prove a burden to them.

But there is another object still remains worthy of our regard, the fishery. If we infiss on the cession of Cape-Breton and its dependent iss at the mouth of the River St. Laurence; if we have likewise our right to the coasts of Nova Scotia confirmed, would not these articles alone prove of great detriment to the French fishery. But, as this branch of trade has chiefly enabled them to support their marine, I think no restriction or duty whatever can compenfate for a privilege of reforting to it; and, to shew you, Sir, that I do not think "the refusal of this privilege *" would be " fo very unreasonable" I shall have need only to refer to the accounts of the extent of that trade, as carried on by France. According to a computation made of this branch of the French trade the year before

this war (1755) it appeared that the quantity of the fifth imported by the French thips, was 1,149,000 quintals of dry fifh, and 3,900,000 mudfifh ; the value of both which, including 2,116 and a quarter ton of train oil drawn from the blubber, amounted to 026,577..10, according to the prime coft of the fifh at Newfoundland; which, with the addition of the freight to the feveral markets where it was fold made 949,192,101. fterling : and add to this the confumption of woollen manufactures and brandy, and naval flores made it at least a million of money per annum. And this trade employed no lefs than 564 fhips, befides shallops, and 27,500 feamen. Now, if we lament the growth of French power, as the caufe of those wars that hath depopulated Europe for this century paft; and are convinced that our own liberties and independency are founded on the fuperiority of our naval power over that of France, would it not, when we fee in how great a measure this privilege has contributed, and in how great a measure the continuance of it is likely to contribute to the French power, fo far from being "un-" reafonable," be unpardonable; and the more fo, if we confider the nature of the French claim, a matter I shall hereafter attend to? If they have the least share of it, will they not be always encroaching upon pretence of building huts to refresh their men ? Will they not be always encroaching on us upon pretence of building ftages, and curing their fish; revoke therefore the privileges granted them on the coaft of Newfoundland ? But, as the French likewife carried on a great trade with mud fish, which were not under a neceffity of being cured and dried, make it a pain of confifcation both of ship and freight, if any of those fish are found on board ; and, in order to render render fuch a law strictly observed and efficacious, let the captors enjoy the benefit of fuch prizes, whether private trading fhips, or of the royal navy : fas eft et ab hofte doceri ; this practice is taught us by the French, it is the prefervative of their trade to the Sugar Islands. If it should be enquired how the Canadians are to support themselves, as the fifh made no small part of their food a I would answer, that the River St. Laurence, from the island of Anticofti to Montreal, will give them enough for themfelves without reforting to Cape Breton, and the banks of Newfoundland. And to fhew you, Sir. how impoffible it will be, if Cape Breton, and St. John's, as well as Canada, are reftored to France : for the fubiects of that crown, ever to avoid encroachments on us, give me leave to recollect the utility of the former of those islands to France in that refpect. When they had poffeffion of Cape Breton and the north-east part of Nova Scotia, their store-ships and men of war generally reforted to the harbour of Louifbourg, from whence they took the opportunity of going to Quebec at their pleafure. In a time of danger from an enemy, they often unloaded at Cape Breton, and when the feafon was fo far advanced as to oblige our fleets to leave the blockade of Cape Breton, and return to port, they fent two or three fhips, with the flores to Quebec, in which cafe they were obliged to winter there. But, if this was not practicable (as was often the cafe) on account of the advanced feafon, they transported them in winter over the ice to the coaft of Nova Scotia, and by that means conveyed them to Canada by land. From hence it is evident, what great reason we have to apprehend, that if France is suffered to repoffefs Cape Breton, they would likewife endeavour your to repossed their former fettlement in the bays of Gafpey, Chaleur, and Mirimichi, would they not greatly firengthen those places ? Would they not carry fire and fword into the heart of Nova Scotia, and foon make us repent of a ftep, which we cannot, at this time but think would be highly detrimental to us? But. would not the retention of Cape Breton on the other hand effectually prevent this ? Would it not of courfe render it extremely difficult for France to fupport Canada in a future war? The harbour of Quebec is very improper and unfafe for the reception of large fhips on account of the violent ftorms that are very frequentin the River St. Laurence, and often drive thips in the harbour on fhore: and do not these ftorms often prove fatal to many fhips, in navigating the river to and from Quebec, by reafon of the many dangerous rocks and fhoals, which even in calms, it is often impoffible to avoid, becaufe of the fogginess of the air? In case a fleet from France should escape the vigilance of our fleets in the Bay of Bifcay, fhould enter the Gulph of St. Laurence before our fleet from Halifax was collected to intercept them, would they not find it very difficult, if not im-Poffible, to return from thence without hazarding an engagement which might prove fatal to their affairs? Should we not likewife have every advantage over them from our inland frontier, which, by the connection with the land belonging to the Hudson's Bay company, would entirely furround all Canada, and from every part whereof we might, upon any future rupture, make incurfions into the very heart of Canada in different parts, particularly by the Lakes Champlain and Ontario? Let us confider, Sir, the fituation of these lakes, and their proximity to the most principal fettlements in Canada : let let us confider our own colonies, protected by forts at the most convenient passes; their frontier to the west fecured by the forts of Detroit and Miffilimakinac, and to the fouth by Niagara, Ofwego, Toronto, and Frontenac on Lake Ontario, and by Ticonderago, Crown Point, and Nut Island on Lake Champlain; forts which might be made almost impregnable to any force from Canada, at a very moderate expence, and upon their present plans; let us, Sir, maturely confider these advantages, and we may fay, with good reafon, that we can at any time oblige the French to preferve peace. And therefore, Sir, I cannot but think with the Remarker, that " our claims before the war were large "enough for poffeffion and for fecurity too";" and thefe. Sir, are claims we can " rightfully make +;" and fuch as will give us the most defirable fecurity, without being incumbered with the cold, barren, uncomfortable, and uninviting country of Canada.

Give me leave, Sir, to intereft you a little farther on this matter. We have, for a long time, looked with an invidious eye on the Spanish fettlement at Cape Florida, which we thought endangered our colonies of Georgia and Carolina; and the invasion of the former from thence confirmed this opinion. We thought likewife a conquest of it would give us greater advantage over their trade; we therefore returned the falutation, by an attack on St. Augustine, but were necessitated to abandon the enterprize, with the loss of many lives. Whence then this forgetfulness, this partial influence of caprice! a regard for a present occasion has been too much the defect of former treaties; let our confidera-tion for the future fucceed in the enfuing. The laft war feemed to have opened our eyes, we thought we could then difcover whence France and Spain might hurt us moft, and where we might have the fame advantage over them: but now, when the opportunity offers, we feem to have forgot the being and nature of fuch conceptions. Louifiana does not want attractivenefs, it is the only object that can fecure us in North-America: it is much more worthy our commercial views than Canada, the commodities of which are the fame as in our northern colonies, and cannot be of any particular benefit, when we have already fuch plenty of them : and that, without retaining Canada, we fhould, merely by clipping it of its encroachments, enjoy more than half its profits. But, with regard to the produce of Louifiana, fhould we not preferve to ourfelves a monopoly of tobacco, for which the foil and climate is every way fit. and which there is the greateft reason to believe the French would engrofs to themfelves as they had done the fugar trade, if they were fuffered to poffels a country fo convenient for fuch a valuable commodity ? Should we not likewife rear great quantities of indigo and cotton, articles much wanted in our manufactures, and which we have been often obliged to purchase of those very enemies with whom we are now at war, and whofe chief fystem was to overturn our constitutions? and even in those marshy parts adjoining to the Gulph of Mexico is not the land fit for most kinds of vegetables and nutriment for men and cattle? May not the inhabitants raife more than enough to fupply their own demands, and alfo a fhare for the Leeward Islands, a trade for which it is conveniently fituated ; for, tho' they can't take

take a direct course to them by reason of the ftrong current, they may fall through the Gulph of Florida into the Atlantic Ocean, and have a fhorter paffage than from any other of our colonies? The establishment of a little manufactory has been attempted in Georgia, would it not be as practicable in Louisiana? Do not the climate and great number of mulberry-trees that grow for plentifully there, afford a most pleafing prospect of bringing that scheme to perfection ? might not tea likewife be produced, when nearly in the fame latidude as Pekin in China, and the feafons are not very different? the produce of this commodity from our own colonies, would be a real benefit to the nation, as it would not only bring great profits to the revenue, but likewife preferve that fpecie in the kingdom which we fo much lament the loss of by this trade to the East-Indies. The inland country is remarkable for an abundance of the beft timbers, no doubt more fit for navigation in hot climates, than those from our northern colonies, which are apt to fplit : while, on the other hand, those from hot climates maintain their firmnels, and are proof against those destructive vermin, called wood ants, that make fuch havock in the bottoms of fhips made of timber from a hot climate. Muft not the timber of Louifiana be likewise more fit for the use of the fugar planters. who have fuch a large demand for them for carriages, fugar mills, &c. and which they have hitherto been fupplied with by the Dutch, at a great distance and great price, from Barbituis and Efquebe ? Is it not more than probable, that the logwood of Honduras (which has caufed fuch a long difpute between us and the Spaniards) if transplanted here, would enable us to fupply

ourfelves with that valuable commodity of our own growth ? they thrive in a marfhy foil, therefore there is the greatest reason to think they would on the coafts of Louifiana. Might not the cochineal be also produced there, when the Opuntia grow in fuch abundance in Mexico, and bring an annual income into Spain of near a million of money ? As there are fuch great quantities of wild vines there, might not wine be produced ? This would be another great faving to the nation as they might answer as well as those which we buy of our enemies. In a word, might not every commodity within or near the Tropics, thrive in Louifiana? But what, Sir, would greatly add to the value of this fettlement to England, would be its proximity to the Spanish subjects of Mexico. No doubt our manufactures, notwithstanding the ftrongeft prohibition, would find a vent there with the fame facility as those of France do by the way of St. Domingo. The poffeffion of Louifiana would likewife give us an infinite advantage over St. Augustine, and a greater advantage over the flotas from Vera Cruz than Jamaica has over the galleons from Carthagena. In going to the Havanna from Vera Cruz, the fhips are obliged to crofs the Gulph of Mexico, and the currents being very ftrong from the north fea against the coasts of Louifiana and Florida, and thro' the Gulph of Florida, the fhips from Vera Cruz are often drove on those coafts : and the Gulph of Florida being the paffage homeward bound from the Leeward and Windward Iflands, and the neighbouring continent, the poffeffion of Louifiana would therefore prove of the greatest benefit to our cruizers and privateers. We fhould thereby be much better enabled to reduce Cuba and St. Augustine; our 1.1 trade trade would become greatly extended in those valuable parts, and in future times might we not fucceed by an invasion in the Bay of Campeachy? the capture of Vera Cruz would cut off the communication between Spanish, North, and South America, and enable us to get possififion of the mines of Mexico.

And this fole poffession of the Mislifippi, would be the more beneficial to us, Sir, as we fhould thereby have the whole country beyond the mountains at our own difpofal and pleafure. Settlers would refort there becaufe they could be under no apprehenfions from an enemy; and, because the many difficulties of a land carriage, from thence to the Atlantic Ocean would be removed, as they might fend their commodities all the way by water to New Orleans, by means of the many large and navigable rivers, that communicate with the Miffifippi. Settlers would refort there, becaufe they might be in hopes to extend themfelves within the neighbourhood of the Spanish subjects of New Mexico. And, in fhort, Sir, by this poffeffion of Louifiana, England would be effectually relieved from an apprehension of the independence of her colonies from their great populoufnefs, and the fpirit of manufacturing among them, occafioned by the want of poffeffions for the inhabitants to extend themfelves, and a fufficient quantity of land to keep them employed in agriculture.

Thefe, Sir, are reafons why I think Louifiana an object every way fo defirable, and, in fhort, the advantages we fhall reap from this acquifition, bid fo fair that without it (whether we conquer it or not) we fhall have, I will not fay, " a treacherous," but " a delu-" five peace." We need not therefore be told with fo much much vehemence by a late popular author *, that an ** expedition to the Miffifippi " would be fo very ** ufe-** lefs" as he feems to imagine.

I am fenfible, Sir, it would be a work of infinite difficulty to perfuade the French to cede all their poffeffions on this continent. I believe, it is not the propofed defign of the war, and I would by no means urge fuch a notion ; not only because I think it would not be altogether agreeable to good policy; But particularly, becaufe: I would defire no more in North-America than was confiftent with fecurity, as it would not only feem unreasonable, but be unneceffary, as we can have the most defirable fecurity, without demanding Canada, and as fuch demand muft of course greatly leffen our demands where I think, they are more immediately wanted. Let the French have Canada then, under fuch reftrictions as I have premifed, only by clipping them of Louifiana and their other encroachments, and you will reduce it to the ftate it was in at the treaty of Utrecht ; leave the French Canada, and we shall find them more defirous of cultivating the arts of peace than those of war; and they will find it more defirable, and to their interest to live in amity with their neighbours, nay, in fome awe of them, an end that can be attained by no other means than thus fecuring ourfelves, and fubjecting their commerce and marine to the fuperiority of our own. This, Sir, being a chief caufe of my prefent addrefs, is an object, I flatter myfelf, I have hitherto attended to; it is an object I shall, in the enfuing sheets, ever strive principally to keep in view.

* Confiderations on the German war, p. 130.

Having

Having, I think Sir, fufficiently enlarged on the proper barrier to be infifted on in North America, I fhall next proceed to confider the other part of my argument, the reafonableness and neceffity of retaining the French Sugar Islands.

It must be admitted, Sir, that the pretence of our having fugar land enough, is falle; for, without confidering the nature of the foil in our own iflands, and the great detriment done to the land by continued culture, can we suppose, that if our sugar planters could fupply Ireland and North America with the produce of their own plantations, that they would pay the traders from thence in specie, or bills of exchange for their commodities of lumber and provision? And, that they do this, I find by an effimate, extracted from the entries in the public offices of Jamaica, not long before the commencement of this war, computed upon an average of three years; whereby it appeared, that the annual imports, from North America to that island alone, were ninety-four thousand two hundred pounds, and the exports from thence twenty-two thousand, two hundred and twenty-two pounds ten shillings. The northern colonies, therefore, received a ballance of fixty-four thousand, nine hundred and seventy-seven pounds, ten fhillings in money or bills of exchange; and even fcarce a third part of the value of those exports was in the article of fugar. I make no doubt, but that the balance has been in like proportion from the Leeward Islands. Befides, Sir, it must be morally impossible, if our colonies do not produce more than feventy thousand hogfheads of fugar annually, according to the largeft calculations, and Great Britain alone confumes every year fix parts parts out of the feven, that there can be any quantity of fugar exported to the North American colonies and Ireland. A late author, fpeaking of the demand of fugar in the latter, tells us, that " it may be reafonably ima-" gined, that the French have, in a great meafure, " fupplied the people of Ireland with fugars, for the " annual confumption of fugar in Ireland above thirty " years ago, is valued by Mr. Dobbs at more than fix-" ty thousand pounds; and, as the confumption of tea " is greatly increased fince that time, the confumption " of fugar hath undoubtedly kept pace with it *." It is true, that the exports of fugar from our plantations have not been fo great as might have been expected; but then there is fomething to be made in anfwer to it. without laying fo much weight upon a fuppofed combination among our fugar planters : for " the great " confumption of rum in this kingdom put the Britifh " fugar planters upon diffilling fuch great quantities of " melaffes, as not to leave a fufficiency thereof to fupply the demands of the North American colonies ; and " this obliged the fugar planters to pay money for a " confiderable proportion of the provisions, lumber, &c " wherewith they were supplied from New England " and other northern colonies +." The northern traders, and those from Ireland not finding their market among our own planters, were therefore induced to get fugar elfewhere, and this they did from the French, who fometimes received the value of that commodity in lumber, provisions, &c. and at other times in money, or bills of exchange; both which were very acceptable to the French planters. So that " the balance " which the fugar planters from time to time " re-" ceived on the trade with England" was " the " fund by which " the northern traders paid " for " all the commodities elfewhere bought from the " French with money; and the fpecie which " they " received " for provisions, lumber, &c. fold in the " British fugar colonies, and all the French fugars, " manufactures, &c. fradulently imported there" were " paid for out of the money received from this nation. " None of those vaft loffes" did " in the least affect " the British fugar planters, excepting in particular cafes; " for the British wealth, which they" diffipated " by " those feveral means" was " constantly replaced by " other wealth, received from their mother country *. The fugar planters thinking themfelves injured by these dealings of the North American colonies, lamented the lofs of their money, as taken from their own pockets, and carried to the French, with many bitter reflections and acrimony. The northern traders recriminated in their turns, and hence enfued that great quarrel between them, which answered no other end than exposing themselves, and opening the eyes of others in their mother country, who could not hope to fee any remedy being put to it. The fugar planters exposed the underhand trade carried on by the nort'ern traders; and the northern traders as bitterly inveighed against the combinations and exorbitant demands of the planters, which occasioned them, as they faid, to go to a foreign market. These differtions fill subfift; the time is favourable for putting an end to them, and to form that equilibrium, which is neceffary to render both dependent on their mother country. The caufe of complaint arifes from the difproportion of our fugar colonies to those of the northern colonies, the latter entirely fublifting upon the former, which is their only market, and can alone enable them to pay for the manufactures of Great Britain. Agriculture and farming are the employments and livelihood of our northern colonies : if therefore they can't find a vent for their commodities among our own people, they must do it elsewhere : and, if they cannot do that, they must apply themselves to fome other occupation. For inftance, if the North American farmer cannot find a vent for his grain, provifions, horfes, &c. can he supply himself with the ne_ ceffary utenfils for his bufinefs, and the conveniences of life ? he may indeed feed his family, but he can't cloath them : and, if his commodities are such, that they cannot procure vent at a foreign market, he must fet up manufacturing: and, if this fhould take effect among our North American colonies, will it not render them independent of England ? We are indeed told, and with a great deal of feeming warmth, that " no man " who can have a piece of land of his own, fufficient " by his labour to fubfift his family in plenty, is poor " enough to be a manufacturer, and work for a maf-" ter *." But this doctrine is fubject to many exceptions. If a man has " a piece of land of his own " the fubfiftence of " his family in plenty" depends on the fertility of that land, and not only the quantity, but the quality of the produce. He may alfo have more than ' fufficient to fublift his family in plenty" with the produce, but then he may not have enough to procure them the other conveniences of life. Not only this, but a plenty of the fame commodity, generally renders the fale very precatious; and, if fold, the profits are often fo fmall, as fearce to defray the charges of fuffenance, and the neceffary inftruments of hufbandry. Great plenty and induftry are therefore incompatible; and fome new method of working to a greater advantage, will always follow.

they

(83)

Befides, if " the natural livelihood of the greatest " population of a country is manufactures * ", is it not a ftrong reafon to fear the northern colonies; for they are by much the more populous of any in North America, confidering the extent of their fettlements ? And even in answer to the fingle article mentioned by the Remarker of the manufacture of " hats," we are only told, that " the beaver fkins are not now to be had in " New England, but from very remote places, and at " great prices +;" fo that, even upon that confideration, the manufacture of hats is not rejected out of good-will, but their incapacity of fupplying themselves with the beaver-fkins as cheap as from England. But be the places ever fo remote, and the prices ever fo great. the New-Englanders can certainly have them as cheap as we in Old England.

Give me leave, Sir, to lay before you what an ingenious gentleman lately faid on the flate of our northern colo-

colonies. "Thefe colonies," fays he, "having plenty "of provisions amongst themfelves, and even a large "quantity for exportation, they take nothing of this "nature, but fome Irish beef, butter, and pork; and ** thefe they will not want long ; and thofe colonies

** having interfered with Great Britain in the corn trade ** to feveral of her foreign markets, Great Britain and ** Ireland can expect to receive no great benefit from the ** plantations in thofe articles. We have hitherto fur** nifhed them with a great quantity of their materials ** for wearing apparel, houfhold furniture, filk, woollen,
** and linen manufactures ; but, if they fhould eftablifh
** the linnen and wcollen manufactures amongft them** felves, and encourage every other fpecies of arti** ficers to fettle amongft them, our plantations may, at ** length, prove detrimental, inftead of beneficial to ** the three kingdoms.

" If it fhould be deemed good policy in Great Britain to fuffer her northern colonies to fupply themfelves with all wearables, and all furniture, as well as all kinds of provifions; may not this prove a preparatory flep towards their becoming capable of fupplying other nations herewith, unlefs they are kept under fuch proper refrictions, as may prevent thofe injuries to their mother country, as well as to Scotland and Ireland.

"The primary eftablifhment of these colonies was intended principally for the business of planting, not for that of manufacturing. However wife and neceffary it may be to indulge them in some degree in the latter; yet the natural confequence thereof, should be effectually guarded against for the benefit of the "whole

" whole nation; for we well know, that the habit of " manufacturing in a few capital articles will beget " that in more; handicraftsmen in one branch of ma-" nufactural and mechanical bufiness beget others; and, " as the neceffaries of life, and the price of labour are " likely to grow cheaper and cheaper amongft them. " fhould we not keep a ftrict eye, that the infant is not " reared in a way to prove detrimental; and, at length, " ruinous to the intereft of her parent? While thefe " colonies shall not be capable of manufacturing for « cheap as Great Britain and Ireland, it will remain " their intereft rather to take what they have been " wont to do of them : but, fo foon as they fhail be " able to furnish themselves equally cheap, we must " expect to lofe all that exportation : and, if they are " permitted to go those lengths, it is easy to judge what " farther ftrides they will attempt to go, unlefs they " are duly reftrained in their career of manufacturing " by the wifdom of the British legislature "."

Frome hence, Sir, it is evident, that an imputation of the fpirit of manufacturing among our northern colonies is no new topic, it is in fact what has engaged the concern of not a fmall part of this nation. But it is a lamentable misfortune in politics as well as in religion, that there are those who have eyes, but see not, and those who have ears but hear not, and who never have any feeeling, but when calamities become realized, and it is too late to provide against them. Ought we not, Sir, at least to endeavour to prevent these threatening symptoms? Ought we not to cheriss every fcheme that tends to the welfare of our colonies, and that will render them more benefical to their mother country, than they have been, or are at prefent, likely to be hereafter ? do not all the apprehenfions of this fpirit of manufacturing among our northern colonies arife from the difproportion between them, and the fugar iflands ? and do not all the evils that refult from this difproportion fall on the mother country ? For we not only lofe the great balance we pay to the Sugar Islands to the yearly amount of many fcore thousand pounds, which is most of it carried to our enemies, but we likewife lofe the benefit we might otherwife receive from the northern colonies. In juffice therefore to candour and truth, it must be own'd. that the advocates for retaining the French Sugar Islands. have this superiority over their adversaries, and the bigots to Canada. The intereft of our Sugar Islands is infeparably annexed to their mother country; they reciprocally depend on each other : and even our own North American colonies, in a great measure depend on the Sugar Iflands; it is they that take off their lumber, corn, and provisions, their staple commodities, which would otherwife become ufelefs to them, or detrimental to their mother country, by interfering with her in those commodities to the European market.

It is true, the poff-fion of the Neutral Iflands of Tabago, St. Lucia and St. Vincent, would, in a great measure, obviate the cause of the losses, occasioned by the want of a sufficient quantity of sugar; but then we should not diminish the trade of France; and should receive very little addition to our own by a share of that trade to Europe, we could never carry the sugar to a foreign market: that branch would still remain wholly in the hands of France. For, as long as France has more than fufficient for her home confumption, the can always under-fell us at a foreign market, allowing only for the advantages fhe has in the smallness of the duty on plantation produce; but confidering the other natural advantages that France has over us, in the number of inhabitants. the could do it from that caufe alone, becaufe the price of labour must be of course so much the cheaper. Do not the French buy beef and mutton, and other provifions, for half the price we pay for them here ? Is not their inland carriage near fixty per cent. cheaper than in England ? Do they not fell their cloth manufactures twenty-five pounds per cent. cheaper than our traders? And is not their feamen's wages lower by one half than that of ours? The only method therefore to bring that trade into our hands, is by retaining Martinico and Guadalupe, as well as the Neutral Iflands: and then France will have little, if any more than fufficient for her home confumption. It is, Sir, the only method whereby we can retain a fhare of the commerce of Europe in that commodity, and procure a larger demand for our manufactures among our northern colonies : it is, Sin, the only method that can relieve us from all apprehenfions of the independency of those colonies on their mother country : and thefe, Sir, are advantages that will be purchased at the expence of France, our more than mortal enemy.

But, not to confine ourfelves, Sir, merely to the injury the lofs of fuch a valuable branch of trade would prove to France, and benefit to ourfelves, it may be eafily forefeen what injury our own islands and trading fhips thips might receive from the French keeping poffeffion of Martinico and Guadalupe, or even either of them : fuppofing the French fhould, upon that condition, give up their pretenfions to the Neutral Islands, and should fuffer us to acquire a full poffeffion of them. Could our colonies even then enjoy the prospect of fecurity? Could they be relieved from apprehenfions of an attack? or, would our trading fhips be a whit the lefs exposed to the privateers of the enemy? Till these ends are attained, the Sugar Islands cannot be deemed fecure, till these ends are attended, Britons cannot fay their interefts have been properly attended to; they cannot fay that the M-----r has availed himfelf and his country " of a fuccefsful war, in the attainment of an ad-" vantageous peace." Only confider, Sir, our islands of Tabago, Barbadoes. St. Vincent, St. Lucia, Dominica, Antigua, Montserrat, Nevis, St. Christophers, &c. islands that feem to convey large ideas of their extent and produce, tho' inferior in both to Martinico and Guadalupe; only confider, Sir, the French poffeffed of those two large islands, more ftrong, convenient, and important in every refpect than our own, and fituated in the very center of them, and you cannot, Sir, but comply with me in an opinion, that the fecurity I am fo ftrenuous for, is no unworthy object of your confideration: and the more fo as the fhips from Europe bound to the Leeward and Windward Iflands, the Caraccas, Carthagena, New-Spain, and the whole coaft of the Gulph of Mexico, strike Descada first, a small French island within fight of Guadalupe, and at no great diffance from Martinico. If the French should formally formally and fully cede to us the Neutral Iflands, upon condition of being fuffered to enjoy Martinico and Guadalupe, muft we not expect that they will endeavour to fupply that lofs, by making themfelves more powerful in those iflands? Would not those iflands receive a great addition of inhabitants by the removal of those from the fettlements they have already formed in the Neutral Iflands? Would not France, by being thus confined to Martinico and Guadalupe, make them more ftrong and formidable in the number of white inhabitants, fortifications and foldiers? And this additional ftrength is the more to be apprehended from those iflands, whose natural advantages of fituation are fuch as to require very little affiftance from art to make them more fo.

And, in a word, would not France, by being poffeffed of these two islands alone, be in every respect more formidable to us among the Leeward Islands, than when the was poffeffed of the Neutral Iflands? Would not our trade, by the poffeffion of the latter be confequently more exposed to the enemy? Would not England always be obliged to keep two feparate fleets on the Leeward Island station, each of them frong enough to encounter a fleet of France ? I fay, Sir, would not England be obliged to do this; I appeal to you, Sir, I appeal, to the gentlemen of the navy. who must know fomething of the fituation of those iflands, and the winds and currents in those feas? And these natural difadvantages are the more to be feared, when we recollect, that feveral of our tranfports, in their paffage only from Baffeterre in Guadalupe to Fort Louis in Grandterre, were, from the great difficulty of turning to windward, full three weeks before they got to that place. English habour in Antiqua (the beft port we were poffeffed of in that part of the world for the reception and fecurity of large fhips) was the general rendezvous of the British fleet on that ftation, and thereby gave protection to Montferrat, Nevis, St. Chriftophers, and the leffer islands to the weftward of them, which having no harbour for the reception of a fleet, would otherwife have been too much exposed to the enemy from Martinico and Guadalupe who might frequently have failed to either of them within a few hours. Now, Sir, would not the fame reafon induce us to keep another fleet in the port of le petite carcenage in St. Lucia, a port one of the best, and that might be made one of the most fecure and formidable of any in America ? Would not this, Sir, be highly neceffary for the protection of that island, which is almost within fight of Martinico? Would it not, Sir, be highly neceffary for the protection of St. Vincent, Tabago, and Barbadoes, which have no convenient port for the reception of a fleet, and would be confequently in the greatest danger from an enemy ? The fate of thefe laft islands must therefore depend on the fate of St. Lucia, in the fame manner as Montferrat, Nevis, St. Chriftopher's, and the leffer iflands to the weftward of them depend on Antigua.

It is evident therefore, that the danger of all the Sugar Iflands, falling into the hands of France, though we fhould become fully poffeffed of the Neutral Iflands, is far from being impoffible, and fo diftant as fome may imagine, as it entirely depends on fortuitous events. If St. Lucia was loft, or its beft harbour ruined, could we

we maintain ourfelves in St. Vincent and Tabago? And, if the fame fhould happen to Antigua, would it not greatly endanger Dominica, Montferrat, Nevis, St. Chriftopher's, &c. for, by lofing that protection they had from the fleet at Antigua, and there being no convenient port in the neighbourhood, and fuch as would answer the purpose of English Harbour in Antigua, what could hinder the French from attacking those islands, and reducing them? Or to put the most moderate construction on this circumstance, how could we hinder the French from intercepting all our navigation to and from Europe to those islands? And, that we cannot hope to put a ftop to the great damages done our trade by the privateers of the French, othewife than by an entire conquest of all their possessions, we have too wofully experienced. And, if we cannot do it now. while the French power has fuffered fuch a check in the reduction of Guadalupe, when their fleets have been deftroyed, when the few fhips they have left dare not come out of port to their affiftance; and, when we have in those feas, a fleet of upwards of twenty fhips. and great part of them of the line, to block up Martinico, what can we expect hereafter ? Could our merchant thips pais without a convoy fuperior to the fleet of France on that flation ? And, could any trade bear the immense expence of fuch convoys? If we had not two large feparate fleets on this flation, at St. Lucia and Antigua, our fleets must of course rendezvous at one of them; and, in that cafe, might not the French attack the other; and, after intelligence should be received of fuch attack by our fleet, and the thips were collected and ready to fail, might not the winds prove fo unfavourable as to prevent their timely arrival to give the neceffary affiftance ; more especially if the fleet was at Antigua, and the attack made on St. Lucia? And, to conceive, Sir, what we have to apprehend from fuch an attack, only confider the different eftablifhment of the French in those islands from that of our own; it will naturally lead you into ftronger reflections on the danger we are exposed to from that quarter, than any thing I can fay on the fubject. In 1676, the number of White Men in Barbadoes alone was computed to be twenty thousand (besides women and children) and eighty thousand negroes; but mark the revolution within these late years; in 1724 the number of White Men in that island, able to bear arms, was only four thousand eight hundred and twelve, according to the reprefentation from the board of trade; and about the year 1740, the number of Negroes there was ufually fixty thousand, which may ferve to give us some idea of the number of Whites then there. In 1701, the French island colonies of Martinico, Guadalupe, St. Domingo, Cayenne, Grenade, Marigalante, &c. contained eight thousand eight hundred and fifty White Men, and forty-five thousand fix hundred Blacks, according to the reprefentation of the French council of commerce; but, by a calculation made in 1751, the French then had, in the faid colonies, upwards of fifty-one thousand and five hundred White Men fit to bear arms, independent of many thousands of failors employed in the trade of the co.onies, and three hundred fixty-four thousand and eight hundred flaves of both fexes : and the general computation within . thefe thefe late years has been, that the French have one White Man to every three Negroes ; whereas the English have only one White Man to twenty Negroes; an affertion no lefs amazing than true ! A British M-----r, Sir, ought to keep a watchful eye on these dangerous fymptoms; he ought to confider of what great utility this branch of trade is to France, and what it would hereafter prove to Great Britain; he ought to confider what danger there is to be apprehended of the lofs of the moft important of our iflands; and to put the leaft confideration on the matter, how likely our whole trade is to become in their power. And, that we cannot put a ftop to this evil, I have already fhewn; nay, we cannot even expect to prevent their fleets getting in and out of a fingle port in Martinico alone, as they have done whenever they please, and they have it always in their power to avoid an engagement : for, to use C-----re M--re's own words, " from the almost constant lee currents, " it being very difficult for fhips to get to windward, it " must be always in the enemy's choice, whether they " will come to a general action or not." From hence, Sir, we may conclude to what little effect it would be to keep fleets on that flation, while the French have either Martinico or Guadalupe; fuch fleets will only prove an unneceffary expense to the nation; unneceffary because they must be employed in fruitless cruizes against the enemy; and unneceffary, because they must hear of, and often see our trading ships carried into a French port without being able to prevent it.

Whoever will look into the feveral lifts of captures made by privateers from Martinico, and carried in there fince the reduction of Guadalupe, will find to what what exceffive loffes we are liable from the capture of thips by that fingle ifland : they will even find that, inftead of being benefited by fuch a confiderable acquifition as Guadalupe, our trade has in effect fuffered by it. I would not be mifunderstood in this; I do not mean to infinuate the least prejudice against the retention of Guadalupe, that island alone would certainly be a great lofs to the enemy, and of much importance to us, both as an addition to our fugar trade in times of peace, and fecurity to that trade in time of war : but the reafon we have not experienced the latter, has been owing to the injudicious terms granted to that ifland on its furrender, whether from defign or inadvertency, I will not pretend to determine. By the capitulation, the men belonging to privateers, and all others who had no property in the island, were at liberty to retire to Martinico : and, with regard to those that acted in a military capacity, and in defence of the island, whether belonging to Guadalupe, Marigalante, or Martinico, it was particularly infifted on that they fhould be fent to the latter only, and fhould carry with them their arms, baggage, fervants, &c. But, as the mention of this fo frequently occurs in the articles, I am inclined to think it was intentional; and that for the following reafons. The intercourfe between Martinico and France had met with fuch interruption, that the French gave over all thoughts of carrying on their commerce in their own bottoms, and their Dutch carriers meeting with the like obstruction, the inhabitants of Martinico had long found it difficult to fupply themfelves with a fufficiency of provisions. This was the general opinion among the people in our own islands; to which fome added.

(95) added, that they had already maintained themfelves a long time by the mere capture of our flore-fhips. The intention therefore of confining fuch an additional number of inhabitants to the fingle ifland of Martinico, which could not fupply the demands of its own proper inhabitants, muft have been to flarve it to a furrender. But the event has proved the abfurdity of this fcheme. By the great increase of failors and landmen, their privateers have increased in proportion; and those being vateers have increased in proportion; and those being fmall and full of men, have made great havock among our trading fhips, notwithftanding the much boafted itrength of our fleet. Indeed it must be acknowledg'd, they have had but too much reason to be merry at fighting us with our own weapons! I should be forry to infer the least reflection on the late Com—re on that station, my intention is not to calumniate our officers, nor cavil with them about the nature of their duty: this, perhaps, has been an abuse already too much lavished on the subject. We know what papers have been diffributed among our islands of the most injurious contents*, and how freely those islanders have expressed expressed themselves in open conversation. The complaint feems to have arofe from this principle, viz, that it was practicable for the foundron to anchor in Port-Royal bay, between Fort Negro and l'Ifle des Ramieres. whereby the French men of war under M. Bompart could not have got out, and the privateers, finding no entrance there for them and their prizes, must have gone either to Port St. Piere, or to Grenade, either of which were to be blocked up by a fingle frigate. Now, the queftion that arifes, is not whether there was danger to be apprehended in blocking up Fort-Royal, but whether it was practicable. I do not pretend to determine this point : there are those it more nearly concerns to doit. C----re M-re was an officer of much eftimation among the people; if his conduct was faulty, he ought to have defended it; it was a duty he owed himfelf, his fovereign, and his country : he fhould confider, that credulity is often the affociate of flander; and that, when a man's character is defamed, if he does not difprove the charge, it is generally reckoned an admission of his guilt.

But admitting, Sir, that Martinico cannot be blocked up fo effectually as to enfure the fafe navigation of our trading fhips, is it not a very fufficient reafon for attempting to reduce it? When the enemy's privateers from Martinico alone, have taken near a hundred fail of our fhips in lefs than three months, muft it not give fome idea of the great detriment we fhall be liable to hereafter? Muft it not caufe diffatisfaction among the mercantile part of the nation to find this nufance not attempted to be removed? And, even fuppofing it fhould be found neceffary to give up Martinico at a peace (which I hope will not be the cafe) the nation would ftill receive no finall advantage from the temporary poffeffion of it; as we fhould thereby effectually obtain the defired fecurity, and reduce our enemy to the neceffity of fubmitting to an equitable accommodation.

I take it for granted, that an addition of Sugar Islands would be an inducement to retain Senegal and Goree. It has been acknowledged, that those places " are of real importance in the flave and gum trades;" but then it is urged, that " our own African fettle-" ments have hitherto fupplied us with flaves fufficient " for our American purpofes: and the trade for gum is, " perhaps, not of confequence enough to make us " amends for the annual mortality, which we al-" ready lament, of our brave countrymen, to guard " our African conquests "." That we have hitherto fupplied our own occafions for flaves, is true; but that we have greatly decreafed in that branch of trade, and the French have near intirely fupplanted us' in it within these late years, not only by fupplying themfelves, but the fubjects of Spain likewife, is equally true. Befides, did they not openly encroach on our rights and privileges in Africa, as well as in America, and that in the most important settlements we were possessed of? Did they not endeavour to supplant us at our capital fettlement; Anamaboe? Did they not do the fame at Whydah, and in the rivers Sierra Leone and Sherbro? Did they not enjoy a great fhare of the trade of those places ? Did they not do the fame in the River Gambia ; for, not content with cutting off the communication between the fettlements of our company, and a branch of the River Senegal, which falls into the Gambia, by erecting a fort at the junction of these rivers, did they not erect another fort at the mouth of the River Gambia, opposite to a fort of our own, and within our undoubted territories ? Did they not do this without moleftation from us? Did they not even take upon themfelves to fire upon our trading veffels, though within fuch our undoubted rights, and under our very forts? And shall we then again put it in the power of France to repeat those infolences? Shall we thus paffively let them go unpunished ? Shall we fuffer them again to engross the whole gum trade ? Shall we fuffer them to retain, as of right, an extent of coast of five hundred miles from Cape Blanco to the River Gambia? And, in a word, fhall we fuffer them to exclude us from the whole African trade; for this will probably be the certain confequence of their repoffeffing Senegal and Goree? The lofs of the flave trade must be very great to this nation, not only becaufe we have entirely loft all share of that trade to the Spanish colonies, but likewife, because it is the only trade we can carry on with the French Sugar Islands with any advantage; for they will pay us in fpecie for flaves, when they will not for any any other commodity. Not only this, but the gum * from hence is an effential article in our manufactures. as well as those of France; and the prohibiting the future fale of it to them would be of infinite prejudice to the fuccels of their manufactures. And, can it be faid, Sir, that Senegal and Goree are not of confequence enough to make us amends for the lofs of a few lives, when it is computed that the pofferfion of them has brought into the French East-India company, a clear annual income of five hundred thousand pounds : and, when the retaining these settlements alone would fully answer our views in the East Indies, without making any demands there. But, as affairs in this quarter of the world have been hitherto paffed over in filence, I would beg leave to make a little digreffion on that head. Our trade there is in the hands of a private company, and is likewife, in fome refpects, difadvantageous to the nation. The people, therefore, could not but be diffatisfied, at feeing a particular intereft preferred to a general one. But, as the climate there makes havock enough among the fubjects of this kingdom, without having recourse to the deftructive weapons of war, I think we ought, if poffible, to prevent our being involved in a war there for the future. Adopt therefore the fystem of France; let Madrass last war, and Fort St. David this war be your precedent. Let Karical, Pondicherry, and Port Dauphin at Madagascar, be effectually demolished: even prevent them from be-

* The value of this branch of trade alone, may be the more eafily conceived, when it is confidered, that, in the year 1755, the French imported no lefs than two millions feven hundred thousand pounds of gum; which was fold to us at twelve pounds per hundred.

coming formidable to us hereafter, by filling up 'their ports with old fhips, &c. It would be a work of many years before France could repair these loss, even fuppofing that we fhould reftore their African fettlements : but, if we retain them, the company would, very probably, foon become bankrupt, and the trade of France to the East-Indies intirely annihilated. And to convince you, Sir, of the great utility of the African trade to the French East-India company, only confider the amazing power and extent of trade the French have acquired in the East-Indies within these very few years. It was the famous Colbert that established an East-India company in France: he protected it with his authority, fupported it with his money, and, in fhort, took upon himfelf the whole burden of it. His endeavours were not ufelefs; he left it in a thriving condition. But fome time after his decease, matters took a different turn; it could be no longer made advantageous, no not even equivalent to the charges incurred in carrying it on. Some merchants of St. Maloes took it upon themfelves in 1710, upon giving ten per cent. upon the whole profits they made by the fale of their goods; and it long remained in a languishing condition in their hands. But the company, and that trading to Africa, being affociated together, they have been made to affift each other, or rather Senegal and Goree have fupported both. Before the last war, the French never made any confiderable head in the East-Indies; and, we need not doubt, but that they have role to fuch a height of power there, merely by thefe very African fettlements. If the profits were not fo great from the latter, could the French company maintain a fleet of feven or eight fhips of the line in the Eaft-Indies, to protect their fettlements there *? And do our company even maintain one fhip of the line there? In a word, on the retention of these pretended worthless African fettlements, and our vigilance to prevent any intercourse from France to them, depend the continuance of our fugar trade, and the fure depression of that of France. It is from Africa alone, they have been enabled to become so formidable in the East-Indies, and to monopolize the fugar trade; it is from Africa alone, they can hope to support their fhare of that trade in St. Domingo, Grenade, and Equinoctial France.

As the latter has been recommended as a more proper object of our regard than the French Caribbee Iflands, it may be neceffary to take fome notice of that matter. The author may recollect the objections to our poffeffing not only Senegal and Goree, but likewife Guadalupe, were chiefly founded upon a remonfirance, that the expence of lives, occafioned by the intemperature of the climate, would not allow of it. Therefore his obfervation, that the Ifle of Cayenne, and its appen-" dix Equinoctial France, having but very few inha-" bitants, and those eafily removed, would be an ac-" quifition every way fuitable to our fituation and de-" fires †," was altogether needless. A great advantage we fhould reap by the retention of Martinico and Guadalupe, would be the great addition of fubjects to this

kingdom, as most of the inhabitants would undoubtedly remain there. Nor do I fee that Cavenne and Equinoctial France would be the afylum of many of the refugees from " Jamaica, Barbadoes, &c "". There is not the leaft temptation to invite this refuge. Being fo very near the line, Cayenne is extremely hot and unwholefome, nor is the foil in any wife fertile; for the inhabitants have not only very few commodities of any fort for exportation, but they cannot even produce provisions enough to supply their own wants. The coaft of Equinoctial France is very low, and the country being fubject to frequent inundations, the natives are often obliged to build their huts in trees to avoid being drowned. Is it to be thought we can make this colony turn to greater account than the French? they have been in poffeffion of the country about one hundred and thirty years, and I cannot fay I ever heard of any confiderable exports they made from thence. There is no fear to be apprehended of any great increase of French power from this quarter; they are hemmed in by three very jealous powers, the Portuguese of Brazil, the Dutch of Surinam, and in the inland country, by barbarous and uncivilized tribes of Indians, inveterate enemies to all European fettlers. And, should the French ever afford us occasion for jealousy there, we might foon reduce them; for, though poffeffed of an extent of coaft of about one hundred and forty miles in length, they have not a fingle port all the way. The fecurity of Equinoctial France depends on the Isle of Cayenne; the fecurity of that island depends on the fort, and that fort is very triffing, and thips may anchor close under the fortifications.

I think, Sir, I have already fufficiently proved the neceffity of requiring fuch ceffions from the enemy as I have premifed, both on the principles of trade, and fecurity of our rights and properties; but as many fententious, or rather quibbling objections have been raifed, in order to avoid the imputation of fubterfuge and evafion, I would beg leave to animadvert a little on them. The principles of these objections may be reduced to four:

I. That by retaining them, we fhould flow a fpirit of ambition.

II. That they will be but of little benefit to us.

III. That they are to "be looked upon as given "back to France for a most important confideration, "if they can be the means of extricating the King of "Pruffia from any unforeseen distress," and

IV. That, if the King of Pruffia " fhould extri-" cate himfelf from the dangers that furround him" we fhould " employ them to recover out of the hands " of France those towns of Flanders, gained for the " Auftrian family, by the valour, and at the expence " of England, and which have been fo perfidioufly " facrificed †."

In support of the first objection, we are told by the Remarker, that " the views which every state ought " to have at the making of peace may be reduced into " two: I. To attain those objects for which she went to war; and, 2. To receive fome feafonable indemnification for the charges fhe has incurred in carrying it on." And we are farther given to underftand, that without openly avowing fome views of ambition, no nation can poffibly claim more."

With regard to these political axioms, confidered indifferently, they are very problematical ; but, confidered as relative to each other, certainly very contradictory. The first had better have been omitted, it can't be made a fixed general rule ; for, upon that principle, every flate that goes to war with the view of extending its territories, at the expence of its neighbours, or even of reducing them to her fubjection, has the liberty, nav. ought to attain them, as being the object for which the went to war. The other is a direct contradiction to it. I believe the Remarker would not reject my admiffion of refting the whole upon his fecond axiom, by inferting the words equivalent and fecurity; for, when a ftate goes to war in defence of her right or property, no fecurity can be reafonable unless equivalent, that is, unless it fully fecures that property; nor can any indemnification be reasonable, unless full satisfaction is made for the charges incurred in carrying it on. The Remarker afks, that " if France, influenced by a dread " of exertion of the British power, had given up Nova " Scotia, with its ancient and true boundaries, had de-" molifhed their fort in the province of New York, " had removed themfelves from the Ohio, and renounced " all claim to that territory; and that, on these con-" ceffions, the ministry had then ceased from hoftilities, " without requiring, or even claiming Canada, whether se we

" we fhould have had a treacherous and delufive peace." No doubt, these were terms, that so far from meeting with a refufal, would have been greedily accepted ; but let me add, that they were terms we had a right to demand, upon a double confideration ; first, as being ftipulated in former treaties; and, fecondly, as rightfully belonging to us. But wherefore can these reftitutions by France (for they can be called by no other name) be the ne plus ultra of our demands? Does not the different state of affairs at present require a different confideration than they did at the beginning of the war? After having been obliged to enter into a tedious. bloody, and expensive war, to recover those rights. muft it not be both reasonable and just to require a full indemnification, as well as a full fecurity, for the charges incurred in fupporting those rights; and likewife the charges occafioned by the unnatural extent of fuch war. even without reflecting on the perfidy and ambition of France, the rivalihip between us for superiority, and the neceffity of curbing their power to give us that fuperiority.

As the Remarker's moderation was modern doctrine, I could wifh, and, I think, it ought to have been, ufhered in with the ufual formalities, either of cuftom to authorize, or fome notable reafons to prove, the neceffity of a change, and the ufe of it for the future. As this has not been done, I am apprehenfive that the Remarker could not invent matter fufficient to fupport his argument, and therefore it must fall to the ground. Among the ancients, it was the cuftom for the victors to proportion their demands according to their fucceffes: P bare fecurity and indemnification were not then the ne plus ultra of moderation : they were terms held in little or no effimation, and that even among the religious fews, and the wife and equitable republican flates of Greece and Rome. Nor, in fact, can I comprehend the meaning of the proposed indemnification, regarding only the charges incurred in carrying on a war, began on the principle of felf-prefervation, it must be very unreasonable, and is therefore applicable to the prefent war between us and France. Can France indemnify us for the loss of the many thousand fellow-fubjects we lament ? Can France indemnify us for the ravages and maffacres perpetrated by her in North America ? Ought not these to bear some weight in respect to indemnification ? Ought not France to indemnify the Hanoverians and Heffians for the ravages committed in their country? Ought the not to indemnify them for the contributions raifed upon them, and the confilcations of their revenue ? And to thew you, Sir, how we may extend the fpirit of this fame word indemnification, which the Remarker fo much harps upon, we need only recollect the treaty of 1701, between Lewis the Fourteenth and his grandfort the Duke of Anjou, whereby Flanders and the Mila. nefe were expressly ceded to the French king, as an indemnification for the charges incurred by him in advancing the Duke of Anjou to the throne of Spain. Whence then proceeds the neceffity of this great change in the maxims of war? and whence this fpirit of reftitution ? Are kings lefs ambitious ? Are they more obfervant of the obligatory ties of good neighbourhood, and their own moft folemn engagements ? No: the devaffation valtation of whole provinces, the demolition of cities. and the maffacre of mankind, are made fubordinate to the caprice of majefty; the groundwork of the moft folemn treaties is intereft and convenience, and they are kept no longer than they answer the base purposes of making them. However, as I was willing to convict myfelf of any error in this refnect, I have made it my bufinefs to confult Machiavel, Grotius, and Puffendorf, authors who have much diffinguished themselves on the matters of policy and war. I fhall not give any quotations from them in opposition to the Remarkers opinion; as it is upon a French principle, I shall content myfelf with fetting forth what two very noted French authors have faid upon this fubject. The celebrated author of l'Efprit des Loix, fpeaking of the right of war, has thefe words ; " The life of government," fays he, is like that of man; the latter has a right to se kill in cafe of natural defence; the former have a " right to wage war for their own prefervation. - In " the cafe of natural defence, I have a right to kill, " becaufe my life is, in refpect to me, what the life of so my antagonist is to him : in the fame manner, a flate " that wages war, is like that of any other being "."

( 01 )

This is all Montesquieu fays of the matter; and, from hence it is evident, that he confiders the right of war as abfolute, and unlimited, without any refervation of the reasonableness of a mere indemnification.

The ingenious M. Vattel treats much more largely and explicitly on this point. Telling us of the right a flate has to fecure itfelf, and to make demands upon the principles of fecurity, he fays, " It is fafeft to prevent the " evil, when it can be done. A nation has a right to " refift an injurious attempt, and to make use of force, " and every honeft means against the power that is ac-" tually engaged in opposition to it, and even to anti-" cipate its machinations, always observing, not to at-" tack it upon vague and uncertain fuspicions, in order " to avoid exposing itself to become an unjust aggref-" for.

"When the evil is done, the fame right of fecurity "authorizes the offended to endeavour to obtain a "compleat reparation, and, if neceffary, to employ force for that purpofe.

"In fhort, the offended has a right to provide for his fecurity for the future, and to punifh the offender, by inflicting upon him a pain capable of deterring him afterwards from the like attempts, and of intimidating those who shall be tempted to imitate him: he may even, if neceffary, put the aggressor out of the condition to injure him. He makes use of his right in all these measures, when guided by reason; and, if any evil results from it to him who lays him under the necessity of acting thus, he can accuse none but his own injustice.

" If then there is any where a nation of a reftlefs and mifchievous difpolition, always ready to injure others, to traverfe their defigns, and to raife domeftic troubles, it is not to be doubted, that all have a right to join, in order to reprefs, chaftife, and put it ever after out of its power to injure them. Such fhould be the juft fruits of the policy which Machiavel " praifes ** praifes in Cæfar Borgia. The conduct followed by ** Philip the Second, king of Spain, was adapted to, ** unite all Europe againft him ; and it was from juft ** reafons, that Henry the Great formed the defign of ** humbling a power, formidable by its forces, and per-** nicious by its maxims *."

If I have recourse to precedents from modern history can I find the fpirit of restitution, or even moderation a prevailing fyftem, or ever adopted by any power? The treaty of Ofnabrug in 1648, between Sweden and the Emperor, is a pattern of the prefent maxims of war, used in respect both to the rights of war and indemnification. By this treaty a ceffion was made to victorious Sweden of all the Hither Pomerania, the Ifle of Rugen, Stetin, and fome other places in the Farther Pomerania, the mouths of the Oder, Wifmar, the Archbishoprick of Bremen, and the Bishoprick of Verden. And what, Sir, was the indemnification made the Elector of Brandebourg, to whom part of Pomerania belonged ? Had he not the archbishoprick of Halberstadt, the Principality of Minden, the county of Hohenstein, and the Archbishoprick of Magdebourg, an indemnification of much greater value and extent than the country taken from him? How came Pruffia repoffeffed of the greatest part of Pomerania? How came Bremen and Verden in the hands of the Danes, and now of his prefent majefty? In fhort, was I to enumerate every treaty of this kind, it would appear there was no flate in the empire, nor no kingdom in Europe, but what has changed its mafter, or had part of its ancient territories taken from it, or others added to it. But the behaviour of France in Europe on this head, within about this century paft, without reflecting on her conduct in America and the Indies, is a fufficient authority for us to begin to adopt this usage ourfelves. Has the not got Alface and Loraine on the fide of Germany; of Artois, the Cambrelis, part of Flanders, Hainault, and Luxemberg on the fide of the Netherlands; and Roufillon, formerly a part of Catalonia, on the fide of Spain ? But, becaufe we have not hitherto taken example from France in this respect, or rather because we have fo egregioufly neglected our own interefts hitherto, is it a reason that we should not for the future ; when a deviation from this conduct is actually the only way to relieve us from that burthenfome debt which the nation groans under, and is the only method to infure us internal peace and tranquillity?

Having already explained myfelf with regard to the point of fecurity, I fhall now confider how far the objects I have before recommended, are confiftent with a reafonable indemnification, according to the Remarker's plan: I am perfwaded they will not even exceed the bounds of that conftruction, without having any weight on the principles of fecurity, and the ufage of other powers. I fhall therefore beg leave to recapitulate fomething of those objects, in order to form an idea of their extent.

I believe, Sir, it will be acknowledged, that, with regard to Louifiana, the French have not the least pretence to it as of right: their settlement was an usurpation on the just claims of the Spaniards of Mexico, and the the English subjects of Carolina and Virginia : for, the not actually inhabited, it was included in the grants to their respective colonies, and always confidered as their property. The French claim of actual pre-occupancy, might as well extend to different parts in South America and the East-Indies, where many large tracts, not poffeffed by the Spaniards, Portuguefe, and Dutch, are looked upon as belonging to them : nor, in fact, is a want of actual poffession in the forming foreign colonies, ever confidered as an impeachment of the claim. The retention of that country cannot be confidered as given up to us by way of indemnification : by retaining it, we only remove them from their encroachments, and require the quiet poffession of our own, which we have found by experience it would be dangerous for them to keep any longer.

I believe, Sir, it will be likewife acknowledged, that France, does not claim any title to Cape Breton, St. John, &c. as appertaining to Canada, or because they are fettled there: they rather do it by a folemn permission from us. Therefore, I apprehend, the ceffion of Canada would not give us the fole property in those islands, and the fifhery, unless particularly specified in an article of a future treaty; and, if Canada is restored, would not fuch a demand feem much more reafonable, and be more eafily complied with? But, in this cafe, I think, Sir, we have an undoubted right, and very fufficient reasons to exclude France from these iflands and the fifthery. Before the treaty of Utrecht. the French never fettled Cape Breton, which was always confidered as belonging to us; but, being by that treaty treaty obliged to cede Nova Scotia and Newfoundland : which they had endeavoured to conquer, and thereby monopolize the fifthery to themfelves, they were fuffered to poffefs Cape Breton, St. John, &c. merely for conveniency of carrying on a fhare in the fifnery. But it was with the utmost difficulty the then ministry gave France even that liberty. In the preliminaries delivered. to M. Mefnager, it was particularly infifted on, that France fhould not refort to it upon, any pretence whatfoever; but, as France made great protestations of her good faith, and honeft intentions, the feverity of that article was thereupon mitigated. However, in order to keep her from every pretence for encroachments on Newfoundland and the coaft of Nova Scotia, the had liberty given her to fettle Cape Breton and the other fmaller islands; and this was the rather done, as those iflands were reputedly fo barren and woody, that they were not thought worth fettling by us.

With refpect to the fiftery, France originally paid a duty of five per cent. to England for the bare liberty of reforting to it, a certain acknowledgment of our having an exclusive right to that branch of trade: their right therefore, as well to Cape Breton and the other fmaller iflands in the mouth of the River St. Laurence, as to the fiftery, can arife only from permiffion, or, at moff; a mere conditional grant. If then the intent of thefe privileges, or grants, which ever you pleafe to term them, have been converted to different purpofes, and made to act principally againft ourfelves, fo as to render even our independence, as a nation, very precarious; muft it not be both reafonable and juft to reaffume the fole property? Can it be confidered in any other light than than the revocation of privileges, which have become forfeited from the very nature and intent of their grant?

By reftoring Canada, we fhould therefore have a moft evident balance in our favour on the fide of North America, and a greater right to infift on an indemnification from another guarter: and this, Sir, I have referred to the French Sugar Islands and African fettlements, as being fuch as would prove of the greateft detriment to the French, and the greatest benefit to us. Much has been faid by the Remarker upon the fufficiency of the fingle island of Guadalupe in this respect, but I think with very little reafon and propriety. We are told by that gentleman, that " without effimating the land, " the houses, the works, and the goods in the island, " the flaves, at the loweft valuation, are worth up-" wards of one million, two hundred and fifty thou-" fand pounds fterling." But what is all this to the purpose ? Had the Remarker seen the articles of capitulation to the inhabitants of that island, his memory muft have been very defective, or himfelf guilty of great partiality : if he had not feen thefe articles, he ought to have done it, before he took upon himfelf to talk fo roundly. He will excuse my freedom, when he finds, that if Guadalupe is ceded to us at a peace, this very " land, the houfes, works, and goods" are fubject to be fold as private property to their fulleft value; for, not only all English subjects are absolutely excluded, from having a poffeffion in the ifland during the war, but it is particularly expressed in the 11th article of the capitulation, that " if at the peace the ifland fhould be ceded

" to the King of Great Britain, then fuch of the inha-" bitants, as do not chuse to live under the English " government, fhall be permitted to fell their poffef-" fions, moveable and immoveable, and retire where-" ever they pleafe, for which purpose a reasonable time " fhall be allowed ;" only with this refervation, of difpofing of them " to none but English subjects." From hence it is evident, that before any fubject of England gets a poffeilion, or fettlement in that island, even fuppofing it should be ceded to us at a future peace, he muft pay an ample and full confideration for it to the French owner; and, as most of our own fugar fettlements are worn out with culture, and those of Guadalupe are reputedly fo fertile, we need not doubt, but those inhabitants who chuse to remove, will do it with as much advantage to themfelves as they can. As matters fland upon this bottom, I do not fee the least pretence for estimating the value, or taking the least account of the " land, houfes, works," or " goods." They are vefted in their former owners, and are to remain fo, unlefs alienated by a legal purchafe; and the English must pay the usual price for the commodities imported from thence into England, in common with those of our own islands. Was the fole property of the " land, houfes, works, and goods" in the ifland, vefted in the crown of France, and the inhabitants, upon a ceffion to England, liable to be fent off the island without any fatisfaction for their poffeffions, and the money, raifed upon the fale of fuch poffeffions, was to be applied in discharge of any national debt, or incumbrance, then I grant the argument would hold; but at prefent prefent it is intirely out of the queffion : private property in Guadalupe cannot be of any emolument to the public in England; the only advantage to be received from it, by way of indemnification, will be merely from the encreafe of the revenue, and the clear gains of the Britifh merchant : and, in this light, I will venture to affirm, it will not indemnify us for the grants of one fingle year, much lefs of the whole war.

But I cannot help observing here, that the Remarker was fo warm for a moderation, and fo chagrined at what he confidered as an affront offered to France, that he was not only apt to forget himfelf in many other refpects than this, but also feemed to have an inclination to affront England. The demolition of the fortifications of Dunkink by France, " as a preliminary proof of " her fincerity in " an " enfuing negociation *, " could not be an " idea " fo " altogether extravagant," nor fo " little juftified by precedent or reafon" as the Remarker feemed to imagine : if it had, there was fill an effectual alternative proposed by the means of " hof-" tages." But the great ambition and treachery of France is certainly a fufficient " reafon" for infifting on this method of humiliation, and flowing them, that they must pay a better regard to treaties for the future. Had we not already feen two treaties bafely violated? and had we the least reason to suppose, that France would be more punctual in the performance of her future engagements than the had been heretofore ? Nor, indeed, can I in the least conceive, how the execution of a former flipulation can be deemed an affront to any nation. But, if the demolition of Dunkirk, previous to a negociation, had not been a forfeiture due to a former flipulation entered into by France, we were fill justified in making fuch a demand by precedent; nor could fuch a demand without this " precedent" have come under the least denomination of an affront, comparatively with what France has received heretofore. The Remarker muft know what infolence was used by two Dutch deputies to ministers from France, in a flation wherein every power pay them refpect as reprefentatives of majefty. If the latter barely mentioned the impoffibility of complying with a particular demand, they were told with an air, and in a tone of authority and contempt, that there were but two methods to bring obstinate people to terms, perfuation or conftraint ; and that, if the former would not influence the French king to a compliance, they fhould only oblige him to it by the latter : and this was behaviour and language, at a time, when the French king "even con-" fented to execute before the peace was figned, the " most rigorous articles of a plan drawn up by his ene-46 mies; for inflance, those of delivering into their " hands fuch a number of ftrong towns, which they " were to poffels in full property ; of entrufting them " with fome more as pledges, and a fecurity of perform-. se ing his word ; of demolifhing others under the no-" tion of their giving umbrage and apprehenfion to " those very enemies, who pretended to prefcribe the " law, and dictated the terms of a treaty ; which" French king himfelf had reafon to believe, " they had no in-" tention to conclude "," Can any thing be more exprefive of the fubmiffion of France to the authority of their conquerors, who demanded the execution of many articles as preliminaries; the most inconfiderable of which was much more confiderable than this demolition of the fortifications of Dunkirk ? But the above terms were not the only " preliminaries of peace," nor the only mortification to French pride. To humble France. and lay a greater check on her future growth of power, the deputies infifted on the refervation of making ulterior demands, and that France fhould fubmit to those demands, even after the figning of the preliminaries, and a ceffation of arms, nay, it was even deemed infolent in the French ministers to request an explanation of the nature and extent of those demands : " it was sufficient " that it was injurious to France, and diminished the " king's power +." In fhort, Sir, were not every one of these articles offered on the part of France, fo many " preliminaries to the preliminaries of peace :" for they were not to be the definitive terms of the peace, but merely " as pledges, and a fecurity of fubmitting to " others ?" It is true, the States had no fmall reafon for their inveteracy against France: they had experienced her oppreffive defigns and haughtinefs in the preceding wars of 1672 and 1688, when they had used their utmost to prevent a rupture. It would be too tedious to recollect the moderate views of France, with regard to the former of these wars, wherein the French monarch acted with all the marks of arrogance and tyranny, against a people who had just made themfelves diffinguished in the eyes of all Europe, by a glorious ftruggle for religion and liberty against the arbitrary power of Spain for eighty years together. Therefore. Sir. the States, in making the ulage of France the model of her own, was but acting upon the principle of retaliation; a principle, Sir, eftablished by the law of Nature, and the law of nations; a principle that can never be deemed an infringement of justice and moderation, nor will ever come under the denomination of tyrandy or ambition, when made use of to curb an overgrown power; and a principle, Sir, that fingly and alone would give us fufficient " reafon ", and fufficient right to inflict the most fevere forms to humble French pride, and debilitate French power. Have they not carried on their malicious defigns against us to greater excess than ever they did against the States ? Have they not hired affaffins to kill our kings, and caufed frequent tumults and rebellions in the heart of our country ? Have they not carried devastation into our most fertile colonies? and, in fhort, what have they not perpetrated in their efforts to reduce us to a flate of beggary and fervitude ? Have they not likewife encouraged pretenders to the throne of this kingdom, contrary to their most folemn engagements? Do they not even still fupport fuch pretenders, and actually fupply them with money. with a view to make them tools fubfervient to their future fchemes? If we have hitherto evaded their mares, if they have not been able to make fuch an impression on us, as they did on the Dutch in the war of 1672, who are we to thank; not their good intentions and efforts, but the kind influence of Heaven, which infpired us with that precaution, and enabled us to make that refiftance which have hitherto put it in our power to avoid the impending wreck, and which now lays before us the glorious opportunity of effectually preventing it hereafter?

Not, Sir, that I would from hence infer, that this demolition of the fortifications of Dunkirk previous to a negociation, or even posterior to a pacification, is an object fo very important as fome have been induced to believe: my fole intention is to fhow, that it would not be fo very unreafonable.

I admit the circumftances of this war are fomething different from that wherein the Dutch made fuch demands on France: but then this difference is not fo Superlatively great, nor our superiority to excessively little, as to require fuch a vaft change and diminution. It is true, France was then opposed by a confederacy of powers, but fuch a confederacy that was latterly greatly divided; each affociate being, in the terms to France, for making every thing to his own advantage. Not only this, but the great damage done to our trade by the enemies privateers, the diffentions in England, the mifcarriage of the expedition to Canada under Brigadier Hill, the apprehenfions of the defect of Portugal, Savoy, and fome of the contingents of the empire, the former of which power had then lately fuffained an immenfe lofs by an attack made by a French fquadron at St. Salvador, the capital of the Brazils; and particularly, the vast expences of a war, which the parliament had declared impracticable, and the death of the emperor Jofeph, without any other heir than Prince Charles. whereby the chief object of the war, the prevention of an union of the French and Spanish monarchies, was likely to become equally dangerous by a union of the Spanifh

Spanish monarchy with that of Germany, in a manner rendered a peace absolutely necessary.

Let us now caft an eye on the prefent war. Here, indeed, we fee France at the head of a confederacy, but fuch a one, as is without money, and, I had amoft faid. without men; and a confederacy, that has already exerted their utmost efforts to very little effect. And there are two very fubftantial reafons why France cannot extend the war, as fhe did then, as lately fuggefted. Ift. It is not fo confiftent with her true interest, by reafor of the largeness of her foreign colonies, and the extent of her trade from thence to an European market ; forif France cannot keep up her correspondence with foreign countries, nor transport her commodities to her correspondents or factors there, fuch correspondents must defert their factories, or be obliged to have recourfe to other powers that can fupply them. Holland, nav. England might not profit a little from this their difficulty. By the protection given by our fleets to the navigation of the merchant fhips, they would, no doubt, ufe their utmost endeavours to supplant the French, and introduce our own manufactures. 2dly, The allies of France being most of them mercenaries, and the others unable to fupport the neceffary expences of the war themfelves, the whole burden falls on France. Will the Ruffians, will the Swedes, will the Saxons, will the Wirtemburghers act without the payment of their fublidies? Will the Ottoman court look with unconcern upon the motions of Ruffia and Auftria, if France Suspends her largeffes, when such large offers may be made on the part of Great Britain and Pruffia ? Muft not therefore the

the neceffary remittances to preferve a fuperior intereft among those powers, occasion a much greater demand for money in France, than at a time when she fought upon her own bottom, and was, latterly, much affisted by the measures of Spain? The extent of the French trade to their foreign colonies, and among the several powers of Europe, must likewise have produced a confiderable amount to the French revenue, without being felt among the inhabitants: of course the loss of that addition to the revenue, by the obstruction of their commerce, must render other taxes more neceffary and more burthensome. We may therefore affure ourselves, that if France is inclined to hearken to peace, when at the head of such an alliance, it is from her incapacity to continue the war. Great quantities of plate have the head of luch an alliance, it is from her incapacity to continue the war. Great quantities of plate have been already melted into fpecie in that kingdom : let the war go on a little longer, and the next thing we fhall hear done, will probably be the raifing the dixmes of the eftates. In fhort, Sir, we had better carry on the war with vigour a year or two longer, than have another at the end of eight or ten years, which will be the certain confequence, if we do not effectually diffrefs France now we have it in our power. Let us not difcard the glorious opportunity of giving a lafting peace to ourfelves and all Europe, when it fo readily offers; an " opportunity," Sir, per-" haps the only one, we fhall ever have of putting " it out of the power of France to violate its faith for " the future *."

T'he

The reafonable retention of these French posses and the expediency of continuing the war, being premised, let us now confider the second objection as to their fufficiency, for us.

I have already explained myfelf upon our views in North-America, the next that comes under my confideration, is the objection made to retaining the French Sugar Islands. With regard to our possession of Guadalupe, we have been told, " That a country fully in-" habited by any nation, is no proper pofferfion for " another of different manners, language, and reli-" gion *." Now, I fhould be glad to know from the author, why this objection is not equally cogent against Canada, where the inhabitants are fo remarkably addicted to bigotry and fuperftition, and where, under an English government, they are liable to be reduced to the utmoft infignificancy and poverty? Speaking of the population of Canada but a few lines before, the fame author fays, " many" (of the inhabitants) " will " chuse to remove, if they can be allowed to fell their " lands, improvements, and effects" (which they are fince authorized to do by the capitulation ; ) and that " the " reft will in lefs than half a century from the crowds " of English fettling round and among them, be blend-" ed and incorporated with our people both in lan-" guage and manners." This fuppofition, I think, Sir, ought to have an equal influence in favour of Guadalupe, where every thing is infinitely more favourable to indulge fuch an expectation. But the candid gentleman is here guilty of great partiality : he does not in the leaft controvert, or express a doubt of the affertion of the Remarker, that "the hand of government" was " heavy on the Protestants of France:" that " many " of these people" were " already established in this " ifland, and" had " connections of every kind with " those of their own at home; and" that might " we " not hope and expect that this" might " be an in-" ducement to many others to make this their retreat. " and that the colony " might " be enriched by them." he omits taking any notice of these matters, as if they had never been mentioned. But there is fomething farther. I would beg leave to addrefs to that gentleman and his brother advocates on the fame fcore. Let them enquire how many there are of English and Dutch extraction, fettled in the French Sugar Islands, particularly with regard to the latter; becaufe, I have heard, that the expulsion of the Dutch from Brazil by the Portuguese in 1640, contributed, in no fmall measure, to their eftablishment. These are not the only reasons why we may expect the prefent inhabitants of Martinico and Guadalupe, if those islands should be ceded to us, to remain there; there is another argument still more ftrong and tempting. Brandy being the produce of France, the diffilling the melaffes of fugar was ftrongly prohibited by the French government, whereby the inhabitants of their islands fuffained a great lofs, for the article of rum alone, made from the melaffes, has been acknowledged to defray the charges of cultivating and producing the fugar; and, had not the French governors by virtue of a difpenfatory power they have in their commiffions, fuffered the inhabitants to procure a vent for their melaffes among our people of North America, they could never have underfold us in the fugar trade, as they have done between thirty and forty per cent. cheaper. A trade fo prejudicial to our own fugar planters, caufed great clamours from them; the legislature interfered, but that only tended to convince us, that " men will be tempted to fmuggle whenever " the profit furpafies the rifk; and that rifk confifts lefs -" in the punifhment, than in the means of eluding all " perquifitions." Do not our colonies, even now, in the time of open war, carry on a very extensive trade with the French islands in ships under the denomination of flags of truce? By fuch intercourfe as this, the French have been familiarized to us, and the great gains they will receive by this large and uncontrouled branch of trade, will be fo great, that, as I have faid before, that confideration would be fufficient of itfelf to reconcile the most zealous enthusiasts to our government. But then we are told, that it will be impossible to prevent a trade with France, and that even " fuppofing we can ef-" fectually " do this, " one hundred thousand pounds " will fupply them with British manufactures; and " that the other two hundred thousand pounds will be " fpent in France in the education of their children, " and fupport of themfelves, or elfe to be laid up there, " where they will always think their home to be "." This, Sir, feems to be the principal objection urged against retaining Guadalupe, and, I own, would have great weight with me, if I conceived it to be as reprefented ; but, as 'I do not coincide with the gentleman upon the construction of the article of the capitulation to the inhabitants, upon which he founds this argument. I will prefently give him my reafons why I differ from him in this point. The 13th article of the capitulation runs thus, " The inhabitants shall have li-" berty to fend their children to be educated in France. and to fend for them back, and to make remittance " to them whilft there." Now it is certain, the full fenfe of the article is very vague and indeterminate, but we are not from thence to infer the propriety of every impertinent fuggeftion. General words are defective of themsclves, if we credit the law of reason, nay, common fense, which tells us, Generale nibil certi implicat. If this maxim is ever regarded, it ought to be more particularly fo in the prefent. cafe. True, there is an implied infinity ; but infiity in a matter, that must, from the nature of things, be temporary and variable, is very abfurd .- An argument alone fuffi-· cient to overturn the gentleman's opinion : but not to infift merely on that, let us confider the circumftances of the cafe. Had the inhabitants entertained the leaft expectations (though ever fo diftant) of enjoying fuch an extraordinary privilege under an English government; had they in the least fuspected that they could make fuch a demand confistent with the authority of our commanding officers, would they not have intimated their inclinations more openly ? If the implication was meant to extend ad infinitum, would not the answer have been more particular and explicit? But, could the com-

commissions of our officers give them fuch an unlimited authority ? Could they have a licence given them to fettle the jurifdiction and civil polity of that island ad infinitum? No Sir, they certainly could not; their commiffions could not extend fo far: they could make no change in the fyftem of government; they could not grant any immunity or indulgence, that was not limited either by time, or condition. Thus we fee all the articles that have a tendency this way, are granted with a refervation, or actually referred to the pleafure of his majefty. Had fuch a privilege been even fufpected to extend fo far, and was fo readily granted, need we doubt that the modeft Marquis de Vaudreuil would have held his filence on that head, when he had fuch an excellent example ? I am convinced therefore, that this privilege was intended to extend no farther than the continuance of this war: and even if it had, we may reafonably compute, that not one half of the inhabitants would fend their children to be educated in France, in a religion fo different from their own, and in a country whence their forefathers had been expelled by a religious perfecution.

I admit, that the poffeffion of Guadalupe alone will flop the privateering bufine's but little *"; the French, being ftill in poffeffion of the large, flrong, and convenient island Martinico, would have it in their power to annoy us as much as ever: an affertion we have already experienced the truth of. But then, I do not think, that " our obtaining poffeffion of all the Caribbees, would be more than a temporary benefit *: " it is a very ridiculous argument, and the reafon given for it much the fame, viz. " becaufe it would neceffarily foon " fill the French part of Hifpaniola with French inha-" bitants, and thereby make it five times more valuable " in time of peace, and little lefs than impregnable " in time of war: and would probably end, in a few " years, in the uniting the whole of that great and fer-" " tile iffand under a French government ; their own " fhare of which " we are told, a few a lines after." " would, if well cultivated, grow more fugar than is " now grown in all their Weft-India islands t." I will not caft fuch a reflection on the author's knowledge to doubt he finds himfelf convinced of his error in these points. He must know, Sir, that France, tho' poffeffed of all the Caribbees, would encreafe her ftrength, as much as poffible, in Hispaniola, as it gives her fo great a command of the windward paffage, and they find their fettlements prove fo very beneficial to them, both by their private intercourfe with the fubjects of Spain, and the produce of their lands; more efpecially as the Spanish government is not fo well affected to them as formerly : he must know, Sir, that the French part of Hispaniola is separated on the land fide from that belonging to Spain, by a barrier of mountains. and that they have already poffeffed themfelves of the whole extent of the coaft they lay claim to : he muft know, Sir, that the prohibitions of all intercourfe between the two fettlements are very great, and encreafe every day: he must know what large improvements the French have made, what an additional number of inhabitants they have received within thefe few years, and that they have already made greater exports of fugar and other commodities annually from thence, than from all their Weft-India iflands put together *.

That the French " cannot at prefent make war " with England, without exposing those advantages " while divided among the numerous islands they now " have, much more than they would, were they pof-" feffed of St. Domingo only †," though it feems fo

* The following extract of the imports into France from their Weft-India fettlements for the year 1755, (the year before this war) will ferve to convince us of the truth of this, and likewife fet aright the enormous accounts that have been published of the value of the French Sugar Islands, Guadalupe alone being faid to produce annually near fifty thousand hogsheads of fugar.

clear to the author, is not fo with me. Their trade is certainly more extensive : but then, the more ports they have, the greater opportunity they have of efcaping our cruizers, and the more fo in thefe feas, where the winds and currents render it fo difficult to get up with them. Our own trade likewife must be much more exposed to the enemy. And I am fo far convinced of the vaft advantages we should receive from a pofferfion of all the Caribbees, that I think no ftone ought to be left unturned to fecure that defirable object : and, in order to facilitate this scheme, it is absolutely requisite, as I have faid before, that our right to the Neutral Islands should be fully confirmed at the peace: The poffeffion of Martinico and Guadalupe would otherwife be of very little benefit to us; as the enemy would foon render themfelves as formidable as ever from these iflands.

If the French power in Hispaniola is at prefent for much to be dreaded, and there is fo much to be apprehended from their future growth, is it not a most cogent reafon for reftraining them among the Caribbees. fince we cannot do it there? And this reftraint is the more neceffary, as it has been long fuspected, that the French have an eye on our invaluable island Jamaica: and their being fo remarkably tenacious of their pretenfions to the Caribbees, and fortifying! themfelves there fo ftrongly, tell us, that they have a view, not only of conquering Jamaica, but even entirely excluding us from the fugar trade. Self-prefervation therefore, requires that we fhould exert our utmost to prevent fuch dangerous defigns. And the great advantage of this poffeffion of all the Caribbees would be the S fooner fooner felt, as we fhould find ourfelves relieved from the great expence and lofs of fubjects, entailed upon the nation, by keeping fuch a numerous fleet among those islands. As the French fhips, in going to their ports in Hispaniola must necefiarily pass fome of the Caribbees, a few small cruizers about those islands, affisted by the privateers, would give a pretty good account of them; and those that should escape there, would ftill run a greater hazard before they got into the ports they were bound to, in Hispaniola, which might be easily blocked up by the fleet, we should be able to keep at Jamaica.

With regard to the third objection, the fuccefs of his Pruffian Majefty renders it unneceffary. The laft glorious victory obtained by that monarch feems once more to have eftablished him; his good genus still does, and ftill may triumph over the malevolence of his enemies; but if, contrary to the general wifhes, he fhould be obliged to fubmit, can it be reasonable, can it be neceffary, to expect, that England should facrifice her conquefts made from France to reinftate him? We have already gone farther than was confiftent with prudence, the principles of the war, and even your own promises, Sir; we have paid him an immense annual tribute, or fubfidy, no matter which, to enable him, according to the letter of the treaty, to "keep up and augment his forces," when fuch augmentation has not been made, and our neceffities have been much more preffing and neglected; we have prodigally thrown away the lives of our countrymen in his caufe; I fay in his caufe, Sir, otherwife the convention of Clofter-Severn

Severn had never been broke. Let us not then carry extremities still farther ; let not a blind partiality precipitate us into greater extravagances: the liberties of Germany, do not, cannot require that we fhould build the foundation of his eftablishment upon the ruins of our own. I am the more furprized at this propofal, as coming from him who fo much laments the " vaft load " of taxes and neceffities of " a " war" which he own. " have forced us to an annual expence, unknown to " former times, and which will almost be incredible to " pofterity. " Ought we not rather to do everything in our power to diminish that " vaft load of taxes", and to prevent the melancholy caufes of it hereafter ? Can the giving up to France her North American encroachments, her Sugar Islands, or African fettlements tend to this purpose? Is there not, on the contrary, the greateft reason to apprehend the would, by either of them, quickly recover her former ftrength, and foon oblige us to fupport another war equally burthenfome and extenfive, after we had, by our æconomy, rendered the effects of this lefs grievous? Nor in fact do I fee what foundation there is for fuch a propofal, nor that it would answer the end. I am perfuaded, that upon a depreffion of the King of Pruffia, were we even, in hopes to extricate him, to purchase the intervention and good offices of France, at ever fo dear a price, they would have but little effect. And wherefore fhould we pay, homage to, or feek an alliance with France in a matter which it is her interest to pursue, without either of these unnecessary temptations? for can it be in any degree the true intereft of France, either to humble the power of Ruffia, or aggrandize that of Auftria? The independency of Germany, a confquence of its fuperiority over France, depends on a union of the feveral states under one head. If, therefore, a rival is raifed in the empire, if the power of that rival is founded on the humiliation, or encroachments on the authority of the other, they will both entertain a mutual jealoufy of each other, and opposition will be the reigning principle of their measures ; the one to recover its loft rights, and the other to maintain its new acquired power. If the States take different parts in this division, must it not weaken the whole body, and render it more fufceptible of a conquest by a powerful invader? It has, therefore, been always thought, and fill will be thought good policy by the French, to promote fuch a division in the empire. Have they not hitherto always encouraged the flightest pretentions of an upftart ftate to encounter the imperial authority? Do they not now pay fubfidies to feveral of the electors ? Do they not keep their troops in pay as auxiliaries, and is it not, with a view to employ them against their neighbours, and thereby debilitate the power of the whole ? But if France finds that, now the has effectually gained her ends, by feeing two powerful rivals in the empire ever ready to thwart each other, the only way to recover her colonies, is by being for the prefent a little remifs in working them up to deftroy each other effectually, can we be fo weak to imagine the will prefer her connections with the house of Auftria, which, in fact, are repugnant to her former mer policy, and prejudicial to her most darling interests, rather than accept of peace from a victorious enemy, and engage in a fystem, which is even now greatly to her advantage to purfue? And admitting, Sir, that France should for the prefent engage in this our fystem, can any one fay it will be any hindrance to her making another general confusion hereafter?

But, as I faid before, I think the intervention of France to reinftate the king of Pruffia would be to no effect? Can we be fo weak to fuppofe, that the empresses of Ruffia and Auftria, and the King of Poland, as Elector of Saxony, would forego the long-wifh'd-for opportunity of plucking his feathers? Would they not divide the fpoil as avowedly confessed by treaties, notwithflanding the defection and utmost displeasure of France? Befides, has not France, by her acceffion to thefe treaties, become a principal in the confederacy? And would not fuch intervention be a deviation from the caufe of the alliance, and the declared motives of entering the empire? But, let us suppose (argumenti gratia) that we could fo far prevail with France as to caufe her defection from the confederacy, and give her affiftance in conjunction with us to reinstate him, could we receive any relief in the end by it? Could France, after being reduced to fo low an ebb by the fatalities of this war, enter into another against three fuch great powers? Could fhe make any great impression against them vi et armis? Certainly not; our intention, in making an alliance with France, would be therefore loft, and many might be the evils refulting from this fyftem. It was our alliance with France that first raised her to be a naval power; let us not then, in the name of common fenfe, fenfe, when we are bewailing thefe our former errors, plunge ourfelves into others more inexcufable. The treaties between the King of Pruffia and us, engage that neither party fhould make a feparate peace; if then. from the neceffity of his circumftances he fhould be obliged to fubmit to that extremity, who is it that breaks the compact? Are we not at liberty to chufe whether we will be a party to fuch feparate peace or not? The reduction of H---r would certainly be the confequence of that of the King of Pruffia: but where can be the least pretence for giving up our conquests to redeem that e-----te? The retention of this country by France has been fo clearly demonstrated, as being inconfiftent with the conflitution of the empire, as guarantee of the treaty of Westphalia, and even the impoffibility of her holding it by reafon of its being feparated from France by feveral intermediate flates, that I believe there is no farther occafion for enlarging on that head. But, fuppofe that France fhould make a conqueft of H----r, what hurt would a temporary poffeffion be to the inhabitants of that e-----te, or England? If, out of revenge to the perfeverance of our measures, France should cause the e------te to be ravaged, might we not retaliate the fame usage on their coafts and foreign colonies? Would not the bare apprehenfions of fuch a return be sufficient to overawe France from this extremity ? Befides, Sir, our feeming neglect of H-r would fhow France, that Great Britain will not always forego her national concerns to preferve that e----te in tranquillity; and that, though we can take up arms in defence of the liberties of the empire, we

we can lay them afide, when they interfere with our national honour and welfare; it will likewife open the eyes of the infatuated Auftrians; it will flow them, that, if they fight against themselves and common sense, they are not always to expect Great Britain to take part with them, at the great expense of the lives of her subjects, and to purchase a peace for them, at the greater expense of the treasures.

The fourth objection is of the fame piece with the foregoing; and therefore, I think, is already partly answered, if all occasion of starting the subject had not been removed before. On the 28th of November, 1757, Major-general Yorke prefented a memorial on this fubject to the States-General, whereby it appears, that by the 14th article of the treaty of Utrecht, figned April 11, 1713, " It is agreed, that no province, fort, " town, or city of the Netherlands, or of those which " are given up by his Catholic Majefty, shall ever be « ceded, transferred, or given, or fhall ever devolve " to the crown of France, or any prince, or princefs " of the house or line of France, either by virtue of any " gift, exchange, marriage contract, fucceffion by " will, or by any other title whatfoever, to the power " and authority of the moft Chriftian King, or of any " prince or princess of the house or line of France." ----And by the fame memorial it is flated, that " in the " barrier treaty, those very flipulations are repeated in * the first article. His Imperial and Catholic Majesty " promifes and engages, that no province, city, town. " fortrefs, or territory of the faid country, fhall be * ceded, transferred, given, or devolve to the crown of " France,

" France, or to any other but the fucceffor of the "German dominions of the house of Austria, either by " donation, fale, exchange, marriage contract, heri-" tage, or testamentary succession, nor under any other " pretext whatfoever; fo that no province, town, or " fortrefs, or territory of the faid Netherlands, shall " ever be fubject to any other prince but to the fuccef-" for of the flates of the House of Auftria alone, except " what has been yielded by the prefent treaty to the " faid lords the States-General."- On the 25th of Tanuary following, Count d'Affry the French minifter, prefented a memorial in answer to these representations, and therein is the following paragraph ; " It is there-" fore, by express command of the king my mafter, " that I declare to your High Mightineffes, that the " introduction of French garrifons into Offend and " Nieuport, had no other motive than what I have just " mentioned in this memorial, (the Empress Queen's " being under an abfolute neceffity of employing all her " forces to defend her hereditary dominions in Ger-" many.) That his majefty's troops shall remain there se only to the end of the prefent war: and that they " fhall even march out fooner, if the emprefs queen " fhall defire it; and that they fhall march out the very " moment that the shall intrust the guard of those two se places to her own troops." Now, what can be more fignificant and expressive than the terms of these flipulations, both on the part of the emprefs-queen, and the French king ; and what more fpecious and obligatory than the promifes contained in d'Affry's memorial ? Cari we think that the empress queen would give up the whole com-

command of Flanders, and the great emolument the receives from their being ports open to trading fhips, if the could poffibly avoid it ? If the had ever made any private contract with France for the fale of those places; would the not be glad to evade the executive part of fuch contract? Is the not, in het private and public character, faid to run all lengths to fatisfy her infatiable luft of power and avarice? therefore; if France fhould retain those places in opposition to her remonstrances, would not England, Holland, and the German flates, all join to take them by main force ? But, if the empress queen should fuffer herself to be prevailed upon to acknowledge them as French property, and we fhould be inclined, by proffituting our own acquifitions; to redeem them out of the hands of France, what fecurity could the empress queen give, what foundation could we have to hope, that she would not play the fool again? If both the and the French king break through fuch folemn and explicit compacts, will they not break thro' iny thing ? And what weight could we put in the faith of majefty, and the tenor of treaties; when we have feen them to basely perverted, and to perfidiously violated? Would not our kindnefs to her be rather an inducement for her to repeat her folly over again? It woulds in fact, be putting fo much clear money in her pocket, and fhe might, by the fame rule, mortgage them at pleafure; and will it be faid, Sir, that we fhall not have as much occasion for redeeming them hereafter, as we have at prefent ? I will own, I do not " tremble se at the profpect of feeing Newport and Oftend be-" come French property :" I do not think " a Britifh ee administration" need fo much precaution, to e ufe " their utmost endeavours to prevent this at the peace"." Rather let us admire the pleafing opportunity of mortifying our very good allies the Dutch, as well as the Auftrians, and of fhowing them that we can retain a juft idea of their " ingratitude :" let us now, Sir, for once begin to " learn to prefer our own intereft to that ee of others, and to proportion our expences on the " continent to the immediate exigencies of our own " country :" let us demonstrate to all Europe a generous refentment of their injurious treatment of a people, who gave them liberty and power, even that power, which we now would cherifh, and which they as unworthily profitute to fordid avarice and ambition : let us, Sir, for once evince, that we have an adm-----n proof against a German cabal, and who will not give room to another count Gallas to tell us, we " have ac-" quired a pennyworth of glory, which the empress " queen would buy if the had money enough." If there fhould be this neceffity (which I am at a loss to conceive) of redeeming Oftend and Newport, who is the most interested to do it, England or Holland ? Can the poffeffion of Offend and Newport hurt the former more than Dunkirk has done? And, if they could, might they not be conftantly blocked up by a fingle frigate ? And I will venture to hazard an opinion, Sir, that, notwithstanding the mighty things faid of Dunkirk, our trade has not fuffered in any proportion by the privateers of that port, as by those of St. Maloes, or Bayonne. The vicinity of Oftend and Newport to the territories of Holland, would enable France to pour in upon the Dutch both by land and fea; if then they must be redeemed, let Mynheer draw his purfe-ftrings; he is the most likely to fuffer. I should even be glad to fee a treaty made with France, wherein the names of Auftria and Holland, and every thing that has relation to them were omitted : fuch a treaty would be truly Britifh. Let those good allies fish for themselves; it will not be a little ferviceable to us; they will learn to prize our friendship the better for the future. And fuch a treaty would not, in fact, be of any bad confequence to those powers; for, by retaining the French colonies, and keeping a fuperiority over their navy, we fhould be ever able to command refpect from France, and give the neceffary protection to our allies, and the independency of the Germanic conflitution.

Thus far, Sir, have I gone in purfuance of my promife; but, before I conclude, there is fomething more remains, the attempts on Louifiana and Martinico, objects that require your most particular and immediate attention, before we "fend fome thousands more of our "national troops" and recall our troops in Canada "to "contribute to another victory in G—y *." It is full time to put in execution the schemes against those places, if ever intended: it is already the full feason to order, to expedite, the proper stores and forces to be ready to act early in the Spring. If dispatch was used,

we might probably have fuch fuccefs as would enable the greater part of the forces on those fervices, to come home time enough to fupply the place of others to be fent to this fame G-y, if it fhould be found fo very effentially neceffary. Guadalupe capitulated the latter end of April, and, it is very probable, neither Louifiana, hor Martinico, would hold out longer than the latter end of May. It is true, our expeditions will take place later; but the French at Guadalupe had then a ftrong and powerful friend and neighbour at Martinico, and was every hour in expectation of a reinforcement of land forces from thence, and the affiftance of the squadron of M. Bompart. But neither Louisiana, nor Martinico can have fuch expectations now, they have no neighbour to fupply them with flores and forces, and no fufficient fleet from France to protect them. The governors of those places therefore, upon the loss of New Orleans, and Fort-Royal, out of compation to the inhabitants, would undoubtedly rather furrender, than fer fire and fword carried into the very heart of their fettlements. But fuppofe they fhould hold out longer, and the French fhould have a mind to try another campaigh in G-v, and we to exert our utmost to prevent their defigns there, Prince Ferdinand is at prefent frong enough to employ the whole French forces with an army of upwards of eighty thousand men, most of them as good foldiers as are to be found in all Europe, and fuch as would afford the French pretty good paffime. However, if it fhould be thought too weak, I cannot fee why we might not, without any hindrance to these expeditions, flill spare ten or twelve regiments of infantry, and fix or eight of cavalry to reinforce him. We have at prefent in England and Ireland about forty regiments of infantry and cavalry, befides the footguards and independent companies. Twenty regiments will certainly be enough for our home orcafions, when we are not under the least apprehensions of an invasion, and have such an established militia in arms. — In reckoning only twenty regiments at home, I would imply, that the remaining eight might be employed against Martinico, whilst those from Canada made the attempt on Louisiana.

With regard to the practicability of these attempts, I believe, Sir, they are scarce to be doubted. The nation is pretty well convinced, that Martinico might have been in our hands at present, if proper measures had been taken. The whole fecurity of that island depends on Fort-Royal, which lays low, in a bottom, furrounded by unfortified eminencies; a footing there would have enfured the reduction of the whole ifland. But the misfortune was, an officer commanded, who was intirely unfit for the bufinefs: - but de mortuis nil nisi bonum. I do not reflect on his good intentions, but a man, in his advanced years, is fubject to the infirmities of nature; his conceptions become obtufe and languid, and his conflitution incapable of the neceffary fatigues of his office. An officer, fent to fuch a climate, and on fuch a command, ought to have all the advantages of youth, and a lively genius. I have fince often thought it happy for the old gentleman, that he died there; for had he came home, there is great reafon to believe his conduct would have required a firict examination, and, perhaps, the amende honourable.

With regard to the attempt on Louifiana, might not the troops, under colonel Byrd and major Hamilton, with the affiftance of the other provincial troops, act with vigour the enfuing campaign against the Indians, who would, upon hearing fuch a force was coming against them, very probably fubmit to any terms; and then, by the affiftance of our Indian allies, might not the army march against the French fettlements about Kappa; or, if that fhould not be thought practicable, by reason of the length of the march to it, might they not move to the weftward, and retake our long loft fort of Albama? The troops from Canada ( which would certainly form an army of five or fix thousand men) might, with the affiftance of the fquadron at Jamaica, in the mean time, make an attack on the French forts in the Gulph of Mexico; and, though fhips of burden might meet with difficulty in getting up the Miffifippi to New Orleans (which they certainly will, if they do not go before the freshes come down the river ;) yet the army might, in a day or two, march up by land, and would, no doubt, foon make a conquest of it, as the fort, tho' formed upon a regular plan, is weak, and built on a bad foundation : and, as frigates of thirty and forty guns can get up the channel, they would, no doubt, greatly contribute to the fuccess of the land attack. Balize, Mobile, and a few other forts might, during this time, be reduced by the large fhips, and, in this cafe, the interior country must submit.

And

And now, Sir, before I entirely take my leave of you, permit me to hope the fame fleadinefs of your mind, and the fame vigorous profecution of the war. which have hitherto gained you fuch unufual credit from your country. There are fome, and not a finall number neither, who have made it their bufiness to propagate a notion, that we have no occasion to undertake any more offenfive expeditions against them, because, forfooth (as they fay) " we can have already conquered more " than we hope to retain ; and therefore, that it would " be putting the nation to an immenfe expence to no " manner of purpofe." But how can we be faid to do too much detriment to fuch an enemy as France; an enemy, who still carries on the war with all the virulence of infernal fury, and who we know to be our natural rival? And, I can farther tell these gentlemen, that our present conquests are not to be retained, because of their extent, but because they are unneceffary to be retained, and would be of little value to Great Britain; fuch as Canada, and their East-India fettlements. I own, Sir, fuch infinuations have chagrined me much. Wherefore are they become fo predominant? Can they be in the least conducive to the honour and welfare of Great Britain ? By conquering more, do we not ferve ourfelves most effectually ? Have we not thereby an opportunity to confult our true intereft, and what places are most worthy our confideration ? Shall we not thereby difcover their value to France, and convenience to ourfelves ? Shall we not attack them in the tendereft part, and reduce them to a necessity of fubmitting to our terms more fpeedily ? France, Sir, is not to be confidered

dered in the common clafs of adverfaries, but as the moly dangerous rival; a rival, whole great extent of power is much to be feared ; a rival, ever vigilant to promote measures that are diametrically inconfistent with our welfare and fecurity : - a rival, whole interefts are, in every respect, incompatible with ours, and whole equality of power with that of our own, is both unnatural and impossible. When I confider, Sir, all these circumftances, can I think fuch exceffive moderation arifes from a good caufe ? Can you, Sir, think it made out of friendship to yourself or the public? Let us recollect, Sir, with what ignominy we have treated our negociators at the treaty of Utrecht, and with what confusion we call to mind the terms of that peace, which, I will not fcruple to fay, Sir, gained us much larger ceffions than are at prefent recommended by the most zealour and immoderate flickler against France. Gibralter, Minorca, and Newfoundland, are ever to be effectied invaluable acquifitions. Befides, Sir, there were feveral immunities to be granted in favour of our commerce; the fole property of St. Christopher's was given up; and Dunkirk was to be effectually demolifhed, and article then deemed of more confequence than all the reft, and of which no promife or deposit was reckoned a fufficient pledge for the performance : it was given into our poffeffion before any treaty was concluded on. Had our ministry made larger demands, they would certainly have been complied with. They did not omit them upon a pretence of moderation, but because France had no other object worth their afking. We had very little to apprehend from their fugar colonies, or Canada; the nation hation was feldom involved in a direct war with the French in the latter, only to humour the Five Nations who at that time over-awed all Canada. They had done us much injury in Newfoundland and St. Chriftopher's: thefe were quietly given 'up to us, without the leaft difficulty. What more then could we require? And yet, Sir, thefe were terms granted only to draw us off from a confederacy, which, upon our defection, was ftill able to have over-run all France; a confederacy, Sir, that, bent upon the total fubverfion of France, was then carrying on the war againft her with the utmoft rigour, and for which we had, notwithflanding, procured a moft advantageous barrier, at the good liking of our gracious queen, from thofe very enemies which it, was treating fo unmercifully.

What, Sir, can I think, when I have feen thefe infinuations prevail; when I have feen England have forty thousand men idle the greatest part of a year, and no expedition undertaken to opprefs the common enemy ! Does it not feem as if moderation was adopted ? If it was deemed to very dangerous to our continental affairs, to fend any forces upon a foreign attempt, might they not have been employed on the French coaft? While the war lafts, it must be just to exert ourfelves to the utmost against our common enemies, and to do them the greatest detriment we can: it is even incumbent on us, in order to put a fpeedy conclusion to it; efpecially when we find, that if these enemies submit to a peace, it will be, becaufe they cannot carry on the war any longer. Might not our large ufelefs fleets af the Leeward Islands be employed in deftroying the French forts at Grenade and Cavenne? Might we not bombard bombard St. Maloes and Havre-de-Grace to more effect than we have done? In fhort, Sir, might not our men of war be as well shattered in deftroying a French fort, as in fruitless cruizes, and playing at bo-peep before French ports? And I cannot think, Sir, but that a ball, from a French cannon or mufket, would be much more agreeable to a British tar, than dying a lingering death by the fcurvy, in watching the enemy's motions. The glorious 1759 had near frightened the French to a feparate peace : the inglorious 1760 feems to have given them fresh courage; they talk of nothing but carrying on the war with vigour, and, in concert with their allics. Has not, Sir, the countermanding the late expedtion (which was, indeed, fufficient to have put Paris itfelf into confusion, and countermanded, no body knows how nor wherefore) rather excited them to a continuance of the war? Have they not been apt to think too favourably of English humanity and moderation, or rather, have they not had reafon to think that we have adopted French fickleneis, and are tired of victory and fucceis? From whatever caufe, Sir, that expedition was countermanded, let me fay, it was derogatory to the hotiour of the nation. After having the troops collected from the most distant quarters of the two kingdoms, a great number of transports kept in pay, and waiting for them ; and then after these troops had got to their deftined ports, to be embarked only to be difembarked again, must create fuspicions not very favourable, either to the plan, or the directors of its execution. The nation, Sir, has made large fupplies, they would not lament them, when they fee the rectitude of their their application: but, when they fee thefe fupplies profufely lavifhed away by thoufands, and are ignorant of the caufe, muft they not complain, and think rather cenforioufly? To fay, Sir, the opportunity of fucceeding in that plan was loft, is abfurd: there were other objects, perhaps of much more importance to this nation, and, I am fure, of much lefs difficulty, remained unattempted, and which it was the very feafon to put in execution.

We have indeed heard, that another expedition is adopted : fhips have been fheathed, the forces ordered to embark, and what, for a long time, feemed rather intended to amufe the people, and bully France, is, according to appearances, upon the point of excution. Let me hope, Sir, it may not mifcarry at the laft! Let me hope, Sir, as I have reafon to think from the fheathing of the fhips, that it is directed against Martinico ! If I am wrong in that conjecture, at least permit me to hope it will immediately occur to your confideration. If that island ought to be taken, proper measures ought to be taken immediately to put it in execution. We find our numerous fleets do not hinder the French landing forces and ftores of all kinds: the little fquadron under M. Macarti, landed upwards of five hundred foldiers at Martinico the latter end of laft Summer; and M. Dugue Lambert, with three or four fhips more under his command, failed lately with five hundred of the royal grenadiers, and great quantities of warlike flores. If we would therefore take Martinico, we must be expeditious; the longer the attempt is delayed, the more impracticable we fhall find it.

Remember, Sir, that this is the nice juncture, the critical moment, when you are to give your country the welcome proofs of the brightness of your genus, and the elevated fentiments of your foul. Great Britain hath unanimoufly referred itfelf to the aufpicious name and perfon of P-T : you received the proffered fervice like a man who thought nobly, and intended to acquit himfelf most honourably; and we have hitherto flattered ourfelves you have adhered to these principles, Even now the attention of our fenators, of all good. men, and true Britons, is fixed on you ; on you along they depend, waiting, with the impatience of people who are over-burdened with a load they want to relieve themselves of, the time when they may express their gratitude defervedly; and when you, Sir, may expect it as a fmall tribute due to fuch a glorious victory.

Remember, Sir, in whatever capacity you act, and in whatever public flation you are employed, that noble fentiment of John de Witt, which he applied to the Dutch; be it ever uppermoft in your thoughts, and ever your unearing principle in deed. "Navigation" (faid he) "the fifthery, commerce, and manufactures, are "the four pillars of the flate, they ought not to be deconstituted, or incommoded by any incumbrance what-"foever; it is they give fubfiftence to the inhabitants, and bring riches into the country."
