SIR :

THE Battle of Saratoga has always attracted a large share of intelligent and interested attention. Its important results have induced a recent English author to class it, preëminently, among the Fifteen Decisive Battles of the World.¹

¹ Nor can any military event be said to have exercised more important influence on the future fortunes of mankind than the complete defeat of Burgoyne's Expedition in 1777; a defeat which rescued the revolted colonists from certain subjection, and which, by inducing the courts of France and Spain to attack England in their behalf, insured the independence of the United States, and the formation of that transatlantic power which not only America, but both Europe and Asia now see and feel.—Creasy, p. 312, Am. ed.

In our own country, its name still stirs the blood, warmly and proudly, in the popular heart. The interest that thus attaches to the subject has led to the publication of numerous official, and other Documents, relating to the Expedition of Burgoyne, and its unsuccessful termination. The Publisher feels that he cannot err, in the opinion that that interest will yet justify an addition to our authentick printed memorials of these events; and, in that belief, he takes much pleasure in laying before the Publick the Orderly Book of General Burgoyne's Expedition.

The Leader of this memorable Expedition has published to the World his Narrative of the Invasion, and his Apology for its failure. The present official programme of his daily movements, daguerreo-typing, as it were, the occurrences and events of the march, almost makes us spectators of the changing scene. We look not through media, colored by the incense of partiality, or darkened by the smoke of prejudice; but, viewing these events of the past in their own truthful light, we are enabled to exercise our individual judgment, and form conclusions altogether our own. The very nature of an Orderly Book, its strictly practical, almost commonplace character, gives a peculiar trustworthiness to the opinions formed from its perusal: and in cases like the present one, whether the verdict be of approval or of censure, we cannot doubt that it is both unbiassed and just.

In addressing, Sir, to you, the following pages, the Publisher would desire to make a publick acknowledgment of his thanks for the interest you have shown in bringing this subject to his notice; and likewise for the many kind offices which a library rich in varied treasures of genius and art, a discriminating taste and profound historical research, have enabled you to render, in the course of his publication of books kindred to this in their antique style and historical subject.

INTRODUCTION

The purpose of this book is to provide a comprehensive and accessible introduction to the study of the history of the United States. It is designed for students who are new to the field and for those who wish to refresh their knowledge. The book covers the major events, figures, and themes of American history from the early colonial period to the present day. It is written in a clear and concise style, with a focus on providing a solid foundation of knowledge. The book is divided into several parts, each covering a different period of history. The first part covers the early colonial period, the second part covers the American Revolution and the early republic, the third part covers the 19th century, and the fourth part covers the 20th century and the present day. Each part includes a detailed overview of the period, followed by a series of chapters that explore the major events and figures of the period. The book is intended to be a useful resource for students and teachers alike, and is available in both print and digital formats.

INTRODUCTION.

Presenting to the Public a volume containing mainly Orders issued from day to day, to an Army on its march, some apology may be deemed proper, were it not that the interests involved in the march of that Army were of such vast magnitude as not only to justify, but to exact the preservation of every record, however trivial and minute, of every well established incident and circumstance connected with its progress and operations.

The people of the Colonies had already been two years arrayed in hostility against England; the Declaration of Independence had been nearly twelve months before the world, yet so far from decided was the result of the contest, that no Court in Europe dared as yet to acknowledge that Independence, or to risk a Treaty with America.

It was at this season of gloom, uncertainty and doubt, when many good men already hesitated, and some had even despaired, that Great Britain gathered up her strength afresh, evoked her power at home and exerted her influence abroad, for one combined and overwhelming movement that would, she promised herself, forever crush the giant nation struggling to be born.

As Commander of the Northern Division of this movement, the ministry had selected an officer who had already distinguished himself in the field; whose merit, they admitted, it had been their care to cherish; discovering it in its growth and rewarding it in its progress by raising him above his seniors in the service.¹

JOHN BURGOYNE, the Officer in question, was a man not only of obscure birth, but even of doubtful parentage. He is said, upon what authority does not appear, to have been the illegitimate son of Lord Bingley. Be this as it may, his education was of the most liberal kind, and it is not improbable that he was either destined for, or had resolved upon, the profession of arms, at a very early period. Whilst yet a subaltern, without any fortune but his sword, he had the rare good luck to engage the affections of, and run away with, Lady Charlotte Stanley, youngest daughter of Edward, 10th Earl of Derby, whom he married. This connection secured doubtless for Burgoyne in after life, much of that favour to which his advancement in his profession was owing. He was commissioned Captain in the 11th Dragoons, 14th June, 1756; and on the 10th of May, 1758, was raised to the brevet rank of Lieutenant Colonel. In the August of 1759, he was appointed Lieutenant Colonel commandant of the 16th Light Dragoons. With this regiment he served in 1761, at Belleisle, where, during the siege of Palais, he was entrusted with a negotiation for an exchange of prisoners.

A more busy service awaited him upon his return home. Spain had now acceded to the family compact, and after vain endeavours to draw over Portugal from its alliance with England, had resolved to attack that country in the hope of an easy conquest: a hope which arose from her conviction of the weak and undisciplined state of the Portuguese army. In this exigency Great Britain hastened to the succour of an ally, who had preferred the chance of utter ruin to the shame of having violated her faith.

The troops destined for this service arrived in the Tagus on the 6th of May. They were immediately marched to join the Portuguese army, under the command of the Count de la Lippe Buckeburg, and took the field in the course of July. The campaign had been commenced by the Spaniards on the side of Trason Montes, in which province Miranda, Braganza, and some other towns, had fallen into their hands. They next resolved to proceed against Oporto, but this design was frustrated by the bravery of the peasants, who took possession of the defiles, and compelled the Spanish army to a disorderly retreat. Disappointed in this quarter the enemy turned their steps towards the province of Beira, and laid siege to the frontier town of Almeida, which, after a short defence, fell into their hands through the imbecility and cowardice of its governor. Their army now approached the Tagus, the only direction in which an invader can penetrate to the capital, all other access being rendered nearly, if not quite impracticable, by immense chains of mountains, and other natural obstructions.

To second the operations of this army, by an incursion into Alemtejo, or by advancing on the opposite side of the Tagus, and thus to distract the attention of the Portuguese, already but too feeble in point of numbers, a body of troops was beginning to assemble in Spanish Estramadura, at the town of Valencia de Alcantara. It consisted at present of about 1200 men. Well knowing that if this force were suffered to increase, it would embarrass him very considerably, the Count de la Lippe, who was encamped at Abrantes, formed the bold design of attacking and dispersing it before it assumed a more formidable aspect.

The execution of this plan was confided to Burgoyne, who then held the rank of Brigadier. No inconsiderable difficulties stood in the way of this enterprize; but the spirit of the commander was not of a nature to be depressed by such considerations. He crossed the Tagus, at midnight on the 23d, and with 400 of his own regiment, was joined as he advanced by one or two small detachments, and after a laborious march of more than fifteen leagues, performed through bad roads, and without halting, he arrived on the morning of the 26th at some distance from the town of Alcantara. His intention had been to surprize the place before break of day, but he now found that from the delay, occasioned by the ignorance of the guides, the dawn was at hand, and his scheme would be frustrated if he waited till his whole division could coöperate in the attack. He, therefore, boldly pushed forward with his dragoons alone. This audacity was favoured by fortune. At the head of his handful of soldiers he entered the town with such determined resolution, that the guards in the square were all killed or made prisoners before they could take arms, and the ends of the streets were secured after a trifling resistance. Some parties, having rallied, attempted to return to the charge; but their lives paid the forfeit of their temerity. A firing was for a short time kept up from the windows. It was, however, put a stop to, by the menace of setting the town in flames, at the four corners, if the doors and windows were not instantly thrown open. Parties were immediately sent out to pursue such of the enemy as had escaped into the country, and in this service their success was very considerable.

In this gallant action the loss of the English was scarcely worthy of notice; while on the other hand, that of the Spaniards was remarkably severe. Many prisoners were taken, among whom was the Spanish general, and the regiment of Seville was totally destroyed. Three standards, with a large quantity of arms and ammunition, fell into the hands of the victors. In consequence of the strict discipline observed by the British, very little was suffered by the town or inhabitants. The generosity and gallantry of Burgoyne were indeed subjects of praise among the Spanish officers themselves. From the Count de la Lippe they received, in the public orders of the day, the highest encomiums.

All danger was thus at an end on the side of Alemtejo; but it was not so on the other bank of the Tagus, where their immense superiority of numbers enabled the Spaniards to obtain a footing, though but a trifling one, in Portuguese Estramadura, and make a somewhat nearer approach to the capital. Early in October they attacked the old Moorish castle of Villa Velha, and the defiles of St. Simon. The castle was, for a considerable time, supported across the river by Brigadier Burgoyne, who was posted near Nissa and the Tagus. It was, however, at last compelled to surrender, the enemy having contrived to turn the position.

A body of two thousand Spaniards now encamped in the neighbourhood of Villa Velha. It was soon perceived by Burgoyne, that this corps, proud of its late successes, was a little more careless than was proper in the neighbourhood of a vigilant and enterprising adversary. For this unsoldier-like negligence he soon inflicted upon them an exemplary chastisement. Under his orders Lieutenant Colonel Lee, afterwards a Major General in the Army of the American Revolution, crossed the Tagus, on the night of the 5th of October, with a detachment of 350 British soldiers, and succeeded in completely surprising the Spanish camp. A considerable slaughter took place, with a very trifling loss to the assailants. Some magazines were burned, six cannons spiked, and sixty artillery mules, and a large quantity of baggage taken. After this decisive blow, the detachment recrossed the Tagus, and resumed its original quarters, without interruption.

Here closed the campaign. Harassed, dispirited, and reduced to almost one half of their original numbers, the Spanish troops retired within their own frontier. Peace was shortly after concluded between the belligerent powers, and the subject of this memoir returned to his own country, with the reputation of an enlightened, intrepid, and active officer. On the 8th of October, previously to his embarking for England, he had been raised to the rank of Colonel.

At the general election in 1761, he had been chosen member for Midhurst, and he accordingly, on his arrival from Portugal, took his seat in the House of Commons. He does not, however, appear to have been, at this period, a very active member. On the 18th of March, 1762, he was appointed Colonel of the 16th Light Dragoons. At the election in 1768, he was returned for the borough of Preston. Some circumstances arising from this event, and from his presumed connection with the Duke of Grafton, drew upon him the hostility of Junius, who, in several of his letters, adverts to him in language of great severity. The same year he was appointed Governor of Fort William; and Major General in 1772.

In the debates of Parliament he now took a more frequent part than he had before done. The administration having accepted, in 1771, from the Spanish government, a very inadequate satisfaction for the insult which had been offered to Great Britain, by the seizure of the Falkland Islands, he arraigned their conduct in a speech of much eloquence and vigour. But his efforts, and those of his friends, were unavailing; an address approving the convention between the two powers was carried by a large majority.

The next year he was not less strenuous in endeavouring to detect and bring to punishment the corruption and delinquency which disgraced the characters of those to whom authority had been delegated in the Eastern empire. It was on his motion that a committee was appointed "to inquire into the nature, state, and condition of the East India Company, and of the British affairs in the East Indies." His speech on this occasion is highly honourable to him, both as a man, and as an orator. As chairman of the committee, he found himself repeatedly called upon to defend the measures and intentions of himself and his colleagues, and he was not backward in the performance of this duty.

But, amidst the pressure of senatorial and professional avocations, he found time for pursuits of a more light and amusing nature. A marriage took place in June, 1774, between Edward, son of Lord Stanley, and Lady Elizabeth Hamilton, daughter of the Duke of Hamilton. On this occasion a fête champêtre was given at the Oaks, which in taste and splendour far exceeded every thing of the kind that had been seen before. The superintendence of the whole was committed to Burgoyne. It was for this festival that he wrote his first dramatic piece, entitled The Maid of the Oaks. This elegant comic entertainment was afterwards, with some additions, it is said, from the pen of Garrick, successfully brought forward on the boards of Drury Lane Theatre. Nor has it yet lost its attractions with the public, though Mrs. Baddely and Mrs. Abingdon, the original representatives of Maria and Lady Bab Lardoon, have never been equalled by later performers of those characters.

His attention, however, was soon called off from letters to arms. He embarked in 1775, with Generals Howe and Clinton, for America, and arrived at Boston early in June.¹ Some of the official papers issued there, at that period, are attributed to his pen. His stay this time in America was short, as he returned to England during the winter. But in the spring of 1776, he sailed for Canada, where he had some share in assisting Sir Guy Carleton to expel the Americans, who had for many months held a footing in that province, and even reduced its capital, Quebec, to the greatest extremity. The campaign being at an end, he again, at the close of the year, landed in his native country. During his absence in America he suffered the loss of his wife, Lady Charlotte Burgoyne, who died at Kenfington Palace, on the 5th of June, 1776.

¹ The subjoined Impromptu, was a parture of these British Generals for published at London, on the de- America :

“Behold the Cerberus the Atlantic plough!

“Her precious Cargo, Burgoyne, Clinton, Howe—

“Bow! wow! wow!”

Government resolved to make, in the Summer of 1777, a decisive effort against the revolted Colonies. A large force was to penetrate toward Albany from Canada, by the way of the Lakes, while another considerable body advanced up the Hudson's river, for the purpose of joining the Canadian army. By this means it was hoped that all communication would be cut off between the Northern and Southern Colonies, and that each of them, being left to its own means of defence, and attacked by superior numbers, would inevitably be reduced with little trouble. To distract the attention of the enemy, a detachment was at the same time to attack Fort Stanwix on the Mohawk river.

On the 1st of September, 1776, Burgoyne was appointed Lieutenant General, preparatory to assuming command of this expedition. His opinion of, and disposition towards the Americans, may be inferred from his speech already pronounced in Parliament on the motion for the Repeal of the Act imposing a Duty on Tea. He considered that America had been spoiled by too much indulgence; the independence of that country of the British legislature was in question, and he was ready to resist that proposition and to contend at any future time against such independence. The future here appealed to was at hand, and we shall now see what it had in store for the champion of Parliamentary Taxation.

His Army, numbering between seven and eight thousand men, set out from St. John's on the 14th of June, 1777, and encamped at the river Bouquet, on the west side of Lake Champlain, near Crown Point. At this place he met the Indians in congress, and, according to the usual custom, gave them a war feast. To repress their native barbarity, he addressed them in a speech, recommending humanity to the enemy, and promising rewards for prisoners, but assuring them that all claims they might make for scalps would be looked into with a very suspicious eye. His next step was to issue a Manifesto to the Americans, in which their hopes and fears were alternately worked upon, in order to induce their return to obedience.

Turgid, pompous and bombastic, this Proclamation instead of producing the effect desired, became the subject of ridicule, derision and satire, and instead of frightening the Americans, only gained for its author the soubriquet of Chrononbotonthologos. It was turned into Hudibrastic rhymes by, it is said, the witty Hopkinson, who thus travestied the threats of the British General:

“ I will let loose the dogs of hell,
 “ Ten thousand Indians, who shall yell,
 “ And foam and tear, and grin and roar,
 “ And drench their moccasins in gore :
 “ To these I'll give full scope and play
 “ From Ticonderog to Florida ;

“ They’ll scalp your heads and kick your shins,

“ And rip your —, and flay your skins,

“ And of your ears be nimble croppers,

“ And make your thumbs tobacco-stoppers.

“ If after all these loving warnings,

“ My wishes and my bowels’ yearnings,

“ You shall remain as deaf as adder,

“ Or grow with hostile rage the madder,

“ I swear by St. George and by St. Paul,

“ I will exterminate you all.

“ To test these presents—JOHN BURGOYNE.”

Having made some stay at Crown Point, for the purpose of establishing a hospital and magazines, and for other necessary services, the army advanced towards Ticonderoga, which the Americans abandoned. Their retreat was discovered at the dawn of the 6th of July. A rapid pursuit was instantly begun, and continued with such vigour that their vessels were totally destroyed. Hopeless of making any stand at Skenesborough, the American troops retired, after destroying, as well as they could, the various works which had been raised for its defence.

At Skenesborough, General Burgoyne was compelled to wait several days for the arrival of tents, baggage, and provisions. While his Army remained here, it was incessantly employed in opening roads. Towards the end of July, it arrived near Fort Edward, which was abandoned by the Americans, who retired to Saratoga.

Here, notwithstanding the most strenuous endeavours were used to forward the service, a halt of fifteen days was found indispensable for the purpose of bringing forward bateaux, provisions, and ammunition, from Fort Anne. Neither oxen nor horses were to be procured, and the country was besides inundated with continued rain. Intelligence was here received that Colonel St. Leger had begun the siege of Fort Stanwix. General Burgoyne, therefore, determined to cross the Hudson river. But, though every nerve had been strained, the provision in store was very trifling. A supply, however, must absolutely be obtained. The Americans had established a magazine at Bennington, and it was hoped that by surprizing it, a large proportion of what was wanted might be secured. On this service Lieutenant Colonel Baum was dispatched, with about five hundred men. The British, at the same time, moved along the Hudson, and threw a bridge over it opposite Saratoga. Baum had not reached Bennington, when he received advice that the enemy were in great force at that place. He accordingly halted, and sent off to the English camp for assistance. It was dispatched, but before its arrival Baum had been attacked, and his whole party killed or made prisoners. Ignorant of his defeat, the detachment which had been sent to his succour continued to advance, until it was surrounded by the victorious Americans, and suffered very severely in making its retreat. Six hundred men were lost to the army by these two engagements. Shortly after, Colonel St. Leger was compelled to retire from before Fort Stanwix.

Nearly thirty days' provision having been collected, Burgoyne crossed the Hudson, about the middle of September, and encamped at Saratoga. The Americans were at Stillwater. The British advanced to attack them in that position, and an obstinate battle ensued, in which much honour, but no solid advantage, was gained by the assailants. The field of battle, it is true, remained in the possession of the British, but nothing more, and it was dearly paid for by the fall of a number of brave men. Nothing could be done against the American camp, all approach to which was rendered impracticable by natural obstacles, as well as by numerous fortifications. Every day also swelled the force of the Americans, and lessened that of the British.

Still hoping that, by the approach of an army up the Hudson from New York, he should be enabled to accomplish the purpose of the campaign, General Burgoyne decided upon holding his position as long as possible. Great exertions were accordingly made to secure it by strong lines and redoubts.

But while the General was sufficiently occupied in front, by the American Army, a daring attempt was made to shut him up in the rear. From the head of the Connecticut river a body of fifteen hundred men marched, with the utmost secrecy, and without being discovered, against Ticonderoga, and succeeded in surprising some of the outposts of that place. They made reiterated assaults upon the fortress itself, for four days; but, being every time repulsed, they at last retired.

The month of October opened, and no assistance was at hand to extricate Burgoyne from his perilous situation. He now found it expedient to put the troops upon a shorter allowance, and on the 7th of October, to make a movement to the right, to discover whether it was possible to open a passage forward, or, if that could not be done, at least to facilitate a retreat. This motion was also designed to cover a forage of the army.

Fifteen hundred men, with eight cannon and two howitzers, were destined for this purpose. The General himself commanded them, and was seconded by some of his best officers. But Arnold, who had perceived how critical his situation would be if he were turned, did not wait to receive an attack; he quitted his position, and gave battle to the division which was advancing against him. Constantly reinforced by fresh battalions he succeeded, after a desperate conflict, in driving the British to their camp, which was immediately assaulted in various parts, and the Americans broke into the lines in that quarter which was defended by Colonel Breymann. An opening was thus made on the right and the rear.

The position being no longer tenable it was resolved to abandon it, and take post on the heights above the hospital, by which the front would be changed, and the Americans compelled to form a new disposition. This delicate and dangerous movement was effected in the night without loss or disorder. Battle was next day offered to the Americans, whose movements obliged the British to leave their favourable ground, and retire towards Saratoga. By the morning of the tenth the whole of their Army had crossed the fords of the Fishkill near that place, and posted itself in a strong situation. It was followed there by the Americans, who took every step which could preclude the possibility of escape.

Far from all succour, surrounded in the most difficult of countries by an Army more than four times his own in numbers, provisions growing short, the regiments mouldering away, every part of the camp exposed to grape and rifle shot, and without power to compel the enemy to an action, Burgoyne assembled a council of war to deliberate upon the measures to be taken in so painful an exigency. Such were the circumstances of the case, that to advance, retreat, or engage, was equally impossible. The unanimous voice of the council, therefore, was for entering upon a negotiation. It was finally settled between the generals, that the British Army should march out of its camp with all the honours of war, and should be sent to Europe, on condition of not serving in America during the present war.

Thus terminated this attempt to crush the Independence of this country, and thus it was, amid the throes and thunders of battle, that the American nation was ushered victoriously into life, and baptized in blood on the field of Saratoga. The nations of Europe no longer hesitated to recognize its legitimacy, which France had the honour the first to acknowledge, on the 6th February, 1778.

The ideas hitherto entertained of the Americans by Gen. Burgoyne, now experienced a total revolution, and he declared that it would be impossible for Britain to succeed in her views, and that he should, on his return to England, recommend the recognition of their Independence.

He arrived early in 1778 in that country, whither the news of the Saratoga convention had preceded him, and had been received by Ministers with the most bitter vexation. Pressed already beyond endurance by the opposition, they were well aware that this additional heavy misfortune would be urged against them in Parliament with all the powers of argument and eloquence. To throw the blame on the General was the best means of escaping reproach that suggested itself to their minds. No open attack was indeed immediately made in either house, but insinuations and hints were not spared.

An audience with his Sovereign was requested, and refused. A court of inquiry, appointed to examine his case, declared him, as a prisoner on parole, to be out of its cognizance; and a court martial, which he next insisted upon, was denied him on the same ground. Parliament alone remained upon which he could throw himself for a hearing. He accordingly, on the 26th of May, attended his duty in the House of Commons, and vindicated his conduct in a long, animated, and satisfactory speech. Two days after he made another in which he arraigned with pointed severity the weakness and incapacity of those who held the reins of government. Some management had been observed towards him by Ministers during the first debate, but they were now goaded into the most determined hostility. To get rid entirely of all further trouble from him, a weak attempt was made by some of them to exclude him from the house, under pretence that, as a prisoner of war, he could have no right to speak or vote. The Speaker being appealed to for his opinion on the subject, his decision was given in favour of the General.

As this mode of getting rid of him had failed, it was resolved to try another. A lucky opportunity of effecting this had, it was thought, occurred, in the circumstance of Congress having declined to ratify the Convention, until advices of its having been approved of by the English ministry had arrived in America. An order from the secretary of war was accordingly sent him in the beginning of June to repair to New England, his presence there being necessary to the troops. Obedience to this order he very properly declined. A long correspondence took place on this subject, which ended by his voluntary resignation of all his appointments, amounting, it has been said, to about $17,000 a year. His rank in the Army he, however, retained, in order to render him amenable to a court martial hereafter, and to enable him to fulfil his personal faith with the enemy.

The long-desired time for defending his calumniated character at length arrived. A committee had, on the repeated demands of Sir William Howe, been appointed in 1781, to inquire into his own conduct during the American war. Before the sittings of this committee were closed, Burgoyne succeeded in procuring evidence to be examined before it with respect to the proceedings of the army under his command. The result was such as could not but be highly flattering to his feelings. Every officer that was examined gave the strongest testimony to his bravery and superior talents. It did not appear that a single fault had been found with any of his plans or movements by the most enlightened judges who were on service with him; but it did clearly appear that he enjoyed the entire confidence of the army, and that, in situations of the most trying nature, in the face of disaster, of danger, and of death, he was looked up to by his troops with the warmest affection, and the most undoubted reliance; that they were at all times ready to suffer, to fight, and to perish with him. The committee was shortly after suddenly dissolved, without having passed a single resolution upon the subject which had been referred to its consideration.

In 1780 he appeared before the public with two productions of very dissimilar natures. The first of these was, A State of the Expedition from Canada as laid before the House of Commons and verified by Evidence. It was inscribed, in an elegant and affectionate address, to the officers of the army which he had commanded against the Americans. He narrates, in a concise and perspicuous manner, yet with great spirit, the whole of the transactions which took place.

His other literary effort was a comic opera, in three acts, called The Lord of the Manor, which was received with much applause. It is a light but lively and well-conducted little piece, far superior in merit to many later favorites of the same kind. In the course of it, many severe and witty sarcasms are aimed at the administration which was then in power.

The party which had so long and so eloquently opposed the ruinous war with America having at last been called to share in the toils and the honours of government, Gen. Burgoyne was not forgotten. He was on the 16th of April, 1782, appointed Commander in Chief of his Majesty's forces in Ireland; a few days after, a member of the privy council of that country, and on the 7th June, 1782, Colonel of the 4th Foot. The rank of commander in chief, however, he retained not quite two years, when a new administration was again formed.

The new Ministry soon found itself vigorously attacked by the party in opposition. No pains were spared to render it an object of hatred and contempt. To accomplish these ends the powers both of wit and argument were incessantly employed. Of the weapons used in the lighter of these two modes of hostility, the Criticisms on the Rolliad, and the Probationary Odes, were, perhaps, the most offensive to the minister and his friends. No less than twenty-one editions of them have been published. The Westminster Guide, and one of the Probationary Odes, were contributed by General Burgoyne. Both these pieces are reprinted in the Collection of his Works.

In 1786 appeared his comedy of The Heirefs. It was welcomed, by crowded audiences, with that applause which it so well merited. Nor was it less attractive in the closet. The sale of ten editions in one year bore ample testimony to its merits. He not long after gave to the stage an adaptation of Sedaine's historical romance of Richard Cœur de Lion, and was again successful in his claim to public approbation. The piece had a very flattering run, and has been since revived.

At an early period of his parliamentary career, Gen. Burgoyne was active in the pursuit and exposure of Indian delinquency. After a lapse of thirteen years he was called upon to assist others in the performance of a similar task. He was chosen in 1787, one of the committee of managers for conducting the impeachment of Mr. Hastings. Under this character he, during the course of the trial, moved the censure of the house upon Major Scott, for a libel on the conduct of the committee. The motion was carried. His steady performance of his duty as a manager, exposed him to an anonymous attack, published in a collection of epistles, the poetical style of which was in imitation of the New Bath Guide. The conclusion of Mr. Hastings's trial the General did not live to witness. His death took place on the 4th of August, 1792, from a sudden attack of the gout, at his house in Hertford street, May Fair, and was an unexpected stroke to his friends, as he had been out in apparently good health the preceding day. He was buried, in a very private manner, on the 13th, in the cloisters of Westminster Abbey. Only one coach, containing four gentlemen, attended his funeral. No memorial, not even a simple stone, marks the spot where his remains are interred.¹

Having thus disposed of the principal actor in the momentous movement against the infant liberties of the Republic, nothing remains but to allude to some other portion of our labours. By the courtesy of Mr. THORNTON of Boston, we are enabled to add a copy of the Parole signed by the officers of the army at Cambridge, in December, 1777; also the names of those officers now, as far as we are aware, for the first time correctly printed. The reader will find also, in this volume, carefully prepared biographical sketches of Gen. James Wilkinson, Gen. Riedesel, and other officers who made this campaign, and likewise a list of the several Brunswick officers who served under Gen. Riedesel's command. We are indebted to the politeness of the Hon. JAMES PARTRIDGE, Secretary of State of Maryland, for a copy of the joint Resolution of the General Assembly of that State, conferring a pension on Gen. Wilkinson, and to Mr. DAWSON of White Plains, for the German work from which we have obtained the materials for the life of Gen. Riedesel, and the roll of his officers, with such particulars as are appended to each of their names. Other assistance will be found acknowledged in the Appendix.

ORDERLY BOOK.

THE Chasseurs, Light Infantry and Grenadiers under Col. Bremen, form the Advanced Guard opposite the Point, which is a little above cleared Ground, on the Right of the Incampment. The Dragoons of Reidesfell follow immediately the Advanced Guard. The First Brigade British leads the Line at the Distance of about 200 Yards in the Rear of the Dragoons. The German Brigades follow in their order. Each Corps will make a Column of four Boats in Front, and on the Flanks of the Column, taking care to leave Room for the Oars of the Center Boats.

As soon as the whole are disposed in the above order, two Guns will be fired from the Maria, and a Jack hoisted at Foretopmast Head, at which the whole will move, and whether sailing or rowing, will endeavor to keep the same Order.

Lieut. General Burgoyne takes the Occasion of the Army assembling to exprefs publickly the high Opinion he entertains of the Troops which his Majesty has been graciously pleased to entrust to his Command; they could not have been selected more to his Satisfaction. And the Lieut. General trusts it will be received as one mark of his Attention to their Glory and Welfare, that with the promise of every encouragement the service will allow, he declares a determination, and he calls upon every officer to assist him, to maintain a steady System of Subordination and Obedience.

The following Standing Regulations laid down to prevent the necessity of lengthening the daily Orders, and are to be invariably observed.

Officers of all Ranks commanding out Posts and Detachments, are constantly to fortify in the best manner the circumstances of the place and the implements at hand will permit. Felling Trees with their Points outward, barricading Churches and Houses, Breastworks of Earth and Timber, are generally to be effected in a short Time, and the Science of Engineering is not necessary to find and apply such resources. The Practice of fortifying which is useful in all Services, is particularly so in this, where the Enemy, infinitely inferior to the King's Troops in open space and hardy Combat, is well fitted by disposition and practice for the Stratagems and Enterprises of little War. And neither the distance of Camps nor the Interference of Forests and Rivers are to be looked upon as security against his Attempts. Upon the same principle it must be a constant rule in or near Woods to place advanced Centries where they may have a Tree or some other defence to prevent their being taken off by single marksmen.

Together with these precautions Officers will ever bear in mind how much the publick honour and their own are concerned in maintaining a Post; and that to justify a Retreat in the present War, the number of the Enemy must be much superior to that which would make their Justification when acting against brave and disciplined Forces.

The Officers will take all proper Opportunities, and especially at the beginning of the Campaign, to inculcate in the men's minds a Reliance upon the Bayonet. Men of half their bodily strength, and even Cowards may be their match in firing; but the onset of Bayonets in the hands of the Valiant is irresistible. The Enemy, convinced of this truth, place their whole dependance in Entrenchments and Rifle pieces. It will be our Glory and preservation to storm where possible.

The Attention of every Officer in Action is to be employed upon his men. To make use of a Fusil, except in very extraordinary cases of immediate personal defence, would betray an ignorance of his importance, and his Duty.

No occasion can make it necessary to keep the Arms loaded in the Bell Tents: nor are the Battalions of the Line ever to be loaded upon the march till very near the time when they may be expected to engage.

No Parties are to go from Camp with or without Arms, without a proportionate number of Officers. Not only the Discipline and Honour, but also the safety of the Troops require the strictest prohibition from Straggling and Plundering, and the Savages as well as the Provost, will have Orders to punish Offenders in these respects, instantly, and with the utmost rigour.

The Camp will always be extended as widely as the Ground will admit, for the sake of Cleanliness and of Health; but as it must often happen that the extent will be insufficient for the Line to form in the Front of the Encampment, according to the present establishment of open Files and two deep, the Quarter-Master-General will therefore mark at every new Camp the Portion of Ground each Battalion is to clear over and above its own Front, in order to make the work equal. To clear this Ground must be the immediate business after arriving in Camp, and in this Country, it may often be necessary to have an Alarm Post cleared in the Rear as well as in the Front. By clearing is meant the removal of such obstructions as might prevent the ready forming of the Troops to receive or advance upon the Enemy. It is not necessary to cut the large Trees for that purpose, except where they may afford Shelter for the Enemy.

Quarter Guards are always to face outwards, and at the distance of a hundred yards from the Bells of Arms, and to have a Fluke of earth or timber thrown up before them.

When the Encampment of the Line is with the Front to the water, and too near to admit of this regulation, the Quarter Guards are to be posted in the Rear, and those of the Flank Regiments occasionally upon the Flanks.

Though the ground will seldom admit a strict regularity in pitching the Officers' Tents, they are never to be placed so as to interfere with the Line of Defence.

All Deserters from the Enemy, suspected Spies, or other persons presenting themselves at the Outposts, or otherwise stopped, are to be sent forthwith to Head Quarters, without questioning them.

In all Duties by Detachment, the Corps will furnish according to their Effective Strength.

When the Lieut. General visits an Outpost, the men are not to stand to their Arms, or pay him any Compliment.

The Articles of War which regard the men, to be read at the head of every Regiment to-morrow evening parade, and afterwards these Regulations.

The Daily Duties will be as follows. One Brigadier General for the Day, who will visit the Outposts, and have a General inspection over the Camp. All reports are to be made through him, except when any Alarm or other Exigency requires instant notice to the Commander-in-Chief.

A Major of Brigade for the Day, who is to parade all Guards, and Detachments, &c.

When the last Brigade arrives the Picquet will consist of one Field Officer for each Wing; one Captain for each Brigade, one Subaltern, one Sergeant, one Corporal, and twenty-five Private men, from each Regiment. A Drum to be furnished by the Regiment which gives the Captain.

The whole Picquet to assemble half an hour before Gun firing at the Centre of the Line, and to be exercised in marching and charging with Bayonets, under the inspection of the Brigadier of the day, in order that the British and German Troops may acquire a uniformity of pace and motion when acting together in Line.

Half the Picquet is always to be posted during the night at some distance from the Camp, and at such places as may be exposed to the secret approach of the Enemy. It will be the care of the Brigadier of the Day to post them.

He recommends it strongly to the Commanding Officers to bring their Corps into this useful Practice, as it may frequently happen that the movements of the Army will be too quick to admit a possibility of constructing ovens.

1759, and in America in 1768. On the 2d June, 1770, he became Major of the 38th, and on 25th July, 1771, Lieutenant Colonel of the 53d, which formed a part of this expedition, wherein Lieut. Colonel Powell held the rank of Brigadier General. When the Americans evacuated Ticonderoga on the 6th July, 1777, Brig. Powell was left in command of that post with a suitable garrison. After the defeat of Baum at Bennington, the Americans devised a plan to cut off Burgoyne's supplies. With that view an expedition was got up to recover Ticonderoga. The manner of conducting the movement was left to Gen. Lincoln with a force of 1500 of the New Hampshire and Connecticut militia. Such secrecy and activity had been used on the occasion that early on the 18th of September they succeeded in securing the old French lines near the fort and summoned the garrison to surrender. Brig. Gen. Powell however declined the invitation, and for four days maintained a most gallant defence, and at last obliged the enemy to retreat. On the evacuation of Ticonderoga in November, Brig. Powell returned to Canada. He obtained the brevet rank of Colonel in 1779; was advanced to the grade of Major General on 20th November, 1782, and to the chief command of the 69th regiment in April, 1792. On the 20th April, 1794, he became Colonel of the 15th Foot; Lieutenant-General in 1796; a General in the Army on the 1st January, 1801, and died at Lyme, at an advanced age, on the 14th July, 1814.

¹ MICHAEL KIRKMAN received a commission of 2d Lieutenant in the 21st Fuzileers on the 12th May, 1761, the regiment being sent on the expedition against Belleisle. He was appointed 1st Lieutenant in 1768; accompanied his regiment to Canada in 1776, and became Adjutant of it in February of that year, and Captain on the 8th June, 1777. His name appears for the last time in the Army List of 1782.

Upon that Signal, the men's Tents are to be struck immediately, and stowed in the Batteaux, together with Knapfacks, Blankets, Provisions, and Ammunition; no other Articles of Baggage are to be carried, consequently 17 Boats will suffice for each Battalion British, and 22 Boats for each Battalion German.

The remaining Boats to be left to bring forward the Officers' Tents and rest of the Baggage when ordered.

A Subaltern and 20 men pr. Regiment and one Captain from each Brigade to be left in charge of them.

Should it be necessary for the Line to move suddenly without embarking, four Guns will be fired from the Right and repeated upon the Left. At which Signal the Line to form with all possible expedition, in the Front of the Bells of Arms, and Tents to be left standing.

These Orders to remain in force during the whole Campaign.

The Troops are to make up Cartridges according to the Standing Order of the Army, to a hundred rounds a man. Those Regiments which are not supplied with that number in Powder, Ball and Paper, are to apply to the Artillery. But should the Magazine Vessel not be arrived for delivery of those Articles directly, the Regiments to make an equal Division of the Ammunition as it now stands, and the Brigadiers General will give Orders accordingly.

The greatest care to be taken of the Musquet Cartridges, not only of those carried by the Soldiers, but what is reserved in the Ammunition Boxes, and the Ball never to be lost or thrown away. And as the Orders given last year are sufficiently clear and strong on this matter, no more need be observed than that from the difficulty of fresh supplies cross the Lake, it becomes the duty of the Commanding Officers of Companies to be particularly attentive to this, so material a part of their Service. And the Commanding Officers of Corps are made answerable that the Orders given on this subject are obeyed.

¹ WILLIAM TWISS was born in the year 1745, and entered the Military Department of the Ordnance in July, 1760, and in November, 1763, obtained a commission as Ensign in the corps of Engineers. He did duty as an Engineer in the Garrison at Gibraltar until 1771, when he was promoted to a lieutenancy; from 1772 to the end of 1775, he was employed on the new fortifications for the defence of the dock-yard at Portsmouth; early in 1776 he embarked with General Burgoyne and his army for Canada, and landed at Quebec in June, when he was nominated Aid-de-Camp to Major

General Phillips. He was with the Army in pursuing the Americans up the river St. Lawrence, and was in the affair at Three Rivers, 8th June, and proceeded with the Army until the Americans were driven out of Canada, and embarked in their fleet and boats on Lake Champlain in July. He was then appointed by Sir Guy Carleton, the Commander-in-Chief, to be Comptroller of Works, and to superintend the construction of a fleet for Lake Champlain, with gun boats and batteaux for carrying the army over the Lake; and with the able assistance of the naval department, over which Admiral Schank was made Commissioner, they began, in the middle of July, every necessary preparation for so arduous an undertaking, and at a time that government had neither vessel nor boat on Lake Champlain, nor the smallest building for barracks, store-houses, or workshops. Notwithstanding all which, a numerous fleet was constructed which fought and defeated the Americans at Valcour Island, on the 11th and 12th October, and obtained the naval superiority during the whole war. He then proceeded with the army to Crown Point, and with it returned and wintered in Canada. In the Spring of 1777, he was appointed Commanding Engineer under General Burgoyne; and in July was with the army at the investment of Ticonderoga, where the Americans had employed many thousand men, during eight months, in fortifying Mount Independence; but from the position which the army took, these works were immediately abandoned. He served with the army the whole of the campaign, and was present at all the general actions, and was included in the Convention of Saratoga, but was, with other officers, exchanged a few days afterwards and returned to Ticonderoga, when he assisted in the evacuation of that post in November, 1777. At the close of 1778 he obtained a commission as Captain, and in that year was sent by General Sir F. Haldimand to Lake Ontario, to form a naval establishment on the east side of that lake; and was afterwards employed in different parts of Canada as Commanding Engineer, until the peace of 1783, when he obtained leave to return to England. In 1785 he was employed as Secretary to the Board of Land and Sea

From 1785 to 1792, he was employed as an Engineer at Portsmouth, where many new works were constructing, particularly Cumberland Fort, at the entrance of Langston Harbour. In June, 1794, he was made Lieutenant Colonel, and in the same year was appointed Lieutenant Governor of the Royal Academy at Woolwich. Between 1792 and 1799, he was employed in augmenting the defences on the coasts of Kent and Suffex, particularly at Dover Castle. In 1799, upon Colonel Hay of the Engineers being killed in Holland, he was sent as Commanding Royal Engineer, under the Duke of York, and remained there until the evacuation of that country was completed; and on the 1st January, 1800, he obtained the rank of Colonel, in which year he was sent to visit the Islands of Guernsey and Jersey. In 1802 he was ordered to make the

In 1803 he was again sent to the coasts of Kent and Suffex, and was appointed Brigadier General in February, 1804; Major General on the 30th October, 1805, in which year he was directed to carry into execution the system of detached redoubts and towers which government had adopted for the defence of that seacoast, and was finished about the year 1809; on the 24th of June in that year he was appointed Colonel Commandant of the Royal Engineers, when he ceased to be Lieutenant Governor of the Academy at Woolwich. In 1810, after an active service of fifty years, he obtained leave to be unemployed, and retired into the country. On the breaking out of the war in 1793, he being then nearly at the head of the list of Majors in the army, was appointed Lieutenant Colonel of one of the battalions formed from the independent companies; whence, in February, 1794, he exchanged to the command of the 30th regiment,

He had in the mean time been promoted to the rank of Colonel, in January, 1797, and Brigadier General, Oct. 1798. Early in 1803, he was appointed Brigadier General on the staff in Ireland, and commanded in the counties of Tipperary and Kilkenny; and was afterwards removed to the staff in England, and to command at Dover and Deal. He received the honour of knighthood May 3, that year. In January, 1804, he was appointed Colonel of the York Light Infantry Volunteers. In the same month he received orders to proceed immediately to Barbadoes, to take the temporary command of the troops in the Leeward Islands.

He arrived there in March, and, in pursuance of his instructions, sailed in April, in command of an expedition against the Dutch settlement of Surinam, which, after an active series of operations for about nine days, capitulated to the British arms. He remained at Surinam about a year in administration of the civil government; and, having obtained leave to return home on account of ill health, was honoured on his arrival with a patent of Baronetcy, dated December 5, 1805. In 1758 the regiment was employed in the expedition to St. Malo on the coast of France, and in 1760 served in

A Detachment of Infantry was also sent to cover the Workmen and defend the Post, when it became a matter of doubt whether the Officer Commanding that Detachment was to consider himself under the Orders of the Engineer at that Post, although of Senior Rank by Commission.

These troops having been afterwards ordered to the South, Brig. Hamilton was stationed at Fredericktown in Maryland. When orders were received for their removal to Lancaster on the approach of Lord Cornwallis in 1781, and for the separation of the officers from the soldiers, he did all in his power to alleviate the sufferings of the men and ordered that they should be paid the balance of their accounts. Brig. Hamilton was advanced to the rank of Major General in 1787, and on the 22d August, 1792, was appointed Colonel of the 15th Foot, and on the 20th June, 1794, of his old regiment, the 21st Fusiliers. This regiment formed, on arriving in that country, part of the 2d brigade under Brig. Hamilton and was cantoned in the settlements back of Montreal until the opening of this disastrous campaign. On the 7th of July, 1777, he took post with his regiment at Fort Anne, where he was attacked by the Americans in considerable force. Col. Hill gained great honor by his conduct in this action, for the enemy finding, after repeated attacks, that they could not force him in front endeavored to surround his men. This movement he however prevented by changing his ground with great calmness and bravery in the very heat of action, and after a fight of three hours obliged the Americans to retreat, leaving some thirty prisoners and the colors of the New Hampshire regiment in the hands of the 9th regiment.¹ Lt. Col. Hill participated in the other engagements in this campaign and signed the parole at Cambridge (Mass.), in December, 1777. He became a Colonel in the Army in 1782, and continued with the 9th until the Summer of 1783, when he retired from the Army. His name is among the subscribers to Capt. Anbury's book in 1789.

¹ Gen. Wilkinson in his Memoirs, p. 190, gives a somewhat different version of this affair, as follows: "The 9th regiment, under Lieut. Col. Hill, was sent in pursuit of Col. Long and his detachment, consisting of the invalids and convalescents, with his regiment, about 150 strong, making in the whole four or five hundred men. Col. Long, finding himself pressed, advanced and met Lieut. Colonel Hill, and an action ensued, in which the British officer claimed the victory; but it is a fact, that the 9th regiment had been beaten, and was retreating, and but for the entire failure of Col. Long's Ammunition, the Lieutenant-Colonel must have been made prisoner, as well as Captain Montgomery of that regiment, who was wounded and left on the field, when, as Gen. Burgoyne tells us, 'Col. Hill found it necessary to change his position in the heat of action;' but in truth, when his corps was obliged to retreat, and Colonel Long, for want of ammunition, could not pursue him."

To dislodge a party of Americans, of three hundred and ninety men, who had taken post at the Cedars, above Montreal, he with two subalterns and one hundred and twenty-six men, and one hundred and twenty Indians, were detached on the 11th of May to the attack of that post. Proceeding on his march, he learnt on the 17th, that the Americans were ignorant of his approach, and that if speedily attacked, the whole party might be surpris'd. The next day he landed at Point au Diable, six miles from the Church of the Cedars, and proceeded under the cover of a thick wood; when within a mile of the Fort, he halted the detachment to make the necessary dispositions for attack. One division was ordered to take possession of the wood, and to penetrate as near as possible to the enemy, when another party of Indians were placed at the Falls, at the entrance of the Cascade, to cut off the communication with the Island of Montreal. This party fell in with a detachment of the garrison returning from the Cascades with provisions, who fled to the Fort, and carried the first intelligence of Capt. Forster's approach. Capt. Forster sent a flag, demanding the surrender of the Fort, to which Major Butterfield requested four hours to consider of it. Capt. Forster, conceiving that the object was to gain time, and having learnt that an Officer of the Americans had been sent to Montreal for a reinforcement sent a second flag, stating that the Indians were at present under his command, but that if the Fort did not surrender, and any of them were killed by further resistance, he could not answer for the consequences. The Commandant, in answer to this demand,

The Second Brigade will send their spare Baggage off to Ticonderoga tomorrow morning. Lieut. Valancy, Assistant Quarter Master General, will regulate the spare Batteaux for this purpose. These Batteaux to be brought back as fast as possible, in order that the First Brigade may take their down, who will leave them at Ticonderoga, except what will be necessary to bring the men back to Camp.

agreed to surrender the Fort, on condition, however, that the garrison should retire to Montreal, which Capt. Forster not consenting to, a redoubt was thrown up on the edge of the wood, at five hundred yards distance from it. On the morning of the 19th of May, he advanced within one hundred and twenty yards of the Fort, and commenced a heavy fire of musketry, until twelve o'clock, when the American Commandant surrendered, on condition of sparing their lives, and preserving their baggage from plunder. As Captain Forster was informed the next day, that Major Sherborne, with one hundred men, was advancing from Montreal, he ordered one hundred Indians to take possession of the woods on both sides of the road, and to attack the detachment as it advanced. An action ensued, which only continued about ten minutes, when the Americans surrendered, and were brought to the Fort by the Indians, who had resolved on putting every one of them to death. Captain Forster remonstrated with them on this inhuman conduct, and at length, by his persuasions, and by presents, effected their release. Capt. Forster then left the Cedars, on his way down the river, and on his arrival at Vaudreuil, was informed that Colonel Arnold, with a strong party, had advanced as far as La Chine from Montreal, and had with him six hundred men, treble the number of Forster's party. Forster, upon hearing this, did not push on, and Arnold apprized of the weakness of Forster's party, marched to meet him. On their approach, the latter formed in three divisions on three several points of land that stretched out into the river. They had no sooner taken post, than they were attacked on all sides, but defended themselves so well, that the Americans were defeated, and retired to St. Anne's, on the Island of Montreal. Capt. Forster, encumbered with his prisoners, proposed a cartel, which Arnold readily assenting to, on the 27th of May, an exchange was effected for two Majors, nine Captains, twenty Sub-

The Prisoners of War are to be conveyed from Skeinesborough to Ticonderoga tomorrow morning early under the Escort of an Officer and twenty men British.

The Sick necessary to be sent to the General Hospital to go at the same time.

When the Army moves a Detachment consisting of fifty British, fifty Germans, and fifty Provincials will be left posted at Skeinesborough for some days; and that the Battalions may be weakened as little as possible, the Detachments are to be composed of the Convalescents, and men least able to march; and this Notice is given in hopes that some men in slight cases of the Flux, designed for the Hospital, may upon examination be found capable of this Duty.

Brigadier General Powell will inform the Quarter M. General this afternoon of the number of Batteaux necessary for the above purpose, as far as regards the British. General Reidesel will regulate the proper number of Batteaux for the sick of the Left Wing, and send them from the East Creek.

The Escort, after conducting the Horses and Carts to the Neighbourhood of Fort Anne, will remain as a Guard upon them till the Army comes up. They will therefore take with them their Knapfacks, Blankets, and three days' Provisions. The Conductors are to take in

He obtained his company in 1762, and exchanged into the 40th regiment in 1764; became Major of the 24th Foot 5th March, 1775, and was killed at the battle of Hubbardton, July 7th, 1777. On this occasion he commanded the advanced guard. About five o'clock in the morning, says Anbury, we came up to the enemy who were busily employed in cooking their provisions. Major Grant, of the 24th regiment, who had the advanced guard, attacked their picquets, which were soon driven in to the main body. From this attack we lament the death of this very gallant and brave officer, who in all probability fell a victim to the great disadvantages we experience peculiar to this unfortunate contest, those of the rifle-men. Upon his coming up with the enemy, he got upon the stump of a tree to reconnoitre, and had hardly given the men orders to fire, when he was struck by a rifle ball, fell off the tree, and never uttered another syllable.

1765, Mr. Coote passed into the 24th by purchase. He was ordered to Canada with his regiment in 1776, having been promoted to the command of a Company on 2d March of that year, and went on half pay after the peace of 1783, and so remained until 1797, after which his name disappears from the Army list.

² THOMAS SCOTT was appointed to an Ensigncy in the 24th Foot the 20th May, 1761; he joined in Germany, and served the whole of the campaign of 1762, carried the colors at the action of Willimfall or Grabiniton, and also at the attack of the British picquets on the Fulda, under the command of Major Hume of the 25th regiment, which the 24th supported. After the war he served at Gibraltar for nearly six years with the exception of one year's leave of absence. The 7th June, 1765, he was appointed Lieutenant; he accompanied the regiment to America in the Spring of 1776, and served that campaign and the following one under General Burgoyne, with a company of Marksmen attached to a large body of Indians, during which there was a variety of very fatiguing and hard service. General Frazer, and which he effected with much difficulty and great personal risk of being taken and hanged as a spy, having at the same time suffered the extreme of hunger and cold. He was appointed the 8th October, 1777, Captain in the 53d regiment, then in Canada, with which he served the remaining part of the war; he was upon two expeditions from Canada to the Mohawk river, under the command of Sir John Johnston, which were attended with great fatigue, and much harassed by the enemy, for which service he was selected by Sir Frederick Haldimand. He commanded the Fort and Island of Michilimackinac with its extensive dependencies for a year, having been sent there for the purpose of carrying into effect reforms ordered to be made by government, as well as to correct abuses which had crept into the Indian department. This he did to the entire satisfaction of Lord Dorchester, at that time commanding in Canada, and to the company of merchants trading to that country. He returned to Europe twelve months before his regiment in 1788. In 1791 he served six months during the Spanish armament with a detachment of the 53d regiment on board his Majesty's ship Hannibal, commanded by Sir John Colpoys; accompanied the regiment to the continent in the Spring of 1793 under Sir Ralph Abercrombie; was in the Affair at Famars, served the whole of the siege of Valenciennes and of Dunkirk, and was in the whole of that day's attack where the Austrian General D'Alton was killed; also at the siege of Nieuport, where he was promoted to the rank of Major for his exertions in the defence thereof (13th November, 1793); was in the action of the 24th of May, and was wounded that day in the inside of the right thigh, by a musket ball. The 27th October, 1794, he was appointed to the Lieutenant Colonelcy of the 94th (Scotch brigade) regiment by purchase, and went with it to Gibraltar in 1795, to the Cape of Good Hope in 1796, where he was Deputy Adjutant General to the forces, which situation he relinquished in order to go with his regiment to India in 1798. The Officers will also recollect that the Order of the Camp at Crown Point for the Troops to get instantly under arms on the firing Four Guns, subsists during the Campaign, and that we are now within three miles of the Enemy. They will consequently take care never to be so far out of the way as to expose themselves to the censure of not being among the first at the head of the Lines in case of an Alert.

The rolls are to be called twice a day and once a night at inequal hours.

If fetching water is made an Excuse of Absence from roll calling, it becomes a reflection upon the Discipline of the Regiments, as that Duty, when the water is not close to the Camp, should be done like all other Duties beyond the Camp Colours, by Parties under the Charge of Non Commission Officers.

The Regiments will be in readiness to receive Provisions this afternoon at six o'clock from Mr. Commissary McKensie.

The Muster Rolls are to be prepared immediately; the Regiments will get their Instructions from Captain Campbell,¹ 29th Regiment, Deputy Commissary General of Musters.

The strict œconomy in the delivery and receipt of Provisions at all times are essential Duties, now becomes an object of the most important consequence. The fate of the Campaign may depend upon it, and the preservation of the live Cattle requires the most particular attention. They are only to be slaughtered for the sick, and in such cases as absolutely require it. The Commanding Officers of Regiments will therefore send in an account upon honour of the fresh Provisions requisite for their sick to the Commissary, the day before the General Issue of Provisions to the Army, and be responsible that a proper reduction of Rations is made for the fresh Provisions received.

It appearing beyond a doubt that great abuses prevail among the Soldiers and Inhabitants regarding the sale of horses, that horses have been often stole from Inhabitants, and that Officers not knowing this have been led by cheap prices to purchase such horses; in order to stop such iniquitous proceedings, and that Officers may not be imposed on, it is strictly ordered that no horses are to be bought privately by any Officer or other person, but that whoever has horses to sell bring them to the Board of Regulation for examination, and if proved the real property of the person so bringing them, notice is given that at 12 o'clock every day there will be sales at the Tent where the Board sits. But the fact having become notorious to the whole Army, the Lieut. In case of any movement on this side the Hudson's River, Major General *Reidesel*¹ will form the Left Wing of the Army at the Head of this Encampment, but not march off the Ground.

¹ FRIEDRICH ADOLPH RIEDESEL was born on the 3d June, 1738, at Lauterbach in Rhinehessie. About the age of 15 he was sent to College at Marburg, where he shortly after entered the military service as Ensign in an Infantry regiment then in garrison in that place. This regiment having been received into the English establishment, Ensign Riedesel accompanied it to England, where he remained for a couple of years and acquired, during his sojourn, a tolerable knowledge of the English language. On the breaking out of the Seven years' war in 1756, his regiment was recalled to Germany, where he was attached to the person of Prince Ferdinand of Brunswick. He was appointed in the year 1760, Captain of a regiment of Hessian Hussars, then lately formed, and which is described as one of the best and most splendid in the service. After serving two years in that corps, he found himself passed by when promotions were made, which led him to resign his commission, but in reparation for the loss Prince Ferdinand appointed him Lieutenant-Colonel of his Black Hussars in 1762. He was engaged in active service throughout the whole of the war, and when peace was declared retired into winter quarters, and in the month of December, 1762, was married to Frederica Von Maffow, second daughter of Commissary General Von Maffow, whose acquaintance he had formed in the course of his military career. On the disbanding of his regiment in 1767, Riedesel was appointed Adjutant-General of the Brunswick Army, and in 1772, named Colonel of Carabineers, formed shortly after into a regiment of Dragoons. A few years after this the American Revolution broke out, and to crush the rising spirit of Independence, England entered early in 1776, into treaties with the petty sovereigns of Germany to take into British service nearly 20,000 German troops. Over 4,000 of these were Brunswickers. Colonel Riedesel was advanced to the rank of Major General and appointed to the command of the latter corps, which consisted of the following troops: 1. A regiment of (dis-mounted) Dragoons; under Lieut. Col. Baum. 2. Prince Frederick's regiment of Infantry; Lieut. Col. Pratorius. 3. Rhets's regiment of Infantry; Lieut. Col. von Ehrenkrook. 4. Riedesel's regiment of Infantry; Lieut. Col. von Speth. 5. Von Specht's regiment of Infantry; Col. von Specht. 6. Grenadiers; Lieut. Colonel Breyman. 7. Rifle Battalion (Jagers); Lieut. March, 1776; arrived at Spithead on the 28th of the same month and sailed on the 4th April for Quebec, where he arrived on the 1st of June. After spending a year in Canada, he proceeded on the present expedition. It is not necessary to detail here the operations in which he was engaged. After the surrender of the Army he accompanied General Burgoyne to Albany, where he was entertained with most honorable hospitality at the mansion of Gen. Schuyler. He left that city on the 22d October, 1777, and proceeded to Cambridge, where he and the other German prisoners arrived on the 7th November following. In Nov. 1778, the German troops were ordered to Virginia, whither Maj. Gen. Riedesel followed, and in the course of the year 1779 were sent into Pennsylvania. In November of that year he was permitted to remove to New York. Having been exchanged in the autumn of 1780, Gen. Clinton conferred on him a command on Long Island, and Maj. Gen. Riedesel in consequence took up his quarters in Brooklyn. He remained there until 11th July, 1781, when he, his family and suite embarked on board the transport Little Deal for Canada. After touching at Halifax he arrived a second time at Quebec on the 10th September, 1781, and proceeded to occupy his old quarters at Sorel, having been put in charge of the district south of the St. Lawrence between Sorel and Lake Champlain. In 1783, an order was received to send back the German troops to Europe, and Maj. Gen. Riedesel sailed from Quebec in August of that year, and after a brief passage arrived in England, whence he proceeded to Brunswick. Of the 4000 Brunswickers that left in 1776, about 2800 returned to Germany. On the 5th of March, 1787, Maj. Gen. Riedesel was advanced to the rank of Lieut. General, and in the following year was appointed to the command of the Brunswick contingent, which formed part of the German army that was sent to Holland to support the cause of the Stadholder. He served with brief intervals in that country until the close of 1793, when he retired to Lauterbach. He returned in 1794 to Brunswick, of which city he was appointed Commandant, and died on the 6th January, 1800, in the 62d year of his age. Of nine children, one daughter only was living in 1856. Mde. Riedesel, who has made herself familiar to all American readers by her interesting and entertaining Letters, survived her husband eight years and died in Berlin on the 29th March, 1808.

¹ JOHN SCHANCK was a son of Alexander Schanck, Esq. of Castle-reg, in Scotland, and was born about the year 1746. He went to sea in early life, and was for some time in the merchant service. In 1757 he served for the first time in a man-of-war, the Elizabeth, of 74 guns, commanded by Sir Hugh Palliser, whom he afterwards accompanied to another ship in the capacity of

Master's Mate. We next find him in the Emerald frigate, Captain Douglas, with whom he went to the north cape of Lapland, to observe the transit of Venus. About 1771 Mr. Schanck joined the Princess Amelia of 80 guns, fitted for the Jamaica station, under Sir George Rodney. Previous to this, he appears to have the good fortune to save the life of Mr. Whitworth, who was overfet in a small boat in Portsmouth Harbour, and afterwards loft in America while ferving under Lord Howe. Mr. Schanck was alfo for fome time a midfhipman on board the Barfleur, and was ordered to America, where he became known to Earl Percy. In 1774 he invented a new construction of veffels, with fliding keels, adapted for navigating in shallow water, and applied his invention to a boat built for Lord Percy, then at Bofton. The experiment was attended with fo much fatisfaction, that it was introduced into the Britifh navy, and led to other improvements of a fimilar kind. In the month of June, 1776, after a laborious fervice of eighteen years' continuance, Mr. Schanck was promoted to the rank of Lieutenant, and appointed to the Canceaux, an armed fchooner, employed on the river St. Lawrence. This command he nominally retained for a confiderable time; we fay nominally, for almoft immediately after the commencement of the war in Canada, the late Admiral Vandeput, with whom he had ferved as a midfhipman in India, and who had conceived a juft idea of his talents, recommended him as a proper per-

In fact he might have been truly called the civil commander-in-chief, all the conjunct duties of the Admiralty and Navy Board being vefted in him. The force under his direktion was confiderable, no lefs than four different flotillas, or fquadrons of fmall veffels, being at one time fubject to his direktion in the civil line. His exertions and merit were fo confpicuous, as to draw forth the higheft encomiums from the admiral commanding on the ftation, particularly on account of the celerity and expedition with which he conftituted a fhip of over 300 tons, called the Inflexible, the very prefence of which vefel on the Lakes ftruck with infurmountable terror the whole American fleet, and compelled it to feek for fafety in ignominious flight, after having held out a vain boaft of many months' continuance, that the firft appearance of the British flotilla would be the certain forerunner of its immediate destruction. The Inflexible was originally put on the stocks at Quebec; her floors were all laid, and some timbers in; the whole, namely, the floors, keel, stem and stern, were then taken down, and carried up the St. Lawrence to Chamblais, and thence to St. John's. Her keel was laid, for the second time, on the morning of the 2d September; and by sunset, not only the above-mentioned parts were laid and fixed, but a considerable quantity of fresh timber was, in the course of the same day, cut out and formed into futtocks, top-timbers, beams, planks, &c. On the 30th September, being twenty-eight days from the period when the keel was laid, the Inflexible was launched; and on the evening of the 1st October, she actually sailed, completely manned, victualled, and equipped for service. In ten days afterwards this vessel was engaged with the enemy; so that it may be said, without the smallest exaggeration of Lieutenant Schanck's merits, that he built, rigged, and completed a ship, which fought and beat her enemy, in less than six weeks from the commencement of her construction. Among other curious particulars relative to this extraordinary circumstance, it was no uncommon thing for a number of trees, which were actually growing at dawn of day, to form different parts of the ship, either as planks, beams, or other timbers, before night. Few professional men, and methodical shipwrights, would, perhaps, credit this fact, were it not established beyond all possibility of controversy. Exclusively of the armaments which he had fitted out and equipped for service on the Lakes Ontario, Erie, Huron, and Michigan, Lieut. Schanck had the direction of four different dock-yards at the same time, situated at St. John's, Quebec, Carleton Island, and Detroit. In all these multifarious branches and divisions of public duty, his diligence and zeal were equalled only by the strict attention which he paid on all occasions to the economical expenditure of the public money; a rare and highly honorable example, particularly at that time of day, when speculation and plunder were charges by no means uncommon, and when the opportunities which he possessed of enriching himself, without danger of incurring complaint, or risking discovery, were perhaps unprecedented. His services on this occasion were not solely confined to the naval department. When Gen. Burgoyne arrived from England, and placed himself at the head of a formidable army, by means of which, in co-operation with other assistance, it was expected that America would be suddenly and completely subdued, Lieut. Schanck's talents were again called into exertion. In a country so frequently intersected by creeks, rivulets, streams, and rapid rivers, the progress of troops was liable to an endless variety of obstructions. It is usual in Europe to make use of pontoons on similar occasions; but these were not always to be obtained in America, and even when procured became cumbersome and inconvenient in a forest, as they were to be carried through swamps and woods, sometimes impervious to wagons. To obviate the inconvenience to which Gen. Burgoyne was subjected on this account, Lieut. Schanck became not only the inventor, but the constructor of several floating bridges, by which the progress of the army was materially aided, and without which it would have been in all probability totally impeded much sooner than it really was. They were so constructed as to be capable of navigating themselves; and were not only equipped with masts and sails for that purpose, but, having been built at the distance of seventy miles from Crown Point, were actually conveyed thither without difficulty, for the purpose of forming a bridge at that place. The unhappy result of Gen. Burgoyne's expedition for the subjugation of the Colonies is too well known; and it is almost unnecessary to remark, that the floating bridges, like the army destined to pass over them, were but too soon in the power of the enemy. Such services as these could not but be followed by correspondent rewards; and we accordingly find Lieut. Schanck promoted, first to the rank of commander, and then to that of post-captain; the latter event occurred August 15, 1783. After the commencement of hostilities with France, consequent to the French Revolution, Captain Schanck's abilities were considered far too valuable to be neglected; and he was accordingly appointed to be principal agent of transports in the expedition sent to the West Indies, under the orders of Admiral Sir John Jervis, and General Sir Charles Grey. This fatiguing and important service he executed, not only with the strictest diligence, but with an attention to the national finances, uncommon, and perhaps unprecedented. He remained some time at Martinico, after the capture of that valuable island. So conspicuous was his assiduity in the preceding service, proposed and of the time they are meant to be absent from the Camp, that a judgement may be that when the reverses of war compelled the British troops to quit Flanders, and retire into Holland, whither they were followed by the armies of the French Convention, Capt. Schanck was appointed superintendent of all the vessels employed in the various services of conveying either troops, stores, or property, from one country to the other; and his exertions tended at least to reduce disaster within its narrowest possible limits. The acquisition of coast gained by the enemy, and the general complexion of public affairs, causing an apprehension that an attempt might be made to invade Britain, a new and formidable system of defence was, by the orders of the Admiralty Board projected, arranged, and completely carried into execution, under the direction of Capt. Schanck. In short, the defence of the whole coast, from Portsmouth to Berwick-upon-Tweed, was confided to him; and few commands have ever been bestowed of more magnitude and importance, or requiring more extensive abilities. The objects he had to attain were infinitely more multifarious than generally fall to the lot either of a land or of a naval officer; for he was not only under the necessity of contriving and constructing a variety of rafts, and vessels of different descriptions, capable of receiving cannon, but he was also compelled to fit and adapt for the same purpose, the greater part even of the small boats which he found employed in different occupations on the coast. When even these difficulties were overcome, he had still to undergo the task of teaching the inhabitants throughout the several districts, the art of fighting and managing this heterogeneous, though highly serviceable flotilla, in case the necessity of the country should be such as to require their personal exertions. To have overcome these multiplied difficulties would, in itself, be a matter of sufficient praise to entitle a man to the highest tribute public gratitude could bestow, were every other occasion that could call for it wanting. In 1799, Captain Schanck was again appointed to superintend the transport service connected with the expedition to Holland; and on the formation of the Transport Board, he was nominated one of the Commissioners; a station he continued to hold with the highest credit and honour to himself, till the year 1802, when, in consequence of an ophthalmic complaint, he was under the necessity of retiring from the fatigues of public service. On the promotion of Flag-officers, which took place November 9, 1805, Commissioner Schanck was promoted to the rank of Rear-Admiral. He became a Vice-Admiral, July 31, 1810; and an Admiral of the Blue, July 19, 1821. Admiral Schanck was one of the original members of John Wright, R.N., and who died May 6, 1812, leaving a young family. On the 6th of March, 1823, Admiral Schanck died at Dalish, in Devonshire, in the 83d year of his age.

In both these distinctions the Artillery are to be noticed, and the Brigade under Capt. *Jones*¹ in particular deserves a conspicuous place.

His particular thanks to Major General Phillips cannot be omitted upon an Occasion where, added to the service of the department under his special inspection, he finds himself under great obligations for the assistance of a most able and zealous Second in General command.

knowledgements, and the regular fire given by the Troops he brought up, and the good countenance of the Germans in general was fully noticed.

Brigadier General Frazer took his position in the beginning of the day with great judgment, and sustained the Action with his usual presence of mind and vigour.

Brigadier General Hamilton acquitted himself very honourably at the head of his Brigade by his activity and good conduct during an Action of several hours.

Amidst these general subjects of Applause, the impetuosity and uncertain aim of the British Troops in giving their fire, and the mistake they are still under, in preferring it to the Baynotte, is to be much lamented. The Lieut. General is persuaded this error will be corrected in the next engagement, upon conviction of their own experience and reason, as well as upon that general principle of discipline never to fire but by the order of an officer.

One hundred and twenty men of tried bravery and fidelity from the Provincial Corps of Jessops, Peters, McAlpins, and McKay are to be incorporated for the service of this Campaign only in the six British Regiments, in the proportion of twenty to each Regiment. They will have a Certificate under the hand of the Lieut. General to entitle them to a Discharge on the 25th day of December next. They will also receive a gratuity upon their incorporation, and another at the expiration of their service, and this will be the only number required from them.

Those Corps whose establishment is to take place upon a certain number of men being raised, are allowed to reckon the men furnished upon this order as a part of that number.

It is not doubted that the Officers now at the head of the several Corps concerned, will assist to carry into effect so very material a piece of service by every encouragement in their power, in order to the number being supplied by Volunteers; the names of whom, and the Corps they belong to, are to be sent to Capt. Campble, Deputy Muster Master General, early tomorrow morning.

Discharging the Arms in Camp, which would be at all times irregular, is particularly so when near the Enemy, as it occasions false Alarms. The Commanding Officers of Regiments are to be responsible that the standing order against keeping Arms loaded in the Bell Tents be better enforced, and if any duties occasionally require loaded Arms that they may be properly examined by an officer of a Company every morning, that such as cannot be drawn may be collected in one place and fired together.

RELATIVE TO THE CONVENTION.

No. 1.

October 13th, 1777.

LT. General Burgoyne is desirous of sending a Field Officer with a Message to M. Gen. Gates upon a matter of high moment to both Armies. He requests to be informed at what hour Gen. Gates will receive him tomorrow morning.

M: General Gates.

Major General Gates will receive a Field Officer from Lt. General Burgoyne at the advanced post of the Army of the United States, at ten o'clock tomorrow morning; from whence he will be conducted to Head Quarters.

Lt. Gen. Burgoyne.

No. 2.

Major Kingston delivered the following Message to M. General Gates, October 14th, from Lt. Gen. Burgoyne.

After having fought you twice, Lieut. Genl. Burgoyne has waited some days in his present position, determined to try a third conflict against any force you could bring to attack him.

He is apprized of the superiority of your numbers, and the disposition of your troops to impede his supplies, and render his retreat a scene of Carnage on both sides. In this situation he is impelled by humanity, and thinks himself justified by established principles and precedents of state and war to spare the lives of brave men upon honourable terms. Should Major Genl. Gates be inclined to treat upon that idea, General Burgoyne would propose a cessation of arms during the time necessary to communicate the preliminary terms by which in any extremity he and his Army mean to abide.

No. 3.

In answer to the Message by Major Kingston, Major General Gates delivered the following Terms:

1. General Burgoyne's Army being exceedingly reduced by repeated defeats, by Desertion, by Sickness, &c., their Provisions exhausted, their Military Stores,

Tents and Baggage taken or destroyed, their retreat cut off and their Camp invested, they can only be allowed to surrender prisoners of war.

2. The Officers and Soldiers may keep the Baggage belonging to them; the Generals of the United States never permit Individuals to be pillaged.

3. The Troops under his Excellency Gen. Burgoyne will be conducted by the most convenient Route to New England, marching by easy marches, and sufficiently provided for by the Way.

4. The Officers will be admitted on Parole, may wear their side Arms, and will be treated with the Liberality customary in Europe, so long as they by proper behaviour continue to deserve it; but those who are apprehended having broken their Parole (as some British Officers have done) must expect to be close confined.

5. All Publick Stores, Artillery, Arms, Ammunition, Carriages, Horses, &c. &c. must be delivered

Answer.

Lieut. General Burgoyne's Army, however reduced, will never admit that their retreat is cut off while they have Arms in their hands.

This Article is answered by Gen. Burgoyne's first proposal, which is here annexed.

There being no Officer in this Army under, or capable of being under the description of breaking his Parole, this Article needs no answer.

All Publick Stores may be delivered, Arms excepted.

to Commissaries appointed to receive them.

6. These Terms being agreed to and signed, the Troops under his Excellency General Burgoyne's Command, may be drawn up in their Encampments, where they will be ordered to Ground their Arms, and may thereupon be marched to the River side to be passed over in their way towards Bennington.

This Article inadmissible in any Extremity; sooner than this Army will consent to ground their Arms in their Encampment, they will rush on the Enemy, determined to take no Quarters.

7. A Cessation of Arms to continue till sunsett to receive General Burgoyne's Answer.

Signed,

HORATIO GATES.

No. 4.

Major Kingfton met the Adjutant General of Major General Gates's Army October 14th, at Sun Sett, with General Burgoyne's Answer, and delivered the following Message.

If General Gates does not mean to recede from the 6th Article, the Treaty ends at once.

The Army will to a man proceed to any Act of Desperation rather than submit to that Article.

Then delivered the Preliminary Articles from Lieutenant General Burgoyne and the Army under his Command.

The Cessation of Arms ends this Evening.

No. 5.

Answers being given to Major General Gates's Proposals, it remains for Lt. General Burgoyne and the Army under his Command to state the following preliminary Articles on their part.

1. The Troops to march out of their Camp with the Honours of War, and the Artillery of the Intrenchments, which will be left as hereafter may be regulated.

Answer.

The Troops to march out of their Camp with the Honours of War, and the Artillery of the Intrenchments to the Varge of the River where the old Fort stood, where the Arms and the Artillery must be left.

2. A free passage to be granted to this Army to Great Britain, upon condition of not serving in North America during the present Contest; and a proper port to be assigned for the entry of Transports to receive the Troops whenever Gen. Howe shall so order.

Agreed to for the Port of Boston.

3. Should any Cartel take place, by which this Army or any part of it may be exchanged, the foregoing Article to be void so far as such Exchange shall be made.

Agreed.

4. All Officers to retain their Carriages, Bat Horses and other Cattle, and no Baggage to be molested or searched, the Lt. General giving his Honour that there are no Publick Stores secreted therein. Maj. General Gates will of course take the necessary measures for the security of this Article.

Agreed,

5. Upon the march the Officers are not to be separated from their men, and in Quarters the Officers shall be lodged according to Rank, and are not to be hindered from assembling their men for Roll-calling, and other necessary purposes of Regularity.

Agreed to as far as circumstances will admit.

6. There are various Corps in this Army, composed of Sailors, Batteauxmen, Artificers, Drivers, Independent Companies, and Followers of the Army, and it is expected that these Persons, of whatever Country, shall be included in the fullest sense and utmost Extent of the above Articles, and comprehended in every respect as British Subjects.

Agreed to in the fullest extent.

7. All Canadians and Persons belonging to the Establishment in Canada to be permitted to return there.

Agreed.

8. Passports to be immediately granted to three Officers not exceeding the Rank of Captain, who shall be appointed by Gen. Burgoyne to carry despatches to Sir William Howe, Sir Guy Carleton, and to Great Britain by the way of New York, and the publick faith to be engaged that these despatches are not to be opened.

Agreed.

9. The foregoing Articles are to be considered only as preliminaries for framing a Treaty, in the Course of which others may arise to be considered by both parties, for which purpose it is proposed that two Officers of each Army shall meet, and report their deliberations to their respective Generals.

This Capitulation is to be finished by two o'clock this Day, and the Troops march from their Encampments at five, and be in readiness to move towards Boston tomorrow morning.

10. Lieut. General Burgoyne will send his Deputy Adjutant General to receive Major General Gates's Answer tomorrow morning at ten o'clock.

Complied with.

No. 6.

The eight first Preliminary Articles of Lieutenant General Burgoyne's Proposals, and the second, third and fourth of those of Major General Gates of yesterday being agreed to, the foundation of the proposed Treaty is out of Dispute, but the several Subordinate Articles and Regulations necessarily springing from those Preliminaries, and requiring Explanation and precision between the parties before a Definitive Treaty can be safely executed, a longer Time than that mentioned by General Gates in his answer to the 9th Article becomes indispensably necessary. Lieutenant General Burgoyne is willing to appoint two Officers immediately to meet two others from Major General Gates, to propound, discuss and settle those Subordinate Articles, in order that the Treaty in due form may be executed as soon as possible.

Major Kingston¹ has Authority to settle the place for the meeting of the Officers proposed.

¹ ROBERT KINGSTON entered the Army 3d September, 1756, as Ensign in the 11th Foot and was promoted to a lieutenancy in that Corps 26th January, 1758. In the following year he exchanged into the 16th Light Dragoons, then commanded by Lt. Col. John Burgoyne, and was appointed Captain in the Army 27th April, 1761, and became Major 15th July, 1768. He went on half pay in the fore part of 1773, and in April, 1776, was appointed to the command of the Irish Invalids, who were then called in active service. He accompanied this expedition as Adjutant General and Military Secretary to General Burgoyne and was promoted to be Lieutenant Colonel in the Army 29th August, 1777. Gen. Wilkinson gives the following particulars of some of the incidents connected with the negotiations which were carried on between Gates and Burgoyne at this time. After the former consented to receive a Field Officer, I asked him, says Wilkinson, whether he had not condescended improperly in agreeing to receive the deputy of his adversary at his head quarters, within his guards, and between the lines of his army? After a minute's reflection he replied, "You are right, young man; I was hasty; but what's to be done?" "I will meet the flag," said I, "and endeavour to draw the message from the officer; but if he claims your engagement, he must be admitted." "Agreed," said he, "do so;" and at the hour appointed I repaired to the advanced post, accompanied by Mr. Henry Livingston, of the Upper Manor on the Hudson's river. The bridge across the Fish-kill had been destroyed, but the sleepers remained. We did not wait many minutes before the chamade was beat at the advanced guard of the enemy, and an officer descending the hill, stepped across the creek on one of the sleepers of the late bridge; it was "Major Kingston, with a Message from Lieutenant-general Burgoyne to Major-general Gates." I named to him "Col. Wilkinson, on the part of General Gates, to receive the message." He paused a moment, pulled out a paper, looked at it, and observed, "My orders direct me to Major-general Gates." "It is to save time and trouble that I am authorized to receive the message you bear." He then took General Gates's note to General Burgoyne from his pocket, read it, and said, "General Gates has agreed to receive the message, and I am not authorized to deliver it to any other person." "Well then, Sir, You must submit to be hood-winked." He affected to start at the proposition, and objected, on the ground of its being an indignity: I could but smile at the expression, and observed, that "I had understood there was nothing more common than to blindfold military messengers, when they were admitted within the walls of a place, or the guards of a camp." He replied, "Well, Sir, I will submit to it, but under the express stipulation, that no indignity is intended to the British arms." I then carefully bound up his eyes with his own handkerchief; he took my arm, and in this way we walked upwards of a mile to head quarters.

Fixed by Major Kingston to be upon the Ground where Mr. Schuyler's House stood.

Major Kingston appeared to be about forty; he was a well formed, ruddy, handsome man, and expatiated with taste and eloquence on the beautiful scenery on the Hudson's river, and the charms of the season: when I introduced him into General Gates's tent, and named him, the gentlemen saluted each other familiarly, with "General Gates, your servant,"—"Ah! Kingston, how do you do?" and a shake of the hand. Being seated a few minutes, he arose and observed he had certain communications to make Major General Gates from Lieutenant General Burgoyne, and to guard against inaccuracy of memory, he had committed them to paper, and with permission would read them. The General consented, and the Major took from his pocket and read: "The General from a deal of business did not yesterday answer your letter about the officers, but intended it. In regard to the reproaches made upon this army of burning the country, they are unjust; General Schuyler's house and adjacent buildings remained protected till General Gates's troops approached the Ford, General Burgoyne avows the order for setting fire at that time to every thing that covered the movement. The barracks particularly took fire by mere accident, and measures were taken, though ineffectual, to save them.

"If there has been any vindictive spirit in burning other buildings on the march, it has probably been done by some secret well-wishers to the American cause, as General Burgoyne has been informed that some of the buildings belonged to supposed friends of the king. The General does not think that General Gates has a right, from any thing that has appeared in his conduct or reasoning, to make use of the term TRIFLING; and he still persists, that he cannot interfere with the prisoners in General Howe's army, and more especially in a case that has been under negotiation between Gen. Howe and General Washington." He added that General Gates would perceive this was an answer to his letter of the 12th, and that the other paper to which he claimed the General's attention was of a very different nature; he then offered, [as printed under No. 2, p. 133.] So soon as he had finished, to my utter astonishment, General Gates put his hand to his side pocket, pulled out a paper, and presented it to Kingston, observing, "There, Sir, are the Terms on which Gen. Burgoyne must surrender." The Major appeared thunderstruck, but read the paper, whilst the old chief surveyed him attentively through his spectacles. Having finished the perusal of the propositions of Gen. Gates, Major Kingston appeared exceedingly mortified, and said to the General, "I must beg leave to decline delivering this paper to Lieutenant General Burgoyne, because, although I cannot presume to speak for him, I think the propositions it contains cannot be submitted to." The General observed he might be mistaken, and that there could be no impropriety in his delivering them. Kingston requested they might be sent by one of his own officers, which the General declined, and remarked, "that as he had brought the message, he ought to take back the answer;" to which the Major reluctantly consented, took leave, and I again filleted him, and at his request conducted him to our advanced guard. Very different was his conversation in returning: he complained of General Gates's propositions, to which I was still a perfect stranger; talked of the pride and spirit of his army, and called my recollection to the feats performed by six British regiments at the battle of Minden, I felt for his chagrin, and said nothing to increase it; and having passed him beyond our guards, I hastened back to head quarters. About sunset the same day it was notified to me that a flag waited at the advanced guard, and I proceeded to receive it. I again met Major Kingston, who presented another message from Lieutenant General Burgoyne to Major General Gates, accompanied by the propositions of the latter, which had been transmitted by Major Kingston, and the answers of the former annexed, together with the preliminary articles, proposed by General Burgoyne, which were substantially assented to by General Gates. Burgoyne made his own Convention, and saved his accoutrements, military chest,¹ and colours,² all of which were retained notwithstanding General Gates's letter to Congress of the 3d December, 1777, which was unworthy

Q. Did any part of it fall into the hands of the enemy? A. Not a shilling that I ever heard of.—Examination of Colonel Kingston before the House of Commons.

² General Riedesel commanded that the colours should not be surrendered to the enemy with the arms, but on the contrary that the staffs should be burnt and the flags carefully packed up; this was done as ordered, so that each of the German regiments really kept possession of their colours; and the same was no doubt the case with the British corps, as the colours of the 62d regiment particularly were on the field the 19th September, and three or four Ensigns were killed.—Memoirs of the Baroness of Riedesel.

Lieut. General Burgoyne therefore requires that two Officers on his part be permitted to see that the strength of the forces now opposed to him is such as will convince him that no such Detachments have been made, and that the same principle of Superiority on which the Treaty first began still exists.

No. 8.

Message to Lieut. General Burgoyne from Major General Gates, Oct. 16th, 1777, by Colonel Wilkinfon.

Major General Gates, in justice to his own reputation, condescends to assure your Excellency, that no violation of the Treaty has taken place on his part, since the commencement of it. I have further to inform your Excellency that the requisition contained in your Message of this day is inadmissible; and as it now remains with your Excellency to ratify or dissolve the Treaty, Major General Gates expects your immediate reply.

Lieut. Gen. Burgoyne requested time to lay the Message before his Council, which was granted, and the Treaty was signed and exchanged in the Evening.

Letter from Capt. Craig¹ to Col. Wilkinson.

SIR,

Upon reporting the Proceedings of this evening to Lieut. General Burgoyne, I was happy to receive his approbation of and ready concurrence

¹ JAMES HENRY CRAIG, of the Craigs of Dalnair and Costarton, Scotland, was born in 1748 at Gibraltar, where his father held the appointment of civil and military judge. He entered the Army 1st June, 1763, as Ensign in the 30th regiment, then in garrison in that Fortrefs. In 1769 he was promoted to a lieutenancy, and in 1770 was appointed Aid-de-Camp to General Sir Robert Boyd, then Governor of Gibraltar. In March, 1771, he obtained a company in the 47th regiment, with which he went to America in 1774. His company formed part of the reinforcement sent by Gen. Gage to dislodge the Americans from their position on Bunker Hill, 17th June, 1775, on which occasion he was severely wounded. On the evacuation of Boston, his regiment was ordered to Halifax and thence to Quebec, where it arrived on the 8th May, 1776. It was thence sent up the St. Lawrence and Captain Craig commanded his company in the action at Three Rivers, and the advanced guard of the Army in pursuit of the retreating Americans. In this campaign he was engaged in the battle of Hubbardton, when he was again severely wounded, and received a third wound at the battle at Freeman's Farm, September 19th. At the close of the campaign Capt. Craig was one of the officers selected to settle the subordinate Articles of the Treaty preparatory to the surrender of Burgoyne's Army. At his request, the Term Capitulation was changed to Convention. He was sent immediately after this with despatches to England, and Government having resolved to raise ten new regiments, Capt. Craig was appointed Major of the 82d, 25th December, 1777, and proceeded to Halifax in 1778. He was engaged in 1779 in the operations on the Penobscot (Maine); was afterwards ordered to the South; and in 1781 was dispatched to take possession of Wilmington, N. C., which he occupied until the Autumn, when, informed of the Surrender of Cornwallis, he abandoned the place and fled precipitately to Charleston. He became Lieutenant-Colonel of his regiment 31st December, 1781; in 1783 was transferred to the 16th Foot, and was appointed Colonel in the Army 18th November, 1790. In 1794 he obtained the rank of in every article that has been agreed on between us. It however appears upon a retrospect of the Treaty, that our zeal to compleat it expeditiously has led us into the admission of a Term in the Title, very different from his meaning and that of the principle Officers of his Army, who have been consulted on this important occasion. We have, Sir, unguard-

Major General, and in the beginning of the following year was sent on the expedition to the Cape of Good Hope, which having been reduced, he was appointed Governor of the Colony. In August, 1795, he became Colonel of the 46th regiment. He remained at the Cape until 1797, and as a reward for his services was made Knight of the Bath. Having returned to England he was ordered to India, in which country he served five years. In January, 1801, he was promoted to the rank of Lieut. General, and in 1802 returned to England, where he was put in command of the Eastern District. In January, 1804, he was appointed Colonel of the 86th Foot; in 1805 was selected to command the Troops in the Mediterranean; proceeded to Lisbon, Gibraltar, Malta, and thence to Naples, and after the battle of Austerlitz withdrew to Sicily. He returned to England in 1806, and was appointed Colonel of the 22d regiment. In August, 1807, he was appointed Governor in Chief of British North America, with the local rank of General; but however qualified he might have been for a camp, his administration of the affairs of Canada showed him altogether unfit for the duties of a civil governor. Weak, suspicious, and hasty; perhaps from ill health and a broken down constitution; he soon became the tool of a few rapacious, overbearing and irresponsible officials; saw in every opponent of his policy a disaffected rebel; seized liberal presses and suppressed opposition newspapers; imprisoned editors, at and during, his pleasure, and employed spies to discover treason in Canada and to foment and encourage it in the United States. After a troublesome administration of four years he embarked for England on the 19th June, 1811, thoroughly detested by the people, and confessing, it is said, on his departure, that among his professing friends he had experienced more deception and ingratitude in Canada than in the whole course of his life before coming to it. Sir James H. Craig did not long survive his return to England. He died of dropsy in January, 1812, aged 62 years. He had been nearly 50 years in the Army, and during that time had not been a day on half pay.

edly called that a Treaty of Capitulation, which the Army means only as a Treaty of Convention; with the single alteration of this word Lieut. Col. Sutherland and myself will meet you at the stipulated time tomorrow morning, with the fair Copy signed by General Burgoyne.

I hope, Sir, you will excuse my troubling you so late; but I thought it better than by any delay to prevent the speedy conclusion of a Treaty, which seems to be the wish of both parties, and which may prevent the further effusion of blood between us. I beg your immediate answer.

I am, Sir,

Your obedient humble servant,

Answer.

Col^o Wilkinfon's Compliments to Capt. Craig;
Major General Gates will admit the alteration.

[Appended to the foregoing pages in another hand writing, said to be that of Gov. Clinton, are the two following papers.]

When General Burgoyne arrived at Bemises Heights, he was received by Gen. Gates at the Head of the Continental Army, which was drawn up on that occasion. Gen. Gates advanced to receive him, told him he was glad to see him. Gen. Burgoyne replyd, I am not glad to see you; it is my Fortune, Sir, but not my Fault. Gen. Schuyler's Carriage was sent for, to receive and conduct Gen. Redfall, his wife and five children to Albany. Gen. Burgoyne and the rest of the Staff Officers were escorted on Horseback. They all dined at General Schuyler's. At Table General Gates drank the King of Great Britain's Health. Gen. Burgoyne in return thanked him, and in the next Glass drank the Continental Congress. Gen. Burgoyne observed to Gen. Gates, he admired the Number, Dress and Discipline of his Army; but above all, the Decorum and Regularity that was observed; said, Your Funds of Men are inexhaustible, like the Hydra's Head, when cut off, seven more sprang up in its stead.

When Gen. Burgoyne arrived in Albany, the Boys gathering round, cryed out, "Make Elbow Room there"—the Rejoycing Word.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

Note, Page 28. BRIGADE MAJOR CLEVE.

FREDERICK CHRISTIAN CLEVE was the youngest son of the Chamberlain of the Court of Brunswick, in which city he was born in 1739. In the year 1759, he entered the service as Corporal in the Regiment of Imhof, in which corps two of his brothers held commissions. On the 7th May, 1759, he was promoted to an Ensigncy, and on the 18th Sept., 1761, was appointed Lieutenant. At the end of the war he was discharged. On the breaking out of the American war he was appointed Adjutant in Gen. Riedefel's staff, with the rank of Lieutenant, and on returning to his native country in 1783, was promoted to a Company in Riedefel's newly organized regiment of Infantry. On 23d Dec., 1788, he was appointed Major and served in Holland until 1794. On the return of his regiment to Brunswick, he was placed at the head of the Military Academy; on 22d Dec., 1798, advanced to the rank of Lieutenant Colonel, and on 28th April, 1801, to that of Colonel. He took an active part in organizing the Westphalian army, and in 1817 was appointed Major General. Full of years, and with the character of a moral and religious Soldier, he died on the 6th of January, 1836, in the 88th year of his age.

PAULUS ÆMILIUS IRVING was born at Waterford, Ireland, August 30th, 1751; he was the only son of Lieutenant Colonel Irving, of Woodhouse, County of Dumfries, Scotland, Governor of Upnor Castle, and at one time President of the Council in Quebec. He was appointed to a Lieutenantancy in the 47th regiment, on the 15th June, 1764, and obtained his company 29th October, 1768; came to America in 1774, and on 31st March, 1775, became Major of his regiment. According to Philippart, he was in the battles of Lexington and Bunker Hill, and in Boston during the blockade. On the evacuation of that city, he accompanied his regiment to Quebec, was at the affair of Three Rivers in June, 1776, and followed the Americans to Ticonderoga. At the close of Burgoyne's campaign, Major Irving shared the fate of the rest of the army. He remained a prisoner three years; towards the close of 1780 he obtained the brevet rank of Lieutenant Colonel, and became Lieutenant Colonel of his regiment 3d August, 1781, when he returned to England, and in 1786 married Lady Elizabeth St. Lawrence, second daughter of the first Earl of Howth. In 1790 he went to the Bahamas, became Major General in 1794, and joined Sir John Vaughan's army in the West Indies in 1795. On the death of that officer that year, Major General Irving succeeded to the chief command of the army in those parts. In September he went to St. Vincents, and on 2d October achieved a decisive victory over the French at St. Vigie, for which he received the thanks of the king. He returned to England at the close of 1795, and in 1801, was promoted to the rank of Lieutenant General, became Colonel of the 6th Veteran Battalion in 1802; and was raised to the dignity of a Baronet in 1809. In 1812 he reached the rank of General, and died at Carlisle in 1828, aged 76 years. Some writers confound this officer with his father, in consequence of both having the same name.

RICHARD BEECROFT entered the 24th regiment of Foot as Ensign in 1761; was promoted to a Lieutenancy in February, 1766. When the Americans attacked Ticonderoga in September, 1777, Lieut. Beecroft was stationed with some troops on Mount Independence, where he greatly distinguished himself, and in consequence obtained a company in October following; in 1781 he exchanged, or was transferred, to the 101st regiment. This regiment being disbanded in 1785, Capt. Beecroft went on halfpay and so remained until 1796, when his name disappears from the Army List.

CHARLES STANHOPE, Viscount PETERSHAM, eldest son of William 2d Earl of Harrington, was born on 17th March, 1753. He entered the Army as Ensign in the Coldstream Guards in the seventeenth year of his age, and at the age of twenty, received a Captain's commission in the 29th Foot. Having been ordered to Canada, his lordship arrived at Quebec on the 6th May, 1776, and had the honor to command the detachment which relieved that city, then besieged by the Americans. On accompanying the expedition under Gen. Burgoyne, Lord Petersham was appointed to the Grenadier company, which he commanded at the battle of Hubbardton, Vt., on the 7th July, 1777. A few days after, he was appointed supernumerary Aid-de-Camp to Gen. Burgoyne, and in that capacity served in the engagements of the 19th of September, and 7th of October, and attended the funeral of Brig. Gen. Frazer, who was killed on the last mentioned day. On the 17th of October his lordship was one of the officers that attended Gen. Burgoyne on occasion of his surrender as prisoner of war to Major General Gates, after which, being selected to carry General B.'s despatches to London, he went to Albany, thence to New York, and embarked for England where he exchanged into the 3d Foot Guards, whereby he attained the rank of Colonel in the Army, 16th January, 1778. He succeeded to the title of Earl of Harrington on the death of his father, 1st April, 1779; on the 23d May following he married Jane, daughter of Sir John Fleming, Bart., and on the 1st June was examined before the Committee of the House of Commons on Burgoyne's expedition. In 1780, he was appointed Lieut. Colonel of the 85th Foot, and then served two years in the West Indies. In 1782 he received the brevet rank of Colonel, and became Colonel of the 65th Foot in March 1783. He was appointed to the command of the 29th regiment in January 1788, and of the 1st regiment of Life Guards on the 5th December, 1792; was advanced to the rank of Major General the following year, and of Lieut. General in 1798, after which his lordship was sometime employed on the staff in Great Britain and served also in Ireland. Having attained the rank of General in the Army; been Governor and Constable of Windsor Castle, and having been honored with the Grand Cross of the Bath, his lordship died on the 5th Sept., 1829, in the 67th year of his age.

ALLEXANDER SALANS entered the 9th regiment as Ensign 2d September, 1776. He returned to England after this campaign, and in 1780, was appointed Captain in the 85th, a newly raised regiment, of which Lord Harrington (supra, p. 76) was Colonel. This corps was disbanded in 1783, when Baron Salans's name disappears from the army list.

JAMES WILKINSON was born in Maryland, in 1757, and at the age of 17, entered the Medical School of Philadelphia. After passing through the requisite studies he returned to his native place to practice his profession. On the breaking out of the Revolution, he joined, as a Volunteer, Col. Thompson's company of Rifles, then at the camp before Boston, and in September, 1775, was commissioned Captain in Read's New Hampshire regiment. He joined this corps in 1776, but was soon after ordered to Canada, and joined General Arnold at Lachine, 22d May of that year, but was obliged to quit that Province with the remains of the American army, and return to Ticonderoga, where he was appointed Major of Brigade. In consequence of an attack of fever, he had to be removed to Albany, and in January, 1777, was commissioned Lieutenant Colonel in a newly raised regiment, commanded by Colonel Guest, but was shortly after transferred to Hartley's regiment, and proceeded to Maryland to recruit. On General Gates being appointed to the command of the Northern army, Lieutenant Colonel Wilkinson left Hartley's regiment, and joined Gen. Gates's staff as Adjutant General, in which capacity he made the campaign of 1777. On the surrender of Burgoyne, Wilkinson was sent with Gates's despatches to Congress, and recommended for promotion; but his progress was slow. He had halted on the way to pay his respects to Miss Biddle, to whom he was attached. When it was afterwards moved in Congress to present the messenger with a sword, it was proposed by way of amendment, that he should be presented with a pair of golden spurs. He, however, received the brevet of Brigadier General, 6th of November, 1777, and returned to the North. In January, 1778, he was appointed Secretary of the Board of War, and proceeded in February to Pennsylvania. Here he quarrelled with and challenged Gates, in consequence of some misunderstanding, but the interference of friends prevented a hostile meeting. General Wilkinson's promotion having given offence to a number of Colonels in the Continental Army, who felt slighted thereby, he threw up his brevet on the 3d, and his Secretaryship on the 28th March, 1778; the latter in consequence of Gates being President of the Board. The dominant influence of that officer, and the feuds and intrigues in Congress and in the army, left him unemployed until the 29th July, 1779, when he received the appointment of Clothier General to the forces. After the peace, General Wilkinson turned his attention to the Western country, and in February, 1784, settled at Lexington, Ky., as agent of a commercial company in Philadelphia. He soon engaged in politics, and in 1786 was elected member of the Convention preparatory to the entrance of that territory into the Union. Hitherto no trade had been permitted between the Western people and New Orleans, but General Wilkinson conceived the idea of establishing a regular trade thither, and accordingly, in 1787 sent a cargo of tobacco, flour, butter and bacon down the Mississippi, which he shortly followed, and by his personal influence, caused the removal of those commercial barriers which had, up to that time, closed that market to the Western trade. The troubles with the Indians now absorbed public attention, and measures became necessary for the protection of the frontier. In 1791 an expedition against the Wabash Indians was, therefore, organized, of which Wilkinson was chosen Colonel. His services on this occasion commended him to the Federal Government, and on 7th November of that year, he was appointed Lieutenant Colonel of the 2d regiment of Infantry, and on 5th March, 1792, Brigadier General. He commanded the right wing of Wayne's army at the famous battle of the Maumee, 20th August, 1794, and distinguished himself on that occasion. The Treaty of Greenville was shortly after concluded, and put an end to the Indian wars on the Ohio. General Wilkinson took advantage of this treaty to purchase, in company with others, a large tract of land extending from the Little to the Great Miami, on part of which the town of Dayton, O., now stands. In December, 1796, he became General in Chief of the army, with his head quarters at Pittsburg; visited Detroit and Michilimakinac in 1797, and in 1798, on the organization of the Territory of Mississippi, established his head quarters at Natchez, where he erected Fort Adams, so called after the President then in office. In the year following (1799) he was called to New York to aid the government with his advice in the then critical state of our foreign relations, but after his returning to Natchez, was engaged in 1801 in negotiations with the Indian tribes south of Tennessee, and in determining the boundary between the Whites and the Chickasaws, Choctaws, &c. It was while thus employed that he was nominated one of the Commissioners for receiving possession of Louisiana. He executed that commission December 20th, 1803, and returned to New York in 1804, after having been honored with a public dinner. In 1805, he was appointed Governor of the Territory of Louisiana, now comprising the States of Arkansas, Missouri, &c. He reached St. Louis, the seat of the territorial government, in June, and administered the affairs of the territory until the close of 1806. He was next employed in protecting the south-western frontier from invasion by the Spaniards, who had assembled a large body of troops on the eastern boundary of Texas. On concluding that business, and making the requisite arrangements with the Spanish authorities, he returned to New Orleans, where he was soon actively engaged in breaking up the plans and project of Aaron Burr. General Wilkinson's activity on that occasion, drew down on him the enmity of Burr's friends, and as a consequence, in December, 1806, an investigation into his official conduct. This resulted in his favor, and the report having been approved, General

W. was ordered (1808) to return to New Orleans to provide for the public defence, but having a special mission to the Havana, he did not reach Louisiana until 19th April, 1809. He was superseded in his command in December following, and recalled to Washington, which he reached in April, 1810. Another investigation into his conduct followed, and in July, 1811, he was tried by court martial on charges of having received bribes from, or having been in the pay of Spain, and for having connived at the designs of Burr, &c. This trial occupied much time and considerable public attention. It terminated at length, in December, by a verdict of not guilty, which was approved by the President 14th February, 1812, and General Wilkinson was once more ordered back to New Orleans, to resume his command. He reached that city on the 8th June; war with England was declared on the 18th, and he was commissioned Brevet Major General 10th July following, and Major General 2d March, 1813. In April, 1813, he reduced Mobile and fortified Mobile Point, afterwards called Fort Bowyer. He then returned to New Orleans, and in May was removed from the South and ordered to take command of the army on the Northern frontier.¹

The General did not win many laurels on that frontier, and at the close of the campaign, broken in health, he asked to be transferred to some other command. In February, 1814, the Secretary at War reported to the President various charges against him, and recommended that he be superseded, and that a court of inquiry examine into his conduct. He was accordingly ordered to reside either at Philadelphia, Baltimore or Annapolis, and meanwhile to consider himself under arrest. Towards the close of June he arrived at the city of Washington, then agitated by the approach of the British under Gen. Ross. Thereupon General Wilkinson offered to take command of the militia and save the city, if his arrest were suspended and his sword temporarily restored. The administration took no notice of this offer, and he left the city on the 20th August, and retired to Maryland. He renewed his offer in September, but with no better success. It was decided to bring him to trial. A court martial accordingly assembled at Troy in January, 1815, which terminated its labors March 21, by the honorable acquittal of the accused on all and each of the charges the government had brought against him.

Peace having been concluded, Congress passed an act (May 1815) to reduce the army. Upwards of eighteen hundred officers were discharged. General Wilkinson was the principal one of these, notwithstanding his forty years in the public service, and his recent honorable acquittal by the general court martial. He thereupon retired to Germantown, Pa., where he employed himself in the compilation of his Memoirs, which were published in 1816, in 3 vols. 8vo, with an Atlas. In the beginning of that year, the General Assembly of his native state passed the following

JOINT RESOLUTION No. 47, DEC. SESSION, 1815.

By the General Assembly of Maryland.

Passed Jan.
26, 1816.

WHEREAS it appears to this General Assembly that James Wilkinson, an Officer of the Revolutionary War, and who served to its termination, did not receive the Commutation money of five years pay, in lieu of halfpay for life, promised to the officers and soldiers who continued in service to the end of the war: Therefore

Resolved, That the Treasurer of the Western Shore, be and he is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the said James Wilkinson, yearly, in quarterly payments, during life, the half pay of a Colonel of Dragoons, as remuneration for services rendered his country in the revolutionary struggle for liberty. (See vol. Laws, Dec. Session, 1815, p. 224.)

He subsequently went to Mexico, and in August, 1825, obtained from the government of that country a grant of land in Texas. He derived no benefit, however, from that grant, for he was seized soon after, with an attack of diarrhoea, and died near the city of Mexico, on the 28th December, 1825, aged 68 years. His body was brought to the house of

Mr. Poinsett, the American minister, and his interment took place on the evening of the 30th, in the parish of St. Miguel. As an old foldier of the Revolution, every effort was made to procure for him military honors, but these were peremptorily denied, on the plea that such honors were not even granted to Mexicans. He was followed to the grave by the most distinguished military and civil officers, and by all the respectable foreigners of the city. "Public opinion," says Niles, in his Weekly Register, "has long been much divided as to the character of the deceased. We have thought that he was a man more finned against than finning; though some parts of his conduct rather appeared inexplicable. Let his faults be buried with him, and the fact that he was a gallant Soldier of the Revolution overshadow his memory, and endear the recollection of all who reap the fruits of the exertions of those who gave themselves up to their country when men's souls were tried."

REMINISCENCES OF GEN. WILKINSON BY JAMES F. WATSON, ESQ.

GERMANTOWN, Sept. 12, 1860.

DR. E. B. O'CALLAGHAN :

Dear Sir — Our mutual friend, E. Armstrong, has desired me to write to you of my recollections of General James Wilkinson. I am happy to reply, and to manifest my respect, personally, for yourself.

General Wilkinson was an elegant gentleman in person and manners. He was of medium size, probably 5 feet 8 or 9 inches. I knew him first in years 1800 to 1804. He dwelt in the house next door to me, in the Six Buildings, in Washington city. He was sumptuous and hospitable in his living, not very nicely balancing his means and ends. He appeared much abroad with his Aid, both in full uniform, and generally on horseback. His array was splendid, he having gold stirrups and spurs, and gold leopard claws to his leopard saddle-cloth. The buttons of his clothing were also gold. He had then two sons at college. One or both of them married and settled at Natchez. The elder son was tall and handsome. It seems to me as if one of them got in a duel there.

I once saw Gen. W. walking Spruce street in Philadelphia, going, as I suppose, to a dinner; he in full uniform, having his hair toupéed and powdered, and carrying his chapeau under his arm, and caring for no one's eyes or remarks. That should have been about the year 1800. It was before hacks, &c.

General Wilkinſon's firſt wife was Miſs Biddle of Philadelphia, ſiſter of Clement Biddle, very long known as a very active and efficient agent for merchants and captains operating at the cuſtom houſe. He acquired money, and lived to 80 years of age. His ſecond wife was a creole of New Orleans. About the years 1804-5, I uſed to ſee her and her ſiſter very often. They were very handſome; not deemed affluent; lived on a Plantation above New Orleans. They always came to the city in a volanté, driving their pair of Andaluſian horſes themſelves.

General Wilkinſon firſt introduced the cropping of hair in the army. Colonel Butler could not endure to loſe his long-cheriſhed cue. He reſiſted. It created great feuds, and much divided officers, ſo that ſeveral duels occurred. He firſt introduced muſical inſtruments, and their coſt was much diſputed at firſt by the department.

In the year 1814 I came to dwell at Germantown, as caſhier of the newly founded bank. In two or three years after, General Wilkinſon came to be my near neighbor at Riter's Tavern, where he purpoſed to board and write his three volumes of Memoirs. It was a long two-ſtoried ſtone houſe, with a high attic, extending the length of the whole houſe, and was well lined with unpainted cedar boards. It was uſed as a maſons' lodge. There he would pace to and fro, and dictate his compoſition to his amanuenſis, ſeemingly an Engliſhman. I felt ſurpriſe at ſuch a mode of bookmaking. I was allowed to be preſent, when I choſe. The General made no ſhew abroad, while there, and did not deſire to viſit, as I think. My houſe being near, and informal, he ſeemed to like to relax by calling in, and talking moſtly with Mrs. Watſon. She admired him for his elegance and proprieties of manner. See what I have ſaid of him and his Memoirs in appendix to my Annals of Philadelphia.

SIR FRANCIS CARR CLERKE, Bart., of Hitcham, Buckingham county, England, was born 24th October, 1748, and succeeded to the Baronety in 1769. He entered the army as Ensign in the 3d regiment of Foot Guards, on the 3d Jan. 1770, and attained the rank of Lieutenant and Captain on 26th July, 1775. He accompanied General Burgoyne in the capacity of Aid-de-camp, was severely wounded on the 8th, and died on the 13th October, 1777. The following circumstances attending his death are related in General Wilkinfon's Memoirs, I, 269, note:

“When I returned to head quarters from the field of battle, I found Sir Francis Clark reposing on General Gates's bed, and those gentlemen engaged in a warm dispute, on the merits of the revolution, Sir Francis admitting that every procedure on our part, short of the declaration of independence was warranted by the conduct of the British administration; that he had on this ground vindicated us in public and private, but that the sudden act of severance, convinced him the contest had originated in a premeditated view to independence, into which the colonies had been cheated by the puritans of New England; and that he, of consequence, had changed his opinion, and taken part against us, On the other hand, Gates contended, that the idea of disunion had never entered into the head of any American, until the menaces of the parliament, the repeated oppressive acts of the British government, and the manifest vindictive resentment of the sovereign, left the colonists no alternative between abject vassalage and self-government.

“The old General became quite incensed, and calling me out of the room, asked me if I had ever heard so impudent a son of a b—h. Sir Francis, who was I think a member of parliament, appeared to be an impetuous, high-minded, frank, fearless fellow, for suddenly changing the conversation, he inquired of me, whether our surgeons were good for anything, as he did not like the direction of his wound, and was desirous to know whether it was mortal or not. The following extract of a letter from Doctor Hayes to General Burgoyne, dated the 9th

“ October, describes Sir Francis’s particular case: ‘ I have seen Sir Francis Clark, and am sorry to inform you that I have some unfavorable opinion of his case. The ball entered his right flank, struck the two last of the false ribs, penetrated the cavity of the abdomen, and seems to run towards the spine; a tension of his belly, and involuntary discharges of urine are bad symptoms. He has been attended with great care and tenderness; I stay by him this night, and shall not omit any attention for his recovery. Major Ackland is wounded in the thick part of both legs. The left seems to have the bone touched, but of no consequence.’ Sir Francis died I think the 13th, and the day before questioned Dr. Townsend, who attended him, as to the probable issue of the wound. The Doctor felt a reluctance in announcing his doom; he observed it, and remarked, ‘ Doctor, why do you pause? Do you think I am afraid to die?’ The Doctor then advised him, as an act of prudence, to arrange his private affairs. ‘ Thank you, Doctor,’ replied he, ‘ I understand you; as to my private affairs, my father settled them for me, and I have only a few legacies to bequeath.’ Among them he gave twenty guineas to the matron of our hospital, who had paid particular attention to him.”

PAROLE OF BURGOYNE’S OFFICERS.

THIS document is in the possession of J. Wingate Thornton, Esq., of Boston, Mass., and is signed by Gen. Burgoyne in a broken and tremulous hand, and one hundred and eighty-eight other officers.

“ We, whose names are hereunto subscribed, being under the restrictions of the convention made on the sixteenth of October last, between Lieutenant General Burgoyne and Major General Gates, do promise and engage, on our word and honor, and in the faith of gentlemen, to remain in the quarters assigned us for our residence in Cambridge, Watertown, Medford, and Charlestown, in the State of Massachusetts Bay, and at no time to exceed or pass the following limits, viz.; Swan’s shop at Charlestown Neck, the Cambridge road up to the cross-way between Mr. Codman’s house and Fort No, 3; the said crossway out to the road by Mr. Inman’s

The intermediate roads are within the parol, and the back-yards of the respective quarters to the distance of eighty yards from them, during our continuance in this State, or until the Continental General commanding in this State, His Excellency General Washington, or the Congress of the United States, shall order otherwise; and that we will not directly or indirectly give any intelligence whatsoever to the enemies of the United States, or do or say any thing in opposition to or in prejudice of the measures and proceedings of any Congress for the said States during our continuance here as aforesaid, or until we are duly exchanged or discharged; and that we will at all times duly observe and obey the rules and regulations already established for the government of the troops in quarters.

Given under our hands at Cambridge, in the State of Massachusetts Bay, this thirteenth day of December, in the year of our Lord 1777.

THE RED HOUSE.

AT the time of our revolutionary contest, the fortification at Fort Edward was so dilapidated that it was worthless, and was seldom occupied by any of the troops that were stationed there. And the three block-houses or outposts of the fort, in opposite directions upon the surrounding heights, were in the same condition. In addition to these, the only structures there at that time were three dwelling houses, the history and situations of which were briefly as follows:

The widow Campbell house, from which Jane McCrea, Mrs. Campbell and a servant boy living with her, named Norman Morrison, were taken by Indians from Burgoyne's camp, was some 16 feet by 20 in size, built of round logs, with a door on its east side only, an old fashioned fire place without jambs at its north end, on one side of which were ladder-like stairs leading to a loft over-head, and rather south of the centre of the floor, a trap door, opening into an unwall'd cellar-hole underneath. This building was subsequently the residence of sheriff Peter B. Tierce, who married a grand-daughter of Mrs. C.'s. It was demolished some fifty years ago. It stood in what is now the garden of Dr. Norton, some ten rods southwest of the brick house in which the doctor resides, and was thus equidistant between and about eight rods from the road on one side and the river on the other, and some sixty rods north of the fort and one hundred and fifty south of the tree and spring where it is currently but I think erroneously reported Miss McCrea was murdered, the spot where that atrocity occurred, being some thirty-five rods east, at the summit of the hill where the old military road to Fort Ann and Fort George ascended the hill. Of this I became assured, upon casting over all the evidence I could obtain when investigating this subject fourteen years since, the testimony of Esq. Samuel B. Cook, an intelligent man who came to reside here in 1788, and accompanied me over the grounds, being most full, explicit and strongly corroborated by facts derived from several other sources.

The other two were framed buildings, which are still standing. When the second fort at this place was erected by Gen. Lyman's army in 1755, several buildings were reared within it, for officers' quarters, barracks, storehouses and workshops. After the French war, Patrick Smyth was superintendent of the public property here, and Canada being now conquered, it was supposed there would never be any further use for this fortification. It was therefore neglected and went to ruin, and the superintendent and his brother, Dr. James Smyth, took down the two best buildings in the fort and reërected them where they now stand, for their own residences. That of the Dr. S. was opened as an inn, and in 1788 he sold it to Ezekiel Baldwin, who continued for a long time to occupy it in the same manner. This house has now for a long time been out of repair and unoccupied. It is situated between the village street and the canal, somewhat south of the fort and north of Fort Edward creek.

The third building, in which Patrick Smyth resided, is below this, at the south end of the village, a little below where the road from Argyle comes into the river road. It is now modernized in its appearance, with an observatory on its top, and painted white, and is the residence of Col. Abraham Fort. When Charlotte (now Washington) county was set off from Albany, in 1773, Smyth was appointed the county clerk, and the courts were held in this house, Wm. Duer and Philip Schuyler being the presiding judges at the six terms which were held before the outbreak of the revolution caused their suspension. The troops which were stationed at this place in the latter years of the war, to guard the frontier against in-curfions from Canada, quartered themselves in this house, and Gen. Stark's regiment, when on this service, fortified it by surrounding it with palisades. The Smyths being loyalists, withdrew to Canada, selling this house to Adiel Sherwood. A son of Patrick Smyth, born here, named Charles, was a lawyer, resident in Albany, and for a time clerk of the supreme court. He afterwards resided and died on an island he owned on the Canada side of Lake Ontario. Sherwood opened this house as a tavern, and thereupon the county courts, which had been recommenced at New Perth (now Salem) meeting house—the only framed building then in the county, in addition to these two—came to be held alternately there and in this house again until 1797.

This building was formerly designated as the old Yellow house. I presume it was repainted of this color, by Sherwood, for I have the impression that both the Smyth houses were originally red, though I am unable to find any memorandum stating this fact. That this is the house that was occupied by Gen. Burgoyne and his staff, whilst the Dr. Smyth house was at the same time thronged with the families which abode there temporarily for protection from his Indians, fully appears from numerous statements which I have gathered.

Robert Blake of East Greenwich (now deceased) says: "I was a boy sixteen years old, when my father's family went to Burgoyne's camp to take protection. Whilst there, we resided with an uncle of mine, Wm. Bell, whose house was a half mile north of the village. The widow Campbell, was living at my uncle's temporarily, at the same time. She used to go down from my uncle's to the camp, every day, to visit her cousin Gen. Frazier, as she termed him, who, with the other officers, had their quarters at Smith's house, as it was called. This was a large house, below the fort, and across the brook from the fort. It was afterwards surrounded by pickets. It belonged to Dr. Smith and his brother. Their Christian names I don't remember. Mrs. Campbell, or McNeil as she should be called, for McNeil was her last husband, was talking a great deal at that time, about houses that belonged to her in New York city. Whether she really had any houses there, or was “really a cousin to Gen. Frazier I don't know. But every day, when she returned from her visit to the camp, she was telling how she was going to give the use of such a house to this officer, and such a house to that, for their quarters, on their arrival in New York—for that they would reach New York was a fixed fact at that time.”—Letter from Dr. Asa Fitch.

BRIGADIER GENERAL FRAZER.

SIMON FRAZER was the youngest son, it is said, of Hugh Frazer of Balnain. His mother was daughter of the Frazer of Forgers. So little is known of his early history, that we can with difficulty trace him beyond the year 1761. However, we are inclined to the opinion that he served in one of the Scotch regiments or companies in the pay of Holland previous to the breaking out of the French war. We find a Simon Frazer commissioned a Lieutenant in the 60th Royal Americans on the organization of that regiment in 1756, who was transferred on 5th January, 1757, to Frazer's Highlanders. With this regiment he served in the expedition against Louisbourg; obtained his company 22nd April, 1759, and accompanied Gen. Wolfe to Quebec. On the 15th March, 1761, he received the brevet rank of Major, and was commissioned Major of the 24th Foot, 8th February, 1762. He was garrisoned for a few years at Gibraltar, whence his regiment went to Ireland. On 14th July, 1768, Major Frazer was appointed Lieutenant Colonel of the 24th, which corps was ordered to Canada in 1776, and formed part of the forces commanded by Gen. Burgoyne, whom Lt. Col. Frazer accompanied with the rank of Brigadier General, on the present expedition. His services therein are matters of public history. He closed an honourable career on the field of battle on the 7th of October, 1777. The circumstances attending his death are thus narrated by Mde. Riedesel:

“General Frazer, and I believe Generals Burgoyne and Phillips, were to dine with me on that day. I remarked much movement in the camp.

“ My husband told me that it was a mere reconnoissance ; and as this “ was frequent, I was not much alarmed at it. On my way homeward,
“ I met a number of Indians armed with guns, and clad in their war “ dresses. Having asked them where they were going, they replied, “ ‘ War, war ;’ by which they meant that they were about to fight. This “ made me very uneasy, and I had scarcely got home, before I heard re“ ports of guns ; and soon the fire became brisker, till at last the noise grew “ dreadful, upon which I was more dead than alive. About three “ o’clock in the afternoon, instead of guests whom I had expected to dine
“ with me, I saw one of them, poor General Frazer, brought upon a “ hand-barrow, mortally wounded. The table, which was already pre“ pared for dinner, was immediately removed, and a bed placed in its stead
“ for the General. I sat terrified and trembling in a corner. The noise “ grew more alarming, and I was in a continual agony and tremour, while “ thinking that my husband, might soon also be brought in, wounded like “ General Frazer. That poor general said to the surgeon, ‘ Tell me the “ truth, is there no hope ?’ His wound was exactly like that of Major “ Harnage ; the ball had passed through his body, but unhappily for the “ General, he had that morning eaten a full breakfast, by which the stomach “ was distended, and the ball, as the surgeon remarked, passed directly “ through it. I heard often amidst his groans, such words as these, ‘ O
“ bad ambition ! poor General Burgoyne ! poor Mistress Frazer.’ Prayers “ were read, after which he desired that General Burgoyne should be “ requested to have him buried on the next day, at 6 o’clock in the “ evening, on a hill where a breastwork had been constructed. He sent “ me several messages to beg my pardon for the trouble he thought he “ gave me. About 3 o’clock, I was informed that he could not live much “ longer, and as I did not wish to be present at his last struggle, I wrapped
“ my children in blankets, and retired into the entrance hall. At 8 “ o’clock in the morning he expired.

“ After he had been washed, he was wrapped in a sheet, and laid out.
“ We then returned into the room, and had this melancholy spectacle “ before us the whole day. Many officers of my acquaintance were "brought in wounded, and the cannonade continued. There was some "talk of retreating, but I saw no indications of it. About 4 o'clock in "the afternoon, I saw the house which had been built for me, in flames,

 "from which I inferred that the enemy was near. We were informed "that Gen. Burgoyne intended to comply with General Frazer's last re"quest, and to have him buried at 6 o'clock, in the place which he had
 "designated. This occasioned an useless delay, and contributed to our mili"tary misfortunes. At 6 o'clock, the corpse was removed, and we saw all "the generals with their retinues, on the hill, assisting at the funeral cere"mony. The English chaplain, Mr. Brudenel, officiated. Cannon-balls
 "flew around and above the assembled mourners. General Gates pro"tested afterwards, that had he known what was going on, he would "have stopped the fire immediately. Many cannon balls flew close by "me, but my whole attention was engaged by the funeral scene, where "I saw my husband exposed to imminent danger. This, indeed, was not
 "a moment to be apprehensive for my own safety."

General Burgoyne has described this scene with his usual felicity of expression and eloquence, and in a much more graphical style than our authors. We beg leave to copy the following passage :

"The incessant cannonade during the solemnity; the steady attitude
 "and unaltered voice with which the chaplain officiated, though frequently
 "covered with dust, which the shot threw up on all sides of him; the "mute but expressive mixture of sensibility and indignation, upon every
 "countenance; these objects will remain to the last of life upon the mind "of every man who was present. The growing duskiness added to the "scenery, and the whole marked a character of that juncture that would "make one of the finest subjects for the pencil of a master, that the field
 "ever exhibited. To the canvass, and to the faithful page of a more im"portant historian, gallant friend! I consign thy memory. There may thy "talents, thy manly virtues, their progress and their period, find due dis"tinction; and long may they survive; long after the frail record of my
 "pen shall be forgotten!"—State of the Expedition from Canada, &c. &c.

DAVID JONES was the lover of the unfortunate Miss McCrea. His older brother Daniel married, previous to the war, and was living north of Sandy-hill, I presume on lot 55, Kingsbury, of which the county records show him to have been the owner. This is three miles north of Sandy-hill, in the neighborhood called the Pine Plains in Burgoyne's expedition, now Moss street. Peters's corps, in which Daniel and David Jones were commissioned officers, was mostly composed of men from the loyalist families in this county, who had repaired to Canada when this expedition was organizing. As the party of Indians was sent for Miss McCrea when the army, in its advance, encamped at the Pine Plains, it appears altogether probable that it was mutually understood that she should come to this place and temporarily stay at the house and with the family of Daniel Jones; and thus there was less temerity in this arrangement than has currently been supposed. Who could have anticipated there was any particular danger in employing a company of friendly Indians to take a horse to her and escort her back with them, by day, three or four miles, transferring her from his mother's to his brother's house?

When the family withdrew to Canada, Daniel located himself at Brockville, where he engaged in business actively, extensively and successfully. His oldest son was sent to England to complete his education, but was a profligate spendthrift who came to nothing. His two other sons, by a second wife, Daniel and David, were lawyers in Brockville, and the latter was recently and perhaps is still the county clerk there, the former being deceased. After their father's death, some thirty or forty years since, one of these sons came to Sandy-hill to recover something for the lands from which his father, he said, had been forcibly driven. His advent there, on such an errand, produced a considerable excitement; one or more articles appeared in the village newspaper, sarcastically alluding to his family's claims upon this country; and he found the temper of the community such that he was impelled to withdraw and abandon the business. Though his family was probably legally entitled, in our courts, to the compensation he sought, there is no doubt they had long since received from the British government, a fair equivalent for the losses they had sustained.

The widow Jones and her sons are reported to have come here from New Jersey, from whence also came the McCreas, whose father was a Presbyterian clergyman in that state. The widow Jones's house stood on the west or Saratoga side of the river, over a half mile below the old fort, nearly on the spot where a cream colored house now stands, some twenty rods below the stone house of Halfey Rogers. At this place was the principal ferry on the river, which continued to be known as the Jones ferry many years after the family had left. Philander Doty succeeded the widow Jones, and the house was destroyed at the time of Carleton's descent hither, in the autumn of 1780. The following statements from Jacob Bitely, deceased, merit to be copied, in this connection.

“ Father moved to this place from Skenesboro, in the spring of 1779, when I was 17 years old. Though the land there suited him well enough, he did not feel we should be safe in residing there. We should be better guarded, he said, to be in the rear of Fort Edward. So he came down here, and bought out a rank tory on the opposite (Saratoga) side of the river, named Tuttle, father of John and Wm. Tuttle. The farm was all cleared up and under cultivation. It lay on Snoot kill, and our house stood where the white house south of the mouth of Snoot kill now stands. Other tories about here also sold out and went to Canada about the same time with Tuttle; for they now began to despair of the king's conquering this country, and the whigs were getting to feel in such high spirits, they could not bear to remain in the neighborhood. The widow Jones and her sons sold their place to Philander Doty. Their ferryman, who set Jane McCrea across the river, the morning of the day she was murdered, remained and continued to do the ferrying several years after we came here. I have the most perfect recollection of hearing

“ house and went up to the widow Jones's, and staid there over night “ [several days and nights, other testimony authentically establishes], and “ he, the ferryman, set her over the river, the next morning, for her to go
“ to her aunt Campbell's. The ferryman termed Mrs. Campbell Miss Mc-“ Crea's aunt. Whether she was so, or not, I do not know. The ferry-“ man also described Miss McCrea as being dressed up in her best suit of “ clothes, when he set her across the river that morning; and described “ to me her wedding cap, as he termed it. What its material or fabrica“ tion was, I do not remember, but I suppose it was very nice for those “ days, the ferryman having seemed to notice it so particularly. She had “ put on these fine clothes at Mrs. Jones's, that morning. I do not recol“ lect of the ferryman's telling whether there was a black woman accom“ panying Miss McCrea at that time. * * * *

“ Malloy, Geo. Campbell, and another Campbell, whose first name I “ cannot recall, with some others around here of less note, also sold out “ their possessions at the same time with the Joneses, and moved off to “ Canada. But it seems they could not forget their happy homes of “ former years, and such were their feelings of hatred and malevolence “ towards the whigs, that it added gall to their cup to think that these,
“ their bitter enemies, were living in quiet comfort, in their old residences.
“ They therefore resolved to 'destroy what they could not enjoy.' A “ large company of these refugees, under the lead of the Tuttle and Geo.
“ Campbell, it was always said and believed, came down from Canada as “ volunteers in Carleton's force, for the purpose of destroying our pro“ perty and burning our houses. That year continues to be designated in “ this quarter, as 'the year of the great burning.'”—Letter from Dr. Asa

RECORD IN ORDER OF THE CUSTOMER.

A blank page with faint, illegible text and two large, faint circular marks, possibly bleed-through from the reverse side of the page.

MEDALS IN HONOR OF THE SURRENDER.

A MEDAL was struck by order of Congress, two inches in diameter, in commemoration of the success of the American arms over this formidable expedition. On one side is the bust of Gen. Gates, with the Latin inscription, HORATIO GATES DUCI STRENUO COMITIA AMERICANA; on the reverse, Burgoyne is represented in the attitude of delivering up his sword, and in the back ground, on either side of them, are seen the two armies of Britain and America, the former laying down their arms. At the top is the Latin inscription, SALUS REGIONUM SEPTENTRIONAL: below HOSTE AD SARATOGAM IN DEDITION ACCEPTO DIE XVII OCT. MDCCLXXVII. An engraving of the above is given in Loffing's Pictorial Field Book of the Revolution, i, 83. The French also caused a bronze medal to be struck to commemorate the surrender of Burgoyne and Cornwallis, in which their own success is made conspicuous.

Device. Head of Liberty; the hair blown back as if by the wind, against which the goddess seems to be running, to announce to the world the tidings of her victories. On the right shoulder she bears a liberty cap.

Legend. LIBERTAS AMERICANA. 4 Jul: 1776.

Reverse. Pallas holding in her left hand a shield on which are three fleurs de lis (the arms of France); opposed to her is a leopard (England), in the act of springing, into whose breast she is about to plunge a barbed javelin that she holds in her dexter hand. Beneath the shield is an Infant strangling with one hand a serpent, which he is holding up, whilst he stoops and chokes another found at his feet.

Legend. NON SINE DIIS ANIMOSUS INFANS.

Exergue. 17 Oct. 1777
19 1781

This Medal belongs to the Worden Collection of the New York State Library; it is a beautiful specimen of art, and in its design highly classical. Hercules, according to the ancient mythology, was said to have strangled whilst in his cradle, two serpents which had assaulted him, having been assisted by the protection of the goddess Pallas. Infant AMERICA, like Hercules in his cradle, had destroyed two British armies. The two epochs of those exploits are marked in the Exergue 17 Oct. 1777—Burgoyne's Surrender at Saratoga—and 19th Octob. 1781—Cornwallis's Surrender at Yorktown, Va. The motto is from Horace, Ode 4, Book III. v. 20. The allusion is highly appropriate.—Doc. Hist., iii, 1181.

PRELIMINARY ORDERS.

MONTREAL, 30th May, 1777. The Regiments destined for the Expedition under General Burgoyne are to leave in their respective stores, their Blanket Coats, Legging, and all Baggage that can be spared during the Summer Months; the Officers are depended on not to encumber the Service with more Baggage than shall be absolutely necessary for a Campaign where the Movements may be expected to be sudden and alert; the portion of Bateaux to each Regiment will be regulated on those principles. Three women per Company will be allowed to follow the army. The exercise of the Troops under the Lieut. General's Orders is to be confined to firing with Ball-Cartridges, Bayonets fixed, and rapidity of Movements in Marching, Evolutions, and Forming.—State of the Expedition, p. 72.

GENERAL BURGOYNE'S ORDERS MODELS TO COMMANDING OFFICERS.

EXTRACTS from the Orders of Gen. Burgoyne were published in 1780, after the appearance of The State of the Expedition, and printed uniformly with it; the editor's principal inducement for offering them to the public being ostensibly that the latter work was incomplete without them. "It was conceived," he says, "that if Gen. Wolfe's Orders were esteemed as models to commanding officers of Corps, as well as instructive lessons in their profession to those of an inferior rank, Gen. Burgoyne's would more fully answer that description, as they relate to military transactions far more important, and to scenes infinitely more interesting to the public. Beside that, the author of them is known to add to the knowledge and experience of the General all the exterior graces and refinement of the scholar and the writer."

THE PROGRESS OF SIR JACK BRAG.

Said Burgoyne to his men, as they pass'd in review, Tullalo, tullalo, tullalo, boys!	As to Sa-ra-tog' he came, thinking how to jo the game, Tullalo, tullalo, tullalo, boys!
These rebels their course very quickly will rue, And fly as the leaves 'fore the autumn tempest flew,	He began to see the grubs, in the branches of his fame, He began to have the trembles left a flash should be the flame,
When him who is your leader they know, boys! They with men have now to deal, And we soon will make them feel,	For which he had agreed his perfume to forego, boys! No lack of skill, but fates, Shall make us yield to Gates,
Tullalo, tullalo, tullalo, boys! That a loyal Briton's arm and a loyal Briton's steel	Tullalo, tullalo, tullalo, boys! The devil may have leagued, as you know, with the States!
Can put to flight a rebel as quick as other foe, boys! Tullalo, tullalo, tullalo— Tullalo, tullalo, tullalo-o-o-o, boys!	But we never will be beat by any mortal foe, boys! Tullalo, tullalo, tullalo— Tullalo, tullalo, tullalo-o-o-o boys.

THE FATE OF JOHN BURGOYNE.

When Jack the king's commander Was going to his duty, [bow'd Through all the crowd he smiled and To every blooming beauty.	Then off he went to Canada, Next to Ticonderoga, And quitting those away he goes, Straightway to Saratoga.
The city rung with feats he'd done In Portugal and Flanders, And all the town thought he'd be crown'd The first of Alexanders.	With great parade his march he made To gain his wished for station, While far and wide his minions hied, To spread his Proclamation.
To Hampton Court he first repairs To kiss great George's hand, sirs; Then to harrangue on state affairs Before he left the land, sirs.	To such as staid he offers made Of " pardon on submission ; "But savage bands should waste the lands "Of all in opposition."
The Lower House sat mute as mouse To hear his grand oration; And all the peers, with loudest cheers, Proclaimed him to the nation.	But ah, the cruel fates of war! This boasted son of Britian, When mounting his triumphal car With sudden fear was smitten.

194 Burgoyne's Orderly Book.

The sons of Freedom gathered round,
His hostile bands confounded, [back
And when they'd fain have turn'd their
They found themselves surrounded!

In vain they fought, in vain they fled,
Their chief, humane and tender,
To save the rest soon thought it best
His forces to surrender.

Brave St. Clair when he first retired
Knew what the fates portended;
And Arnold and heroic Gates
His conduct have defended.

Thus may America's brave sons
With honor be rewarded,
And be the fate of all her foes,
The same as here recorded. G. of H.

THE NORTH CAMPAIGN.

Come unto me ye heroes,
Whose hearts are true and bold,
Who value more your honour
Than others do their gold;
Give ear unto my story,
And I the truth will tell
Concerning many a soldier,
Who for his country fell.

Burgoyne, the king's commander,
From Canada set sail
With full eight thousand reg'lars,
He thought he could not fail;
With Indians and Canadians,
And his cursed Tory crew,
On board his fleet of shipping
He up the Champlain flew.

Before Ticonderoga,
The first day of July,
Appear'd his ships and army,
And we did them espy.
Their motions we observed
Full well both night and day,
And our brave boys prepared
To have a bloody fray.

Our garrison they viewed them,
As straight their troops did land,
And when St. Clair, our chieftain,
The fact did understand,
That they the Mount Defiance
Were bent to fortify,
He found we must surrender,
Or else prepare to die.

The fifth day of July, then,
He order'd a retreat,
And when next morn we started,
Burgoyne thought we were beat;
And closely he pursued us,
Till when near Hubbardton,
Our rear guards were defeated,
He thought the country won.

And when 'twas told in Congress,
That we our forts had left,
To Albany retreated,
Of all the North bereft,
Brave General Gates they sent us,
Our fortunes to retrieve,
And him with shouts of gladness,
The army did receive.

Where first the Mohawk's waters
Do in the sunshine play,
For Herkimer's brave soldiers
Sellingier ambush'd lay;
And them he there defeated,
But soon he had his due,
And scared by Brooks and Arnold,
He to the North withdrew.

To take the stores and cattle
That we had gather'd then,
Burgoyne sent a detachment
Of fifteen hundred men;
By Baum they were commanded,
To Bennington they went;
To plunder and to murder
Was fully their intent.

But little did they know then,
 With whom they had to deal;
 It was not quite so easy
 Our stores and stocks to steal;
 Bold Starke would give them only
 A portion of his lead;
 With half his crew ere sunset
 Baum lay among the dead.

The nineteenth of September,
 The morning cold and clear,
 Brave Gates rode through our army
 Each foldier's heart to cheer;
 "Burgoyne," he cried "advances,
 "But we will never fly,
 "No—rather than surrender,
 "We'll fight him till we die."

The news was quickly brought us,
 The enemy was near,
 And all along our lines then,
 There was no sign of fear;
 It was above Stillwater
 We met at noon that day,
 And every one expected
 To see a bloody fray.

Six hours the battle lasted,
 Each heart was true as gold,
 The British fought like lions,
 And we like Yankees bold;
 The leaves with blood were crimson,
 And then brave Gates did cry—
 "'Tis diamond now cut diamond!
 We'll beat them, boys, or die."

The darkness soon approaching,
 It forced us to retreat
 Into our lines till morning,
 Which made them think us beat;
 But ere the sun was risen,
 They saw before their eyes,
 Us ready to engage them,
 Which did them much surprize.

Of fighting they seem'd weary,
 Therefore to work they go
 Their thousand dead to bury,
 And breastworks up to throw;

With grape and bombs intending
 Our army to destroy,
 Or from our works our forces
 By stratagem decoy.

The seventh day of October,
 The British tried again,—
 Shells from their cannons throwing
 Which fell on us like rain,—
 To drive us from our stations
 That they might thus retreat;
 For now Burgoyne saw plainly
 He never us could beat.

But vain was his endeavour
 Our men to terrify;
 Though death was all around us,
 Not one of us would fly.
 But when an hour we'd fought them,
 And they began to yield,
 Along our lines the cry ran
 "The next blow wins the field!"

Great God, who guides their battles,
 Whose cause is just and true,
 Inspired our bold commander
 The course he should pursue.
 He order'd Arnold forward,
 And Brooks to follow on;
 The enemy were routed!
 Our liberty was won!

Then, burning all their luggage,
 They fled with haste and fear,
 Burgoyne with all his forces
 To Saratogue did steer;
 And Gates our brave commander,
 Soon after him did hie,
 Resolving he would take them,
 Or in the effort die.

As we came nigh the village,
 We overtook the foe;
 They'd burn'd each house to ashes,
 Like all where'er they go.
 The seventeenth of October,
 They did capitulate—
 Burgoyne and his proud army
 Did we our prisoners make.

Now here's a health to Arnold,
 And our commander Gates;
 To Lincoln and to Washington,
 Whom ev'ry Tory hates;
 Likewise unto our Congress,
 God grant it long to reign,
 Our Country, Right and Justice
 For ever to maintain.

Now finished is my story,
 My song is at an end;
 The freedom we're enjoying
 We're ready to defend;
 For while our cause is righteous,
 Heaven nerves the foldier's arm,
 And vain is their endeavour
 Who strive to do us harm.

THE BATTLE OF SARATOGA.

Here followeth the direful fate
 Of Burgoyne and his army great,
 Who so proudly did display
 The terrors of despotic sway.

His power and pride and many threats,
 Have been brought low by fort'rate Gates
 To bend to the United States.

This is a pretty just account
 Of Burgoyne's legion's whole amount,
 Who came across the Northern Lakes
 To desolate our happy States.
 Their brass cannons we have got all—
 Fifty-six—both great and small;
 And ten thousand stand of arms,
 To prevent all future harms;
 Stores and implements complete,
 Of workmanship exceeding neat;

Cover'd wagons in great plenty,
 And proper harness, no ways scanty.
 Among our prisoners there are
 Six generals, of fame most rare;
 Six members of their parliament—
 Reluctantly they seem content;
 Three British lords, and Lord Balcarras,
 Who came, our country free to harass.
 Two baronets of high extraction,
 Were forely wounded in the action.
