Prussia gives Master
indignantly, orders to be returned
With a note, expressing an intention of "calling on it."
Great enthusiasm among the French at the arranged visit to Berlin.
Prussia, finding that his visitors have taken "French leave" in coming, instructs his Minister to prevent a series of balls, to be followed by a grand rout. Professor Moltke will preside at the "Intrusion."
McMahon proceeds his Imperial Master.
374985
Great banquet ceremony of the Prince Imperial to the "fun d'enter."
The black-guards of France discover the "Worth" of Prussia.
Return of McMahon.
Rains from the stormy state of the weather takes refuge in Metz.
His Imperial Majesty arrives in Sedan.
His Imperial Majesty is entertained in Sedan.
His Imperial Majesty, finding the "East of War" uncomfortable, quits it with painful sensations.
Being in reduced circumstances, with not half-a-crown left, he requests his "Dear Brother" to get a lodging for him. He deposits his sword, and now really says "No, no security."
The Imperial mind is deceived, such is its agitation that the hair turns white from the dreadful loss in Sedan of his hair-eye.
France rises in its "grandeur," and demolishes the Empire.
France is now "calm," and her children play at marbles.
Coming events give the Bots an attack of the Blues—(Prussian.)
The "gentle" of the Lyons agreement," Deputy Red in the politics of France, establish a model government. They enable their generals, considering that an "army of five led by asses," must be great success to be led.
After the fall of Strasbourg, a deputation of some of Prussia's future subjects petition against the dreadful "Paris do for green."
The German governor being partial to the article in question, and not finding it in the articles of explanation, dismisses the deputation.
France having in vain tried Thiers and enterprise, Victor Hugo makes Monseigneur Ducros in his double character of a general and peasant, enjoying the Prussians and his parish.
Trochu increases the defenses of Paris by multiplying the fortifications.
Trochu's plan re-assures the French, who have been "cutting their sticks" in all directions.
The trespassers entering Paris are told not to call the "curse,"
The Provisional Government having undertaken to supply the city.
France is at its post, and no longer down, but up—in a balloon.
As the wind sometimes inflicts a heavy blow upon the postal system, punctual delivery is not guaranteed.
The starving garrison at Metz look at Le Bon, with hungry eyes. To France, having already promised, protest starving, to eating his own words.
Prussia is reasonable, and willing to take security for his "little bill." "Prussia" thanks for his success Prussia.
Prussia continues proceedings, and gaining the main goes on to maximum.
Having written to Angstadt and returned "Prussia" thanks for his success Prussia.
Being interrupted by the proprietor a fight ensues.
The result is, that France is "laid out," and Prussia "laid up."

cessant crowing.
